108. These Noblemen hauing considered that the Monson was past, wherein the grand Capitaine was to come for vs, and that they could not pacifie vs, determined to carrie vs backe to the Court: and we set forward altogether with the Franks, and as we came to the Towne of Bacinete, before mentioned, whither the fame of our falling out was come, all the Countrey-people put themselves in Armes, and would not suffer vs to passe, and such numbers of Friers came downe an hill, with Bowes, Arrowes, and Staues, that they seemed to be flocks of Sheep; and here we had a great skirmish, and many of both sides were wounded, howbeit wee beat them backe, and made them runne away. The aforesaid Noblemen, while we were lodged here, put the place to the sacke, as if they had beene Moore's and tooke away their Barley, Hens, Capons, Sheepe, and whatsoever they found in the houses. And departing from hence, we travelled in two companies; to wit, George de Bren, and all those that were with him; and the Frier, and we with the Ambassadour, and the Lords, Andrugaz and Garneta, and wee came to Manadeli, where they wounded our men, and here we found the Moore which fled from the Ambassadour, who was nothing at all afraid: and hauing past two miles beyond this place, we met with Barnagasso, which came from the Court, and brought order from the Prete, what the said Lords should doe with vs. Which while we sought to know, we assembled all together in a Corne-field vnder a great Tree, where the said Lords were highly rebuked of Barnagasso, because of our returning without licence, saying, that they should goe to the Court, and receiue their punishment there. Then he began to crie out vpon the Ambassadour, and George de Bren, commanding the Ambassadour to giue him the Crowne and the Letters, which he carried vnto the King and the Grand Capitaine. The Ambassadour and George de Bren vttered very vnciuill and dishonest speeches one against another: for which cause the Barnagasso committed vs to certaine Capitaines, to conduct vs seuerally one from the other, in such sort as wee came to that place, and so we returned with him toward his Territories. By this time the Winter was begun, which was exceeding terrible and cruell with huge raine.

Here the Authour ceaseth to speake any more of his Voyage.

Zanna.

109. IN the Countrey of Prete Ianni, they beginne their Lent in the Munday after Sexagesima, which is ten dayes before our Shrouetide; and after the day of the Purification is past, the Priests, Friers, and Secular men generally obserue a great Fast for three dayes, and they say, they doe fast the penance of the Citie of Ninive. And many Friers eate not aboue once in these three dayes, and then they eate but Herbs without Bread: and they say, that there are many women, which then will not giue sucke to their children past once a day. The generall Fast of the Lent is Bread and Water; for although some would eate Fish, yet they could not haue it, because they haue not the Sea neere them. In the Riuer there is great abundance of Fish, which are very good, but they know not how to take them. They eate no Milke nor Butter, neither drinke Wine of Grapes, nor of Honey; but their common drinke is of Zanna, which is made of Barley, or of Millet, or of Aguzza: for of each of these Graines they make a seuerall Wine, which in taste is like vnto Ale.

There

There are also many Friars, which for deuotions sake eate no bread all the Lent, and others all the yeare, and all their life time.

As I went on a time with the Ambassadour toward the Court, in a place called Iannamora, a Iannamora. Frier fell into our companie: and because I would pleasure him, I caused him to ride vpon a Mule, and lodged him in my Tent. The first day, I inuited him to eate with me, because it was Euen-tide and supper time, and he excused himselfe, that he had no lust to eate. In the meane space, the Nouices (sixe or seuen of which went with him to receiue orders) came with Agriones, which are Herbs of that Countrey, and gaue him an handfull without Salt, or Oyle, or any other mixture, and those he eate alone without Bread or any thing else. Whereof when I had asked the said Nouices, they told me that they neuer vsed to eate any bread. When I doubted of this, I caused him diligently to be watched night and day; for, on the day he went on foot by my Mules side like vnto a Lackey, and on the night he slept by my side, and lay on the ground in his apparell, and I alwaies saw him eate Herbs called Agriones and Rabafas, and when they could find none, sometimes he tooke Mallowes and Nettles, and when they passed by any Monasterie, he sent the Nouices to gather some Garden-herb, and if they found none, the Nouices brought him Lentiles, so long steeped in a gourd of water, that they began to grow, and he fed of them: which I would needs taste of, and found them to be the worst meat in the world. This man trauelled thirtie dayes with vs vnto the Court, and afterward stayed three weekes with vs in our Tent, and neuer eate any thing else but the things aforesaid. Afterward I saw him in the Towne of Caxumo, where the Prete caused vs to stay eight moneths, and when hee vnderstood that I was there, he came to visite me, and brought me certaine Limons. Hee wore an habite of Leather without sleeues, and his armes were naked; whereas I embraced him, by chance I thrust one of my hands vnder his arme, and found that hee had about him a girdle of Iron of foure fingers broad, and I led him by the hand into our chamber, and shewed him to Peter Lopez my cousin, and wee saw the said girdle, which was ioyned the one end with the other, with certaine points, as if they had beene to peg in a piece of wood: and this girdle was fastned vpon his flesh: and the said Frier tooke it in very ill part, and seemed as though hee had receiued great wrong, and suddenly departed, so that wee neuer could see him after.

After this, we saw many other Friars which wore the like girdles of Iron in the Lent; And we heard say, that there were others also, which during all the time of Lent, did neuer sit, but alwaies stood vpright. When we heard that there was one of these in a Caue sixe miles off, we rode thither, and found him in a frame made of wood, of that bignesse, that he only might stand within it. And it looked like an old Chist without a couer, and his hips were besmeared with Chalke and Oxe-dung, and where his buttocks stood, he had an open place three fingers broad: he had likewise another open place where his knees touched, and before him hee had a little Deske of wood, whereon lay a Booke. His habite was an Haire-cloth, made of the haire of an Oxe tayle, and vnderneath the same, vpon his flesh he wore an Iron girdle like to that aboue-said, and he shewed vs the same willingly. In another Caue adioyning, dwelt two young little Nouices, which prouided him victuals, which was nothing but Herbs, and for this our visitation, he became our great friend. These Caues seemed to haue beene made in old time to doe the like penance; for there were Graues in them.

In the Towne of Barua, in another Lent, I saw two Friars in the Church of the said Towne, that is to say, without the Church gate, which were in the like Tabernacles, one on the one side of the Church, and another on the other side, which did eate the said Herbes, and steeped Lentiles, and I went to see them often times, wherewith they seemed highly to be pleased; and if I went not to them, they sent to visite me, and they wore vpon their flesh a Sack-cloth, and a girdle of Iron. And it was told mee, that one of them was a kinsman of the Prete, and they continued in this penance vntill Easter day, and when Masse was sung, they went out of the same.

Having heard report, that in the aforesaid Towne of Caxumo, euery Wednesday and Friday in the Lent, many Friars, Priests, and Nuns stood all night in the water vp to the necke, when we could not be perswaded to beleue the same, Iohn Scolaro, my cousin Peter Lopez, and I, went thither on a Wednesday at night, and were astonied, beholding so great a multitude of them, which were in the water vp to the necke, and it was told vs, that they were Canons, and the wiues also of Canons, with Friars and Nuns, and there were seats of stone made by the waters side, and where the water was shallow, there was one stone, whereupon they sate vntill the water reached vp to their necke, and if the water were more deepe, they layed another stone there, and so all the said Lake was full of people, which came from all the Countrey round about: and in this time of Lent, there are great frosts and cold in the night. And having talked with Peter de Comillan, concerning this matter, he assured me, that they vsed to obserue this custome in all the Dominions of the Prete, and also, that there bee many which doe not onely eate no bread all that time, but also went into mighty Forrests, and into certaine mon-

Heremites.

I was on a time with the Prete, in a Towne called Dara, which is neere those great and deep Trenches (whereof I haue spoken before) into the which, a great Riuer falleth downe headlong from an high Mountaine into a Bottome, and the water of this Riuer, breaking in the Ayre, became as white as Snow. As we stood aloft, Peter de Couillan shewed mee a Caue in this Bottome, which we could hardly discerne, and said, that in the same there was a Monke which they held for a Saint, and vnder this Caue, there seemed to bee a Garden: On the side of this Bottome, and not farre off, hee shewed mee such another Caue, wherein a white Man was dead, which was knowne to haue bene twenty yeeres in that Desart, and that the time of his death was not knowne. Onely when they saw him no more in this Mountaine, they went to see his lodging or Caue, and they found it closed vp on the inside with a good Wall, so that none might goe in or out thereat: and the Prete being aduertised hereof, commanded, that by no meanes it should be opened or touched.

110. The generall fast in Lent, which the most part of the Friers and Nunnes, and the Priests also doe obserue, is to eate once, from two dayes to two dayes, and that alwayes in the night time. They fast not on Sundayes: The like doe many old Women when they are going out of the world; and so they reported that Queene Helena did, as often as shee fasted at any time in the yeere, that shee did not eate about thrice in the weeke; to wit, on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. In the Kingdome of Tigrai, which is a Kingdome subiect to Barnagasso, and in the Kingdome of Tigremahon, euery body eateth flesh in the Lent, on Saturday and Sunday, and they kill more Oxen on these two dayes, then in all the yeere beside. And if they will marry their first or second Wife, they marry them the Thursday before our Shrouetide, for vpon their marriage they haue licence to eate Flesh, Milke, and Butter, for two moneths space, at what time soeuer they will. And therefore, that they may eate the same, they marry Wiues, and drinke Wine. In all the other Territories, Kingdomes, and Signiories, they fast all the Lent, as well great as small, Men as Women, Male-children as Female, without breaking the same in any point, and so they doe almost all the Aduent.

Palme-sunday.

On Palme-Sunday they say their Seruice after this manner: They beginne to say Mattins about Mid-night, and they continue their singing and dancing, carrying painted Images vnconquered in their hands, vntill broad day, and at the houre of Prime, they all get boughes and hold them in their hands at the Gate, for the Women and Lay-men may not come into the Church, and the Priests stand singing in the Church, with boughs in their hands, and sing very loud, making oftentimes the signe of the Crosse, with the said Boughs, and going about without the Church, they come vnto the principall Gate, into which, fixe or seuen of them enter, as we are wont to doe, which they shut, and he stands without which is to say Masse, and they sing both within and without the Church, as wee doe: and then hee which stood without, cometh in and sayeth Masse, and giueth the Communion vnto all. On the holy Weeke, or Weeke before Easter, no Masse is said, saue on Thursday and Saturday. And their ordinary custome, which all Noblemen and Gentlemen vse at all times in the yeere, of saluting one another, is: When they meete together once a day, they kisse their shoulders, and embrace one another, and one kisseth the right shoulder, and the other the left. These salutations are not vsed this weeke, but when they doe meete, they speake not one to another, but passe by without lifting vp their eyes; and men of any quality, are apparelled all in Blacke or in Blew, and they doe no kind of worke, but all the whole day is spent in great deuotions, and singing in the Churches, and alwayes there is no Candle lighted.

On Holy-thursday at Euentide, they make the Maunday, that is to say, the Ceremonie of washing of Feet, and all the people assembleth together vnto the Church, and the chiefe Priest of the Church, sitteth on a Chaire like vnto a Treuit, girded with a Towell, and a great Basen full of water before him, and beginneth to wash the Feet of the Priests; which being done, they beginne to sing, and sing all night, and the Priests, Friers, and Clerkes goe not out of the Church, neither eate, nor drinke, vntill Saturday after they haue said Masse.

Good-Friday.

On Good-Friday about noone, they trim vp the Churches according to their abilitie and riches, for there be some Churches which are hanged all with cloth of gold and crimson, and chiefly, they decke vp the principal Gate, because there is the standing place of all the people, and they hang vp a Crucifixe vpon the Cloth, made of printed Paper, and ouer the same is a little Curtaine which couereth it, and they sing all night and all day, and reade the Passion; which being done, they vncover the Crucifixe, and straightway all the people fall prostrate on the ground, beating one another with Wandes, and Cuffes, and Fists, with great fury, jowling their heads one against another, and also against the Wall, and make so bitter mourning, that any heart of Flint would bee moued to teares with pure deuotion. This lamentation and sorrow continueth two houres at the least. After this, two Priests goe to euery gate of the circuite, which are three; which goe into the Church-yard, and stand at all these gates, one on the one side, and another on the other side, with a little Whip in their hands, which hath five great thongs of Leather vpon it. And all they that were before the principall gate came out through one of these three gates stripped from the waste vpward, and as they passe, they bow downe their bodies, and these Priests with the Whips doe nothing else but lay on them as hard as they can, as long as they stand still: some passe by, and haue but few stripes, others stay and receiue many: but the old men and old women stand there halfe an houre, vntill the blood trickle downe their bodies, and so they lye all night in the Cloyster of the Church. And at mid-night they begin their Songs, which continue vntill the next day at Euening, and then they begin Masse, and all receiue the Communion.

Easter day.

On Easter day at mid-night, they begin their Mattens, and before day they make a Procession, and at breake of day they say Masse: And they obserue this weeke vntill the Munday following, the Apostles Sunday, and so they keepe seuentene dayes holy, that is to say, from the Saturday before Palme-sunday, vntill the said Munday.

Vpon a time we were in the Lent at the Court of Prete Ianni, which lay on the borders of a Countrey of Gentiles, called Gorages, a Nation (as they say) very malicious, and none of these will be made slaues, for they had rather die or kill themselves, then serue the Christians. The place where the Court lay was out of the Countrey of the said people: which, as it was told vs, haue their Habitations vnder the ground, that is to say, they make Caves wherein they liue. But the Court was lodged by a goodly Riuer, the chanell whereof ran low in a deepe bottom, and on the banks on either side the Countrey all was a most goodly Greene Champaigne, but the Earth within a foot deep was a sandie Rock, like the Rocke Di glais de Charnache in Portugall. On all places on the sides of this Riuer, were exceeding store of Houses digged in the Mountaine, one aboue another: and the biggest of them had their doore no larger then the mouth of an Hoghead, whereby they might easily creepe in, and ouer the doore was an hole made where they fastened a Cord, whereby with their hands they climbed vp. In which Houses abundance of the poore people of the Court were lodged: and they said, that these Houses were able to receiue twentie or thirtie persons with their stufes.

There was also by this Riuer a very strong Towne, which on the side toward the Riuer was hewen into the mightie Rocke, and toward the Land there was a Ditch cast, fifteene fathomes deepe, and six fathomes broad, and both the ends thereof reached vnto the Riuer: and in this Trench all round about it were Houses digged like to those afore said, but in the midst of this circuit which was like a plaine field, there were little Houses made with wals and roofes, wherein at this time Christians dwell, and there is also a good Church. The entry into this Towne is digged vnder the ground, through this sandie Rocke, all made like a Vault, where a man would not thinke, that any Mule or Oxe could enter in, and yet neuerthelesse they passe well enough.

Towne in a Rocke.

Not farre from this Towne, going vp the Riuer is a great Rocke very steepe from the top to the bottome, and on the top thereof is a plaine field, and in the mid-way vp this Rocke, there is a Monasterie dedicated to our Ladie, and here they say, was the Palace of the King of this Countrey of Gorages. This Mountaine or Rocke looketh toward the East, and they goe vp to this Monasterie with a wooden Ladder, which may bee placed and remooued, for they take it away euery night for feare these people Gorages, when the Court is not there. Afterward they goe vp a paire of staires of stone, and on the left hand is a Ladder, and fifteene Cels of Friers, which all haue windowes very high ouer the Riuer. Then there are their Butterie, their dining roome, and Chambers to lay vp their Corne; and turning on right hand, passing through a darke way, a man cometh vnto a great height, where the principall gate of their Church is, which is not made of the said Rocke, but it seemeth in ancient time, that there hath bin a great Hall with wals about it, which is very lightsome and broad, for it hath many windowes ouer the Riuer. To this place come some small number of Friers. Many people come hither from the Court to receiue the Communion, both for the deuotion of this place, and also by reason of the fame, which these Friers haue to be men of good life, and because they suffer many miseries, by reason of the wrongs which these bad Neighbours of theirs, the Gorages doe continually vnto them. And because the Court doth alwayes lodge after one manner, that is to say, all the people of the Court, that part on the left hand which belonged to the great Betudete, lay ouer against these Gorages: and very few dayes passed, wherein we heard not this newes. This night, the Gorages haue slaine fifteen or twenty men of the great Betudete, and no man would succour them, because that being in the Lent by reason of the seuer Fast, no man had any courage to fight for weaknesse, and faintnesse of body, neither would they breake the season vpon any occasion.

On the holy weeke, and Easter day being hard at hand, the Prete sent vs word to prepare our selues to say Masse before his Tent, because he would heare the same. I sent him word, that all should be readie, but that we lacked a Tent, because that which we had before was all broken and spoyled by the raine. He sent vs word, that he would send vs a Tent, and cause the same to be set vp, and that as soone as he called for vs, we should come presently with all things necessary to say Masse. And it was not past mid-night, but hee sent for vs, and strait-way wee went thither, ther, and were brought before the gate of the Prete, which wee found in this manner: A great part of the circuit of the hedge was broken and taken away, and from the Tent of the Prete to the Church of holy Croſſe, stood about fixe thousand Waxe Candles lighted, and all in a ranke, and the distance might bee as farre as a Peece of great Ordnance might shoote: and the breadth from the one side to the other of them that held these Candles, was as farre as one could strike a Ball at twice, and all the way was plaine and equall. And there stood about fiftie thousand persons behind them, which held the Candles, so that they which held the Candles, made as it were, an hedge that could not be broken, holding Canes before them bound all along together, and the Candles fastned vpon them round about the way. Before the Tent of the Prete, rode foure Gentlemen on horse-backe, solacing themſelues, and they placed vs next vnto them. 10

In the meane while, came the Prete forth of his Tent, mounted vpon a Mule as blacke as a Crow, and as bigge as a great Horse (whereof they say, he maketh great account: and alwayes when he trauelleth, will haue this Mule come after him, and if he ride not vpon the same, hee sitteth on a Litter which is carryed on mens shoulders) and he came forth clad in an Embroydered Robe, which reached downe to the ground, and likewise his Mule was couered all ouer. The Prete wore his Crowne on his head, and held a Croſſe in his hand, and on both sides of him went two other Horses, and they went euen with the head of the Mule, but not hard by him, for they went as farre off, and were adorned and couered all ouer with Embroydered Cloth of Gold, and seemed to bee enclosed in Gold, by reason of the great glittering thereof. They had great Crownes vpon their heads, which came downe to their very bits, and in the tops thereof were great plumes of Feathers. As soone as the Prete was come forth, those foure Noblemen which rode before, departed away, and were seene no more, and those which came to call vs. As soone as the Prete was past, placed vs after him, so that no bodie else could come there, nor passe the raile of the Candles, sauing onely twentie Gentlemen, which went a good space before the Prete on foot: and in this order we came to the Church of holy Croſſe, where the Masse of the Resurrection was to be said: and here alighting and going into the Church, he entred into his Curtaines, and we stayed at the gate, out of which great numbers of Church-men immediately comming, were accompanied with a farre greater number then that which was without, and they began to make a great proceſſion, placing vs in the end of the same next vnto the first degrees and states of honorable calling: and after the Proceſſion was done, as many went into the Church as could stand therein, and the rest stayed in the fields, and they caused vs also to enter in, placing vs hard by the Curtaines of the Prete. 20

As soone as Masse was done, and that they began to giue the Communion, the Prete sent vs word, that we should make our selues readie to goe and say Masse, because the Tent was now set vp, and that he would come presently. We went our way with those which called vs, which brought vs where there was a blacke Tent set vp, hard by the Tent of the Prete, which when we saw to be blacke, we thought that they had done it to disgrace vs: and suddenly the Ambassador said vnto me; Father, yee shall do well not to say Masse: for this is done to try vs: answered; neither doe I meane to say Masse, let vs goe hence to our Tents; And this was done at the breake of the day. 30

After our refusall and expostulations, the Prete sent vs word to haue patience, because hee would see condigne punishment executed on them which had done the same, and prayed vs to goe into that blacke Tent, because that seeing it was not good to say Masse in, yet it was good enough to dine in: and so we went into it: And hither was sent vnto vs a royall Dinner, with infinite and excellent viands of sundrie sorts of flesh, and excellent Wine both white and red, which were very strong, and of an excellent smell. Peter de Couillan was with vs, and was present at all which passed that night. And at Dinner, he told vs, that all this was done of purpose, to trie what estimation we had of Gods matters, and of the Church, and that from henceforth, they would take vs for very good and perfect Christians. All this Lent, we were very well prouided of meat and drinke, and of good store of Fish, and of store of Grapes which were then ripe in that Countrey. As soone as we had dined, That old Father which baptized the people, came vnto vs, and told vs, that the Prete sent vs word, that though wee had said no Masse that day, yet at least he would haue vs say Masse the next Sunday, and that he would take order, that we should haue a good Tent prouided for vs, wherein we should say Masse according to our manner for the soule of his Mother, which was deceased a full yeere past; and that they likewise did say the Tascar, that is to say, The commemoration for the dead, and that we also should say the same after our manner. 40

112. ON the Sunday, being the Octaue of Easter, we went thither, and found a great white and new Tent set vp, with Curtaines all of silke, below ouerthwart the midst thereof, after their manner, and it was placed very neere the Tent of the Prete, and there the Frier, which now commeth Ambassadour with vs, and other Priests, sang a Nocturne for the dead with vs, and we said Masse, and before we had finished the same, there came vnto vs two packets of Letters, which Don Lewis de Meneses had sent vs, which was come with a Fleet for vs to the Hauens of Maczua, and the Letters came by two wayes, and the Messengers arriued at one instant. There were also Letters directed to the Prete, wherein he requested him of all fauour, that he would dispatch vs without delay, that we might be at Maczua the fifteenth of Aprill, because he could stay for vs no longer, as well because the moouing of the Sea, which is the fit time to depart out of the Red Sea, would passe away, as also because there was great need of his presence in India. And it so fell out, that the same day whereon the Letters were deliuered, the terme of the fifteenth of Aprill expired. It was also written in the said Letters, that the King Don Emanuel was departed this life.

And because it is the fashion of this Countrey, when their friends die, to shauie their heads, and not their Beards, and to cloath themselves in blacke apparell, wee beganne to shauie one anothers head, and while wee were doing this, in came they which brought vs our dinner; who when they saw this, they set downe the meate vpon the ground, and ranne to tell it vnto the Prete, which suddenly sent two Friers vnto vs, to vnderstand what was fallen out. The Ambassadour could not answer him for the great lamentation which he made, and I told them as well as I could, that the Sunne which gaue vs light was darkned, that is to say, that the King Don Emanuel was departed this life, and suddenly all of vs began to make our moane, and the Friers went their way. Immediately at that instant were cryes made, that all places where Bread, Wine, and other Merchandize were sold, and all other Tents of Officers and Iudges should be shut vp, and this continued for three dayes, in the end whereof his Highnesse sent for vs, and his first message vnto vs was; who did inherit the Kingdomes of the King his Father? The Ambassadour said, the Prince, Don Iohn his Sonne. As soone as he vnderstood this message, they say, that hee reioyced greatly, and sent vs this word, Atefia, Atefia, that is to say, Be not afraid, be not afraid, for yee are among Christians, the Father was good, the Sonne will also be good, and I will write vnto him. At length hee was content, that wee should send Iohn Gonsalues our Factor to the Sea, with a Letter of his owne and ours also, and gaue him a very goodly Mule and rich apparell, and ten ounces of Gold, and with him went two of the Pretes his Kinsmen.

As for our selues which did solicit him with all importunitie, hee drew vs along for the space of sixe weekes, and in the end he gaue vs very rich Garments, and to foure of vs he gaue chaines of Gold, with Crosses hanging at them, and euery man his Mule: I had one of those Mules which went as though she would flie in the Aire, and that without any hardnesse in the World: and for the rest of the company, fourescore ounces of Gold, and one hundred Loaves for our iourney which we were to make. Being departed from the Court, we had not trauelled very farre, but the Messengers returned which wee had sent vnto the Sea, and signified vnto vs, that Don Lewis was departed a good while since, and though we knew that we could not ouer-take him, because the motion of the Sea would not suffer him to stay for vs, yet neuerthelesse wee went thither, and found that he had left vs great store of Pepper, and certaine goods for our maintenance, and there were Letters of his directed to the Prete, and vnto vs.

It was determined by the greater part of vs, to send halfe of the Pepper to the Prete, and that the other halfe should remayne for our vse, and that the Factor and I should goe on this message. For all this, Don Roderigo would needs goe himselfe, and would carrie all the Pepper, hoping that the Prete would giue him some great present, because it is a thing most esteemed, which may be brought into these Countries. And with these our Commodities we departed the first of September, and went faire and softly with our Mules, and these carriages of our goods, and came to the Court about the end of Nouember, and found the Prete in the Kingdome of Fatigar, which is in the vttermost part of the Kingdome of Adel, vnder which Adel, is Barbara and Zeila. This King is greatly esteemed among the Moores, and counted for a Saint, because he maketh continuall warre against the Christians, and is furnished by the Kings of Arabia, and the Lords of Mecca, and by other Kings which are Moores, with Armour, Horses, and whatsoeuer he will haue, and he on the other side sendeth them infinite numbers of Abissin slaues, which he taketh in warre. From the place or field where wee found the Court vnto the first Mart-towne of Adel, is a dayes iourney, and from that Mart-towne to Zeila, are eight dayes iourney.

This Kingdome of Fatigar, for as much as we haue seene thereof in our going and coming, is for the most part Champaigne, that is to say, all low hils; wholly manured, and sowed with Wheate, Barley, and other Seeds, and there are mightie Champaigne fields sowed all ouer with Corne. There are also infinite Herds of Cattell of all sorts, to wit, Goates, Sheepe, Oxen, Mares, and Mules. From this Champaigne we saw a far off, a Mountaine higher then all the rest, not of stone, but couered all ouer with Trees, and also manured, wherein are many Monasteries and Churches enuironed with manured fields; in the top of which Mountaine there is a Lake twelue miles in compasse, from whence were brought vnto the Court great store of fish of sundry sorts, and those very good, and I saw not such store in any other place. Here grow sweet Oranges, Citrons, and Indian Figs, in such abundance, as it is incredible. Peter de Couillan told me, that the said Mountaine was so great, that he trauelled eight dayes iourney about the foot thereof, and that he tooke measure thereof, and that the Lake on the top of the Mountaine was twelue miles in circuit. When the Court departed, we trauelled two dayes and an halfe, before we came to the foot of this hill, and when we came neere it, it seemed very high, and in euery part fruitfull. Many Riuers fall downe from the same, wherein is taken great store of fish.

We trauelled a day and an halfe on the back-side at the foot of this Mountaine, and leauing the same, we went out of the Kingdome of Fatigar, and entred into the Kingdome of Xoa, and here we deliuered the Pepper to the Prete, and the Letters of Don Lewis, which we had translated into the Abissin Tongue, and could not receiue any Answer at all. This Voyage which the Prete made into this Kingdome, grew vpon occasion of making certaine partitions and diuisions, betweene him and two which were his Sisters, by Father and Mother: for Nabu his Father had five Wiues. These partitions were of the Lands and Goods, which remayned by the death of his Mother. Here we stayed foure daies, wherein they cast Lots, what part should fall to each one of them. And Peter de Couillan assured mee, that there were Countries in these portions, which could not bee trauelled about in ten daies iourney. When this diuision was made of the portion, which fell vnto the Prete, he caused the same to be diuided in two parts, which he gaue vnto two of his little Daughters. The hils were couered with Oxen, Goates, Horses, and Sheepe. The Clothes of Silke and Gold, were likewise diuided, whereof there was great quantitie, and he gaue the greatest part of the Clothes of Silke vnto the Monasteries and Churches, which belonged to his Mother, in this Territorie. From hence we came to the Towne of Dara, where Peter de Couillan shewed the Woods vnto vs, wherein I said, that the Friers led so strait a life, and where that white man dyed, whose Caue was closed vp.

113. This Storie was told me by many, and especially by Peter de Couillan, of a Moore Capitaine, called Mafudi, a man of such courage and valour, that of his great Prowesse after his death, many Songs were made, which are sung euen to this day by many people in the Court. They say, that for the space of twentie five yeares together in the Lent, euery yeare he made in-roads, and spoyled the Countrey of Prete Ianni, and because in this time, the Fast which is great, taketh away the strength of the people, so that they are not able to fight, therefore hee made in-roads without any danger through those Countries, and sometimes hee entred aboue threescore miles. And one yeare he came into the Kingdome of Amara, or into the Kingdome of Xoa, or into the Kingdome of Fatigar, and sometimes in one part, and sometimes in another: and he began to make these in-roads in the life of King Alexander, which was Vncle to the King, for the space of twelue yeares together, who being dead without Sonnes, his Brother Nabu succeeded him, which was the Father of this present King, and he did the like in his daies. This present Prete Ianni, began to raigne when he was twelue yeares of age, & til he grew to be seuenteen yeares old, Mafudi ceased not to make these in-roads, and warres in the Lent: and they say, that they were so great, that in one of them he led away nineteene thousand Abissins Captiues, whom hee sent all to the house of Mecca, causing them to bee presented to the Kings of the Moores, where being enforced to become Renegados, they grow to bee very couragious and valiant men, because they get out of the straitnesse of fasting, and enter into the fatnesse, and abundance of the vices of the Moores. Hee also carryed away a great multitude of all sorts of Cattell.

On the foure and twentieth yeare of his Inuasions, when hee entred into the Kingdome of Fatigar, all the people fled vnto a Mountaine, and Mafudi enuironed them about, and tooke them, and burnt all the Churches and Monasteries therein. I haue said before, that through all the Countrey of Prete Ianni, there are certaine called Canas, which are men at Armes, because the Husbandmen in these Countries goe not to warre. There were many of these Canas in these Kingdomes, which together with the Husbandmen were retyred into the said Mountaine. Mafudi tooke them altogether, and put them by themselves, and the poore Husbandmen hee dismissed, sending them away that they might sow the fields with Corne the next yeare, for him and his Horses: and to the men of Armes, he said; Yee Cowards, which eat the bread of your King, and so badly defend his Territories, passe by the sword; and so five thousand men at Armes were slaine, and he returned with great victorie, and without any impeachment at all.

The Prete being much moued with this Act, and especially at the burning of the Churches and and Monasteries sent Spies into the Kingdome of Adel, to know by what part Mafudi meant to enter: and vnderstood, that he meant to come with great troupes into the Kingdome of Fatigar, in the time of Wheate and Barley Haruest to destroy them. The Prete hauing learned, that he came not in the time of Lent, at which time they are forbidden * to fight, resolved to wait for him by the way, and this he did against the minds of all his great Courtiers, he set forward with his people and Court onely, without sending for any from farre Countries, because he would not be discouered, and trauelled day and night: and on a morning at breake of day, hee set vp his Pauilions, in a Towne where the first Market of the Kingdome of Adel is held, which is a dayes iourney from the Citie of Adel, where we found him when we carryed him the Pep- 10 per. Here (they say) is a great passage, which the King of Adel had passed the day before, and was entred three miles into the Countrey of Prete Ianni, and was gone out of the way; when it began to be broad day, they saw one another.

* Crueltie of Superstition.

Mafudi, which was a man of great valour, and was neuer knowne to flee, as the Abissins vse to sing of him; as soone as he saw the Pauilion of the Prete, and the red Tents, which are neuer wont to be set vp, but at great Feasts, and entertainments of Princes, said vnto the King of Adel: Sir, the Negus of Ethiopia is here in person; and this is the day of our death, doe what you can to saue your selfe, for my part I meane here to die: and the said King being fearefull, esca-

20 great account to run away, and become Moores, and if they will retorne againe, they are baptized anew, and are pardoned for their fault, and become Christians as they were before) and hee told vs all these things particularly. As soone as the King of Adel was gotten to a safe place, which was with great speed; the Prete Ianni signified to his Armie, after hee knew that the King was fled, that they should receiue the Communion, and recommend themselues vnto God, and after breake-fast, should set themselues in order: and at nine of the clocke they began to arrange themselues in battell array, and to march against the Moores, keeping alwayes their Tents and Pauilions armed.

Mafudi, which was resolved not to flee, and saw death before his eyes, desired to end his dayes with some notorious and honourable action, and therefore spake vnto certayne Christi-30 ans, inquiring of them, whether there were any Knight so hardie among them, that hee durst fight with him. Hereunto a Frier offered himselfe, called Gabriel Andreas, which slue him in combat, and strooke off his head, and for this his victorie, he is much honoured in the Court, and we our selues were acquainted with him. The rest of the Armie gaue the onset vpon the Moores, and discomfited them, which could no way escape, because the Prete his Tents were placed in the principall passage; and another passage which was farre off, and whereby the King of Adel fled, was by this time also taken.

Mafudi slaine by Gabriel Andreas a Frier.

After this victorie, the Prete Ianni rested in his Tents, and the day following made an inroad through the Kingdome of Adel, vntill he came to certayne Palaces of the said King, which he found quite abandoned, the Gates whereof the Prete strooke thrice with his Launce, and 40 would suffer no man to enter in or come neere them, because it should not be said, that hee came thither to rob; for if the King had beene there, or any body else, hee would haue beene the first that should haue entred in, and made them faire warre: and when he found no body therein, he would suffer none to enter into them, and so returned backe. This battell was in the moneth of Iuly; and it is said, that it was on the very same day, that Lopez Suarez destroyed and burnt the Citie of Zeila, at the sack whereof I my selfe was, and the Moores which were taken told vs, that the Captaine of Zeila was gone with the King of Adel, to warre against the Negus of Ethiopia. And oftentimes the Prete sent to shew vs foure or fise bundles of Swords, with hilts of siluer, but grossely made, and told vs, that he had won them in the Warre against the Soldan of Adel; and the Tent which he sent vs of embroidered cloth and veluet of Mecca, he also wan
50 in the said Warre, and wished vs to hallow it before we said Masse therein, becaute the Moores had committed many sinnes in the same.

The head of this Mafudi was carried for three yeeres space with the Court, euen vntill our coming thither, and on euery Saturday, Sunday, and other Holy-dayes, which the common people keepe; all the Boyes and Girles did nothing else but sing Verses, made after their man-60 ner, in the praise of this Victorie, and at this day their singing passeth throughout all the Court, and I thinke it will continue to the worlds end. Gabriel Andreas, as I haue said, is a Frier, and a very honorable Person, and a Gentleman of very great reuenue; and besides this worthy Act which he did, he hath done many other; and the report is, that he is very eloquent, and a friend to the Portugalls, and vnderstandeth very well the holy Scriptures, and the things that concerne the Christian Faith, and hath great delight to talke of them, although King Nabu caused the tip of his tongue to be cut off, for his over-much talking.

Gabriel's tongue cut.

114. He sent vs word, that he purposed to write to the Pope of Rome, whom they call, Rumen Negus Lique Papas, which signifieth, King of Rome, and head of the Pope, and that I should make him the beginning of the Letter, because they are not wont to write, and knew not how they should should write to the Pope. I sent him word, that I would make the beginning for him, and that they should adde the rest which they meant to write, or request at his hands. When wee came thither, we found all those which they hold most learned and wise with many books, and they asked me where mine were. I answered, that I had no need of books, but onely to know his Highnesse purpose, and that we were to bee gouerned according thereunto. Forthwith, by a chiefe man, as well in authoritie as in knowledge, which was there present, and by his office is called Abucher, which signifieth, A chiefe Chaplaine; the Prete his intention was deliuered to the Frier, and he told it me, and I set my selfe to write, and made a brieue Preface, which forthwith was carried to his Highnesse in my hand-writing. Which hauing seene, hee sent mee back againe, and forthwith we translated it into his language, and returned it againe vnto him. 10

Within a while there came a Page, which said, That the King liked very well of that which I had written, and maruelled much, that it was not taken out of books; commanding, that it should be written in a faire hand, and in two Papers, and that his learned Priests should studie their books, for the rest which should be added to these Letters. The Copie of the Letter which I made, is written in a Paper by it selfe, and beginneth in this manner: Right happy and holy Father, &c. Three dayes they bestowed in making of the other Letter, and aboue fiftene in making a little Crosse of gold, which weigheth one hundred Cruzadoes, which also I was to carrie to the Pope.

115. At this time the Prete Ianni determined to send an Ambassadour into Portugall, because that hitherto he had sent none, and he sent for Don Roderigo and me, and told vs, that hee purposed to send a man of his with vs vnto the King of Portugall, to the end, that his desires might sooner take effect: and asked vs, whether we thought, that Zaga Zabo the Frier, who alwayes kept vs companie, were sufficient for this Ambassage, seeing hee vnderstood our language, and had beene before-time in our Countries. We answered him, That he was most sufficient, and was a man which vnderstood vs, and we him. He sent vs word, that wee should take him with vs in our companie. The next day he sent vs againe very honorable apparell, and thirtie ounces of gold, and one hundred loaves of bread for our voyage, and yet wee stayed a good while after: The Prete sent a Messenger vnto vs, appointing vs to returne vnto the Towne of Chaxumo, where (as I said before) we had beene a long time: and here he furnished vs with five hundred loades of Graine, with one hundred Oxen, and one hundred Sheepe, with one hundred earthen Pots of Honey, and another hundred of Butter, and sent for the Ambassadour which went with vs, twentie loades of Corne, twentie Oxen, twentie Sheepe, twentie pots of Honey, and as many of Butter. 30

116. While we abode in the Towne of Chaxumo, the said Zaga Zabo was aduertized, that a certayne little Lordship, which he had, was taken from him: whereupon he prayed me, that I would goe with him to the Court to demand iustice. When we came thither, we found, that his Aduersarie was Abdenago, Captaine of all the Pages of Prete Ianni, for here is no office but hath an Head aboue all the rest. And because all Suites and Answeres are made to the Prete by Pages, we had no meanes at all to make the Prete acquainted with our suite; howbeit, wee were aided by one Aiace, which is a great Lord: and though he were a great friend of Abdenago, yet made he the Prete acquainted with the cause of our comming. Our Iudges were appointed, Aiaz Daragote, and Aiaz Caite, to whom we imparted our request; and they appointed vs a time the next day, when the Sunne should be in such a place, shewing vs the place in the skie: and the Proctor of Abdenago was there present, and Zaga Zabo the Ambassadour was there in person. When the day was come, both parties disputed and alleaged greatly for themselves, and they concluded in words, for in their Courts they write nothing at all; and the Iudges gaue sentence by word of mouth, after this manner; That the Mannor and Lordship, which Zaga Zabo demanded, was a very small thing, and in former times subiect to another great Lordship, whereof Abdenago was Lord, and that it was right, that as the great Winde passeth ouer all the Earth, so Abdenago, which was a great Lord, might not be hindred from entering vpon this, but that he ought to enter vpon this little Signiorie. 50

When we heard this sentence, we were much amazed, and went to complaine vnto the Prete, which sent vs word to goe to our lodging, and be of good cheere, for all should be well, and that the next day we should repaire to the chiefe Iustice, which should see vs dispatched; and here withall we departed. The next day we waited vpon him at his Tent, who receiued vs with a cheerfull countenance, saying, That he had a commandement from the Prete to dispatch vs, and that we should stay for him at his Tent; howbeit, wee would needs goe with him vntill hee went to speake vnto the Prete. Where, after he was gone in, and had stayed a while, hee came out with two Pages, which led him to the place where offenders are beaten, and there calling two which doe this office, they stripped him, and throwing him downe vpon the ground, they tyed his hands vnto two posts, and his feet straight, with a thong of Leather, which two men held fast. These ministers of Iustice stood one at his head, and another at his feet, smiting him oftentimes, and for the most part on the backe; and when the Prete commanded them to touch him, the stripe pierced vnto the bones, and of these stripes he had onely three. I haue seene this chiefe chiefe Iustice beaten three times besides, and within two dayes after, he returned to his office : because they are not alhamed hereof, but rather say, that the Prete meaneth them well, and is mindfull of them, and shortly after bestoweth his fauour on them, and putteth them in office.

When this chiefe Iustice was beaten, there were sixtie Friers in new apparell present, which was yellow, after their custome. And when the chiefe Iustice his punishment was ended, they tooke an old Frier which seemed to be a man of account, and was Head of the rest, and beat him after the aforesaid manner, but he was not touched to the quicke. After him they tooke another which was aboute fortie yeeres of age, who seemed to be a man of much honour, and they beate him as they did the rest, and this last was twice touched to the quicke. While this was done, I inquired the cause, and what fault the Friers had committed : it was told me, that the last Frier which was beaten, had taken to wife a daughter of a Prete Ianni, that is to say, of Alexander the vnckle of this David, and that he was separated from her, and had taken another sister of this present Prete, which being very dishonest, and doing what she listed, her husband fearing to put her away, in regard of the Prete, and because also in this Countrey the faults of women are not regarded, he forsooke this second wife, and tooke againe the first : and the Prete hauing commanded him that he should receiue his sister againe, he would not obey it, but went and became a religious man : and the Prete hauing committed this cause to the chiefe Iustice, to consider whether hee might become a Frier lawfully or no ; the Iustice gaue sentence, that hee might lawfully take vpon him the habite of a religious man, and for this cause, the Iustice was punished. The father of the Friers was beaten, because he had giuen him the habite ; and this third man, because he receiued the same : and immediatly he was enioyned to leaue the same, and to take againe the sister of the Prete ; and by this meanes wee could not haue audience for the space of fiftene dayes.

Death of Queene HELENA. Tributes of Goïame, and other Prouinces. Succours giuen to the Queene of Adea. Apprehension of the two Betudetes and TIGREMAHON: their sentence, and the execution. Expedition of the Negus to Adea. Strange Oxen. The PRETES Tent-court, and manner thereof; Places, Courts, and courses of Iustice, with other parts thereof described. His Treasuries.

117. Queene Helena had beene dead some eight or nine moneths, which gouerned the greatest part of the Kingdome of Goïame, when as many as came newly to the Court, went to bewaile her in her Tent, which as yet stood vpright in the old place, and wee did the like, when wee came anew to the Court after her death. And the Prete hauing sent vnto that Kingdome the grand Betudete to receiue the Gibre, which is the yeerely tribute of the King ; at this time the said Betudete came to the Court with the Gibre, which was three thousand five hundred Mules, three hundred Horses, and three thousand Bassuti, (which are a kind of clothes which great men weare vpon their Litters, and they are made of Cotton, shaggie on the one side, like vnto Carpets, but not so course ; and great personages lay them vpon their Beds ; and they are of so great price, that one of them is worth an ounce of Gold at the least, and sometimes three or foure ounces, yea and five ounces) and aboute three hundred Cotton clothes of small value, whereof two are worth but a dramme of Gold, and sometimes lesse : and, as wee haue said, an ounce is worth a Pardoa, which is three quarters of a golden Ducat of Portugall, and it was told me, that he brought thirtie thousand drachmes of Gold.

40 I my selfe was at the presenting of this tribute, and saw it all ; and it was in this manner. The Betudete came on foot naked from the girdle vward with a cord tyed about his head, like vnto a wreath of a Castilian Carrier, and comming within audience of the Tent of the Prete, he said three times this word in short space, Abeto, Abeto, Abeto, which signifieth Lord : and answere was made him but twice in his Language, Who art thou? Who art thou? And he said, I which call, am the least of thy house, which saddles thy Mules, and tyeth vp thy Cattell, and doe other businesse which thou hast commanded mee, and I bring thee that which thou hast inioyned mee : and these words were spoken three times ; which being ended, a voice was heard, saying, Come, come forward. And he comming neere did reuerence before the Tent, and passed by. After him came the Horses one after another, all led by the heads by seruants. The first thirtie were saddled, and in very good order, the rest which followed were deare of two drachmes of Gold, and many were not worth one dram a piece, and I saw them afterward sold for lesse, and there might be some three thousand of them. After these Hackneys came the Mules in like order, to wit, thirtie which were saddled, faire, and in good order ; the rest were little young Mulets like those Hackneys, and there were Mules and Mulets, of one, of two, and of three yeeres old, and not past, past, and none of them saving those which were saddled, were fit to bee ridden: and they passed by as the Betudete and the Horfes had done. After the Mules, came the Cloathes called Bassuti, and one man could carrie but one of them, they were so weightie. After the Bassuti passed, the cloathes made vp in Fardles, and one man carried ten of them; and there were about three thousand men, that carried Bassuti, and three thousand men that carried thole other Cloathes; and all these were of the Kingdome of Goiame, which are bound to bring the said Gibre. After these cloathes, came ten men, each of them bearing a Charger vpon his head, made like vnto those wherein they doe eate, and were couered with Greene and Red Sindall. After these Chargers, came all the men of the Betudete, which passed by one after another, as hee himselve had passed. In these Platters was the Gold put, which was commanded to bee borne vnto his lodging, with the rest of the tribute, which was done accordingly. In this Procession were spent about ten houres, that is to say, From the morning vntill euening.

About fifteene daies before our comming to the Court, thither came a Queene of the Moores, Wife vnto the King of Adea, which was the Sister of one, which was sent to be the Wife of Prete Ianni, whom he refused, because two of her fore-teeth were too great, and therefore she was married vnto a great Lord, which was the Barnagasso, and is now a Betudete. This Queene came to craue succour of the Prete, because a Brother of her Husbands was risen vp against her, and tooke her Kingdome from her. She was well accompanied like a Queene, and brought with her fiftie Moores, which were very Honourable persons, and very well appparelled, riding vpon Mules, and one hundred men on foote, and sixe Maids of Honor mounted vpon Mules, and they were people which were not very blacke. She was receiued with great honour, and was called for within three daies after her comming, and she came before the Tent of the Prete, being herselfe enclosed in a blacke Litter. She changed her apparell twise that day, once in the morning, and againe at euening, and both times she was clad in Embroydered Cloath of Veluet, and in Moorish smocks of India: and the Prete sent her word, that she should take her ease, and put away all sorrow, because she should haue her whole desire, and that shee should stay for Barnagasso, and Tigremahon, at whose comming she should presently depart.

Within eighteene daies after her comming hither, she was againe appparelled after the former manner, and the next day, the foresaid parties arriued at the Court, and each of them brought the Tribute which they are bound to pay vnto the King. And with them came the Canas, that is, The men at Armes of their Kingdomes, with many other Noble-men. They being arriued, the Prete commanded, that the Betudete should first shew his tribute of the Kingdome of Goiame. After him the Barnagasso began to giue his Tribute, which were one hundred and fiftie exceeding faire Horfes, and the first day they did nothing else but runne and prance, and the next day he presented great store of Cloath of Silke, and great store of passing fine Cloathes of India. I was not at this presentment, because I felt not my selfe well. When this was done, the next day very early, Tigremahon began to present his Tribute, which were two hundred Horfes, fatter, fairer, and better then those of Barnagasso, because they came from a farther Countrey, yet both of their Horfes were of Egypt and Arabia, and all this day, they did nothing else but view Horfes. The next day they presented more Cloathes of Silke, then euer I saw together in my life, and the whole day was bestowed in presenting, counting and receiuing of the same. The Monday following, about noone, came Balgada Robel, a great Nobleman, subiect to Tigremahon, to present his Tribute by himselfe, which were thirtie Horfes, all of Egypt, great like Elephants, very fat, and a Xumagali, that is, a Gentleman without Title vpon each of them; and eight of these Xumagali had good Curasses like vnto ours, part couered with Veluet, and part with Cordouan, and their studs gilded. They had also Helmets like ours vpon their heads. Balgada Robel himselfe was one of these eight: the other two and twenty had shirts of Maile, with long sleeues, which were very well fastned to their bodies: they had thirtie Iauelins, and Maces of Iron like vnto the workes, and all of them weare Blue wreathes about their heads, with long haire which waued in the wind.

Of the Canas, that is, The men of Armes which came with Barnagasso and Tigremahon, and with the Gentlemen of their Companies, the Prete Ianni appointed, that fifteene thousand of them, with a Noble-man named Adrugaz, which is often spoken of in this Booke, should goe immediatly into the Kingdome of Adea, and pacifie that Kingdome, and that the Queene should follow soft and faire. And forth-with the Queene and Adrugaz departed, and it was reported, that they should trauaile through the Countrey of the Prete, thirtie daies iourney, before they could come into the Kingdome of Adea. The next day after, the Queenes departure, the Prete commanded the Grand Betudete to be apprehended, which had brought him tribute from the Kingdome of Goiame. Likewise he caused the other Betudete to be taken, whose name is Canba, he caused also Tigremahon to be taken; which being apprehended on a morning before day, the Prete departed, and all the Court with him, and we after him.

And as the Ambassador of the Prete, and I stood by a Riuers side, watering our Mules, this Betudete that brought the Tribute passed by vs, and said vnto mee, Abba Barqua, which signifieth, Father giue me your blessing: I answered him; Ihezaria Barqua, that is to say, God blesse you. answered with teares, which trickled downe his cheekes : Father, pray to God for me, for at this time I shall end my daies. His prison was a little Chaine, very thinne, of a fathome * long, like a Chaine to leade a Dogge in, with a little thin circle about his necke, and himselfe carried his Chaine in his hand. On a Wednesday, we came to the place where the Tents of the Prete were set vp, and that night it was said, that the Prete commanded the Betudete to bee brought to his presence, and so he was brought with two of his Sonnes. When they were come to the gate of the Tent, the Prete sent forth two Pages, to cause him to be brought to the backe-side of the Tent, because he would speake with him in his owne person, commanding the Guard and his Sonnes to attend, and withdrew themselues a little from the gate of the Tent. Here they stayed vntill the morning, when the Prete rid away, and all of vs with him, without any newes at all of the Betudete, whether he were dead or aliue, or what was become of him. His said two Sonnes, and three others which stayed at home, being all great personages, and worthy Warriors, made pitifull moane, and all their Fathers Seruants, which kept an honourable house, like a great King. After this the Prete commanded, that they should not vse any Seruant of their Fathers, nor of their owne : and I haue seene them riding all alone without any Seruant, naked from the Girdle vpward, with a blacke shaggy Sheepe-skinne vpon their shoulders, and clad in blacke Cloath from the Girdle downward, and all their Mules couered with blacke. Their owne Seruants and their Fathers, were diuided all, and walked mourning on foote, and droue their Mules sadled before them.

On a Munday, when we entred into the Kingdome of Oisa, there was a commandement, to obserue the Feast of the Kings, or Twelve-day, which they call, Tabuchete, on which day they obserue their Baptisme, as I haue said before. This day very early in the morning, these Sons of the Betudete went from house to house, that is to say, To the Tents of the great persons, as others were wont to come vnto them, enquiring newes of their Father, whether he were liuing or dead, whereof they could learne nothing at all, vntill fiftene daies after, when they were returned, which had conueyed him into the Kingdome of Fatigar, into a Mountaine, which is said to be in the vttermost Border of the Kingdome of Adel, which is very high, hauing a deep Valley in the midst thereof, and there is but one entrance thereinto : In this bottome or Valley, are all kind of Beasts and Oxen, but the men which came into it, dye within foure or fve daies of an Ague, and that there they had left him without any man to waite vpon him, sauing certaine Moores which were to guard him vntill he were dead. This newes increased their grieve more then the first : and men beganne to speake of this death in the Court, that the Prete had put him vnto the same, because he had lien with the Queene his Mother, and the report went so while shee was aliue, and that hee had a Sonne by her, and that the Prete would not put him to death while his mother liued, because hee would not discredite her. And while these rumours went about the Court, Proclamation came forth, that no man should speake of the Betudete, on paine of his life. Suddenly this rumour ceased; And three moneths after, while wee were nere the Sea side, in the Territories of Tigremahon, there came a new report, that the Betudete was not dead, and that his Sonnes, by the helpe of the King of Adel, had wrought his escape. Immediately there came other newes, that the Prete had beheaded twentie Moores, which guarded him, and two of his Seruants, because they came to speake with him : and this we knew to be very true.

119. Also on a night, the Prete commanded that Tigremahon should be carried away, neither was there any man that could tell, to what place he was conueyed. The next day they sent to lay hold vpon all that hee had in his Tents, and ceased not three daies together, to carrie, count, and deliuer out course Cloathes, and many Chamblets, and very fine Cloathes of India. We were then in the Court fixe White men of vs, to wit; I, and one Portugall, and foure Geno-ueses. To each of vs the Prete sent fixe cloathes, to wit, three pieces of Chamblet, and three cloathes of India, and it was reported within few daies, that the Prete had sent Tigremahon into the Kingdome of Damute, into a wonderfull high Mountaine, which had but one way made by hand into it, and the top thereof was cleansed, and very cold. Hither they send men, whom they would speedily ride out of the way. And according as false newes came into the Countries of Tigremahon, that the Betudete was fled, so certaine newes came vnto vs, that Tigremahon was dead in that Mountaine for hunger and cold. At this time also, while wee were at the Court, the other Betudete which was apprehended, was deposed from his Office, and Arraz Nobiata was made Betudete, which had beene Barnagasso, and Balgada Robel was made Tigremahon, who came with thirtie Horses in such good order. And there ranne a great brute through all the Court, lamenting the death of the Queene Helena : for they muttered, that since her death, Both great and small went all to wracke, and that while shee liued all were preserved aliue and cherished, and that she was the Father and Mother of all men ; and that if the Prete went forward on this fashion, all his Kingdome would speedily come to nought.

The Tabuchete or Baptisme being ended, the Ambassadour Zago Zabo, and I, left off the prosecution of our suit, because we durst not proccede therein, by reason of the great and weightie affaires, affaires, which we saw to be in hand. The Prete sent for vs, and taking away a Lordship, which Abdenago our aduersarie held, and the other which we demanded, he gaue them both vnto the Ambassadour, and so dispatched vs fully contented. Before wee departed, newes came from Adrugaz, which went with the Queene of Adea to succour her Husband, whereby the Prete was aduertized, how the people would not obey her, and that whether soeuer she came, they fled away, and ranne into the Mountaines, and that his Highnesse must send more men. The Prete determined to goe thither in person, and to bring the Queene his Wife vnto a Towne, wherein before we had beene with her, which is called Orgabra, being in the Frontiers of the Kingdome of Adea, and there to leaue his Wife, his Children, and all the Court; and so hee did. There went with him of the Portugals, George de Bren, Diego Fernandez, Alfonso Mendez, 10 and Aluarenga, and fise or sixe Genoueses. Vpon their returne, they reported, that wheresoever the Prete trauelled through the Kingdome of Adea, all the people came to do him homage, as vnto their Lord, and that he would haue gone a great deale farther, euen vnto Magadaxo; and that the Countrey was very fruitfull and full of Woods, so that they could not trauell, vnlesse they cut downe the Trees, and so made their way. And that there was infinite store of victuals of all sorts, and great herds of all Cattell, which are very bigge, and that in this Kingdome there is a Lake so great, that it seemeth to be a Sea, and that a man cannot see from the one side to the other, wherein there is an Iland, where in times past a Prete Ianni built a Monastery, and placed many Monkes in the same, although it were built in the Land of the Moores, which Friers for the most part dyed of the Feauer, sauing a few that remained in a little Monasterie 20 out of the Ile, by the Lakes side, which were found aliue, and that the Prete forth-with commanded, that other Churches and Monasteries should bee built, and many Priests and Friers should be left there, and lay-people to inhabite the said Kingdome, which being pacified, he returned backe againe to the Towne where he had left the Court. This Kingdome payeth a great number of Oxen for tribute, and we haue seene of them in the Court, and they are as bigge as great Camels, and white as Snow, and without hornes, and haue very great and hanging eares.

120. The manner which the Prete obserueth in disposing of his Court, is, that alwaies hee lodgeth in the fields, for no other place were able to containe his traine; And if there be any high place, thereon they set vp the Tents of the Prete, the backe parts whereof stand alwaies to the East, and the Gates vnto the West, and they are alwaies foure or fise Tents, all fastned 30 together one to the other, and these are properly his habitations, enuironed about with certaine high Curtaines, which they call Mandekate, being wrought in Checker-wise, diuided into black and white, and if you will stay there any long time, they compasse them about with an hedge, which is a good mile about, wherein they make twelue Gates. The principall Gate looketh toward the West, and behind the same a good distance off, are two other Gates, one on the one side, and another on the other, which serue for the Church of Saint Marie of Sion, which standeth toward the North, and the other serueth for the Church of holy Crosse, which is towards the South. Next vnto these gates, which serue for these Churches, as farre distant from these as the principall Gate is from the Gates aforesaid, are two other Gates on each side. That towards the South, serueth to goe to the Tents of the Queene, the Wife of the Prete, and that toward the North, serueth to goe to the lodgings of the Pages; and at all these Gates, stand seuerall Guards. I could not see the rest, for they will suffer no man to goe round about that hedge. This I wot well, that in all places wheresoever he lodgeth, they make twelue Gates: 40 among which there is one, that serueth for the Pages of the Kitchin.

Behind these Tents, the distance of a Crosse-bow shot and more, are the Kitchens placed, and the Tents of the Cookes diuided into two parts: To wit, the Cookes on the right hand, and the Cookes on the left hand. And when the meates are brought from these Kitchens, they vse to carrie them after this sort, (according as I saw in the Citie of Orgabra, in the Kingdome of Xoa, as I stood vpon an hill neere vnto the Kitchens; for in other parts the Tents are set in the Plaines, that no man may see them.) There passed a Canopie of Red and Blew Crimzon, 50 as it seemed of sixe whole long pieces sewed together, and they carried this Canopie vpon certaine Canes, which in this Countrey are very good, strong, and so long, that they make Lances with them. Vnder this Canopie came the Pages, which carried the meate in certaine great Platters of Wood, which they call Canete, being made like plaine Patens of Wood, wherein we cleanse our Wheate, with a brim two fingers high, but they be greater, and in each of them were set many Dishes of black earth, wherein the meates were put, as Hens, Turtles, and other small Birds, and many fruits, and White-meates, which are for the most part made with Milke, and other things. There were also little Pipkins, as blacke as the dishes, with other Viands, and Broth of diuers sorts. These meats which I speake of, which were carried in these Platters, I say not that I saw them when they carried them, because I was a farre off; but I saw them, 60 when they sent them to vs, that they came in the same Platters, as they were brought from the Kitchin, without any Canopie, and the Pipkins were couered with their heads closed vp with Paste: and these Platters which they sent vs, were full of these Pipkins, which were seething hot. In all meats wherein they may put Ginger and Pepper, they layed on so much, that we

we could not eate of them, because they were so hot. Betweene the Kitchins and the Tents of the Cookes, almost behind the same, is a Church of Saint Andrew, which is called, The Church of the Cookes. No man may repaire vnto the place where the Kitchins are, nor yet behind them.

121. Two Crosse-bow shoots distant, before the gates of the Kings Tents, or of the lidge, if it be there, a long Tent is set vp, which they call Cacalla, and this is the house of Iustice or Audience. And betweene this Tent and the Tents of the Prete, no man passeth on Horse-backe, in reuerence of the King, and of his Iustice, but all doe light and goe on foot. Into this Tent of Cacalla, no man entreth: onely thirteene low Chaires of Iron are placed therein. The place where they sit is couered with Leather; and one of the said Chaires is very high, reaching as high as the brest of a man, and the other twelue are as low as our stooles. None of the Iudges which heare the parties sitteth in these Chaires, (they onely stand there for a Ceremonie) for they sit on the ground vpon the grasse, if there bee any, as many on the one side, as on the other, and there they heare the parties which contend, and euery one according to his iurisdiction: because (as I haue said) as the Cookes were diuided into two parts, so are all others; to wit, on the left hand, and on the right, and Audience is giuen after this sort.

The Plaintiffe deliuereth his Action by word of mouth, and no man speaketh while he hath done. The Defendant speaketh against him as long as hee will, without any mans disturbance: when the Defendant hath done, the Plaintiffe replyeth if hee will, and the Defendant answereth him the second time, if he thinke so good, without any disturbance. When they haue done their Oppositions, and Answeres by themselves, or by their Proctors, there standeth vp a man, which is, as it were, a Reporter; and hee repeateth ouer againe as much as the parties haue said, and at length deliuereth his opinion, which of them both hath best right. Then one of those Iudges which sit downe, to wit, he that is the first, doth euen so as the Reporter had done, to wit, he repeateth all that the parties haue said, and at length deliuereth, which of them he thinketh to haue best reason. And after this manner, doe all the rest which sit and deliuer their opinions: and they stand vp when they speake, vntill they come to the Chiefe Iustice, which standeth vp last, who hauing heard the opinion of all the rest, giueth his sentence, if there bee no need of prooffe: but if they haue need of tryall, they giue them due and necessary respite. And all is done in words without writing.

Other matters which the Betudetes and the Aiaz heare, they heare standing, because they stand before the Tents of the Prete, and before this Cacalla, and as soone as they heare the parties, immediately they goe with that which they say vnto the Prete, and they enter not into his Tent, but onely within the Mandelate or great Curtaine, and there they speake, and then returne to the parties with the resolution of the Prete. And sometimes they spend a whole day in passing thus too and fro, according to the weightinesse of the causes.

122. A good distance before the Tent or House of Iustice, on the right hand and on the left, are two Houles or Tents, as it were Prisons, to keepe men in Chaines; and they are called Maignes Bete, where the Prisoners are kept on both side, to wit, on the right hand, and on the left. And they are kept after this manner, that according to their fault and cause, such is their Prison and their Guards. The Prisoner is bound to maintaine the Guards which keepe him, and payeth them as long as he is in Prison. And if there be any that hath Fetters on his legges, when they bring him before the Tent of the Prete, where they haue Audience, these Warders carrie him in their armes, to wit, two reach their hands one to another, and cause the Prisoner to sit vpon their armes, which layeth his hands vpon their heads, and the rest of the Warders follow him with their weapons, and so they goe and come.

There is another kind of Prisoners: for if you will haue a man attached, you are bound to find him, if you will accuse him, and his Guard also to guard him. And this I know, because our Portugals caused certaine to bee apprehended, for Mules which were stolne from them, and because they sent meate vnto the Prisoners, and to their Keepers, they made request to haue them set at libertie. I knew another which was a Genouese, which had a Mule stollen from him, and the Thiefe confessed that he had stollen her, but that she was not in his possession, and that he had not wherewithall to pay for her. They condemned him to bee a slaue, and hee was sold, and he was a very couragious fellow.

123. Right ouer against the Tents of the Prisons, a good distance off, are the Tents of the two Chiefe Iustices placed, to wit, one on the one side, and another on the other, and betweene them is a Church, called, The Church of the Iustices. And ouer against this Church, a good way from the same are foure Lions in Chaines, which are alwayes led, whithersoever the Prete Ianni goeth. And a good way from the Lions, is another Church, which is called, The Church of the Christians Market, who sell in the same: for the greatest part bee Moores, especially the principall Merchants of goods, and wares sold by the great; and the Christians sell small wares, as bread, wine, meale, and flesh; because the Moores are not suffered to sell any kind of victuals; neither will any man eat of that which they doe dresse, nor of the flesh that they doe kill. This Market must alwayes be right before the Tent of the Prete: the least roome that the compasse setteth.

of the Market taketh vp, is a mile and an halfe, and sometimes three miles and more. Although the Court change as often as it will, yet this Order of placing their Tents is alwayes obserued. And from the Tent of the King vnto this Market, the way is free and open, that is to say, there standeth no Tent at all, saue onely the two Churches of the two Iustices, and those of the Lions, and that of the Church of the Market. And these are a good way distant from all other Tents.

124. On each side of both the Churches, standing on either side of the Tent of the Prete, there is placed a very faire and goodly Tent, wherein they keep the Vestments of the Churches and another, where they keepe the fire and the flower to make the Corban, that is, the Communion Bread. And al other Churches haue a Tent after this maner. Before these Churches are set vp other great, long, and wide Tents, like vnto Halls, & these they cal Balagamie, wherein they keep the Apparel, Robes, & Treasures of the Prete, & as many of them stand on the one side as on the other; for they are double, as the rest of the Tents of the Officers of the Court are. These Tents haue their Capitaines which are ouer thole that guard them; And the greater part of this people are slaues, which are Eunuches. Behind these Tents of the Wardrobe on the right hand, stand the Tents of the Queene the Wife of the Prete, and of all the women that wait vpon her, and the Tents of Queene Helena, which was wont to be serued in very great pompe: but none but women and Eunuches enter thereinto. On the left hand, are the Tents of the Pages: then the Aiazi haue their lodging, because they take vp a great roome, for they haue many people vnder them, which are alwayes neere about them: after the Aiazi, lodgeth the Patriarke Abuna Marke, with a great number of Tents, because an infinite number of people come to bee admitted into Orders, so that he occupieth as much roome as were sufficient for a great Towne.

On the other side lodgeth the Cabeata, which in like manner hath a multitude of Tents, and his lodging was wont to be next vnto the Church of Saint Mary, because this Office was wont alwayes to be giuen to a Frier; but this present Cabeata being a Priest, and hauing a Wife, they place him next the Abuna. Then follow all the Noblemen in their places, and next vnto them the people that are well apparelled, and then the common people, as the Tauerners, and Bakers, which sell and make Wine, and vie victualling. Then follow the Tents of the women hired to doe businesse, which they call Amaritas; and these are many, and they haue many other Tents separated from theirs, wherein the strangers are lodged, which come to sell, to buy, and to traffique with the Court of the Prete. And hereof there be many richly and well apparelled. Next vnto these are lodged all the Carpenters, on the one side, and on the other, and they take vp a very great roome. The two great Betudetes with their people, the one on the right hand, and the other on the left, doe lastly occupie the space of a Citie; so great a multitude doe they alwayes carrie with them, and are as it were, the Guard of this Court. And alwayes the Tents of the Prete are first set vp, and strait-way euery one knoweth his place, where he ought to set vp his, whether on the right hand or on the left. And the Streets, Markets, and Churches are easie to bee seene: And this Campe or Lodging of the Prete Ianni, extendeth it selfe for the space of fixe good miles.

The Prete absolute Soue-

Manner of great mens
the Court.

125. No great Lord, nor Gouvernour of Territories, if hee bee in his Gouvernement may come forth, nor stirre to come vnto the Court in any wise, vnlesse he be sent for by the Prete: and being sent for he may not deferre his comming for any occasion: and when he remoueth hee leaueth there neither Wife, nor Children, nor any goods at all, for he alwayes feareth, that he shall not returne backe againe, because (as I haue said before) the Prete giueth and taketh Governments at his pleasure: and if he taketh them from any, strait-way that Nobleman which is placed in his roome, taketh from him whatsoever hee findeth, and therefore they carrie euery thing away, or send them into other Territories. And when they come neere the Court with great triumph, they stay at least three miles distance from the Court, where they remayne oftentimes one or two moneths, without stirring from thence, so that they seeme to be forgotten, vntill it pleaseth the Prete to thinke of them: yet cease they not, in this meane time, while they stay as forgotten, to enter into the Court, and to talke with other Noblemen, but not with triumph, nor well apparelled, but with two or three men, and naked from the Girdle vpward, and with a sheep-skinne on their shoulders, and so they goe, and returne to their Tents, vntill they haue licence to repaire vnto the Court; which being obtayned, they make their entrance with great triumph of Musicke and Drummes, and retyre themselves vnto their place, which in former time was appointed vnto them.

And when any of them is lodged, hee goeth not out of his house apparelled, as hee did at his comming to the Court, but goeth naked, as I haue said, although he came at his entrance apparelled with great pompe. And at this time all men commonly say: Now such an one is not in the Kings fauour, because he goeth naked. And if hee hath any fauourable speech from the Prete, incontinently he commeth forth apparelled, and then the people say; Such an one is in his Lords fauour, and the cause is spread abroad, for which he was sent for. For the most part they returne vnto their governments, and sometimes not: and if they returne, they are strait-way dispatched: if they be taken from them, they stay them fve, fixe, and seuen yeares, without departing from from the Court, from whence they may not depart without licence. They are wonderfully obedient vnto their King. Before they were not so greatly accompanied, but now they are as greatly abandoned, and now they ride vpon a Mule with two or three men after them, for the rest which were wont to waite vpon them, belonged to the gouernments which were taken from them, and those are appointed to wait vpon the new Gouverneur.

Honourable respect of souldiers.

126. If any Gentleman be called forth for the warres (as oftentimes wee haue seene) his entry into Court is not forbidden, but presently he entred, and passeth along as he commeth, with many people. These Gentlemen are not forbidden, that which I haue spoken of, not to passe betweene the Tent of Cacalla, and the Tent of the King, neither on horse-backe, nor on Mule, because when they come to goe to warre, they enter into that space, euen to the Tents of the King, and neere vnto them they make their musters, skirmishing, and ranging themselves in battell array, as they thinke good, that the King may take pleasure thereat. And this wee haue seene very oftentimes. These Souldiers stay not in Court aboue two dayes, for so they bee accustomed, for in two dayes they will assemble one hundred thousand persons together, if they will haue so many, and as they come to Court they are speedily dispatched, for there they vse not to giue any wages, but euery man bringeth his victuals with him, namely, Meale of Barley, and of Chiches, and of Millet parched, which is a good food to go to warre withall: for they find Oxen and Kine euery where as they go; and if it be in Wheate Haruest, this is the principall victuall carryed by those people vnto the warre.

The case is now altered.

The Pretes Carriages.

Cauces for Treasuries.

* The Turkes then warring against the Soldan, halfe of them were destroyed. No walled Castles nor Cities in all Ethiopia.

* Sic perhibent qui de magnis maiora loquuntur?

127. All the Pretes Robes of Silke are laid in square Paniers made of wicker, which are foure spans long, layed two and two together, and are halfe so broad, couered with raw Oxe Hides with the haire on, and at euery corner there is a chaine, which commeth ouer the couer, and hath in the midst a Locke of Iron, wherein these Chaines are locked with a little Key. And as these are locked which carrie the Silke, so likewise are those which carrie fine Clothes of India, and they are borne vpon mens heads, and are aboue fife thousand or sixe thousand, and betweene euery hundred goe certaine Souldiers. And because euery yeare the Silkes and embroydered Clothes grow to such quantities, as wel of those which are payd for the Tributes of diuers Realmes, as of those which the Prete sometimes causeth to be bought, and so great numbers are not spent, and cannot be carryed with him in his trauell, therefore euery yeare they put them into certaine Cauces, which are digged in Mountaines for this purpose: and one of these Cauces we saw in our way, when wee came first to Court, which was neere to the gates, called before Badabaie, neere vnto certaine deepe Vallies before-mentioned. At this Caue many Warders are continually, and euery passenger payeth vnto them a certaine Toll, which is appointed for this Guard. After the same manner that the Robes and Clothes of Silke are carryed, so is the Treasuror likewise carryed in Chests, but somewhat lesser, which are couered with Leather, and locked, as those which carryed the Robes: and ouer the couering, the Chaines, and the Locke, is another raw Oxe-hide put, which is fastned with thongs of the said Hide, and there it dryeth and becommeth very strong. And these Chests of Treasure are wonderfull many, and alwayes goe with a great Guard, and likewise yearely many of them are put into those Cauces, for they cannot carrie so many with them as doe increase, and multiply euery yeare.

This Caue which we saw, was three miles from the house of Peter de Conillan, and hee told vs, * that the Gold in this Caue was sufficient to buy the one halfe of the World: for euery yeare they put vnto the same exceeding great summes, and hee neuer saw them take any out. Touching the Silke and Cloth of Gold, Peter Conillan told vs, that oftentimes they tooke out thereof to giue vnto the Churches and Monasteries, as was done three yeeres before our comming thither, when the Prete sent exceeding great Offerings to Ierusalem, of Cloth of Gold and Silke, which he had taken out of those Cauces, because of the great store that was therein. And the Offerings were so great, that they couered the wals of the Church of the holy Sepulchre. * He sent thither also a quantitie of other Gold. There are many more of these kind of Cauces made after the same manner that this is, being all of them in the sides of Mountaines, because they haue no walled Cities or Castles, wherein they may keepe such kind of things. The Ambassadour which went vnto Ierusalem, to carry the foresaid Offerings, is called, Abba Axerata, who at this present is chiefe Guardian of the Sisters of Prete Ianni, and carryed with him aboue fiftene hundred men, with other Gentlemen with Drummes: and I haue heard of them which were with him, that they alwayes trauelled by the way playing vpon their Drummes, from the Citie of Cairo vnto Ierusalem, and in their returne they came running away being halfe destroyed, because the Great Turke came against the Soldan of Egypt, and against the said Citie of Cairo, whereby they were to passe.

Pilgrimage to Ierusalem. Of the Countries which border on PRETE IANNI: Moores, Gentiles, Amazones, Cafates, Damute, Goiame, Bagamidri, Nubia. Of SALOMONS Officers.

Pilgrimage to Ierusalem.

128.  Hile we were in the Towne of Barna, which is the head of the Kingdome of Barnagasso, there assembled a Carauan to goe to Ierusalem, and they were three hundred thirtie six Friers and Priests, and fiftene Nuns. And this was in the Christmas Holy-dayes: for they depart immediately after Twelvetide, and vse to be at Ierusalem the weeke before Easter, traueilling soft and faire as their manner is. They began their iourney from a Towne distant from Barna, a dayes iourney and an halfe, which is called Einacen, which is a Towne and a Territorie, abounding with all kind of victuals, and there are many Monasteries, and here they began to close vp their Carauan, and it is a place subiect vnto the gouernment of Daffila, which is vnder Barnagasso. When the said Friers departed, they made a very small iourney, and in the Euening tooke vp their Lodging, and presently set vp the Tents of their Churches, whereof they had three, and began to say their Hournes and Masses, and receiuing the Communion; the next day, about nine of the clocke, they began their Voyage, and they were all laden with victuals, and with Gourds, and Barrachios of water, and the Tents of their Churches, and the stones of their Altar were carryed vpon Camels: and they trauelled not aboue fixe miles a day. And becaule I would see their manner of traueilling: I went two dayes iourney with this Carauan.

The Pilgrims Parish.

This Carauan, after they had passed Suachen, was assaulted by Arabian Moores, which overthrew those that were their guides, and tooke the Pilgrimes, and hauing slaine the old men, they sold the young men for slaues: and of three hundred thirtie fixe there escaped but fiftene, which went forward on their Voyage. And afterward I saw three of them, which declared vnto me all their mis-hap, and they told me that this out-rage was done vnto them, because they were the Portugals friends, and it is most certaine, that they are very odious vnto their Neighbours for our sakes. Since the Massacre of these friends vntill this instant, no man hath passed in Carauan to Ierusalem, but they goe thither secretly as Passengers, and these are accounted for holy men. And becaule the Inhabitants of Ierusalem are white people, when we came first into this Countrey, they called vs Christians of Ierusalem. There is also another way by Sea, which is gone in a lesser time. They imbarke themselues at the Hauen of Maczua, and sayle to the Hauen of Tor, which is neere to Mount Sinai, and they passe in fise and twentie dayes.

Dangali?
Della.

129. The Territorie, Kingdomes and Lordships confining vpon the Kingdomes of Prete Ianni, as farre as I can learne, are these. First, beginning at Maczua toward the Red Sea and the East, on that Coast are Arabian Moores, which keepe the Cattle of great Lords that are vnder the Kingdome of Barnagasso. And these goe thirtie and fortie together with their wiues and children, and haue a Christian for their Captaine, and are all Theeues, and rob by the high way, and are fauoured by the Lords whose Cattle they keepe. A little farther, you enter into the Kingdome of Dangali, which is a Kingdome of the Moores, and it hath one Hauen, called Della, and this Hauen is neere vnto the Streight of the Red Sea, entring into the Land toward the Abissins, and this Kingdome stretcheth vnto the borders of the Kingdome of Adel, which belongeth vnto the Lord of Zeila and Barbara: and these two Kingdomes meete in the in-land, vpon the Confines of Prete Ianni. And there is foure and twentie great Captain-ships or Lord-ships, which are called Dobas.

Adel.

130. Adel is a very great Kingdome, and stretcheth to the Cape of Guardafui, and in that part, a subiect of his gouerneth; and this King of Adel is held for a Saint among the Moores, because hee maketh continuall warre vpon the Christians: and of the spoiles which hee winneth, hee alwayes sendeth Presents to the house of Mecca, to Cairo, and to other Kings: and they returne vnto him in recompence, Armour, Horses, and other things for his ayde. Of which King I haue spoken in the one hundred and fourteenth Chapter. This Kingdome of Adel bordereth in some part with the Kingdome of Fatigar and Xoa, which Countreyes belong vnto Prete Ianni.

Adela.

131. In the midst of the Kingdome of Adel, as you passe into the Countrey, beginneth the Kingdome of Adela, which is inhabited with Moores, who are subiect to Prete Ianni, and this Kingdome stretcheth vnto Magadaxa.

Lord-ships of Gentiles.

132. Amidst the Kingdome of Adela, as you goe Westward, beginne the Lord-ships of the Gentiles, which are no Kingdomes, & border vpon the Dominions of the Prete. The first of these Lord-ships, or Captain-ships, is called Ganze, and is inhabited with Gentiles and Christians. Next vnto this is a great Lord-ship, almost as bigge as a Kingdome, and they are Gentiles, the slaues of which Countrey are made no great account of. They haue no King, but many Lords in diuers parts of the Countrey, and this Lord-ship is called, Gamu. And as you passe farther toward ward the South-west, in the Kingdome, called Gorage. And with this Kingdome of Gorage, and Lord-ships of Ganze and Gannu, the Kingdomes of Oisa and Xoa, which belong to Prete lami, doe confine together.

133. As yee trauell toward the West, vpon the said Frontiers of the Kingdomes of the Prete, especially vpon the Kingdome of Xoa, there is a very great Citie and Kingdome, called Damute, the Slaues of which Kingdome are highly esteemed by the Moores; who will not depart with them for any money. And all Arabia, Persia, and Egypt are full of the Slaues of this Countrey, which become perfect Moores, and great Warriours. The people of this Kingdome are Gentiles, although there be many Christians among them. I say thus much, because I haue seene many 10 Priests, Friers, and Nuns conuersant in the Court of the Prete, which assured mee that there are many Monasteries, and Religious persons in that Countrey. This King is called, The King of the Gentiles. And the most part of the Gold which runneth current in the Dominions of the Prete, is brought out of this Countrey; for they know better how to digge and refine the same: and great store of victuals is also brought from thence. And when we kept our Lent in the Countrey of Gorage, we had great store of greene and fresh Ginger brought from thence, and great store of Fish, and plenty of Grapes, which in Lent season were ripe in those parts. And after Easter we had many great Sheepe and Oxen.

And I was certified and assured that on the Frontiers of these Kingdomes of Damute, and Gorage, as you trauell toward the South there is a Kingdome gouerned by women, which may 20 be called Amazones, according as it is recorded and written in the Booke of Don Pedro, the Infant of Portugall. But these women (if it bee true) in generall haue their Husbands with them all the yeare, and liue with them: they haue no King but a Queene that hath no certaine Husband, but suffereth any man to lye with her, and to get her with child, and the eldest Daughter succeedeth in the Kingdome. They say, that they be very valiant women and great Warriours, and that vpon certaine beasts which are very swift, and like vnto Oxen. They are great Archers, and in their youth they cause their left brest to be dried vp, that it hinder not their shooting. They gather great store of Gold in this Kingdome, which is first carryed into the Kingdome of Damute, and from thence into many other parts. The Husbands of these women are no Warriours, because they will not suffer them to manage Armes.

30 In the Kingdome of Damute, they say, there springeth a most mighty Riuer, which is contrarie to Nilus; for the one runneth one way, and the other another. Nilus runneth toward Egypt, but the Inhabitants know not particularly whither this other runneth, but it is supposed to run westward vnto the Kingdome of Congo. In the Kingdome of Damute, when the winter approacheth, and that they looke for raine showres, and lightning, although they be not enforced thereunto, they digge and delue the Earth very well, till the mould be fine, that the water which falleth may wash the same, and the Gold may remayne cleane, and most commonly they seeke it in the night by Moone-light, for then they see it glister. Also I haue often seene the people seeking Gold in the aforesaid manner, in the Towne of Caxumo, which is in the Kingdome of Tigrai, 40 and they told me, that they found it for the most part by night.

134. Trauelling Westward, and as it were directly West, through this Kingdome of Damute, there are certaine gouernments of people, called Cafates, a Nation very blacke, and of great stature; and it is reported that they were descended of the race of the Jewes, but they haue neither Bookes nor Synagogue. They are very subtile men, and of greater wits then any other people that are in these parts. They are Gentiles, and great Warriours, and alwaies are in warre with the Prete. They confine with part of Xoa, and Goame. I was neuer there my selfe; but that which I say, I heard reported by our Portugals which were there, when the great Betudete went against them with an Armie; and againe, when the Prete went in person: and they told mee, that these Cafates made great assaults vpon them, and chiefly by night, when they came to stay and rob them: on the day-time they retired to the Mountaines and Woods, and namely, into 50 certaine wonderfull deepe Valleyes, which are among the Mountaines.

135. But leauing the South, and taking the West; another Kingdome lieth somewhat lower, belonging to the Prete, called Goame, a great part whereof belonged to Queene Helena his mother. In this Kingdome springeth the Riuer of Nilus, which in this Countrey is called Gion, and it issueth out of two Lakes, which are so great, that they seem to be Seas, wherein, as they report, are Tritons and Mermaids, and some haue assured me, that they haue seene them. Peter de Comillan told me, that he had bene in this Kingdome, by commandement of Queene Helena, to giue order for the making of an Altar, in a Church which shee had caused to bee builded in that Territorie, wherein shee her selfe was buried, and that this Altar was made of wood, which they filled full with masse Gold: and the Patriarch Abuna Marke told me, that he did consecrate the 60 Altar stone, which was great, and very heauie, that is to say, it was all of Gold. We were certaine times vpon the frontier of the said Kingdome, where we were informed, that this Church had great Guards appointed vnto it, because of the great quantitie of Gold which was in the same: and all the Gold of this Kingdome of Goame is somewhat base. I could not vnderstand, with what People this Kingdome confineth on the farther side, which lieth in the West, only I

Iewes to the west of Goïame. heard say, that there were Desarts full of Mountaines, and that beyond them were certaine Iewes. I affirme not this, but only deliuer that, which I heard spoken in generall by euery bodie.

Bagamidri a great Kingdome 600. miles long. 136. At the end of this Kingdome of Goïame beginneth another Kingdome, which is the greatest in all the Dominions of Prete Ianni, and is called Bagamidri. This runneth along by the bankes of Nilus, and therefore is very great, for it beginneth at the Kingdome of Goïame, and passeth along by the Kingdomes of Amara, of Angote, of Tigrai, of Tigremahon, and Barnagasso; and passeth aboue fixe hundred miles in length. Betweene the Kingdomes of Angote and Tigrai, at the end of them, are certaine Lordships, Westward toward Nilus, the people whereof are called, Agaos, which are partly Gentiles, and partly Christians. On the other side, I know not vpon whom they doe confine, but I thinke they must border vpon this Kingdome of Bagamidri, in which Kingdome, I was certified by many, that were there themselves, that there is a Mountaine of Siluer in great abundance, which they knew not how to get out of the same, but in this manner, that where they saw any Caue, they filled it with wood, and set fire on it, as they vse to doe in a Lime-kill, and this fire maketh the Siluer to melt, which runneth all into barres, which is a thing almost incredible: neuerthelesse, Peter Conillan told me, that I needed not to doubt, but that this was most true. I say, that which I haue heard, and know, that this Siluer is in exceeding great reputation, and desired of all men.

Agaos.

Mountaine of Siluer. 137. At the end of this Kingdome of Bagamidri, toward Egypt, dwell certaine Moores, called Belloos, which are Tributaries vnto Prete Ianni, and pay great numbers of Horses. Toward the North, these Belloos border vpon the People called Nubij, who by report were sometimes Christians, and subiect vnto the Church of Rome. I haue oftentimes heard reported by a Syrian, borne in Tripoli of Syria, whose name was Iohn, and conuersed with vs three yeeres in this Countrey of Prete Ianni, and afterward went with vs into Portugall, that he had beene in Nubia, and saw there one hundred and fiftie Churches, which to this day haue all of them the Images of the Crucifixe, and of our Ladie, and other Images painted vpon walls, and that all this is old and ancient worke. The Inhabitants are neither Christians, Moores, nor Iewes, but liue with a desire to become Christians. All these Churches were builded in certaine old and ancient Fortresses, which are in the Countrey: and looke how many Fortresses there be, so many Churches there are in them.

Their religion.

Famine of the Word, and miserable niggardise: whereas, how many of vs are wearie of Maani, and fall a lusting? The Nubians, for want of a Bishop and Priests are fallen from the faith of Christ. While wee abode in this Countrey of Prete Ianni, there came from Nubia, fixe men in forme of Ambassadors, to craue of him Priests and Eriers to instruct them in the Faith; but he would send them none, saying vnto them, that he had sent for his Abuna, that is, his Patriarch, from the Citie of Alexandria, which is subiect to the Moores, and that therefore he thought it not conuenient to giue Priests and Eriers vnto them, seeing he had obtained them with so great trauell by the meanes of others: and so they returned backe againe. These Nubians said, that in old time they had their Bishop from Rome, which being dead many yeeres agoe; and being not able, by reason of the Warres of the Mahumetans to haue another, they were without Priests and Religious men, and by this meanes the Christian Faith began to be forgotten. These Nubians border vpon Egypt, and this Countrey lieth ouer against Suachen, which is toward the East vpon the red Sea: and the Dominions of these Nubians are on both sides of the Riuer Nilus: and as many Fortresses as there be, so many Captainships be there also.

Salomons Officers. This Suachen is that Towne, which standeth on the frontiers of the dominions of Prete Ianni, and in the beginning of Egypt, and on the frontiers of these Lordships of the Nubians: and hath betweene it and them the Moores, called Bellois. As you come from this Suachen, and goe along the Sea-coast toward the Ile of Maczua, it is said, that the Countrey is so full of Woods, that a man is not able to trauell through them. This is as much as I could learne and know, concerning the Kingdomes and Dominions of Prete Ianni, on euery side of the same, the greatest part whereof, I haue heard by others, and the lesser part was seene by my selfe.

 The Prophecies of the Jewish reiection (not to mention their conuersion prophesied) by that deluge of destruction verified, contrarieth this conceit of a Jewish Monke possessing so long so large a Soueraigntie, as all others tales of the Queene of Sabas sonne and his followers, hatched (it seemes) by some Politician, which to confirme a Soueraigntie (perhaps wonne by the sword) would deuise dreames of so honourable descent. And if Salomon had this sonne, how is Christ descended of a legall sonne of Salomon by the line of Nathan, whenas Salomon his owne line (if he had any) ought to inherit? Neither doe the Jewish, or Gentile, or Christian Storie; or common reason, or probabilitie subscribe to this Meilech-tale. See my Pilg. l. 7. c. 2, and 6. S. 4.* 138. Salomon is said to haue appointed Officers to his sonne Meilech, when hee sent him from Ierusalem to Ethiopia, to the Saba, his mother. And truth it is, that vnto this day the said Offices continue in the race of them which then were sent hither, hauing succeeded from the father vnto the sonne. each Tribe one Office, as Chamberlaines, Porters, Surueyers, Vfhers, Trumpetters, Captaines of his Guard, and other Officers necessarie for a King or Patentate in his Court: and these are much honoured, because they be Gentlemen, and descended of the People of Israel: and there be many of euery Office, because the sonnes of the Chamberlaines, and all their off-spring carrie the name of that Office, and the like is to be said of all the posteritie of the rest. And all of them are taken for such, sauing the Pages, which were wont to be the sonnes of great Noblemen, and Lords; but now they are not: because (as I haue said before) when the Prete sends for any great Nobleman, he sendeth him not word wherefore he sends for him: and when he was serued by Pages, which were the sonnes of great Noblemen, they discouered his secrets; and therefore he put them from that Office, and vied Pages within his chambers, which were Slaues, and the sonnes of Kings of the Moors, or of the Gentiles, which are daily taken by inroads which the Prete his people make: and if he see that they be towardly, hee causeth them to be instructed, before they be admitted into his presence: and if they proue discret and good, he taketh them in, and vseth them for Pages. Indeed hee vseth the sonnes of great Lords for Pages abroad or without doores; as, for Pages for his Bridle, when he rideth, and Pages of the Kitchin; but they come not into his Chambers, as is reported, and as we our selues haue seene. Moreouer, all the Canons, which they call Debeteres, descend of the race of those which came from Ierusalem with the sonne of Salomon: and therefore they are more honourable then all the rest of the Clergie.

The Frier-Ambassadours Signiories. Their departure and arriuall at Ormuz, and after at Goa: at Lisbon. Briefe Notes of Ethiopia, and Letters to the King of Portugall, and the Grand Captaine.

139. THe same day that the Prete departed toward the Kingdome of Adea, the Frier his Ambassadour, and I, departed toward the Lordship, which the Prete had giuen him. One of these Lordships contayneth eightie houses and two Churches, and belonged vnto a little Monasterie, which the said Frier had before.

30 The Lordship which was newly giuen vnto him, was Arras of the Canas, that is, Captaine of the men of Armes, in the Countrey of Abugana, and they may be some eight hundred and more. About mid-Lent, wee came to the place where our people aboad, and wee thought long vntill Easter, when the Portugals were to come for vs. When Easter was past (about which time is the motion of the Sea) and we saw no body come for vs, we remayned very sad, as we had been before. The moneth of Iuly being come, when the Prete vnderstood, that the Portugals were not arriued, he gaue order to his Ambassadour, and to a Nobleman of Abugana, whose name was Abue Arraz, that they should goe with vs vnto these Lordships, to furnish vs with victualls: and because the Haruest was alreadie ended, hee commanded that wee should haue fve hundred loades of Corne, one hundred Oxen, and one hundred Sheepe: and that Zaga Zabo his Ambassadour should giue vs Honey to make vs Wine. And hauing receiued those victualls, we returned to Barua, by the midst of Ianuarie.

140. On Easter Tuesday at mid-night, there came Letters from Don Hector de Siluiera, Grand Capayne of India, that he was come for vs, and was at Maczua: which Letters being read, we conceiued all of vs vnspeakable ioy. Don Roderigo the Ambassadour, would haue had vs depart without delay the next morning, but I would not, saying, That if we did so, they would take vs for no Christians, and that we ought to stay till the Octaues of Easter; and immediately we dispatched one of our Portugals with a man of the Countrey, with our Letters, vnto the said Don Hector, and sent another Letter to Zaga Zabo the Ambassadour of the Prete, who stayed behinde, that he should come with as great haste as was possible, and trauell day and night toward the Sea-side, to the Towne of Ercoco, because the Fleet was come thither to fetch vs away.

141. On Munday, being the Octaue after Easter, we departed from Barua, the Barnagasso, and all we Portugals, toward Ercoco. The Barnagasso, what with his owne and his Gentlemens traine, had one thousand men riding vpon Mules, and aboue fixe hundred men on foot: and wee lodged fixe miles from Barua, in a Towne called Dinguil, standing in the midst of a great champaigne field, where euery Munday at night great store of people meet together, to goe to the Faire of Ercoco, and they goe as it were in Carauan, for feare of the *Arabia*s, and of the wilde Beasts of the Countrey. Here two thousand men ioyned themselves with vs, which went to the said Faire. And they said, they were but few, because the rest would not goe thither, for feare they should not finde water to drinke; howbeit, the people that went with Barnagasso, From Barua to and we our selues, were all prouided: and from the Towne of Barua to Ercoco, might bee some Ercoco fve and fve and fortie miles, and we spent a whole weeke in this voyage. And on Saturday morning, fortie miles. we lodged neere the Towne of Ercoco, and came not vnto our Ships. On

On Tuesday morning, the Barnagasso with all his Captaines and people, deliuered vs to Don Hector de Siluiera, with exceeding ioy and gladnesse, and sent vs for a present fiftie Oxen, many Sheepe, Hens, Capons, and Fish, which hee had caused to bee taken, to diuide the same among our Ships. On Wednesday morning, came Zaga Zabo, the Ambassadour of Prete Ianni, whom we went to meet with vnto Ercoco, to accompanie him; and so Barnagasso came and deliuered him to the Captaine of the Armie, and so we stayed attending for the motion of the * Sea, that is to say, the time for our departing, which alwayes commeth betweene the foure and twentie or fixe and twentie of April, and the third or fourth of May: and if wee depart not at this motion, and in this season, there commeth none other till the end of August.

142. On the eight and twentieth of April, 1526. the whole Fleet departed, which consisted of five Sailes, that is to say, of three great Galeons, and two Carauels, and wee arriued on the Ile of Camaran. The tenth of May, when wee were ouer against the Citie of Aden. And when we began to launch into the mayne Sea, from whence the Winter of India began to come against vs full in our faces, and we sailed against the same, there began so great a Tempest, that the second night wherein we entred into the same, with extreme darknesse and rage of weather, we lost companie, not knowing what course any of our Consorts held. We sailed in this storme vntill we came to the Streight of Ormuz: and the eight and twentieth of May, we came to the Hauen of Mazcare, which belongeth to the Kingdome of Ormuz. Departing from this Hauen, we arriued in the Citie of Ormuz, where the King our Master hath a Fortresse. Here Lopez Vaz of Saint Paul, being Grand Captaine and Gouvernour of the Indies, came forth to receiue vs on the Sea-shore, who embraced vs all; and the next day, after we had heard Masse, we went to speake with the said Grand Captaine, and presented vnto him the Letter of Prete Ianni, which we brought for Diego Lopez de Sequeira, which brought vs into the Countrey of Prete Ianni; which Letter the said Lopez Vaz did reade, because he was Successor to Diego Lopez de Sequeira. Then we presented him a Vesture of silke, hauing five plates of gold before, and five more behinde, and one vpon each shoulder, which make twelue in all, euery one of them as bigge as the palme of a mans hand, which the Prete sent to Diego Lopez: and the said Lopez Vaz gaue vnto Don Roderigo de Lima the Ambassadour two hundred Pardaos, that is to say, two hundred Ducats, and vnto the Ambassadour of the Prete other two hundred, and to me one hundred. Don Hector de Siluiera stayed but a while in Ormuz, and would needs returne with his Fleet, to wait for the ships which depart from Zidem to come vnto Diu, and set forth at the time of the motion of the Sea, wherein we came forth; but they winter in Aden, and so goe forward in their voyage: but we stayed here in Ormuz, vntill wee were sure that the Winter was ended.

A Copie of the Letter which Prete Ianni writ to Don Diego Lopez de Sequeira, which was deliuered to Lopez Vaz of Saint Paul, his Successour in the gouernment of the Indies.

IN the Name of God the Father, which hath beene alwayes, who hath no beginning; In the Name of his onely begotten Sonne, which is like vnto him, before the light of the Starres was seene, and before the foundation of the Ocean Sea was laid, who was conceived at another time in the Virgins wombe, without the Seede of Man, and without Marriages, for after this sort was the understanding of his Office: in the Name of the Holy Ghost the Comforter, which knoweth all secrets, whatsoever they bee, that is to say, of all the heighths of the Heauen, which is sustayned without any pillars or props, and hath amplified the Earth, which before was neither created nor knowne, from the East vnto the West, and from the North vnto the South. And of these three Persons, none is afore or after another, but is a Trinitie, containd in one eternall Creator of all things, by one sole Counsell, and one onely Word eternally. Amen.

These Letters and Ambassages are sent from mee Atani Tingil, that is by interpretation, The Incense of the Virgin (for so was I named at the day of my Christning) but now am called Dauid, the Head of my Kingdomes of the higher and larger Ethiopia, the beloued of God, the Pillar of the Faith, descended of the Stocke of Iuda, the Sonne of Dauid, the Sonne of Salomon, the Sonne of the pillar of Sion, the Sonne of the Seede of Iacob, the Sonne of the Hand of Mary, the Sonne of Nahu, according to the flesh; To Diego Lopez de Sequeira, Grand Captaine of the Indies. I haue understood, that albeit you are subiect vnto a King, yet neuerthelesse, that you are a Conquerour in all enterprizes, which are committed to you, and are not afraid of the innumerable forces of the Moores, hauing subdued Fortune, with the Armes of the holy Faith, and that you cannot be vanquished of any secret things, being armed with the Truth of the Gospell, and resting your selfe vpon the Speare, which carrieth the Banner of the Crosse, for which cause the Lord be alwayes blessed, which hath fulfilled our ioy for the loue of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Vpon your comming into these parts, you certified vs of the ambassage of the King your Lord, Don Emanuel, and of the Presents which you haue preserved with so great travell in your ships, hauing indured great Windes and Stormes, as well by Sea as by Land, wherein you haue come from so farre Countreies, Countreyes to subdue the Moores and Pagans, conducting and gouerning your Ships whithersoener you thinke good, which is wonderfull to consider: and aboue all things, that you haue beene two whole yeeres in Warre vpon the Seas, enduring so great tranell, taking rest neither day nor night; considering, that the actions of Man, according to the vsuall custome, are done in the day-time, as to buy, to sell, to tranell by the way, and the night is made to sleepe, and to take rest, as the Scripture saith; The day is made for Men to doe their businesse, from the morning vnto the euening, and the Lions roaring after their prey, doe seeke their meate at God; and when the Sunne ariseth, they get them away together, and lay them downe in their Dens: and so both Men and Beasts are wont to take their rests: yet neither sleepe hath overcome you, nor the night, nor the day, when the Sunne ariseth, for the loue which you beare vnto our holy Faith, as Saint Paul saith; Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? Shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, or perill, or sword. And the Apostle Saint Iames saith: Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried he shall receiue the Crowne of Life, which the Lord hath promised to them that loue him. God fulfill your desires, and giue you prosperitie, and bring you safe and sound vnto King Don Emanuel, your Lord, and remooue the Moores out of your sight, which you haue vanquished, because they beleue not in the Faith of our Lord Iesus Christ: and blessed be your men of Warre also; for surely, they be Martyrs for our Lord Iesus Christs sake, for they die for hunger, for cold, and for heate, for his holy Names sake. Honorable Sir, when I vnderstood of your comming into our Countreies, I greatly reioyced thereat, and afterward vnderstanding of your sudden departure, I was not a little grieved. I reioyced also, when I was informed, that you had sent an Ambassadour vnto mee, and praised the Name of God the Father, and of his Sonne Iesus Christ our Lord, especially for the good report of you, which resoundeth on all sides, and because you were desirous to enter into friendship with vs. And because (as I conceiue) your goodwill is such, I wish that you would vouchsafe to fulfill the same, in sending vs Artificers which can worke in gold and siluer, and can make Swords, and Armour of Iron, and Head-peeses; and also Masons to build Houses, and men that are skillfull to plant and trim Vines after your manner, and to dresse Gardens, and are skillfull in all other Artes, which are best and most necessarie for the life of man, and also Worke-men to cast sheets of Lead for the couering of Churches, and Tile-makers for our houses, for we couer them with Grasse, and of these we stand in very great need, and for want of them we are alwaies in disquiet. I haue built a great Church, which is named the Trinitie, wherein the body of my Father is buried, for his soule is in the hand of God, and the walls thereof (as your Ambassadour can declare vnto you) are good, and I would couer the same as soone as I could possibly, and would take away the Grasse which at this present is vpon it. For Gods sake, send mee of these Artificers, twelue at the least in euery Art: and yet for this you shall neuer want Crafts-men. And if they will stay with vs, they shall stay, and if they will depart, they shall depart, and I will pay them very bountifull for their paines, &c. This Towne of Zeila is the Hauens, whither all the Victuals doe come, which are transported into Aden, and so through all Arabia, and other Kingdomes and Countreies, which cannot be furnished, but onely with such Victuals as come from Zeila and Maczua, which are brought thither from our Kingdomes, and the Kingdomes of the Moores. And if you doe this, which I perswade you, you shall bring vnder your subiection the whole Kingdome of Aden, and all Arabia, and other Kingdomes adioyning, without warre, or the death of any of your people, for taking victuals from them, they will remaine besieged, and hunger-starued. And when you will wage warre against the Moores, acquaint mee with whatsoener you want; for I will send you great troopes of Horse-men and Archers, Victuals and Gold, and will come my selfe in person, and I and you will defeat the Moores and Pagans, for the aduancement of the holy Christian Faith.

Father Don Francisco is worthy of double reward, because hee is an holy man, and of an upright conscience, and exceeding honest for the loue of God. Being fully acquainted with his good disposition, I haue giuen him a Iurisdiction, a Crosse, and a Staffe in his hand, which is a signe of authoritie, and haue made him an Abbot in our Dominions, and I would wish you to increase his honour, and to make him Bishop of Maczua, and of Zeila, and of all the Islands of the Red Sea, and head of our Countreies, because he is sufficient, and deserueth the like, or a greater office, &c.

143. Wee departed from Ormuz in the fleet of Lopez Vaz of Saint Paul, the Grand Captaine, because Don Hector de Siluiera was gone toward the Red Sea, to encounter the Ships of Mecca, which wintered in the Citie of Aden, as I said before: and being come out of the streit of Ormuz, we found that the Winter of India was past, and that wee might sayle without any Tempest, and we sailed to a Fortresse of the King our Lord, in the Countrey of Chaul, which is very pleasant, and aboundeth with Corne, which commeth from Cambaia, and of Oxen, Sheepe, Hennes, and infinite store of Fish, and many fruits of India, and Herbs of Gardens, made by our Portugals. Within few daies after, Don Hector de Siluiera returned, and brought with him three Ships of Mecca, which he had taken, with great riches of Gold, because as yet they had not brought their merchandize, and came to buy them in India, and all the Moores which were young and lustie, that were taken in the said ships, they thrust into the Kings Gallies, selling them at ten Duckets a man, which is the Kings ordinary price. The rest which were old and weake, were likewise sold for ten duckets a piece. Departing from thence, wee came vnto the Citie of Goa, the five and twentieth of Nouember, on Saint Katherines Euen.

Cananor. We departed from thence, and came to Cananor, where we stayed fixe daies, then wee went to Cochin, where wee found Antonie Galuano, the Sonne of Edward Galuano, the Ambassadour, whose bones I brought with me from Camaran, to whom I declared the whole matter, and hee exceedingly reioyced thereat, and would needs come and fetch them from the ship, with all the Priests and Friars of the Citie, and with an infinite number of Waxe-Candles, and so hee was carried to the Monasterie of Saint Antonie. And because the Mariners will not carrie dead CorpSES in their ships, therefore the said Antonie caused a Graue to bee made behind the high Altar, and made as though he had put the Coffin therein, but secretly caused the same to bee carried to his ship, whereof he was Captaine.

Greatheate. 145. Being come to an Anker in the Riuer of Lisbon, ouer against the Kings house, incontinently came Boats vnto vs to receiue our stuffe, and carried them to Saint Arrem, where we rested fixe daies, and bought vs Mules and apparell, after the manner of Portugall. From hence we departed in a greater heate, then euer I felt in the Countrey of Prete Ianni, or in the Indies. The Ambassadour of Prete Ianni with-drew himselfe out of the way to the Towne of Azinaga, being himselfe and all his Company almost smothered with heate. The Kings Commissary conducted me to Ponte de Anonda, where I thought verily that I should haue ended my daies for extreame heate, and if I had not beene succoured with coole Water, I had presently beene stifled. While we stayed in this place, Don Roderigo came thither, riding as fast as he could, and crying, Helpe, helpe for the loue of God, for the Moores, the Kings Pilots, and my Slaues, are dead for heate. Straight-way foure Mulettiers ranne with foure Mules, and brought them thither, whereof one dyed immediatly, and another within two daies after: and so we indured a great extremitie of heate. And vpon the death of these two Moores, there was some suspicion of the plague, but the Kings Commissarie gaue sufficient Testimony of the truth, that is to say, That they dyed with extreame heate; because that albeit they came out of hot Countries, yet were they not wont to goe clad and shod, but onely with a cloath from the girdle downward: and now in this extreame heat which happened, being cloathed in apparell, they were vtterly stifled. And truly, all the time that I was in the Indies, and in Ethiopia, I neuer felt so great a heat; and it was told me for a certaintie, that the selfe-same day, there were very many that dyed of heate. The next day we trauiled by night, and came to Zarnache, where we receiued order from the King, to stay there till he sent for vs.

Two Moores dyed in Portugall
for heat.

146. Having stayed thirtie daies at Zarnache, with as much pleasure as might be, Diego Lopez de Sequeira, Surueyer of the Nauie, came vnto vs, who was the man that brought vs with his Fleet into the Country of Prete Ianni, to fetch vs vnto the Citie of Coimbra, where the King lay. After two daies came many Bishops, the Deane of the Chappell, and sundry Chaplaines, to fetch the Ambassadour of Prete Ianni, and all of vs which were with him from his lodging, and they brought vs to the Kings Palace, where the said Ambassadour presented to his Highnesse a Crowne of Gold and Siluer, which was square in foure pieces, and euery one was two spannes high, and very rich, which the Prete Ianni sent, and two Letters made in quaternians of Parchment, said; King Dauid my Lord, sent this Crowne, and these Letters to the King your Father, which is in glorie, and sent him word, that neuer Crowne was sent by the Sonne vnto the Father, but that they were wont to come from the Father to the Sonne: and that by the signe of this Crowne King Dauid himselfe was knowne, loued, feared, and obeyed in all his Kingdomes and Signiories, and hee being his Sonne, sent vnto the King his Father the said Crowne, to assure him, that all his Kingdomes, Signiories, and people, were readie to doe whatsoever his Highnesse should command. And afterward, hauing beene enformed of the death of King Don Emanuel, hee said; Let the Crowne and Letters, which I sent vnto the King Don Emanuel, my Father, be sent vnto the King Don Iohn, my Brother, with other Letters which I will write vnto him.

This being done, the said Ambassadour and I presented two bagges of Embroydered Cloath, with two Letters, and a little Crosse of Gold, which the Prete Ianni had sent to the Popes Holinesse, which things he requested to bee presented vnto him by me, Francis Aluarez. His Maiestie receiuing the Crosse, kissed the same, and afterward gaue it to Antonie Carniero, together with the Letters, and said, that he thanked the Diuine Maiestie, for that hee had guided in an happy way, the things which were begunne by the King his Lord and Father, and that hee would finish them accordingly, to the honour and glory of our Lord Iesus Christ.

In the yeare 1529. a good Benefice being fallen void in the Arch-bishopricke of Braga, his Maiestie bestowed the same of me, and commanded me to goe and present my selfe to my Lord Arch-bishop, Don Diego de Sousa, that hee might confirme me in the same: which when I had done, his Lordship asked me many things concerning the Countrey of Prete Ianni, which hee wished me to put downe in writing.

When the Prete trauelleth with all his Court, the Altar of the consecrated stone, whereupon Masse is said, is carried by Priests vpon their shoulders, and the said stones are laid vpon a little beare of Wood, and the Priests are alwaies eight, that is to say, Foure and foure to carrie them by turnes, and before them goeth a Clerke with a censur, and a Bell which he ringeth, and euery man remoueth out of the way, and they which are on horse-backe do light, and doe their reuerence.

In all this Countrey there is no Towne, that hath in it aboue sixteene hundred houses, and there are but few that are so bigge. Neither is there any walled Towne or Castle. Their Villages are without number, and they haue an infinite multitude of people. Their Houses are made in a round forme, all of Earth couered with Flagges, or with a certaine kind of Straw, which lasteth a mans life, with yards about them. There are no stone Bridges vpon their Riuer, but Bridges of Wood. They lye commonly vpon Oxe-hides, or in beds made of the thongs of the said Hides. They haue no kind of Table to eate vpon, but feed vpon certaine flat Platters of wood, which are very broad, without Towels or Napkins. They haue

Their manner of feeding.

10 Cups to drinke water, and the Wine of the said Countrey. Many eate raw flesh, others broyle it vpon the coles or burning embers: also there are Countries so destitute of wood, that they broyle their meate vpon fire made with Oxe-dung.

The cause why Nilus ouerfloweth Egypt, is this, that whereas the generall Winter beginneth in Ethiopia, in the midst of Iune, and lasteth vntill the midst of September, by reason of the exceeding great raines, which continue there all that season; Nilus groweth great and ouerfloweth Egypt.

The cause of the in rease of Nilus.

Prete, and all his receipts and expenses are onely put in writing. The Prete Ianni hath two names of honour, that is to say, Aregue, which signifieth an Emperour, and Neguz, a King.

20 Wine of Grapes is made openly but in two places, that is to say, in the house of Prete Ianni, and of Abuna Marke, and if they make it else-where, they doe it secretly. The Wine which they vse at the Communion, is made in this manner. In the Monasteries and Churches they keepe Grapes as it were halfe dried in their Vestries, and steepe them ten dayes in water, when they be swolne, they dry them, and then they presse them in a Wine-presse, and with that Wine they say Masse.

Small store of Wine made in this Countrey.

There is infinite plentie of Sugar-canes, but they know not how to boyle and refine the same, onely they eate them raw.

Sugar-canes.

There is no Mountaine in the Countrey whereon Snow is seene, neither doth it snow, although there be verie great Frosts, and specially in the plaine Countries.

No snow is seene in Ethiopia.

30 There is exceeding great quantitie of Honey in all this Countrey, and the Bee-hiues are placed after our manner, without the principall house, but they set them in the Chambers where the Husbandmen remayne, and set them against the wall, wherein they make a little hole, whereby they goe out into the fields. They also flie about the Chambers, and yet the people will stay within, for they vse to goe in and out. They bring vp great store of these Bees, especially in the Monasteries, because they are a great foundation of their sustenance. There are also Bees in the Woods and Mountaines, by whom they set wholsome barks of Trees, and when they be full of Honey, they carrie them home. They gather great store of Waxe, and make Candles thereof, because they vse no Tallow-candles.

Abundance of Honey.

Waxe.

40 They haue no Oyle of Oliues, but of a certaine kind, which they call Hena, and the Herbe whereof they make it is like vnto little Vine-leaues: this Oyle hath no smell at all, but is as faire and yellow as Gold. There groweth Flaxe also, but they know not how to dresse it to make Cloth thereof. There is great store of Cotton-wooll, whereof they make Cloth of diuers colours. There is also a certaine Countrey that is so cold, that they are forced to goe apparelled in course Cloth like a darke tawnie.

Flaxe.

Cotton-wooll.

In no Towne where I haue bene, haue I seene any shambles of flesh, sauing in the Court: and in other places no man may kill an Oxe, although it be his owne, without asking licence of the Lord of the Towne.

50 Touching their ordinarie iustice, it is not their manner to put any man to death, but they beat him, according to the qualitie of his fault, and also they put out his eyes, and cut off his hands and feete, howbeit, I saw one man burnt, because hee was found to haue robbed a Church.

Their ordinary manner of iustice.

The common people seldome speake the truth, although an Oath bee ministrd vnto them, vnlesse they be bound to sweare by the head of the King. They greatly stand in feare of Excommunication, and if they be commanded to doe any thing which is greatly to their preiudice, they doe it for feare of Excommunication. An Oath is ministrd after this manner. They goe to the Church gate with two Priests, which carrie Incense and Fire with them: And hee which is to sweare, layeth his hand vpon the Church gate, and the Priests will him to tell the truth, saying, If thou sweare falsly, as the Lion deuoureth the sheepe in the Forrest, so let the Deuill deuoure thy soule; and as the Corne is grinded vnder the Mil-stone, so let the Deuill grind thy bones; and as the fire burneth the wood, so let thy soule be burnt in Hell fire. And hee which sweareth, answereth Amen, to each of these Sentences. But if thou shalt tell the truth, let thy life be prolonged with honour, and thy soule goe to Paradise with the Blessed: and hee saith, Amen. Which Ceremonie being done, they cause him to giue like testimonie.

Their manner of ministring an Oath.

Whereas I haue said, that they sit not in their Churches, therefore I tell you, that without the gates of the same, there are alwayes placed a great number of wooden Crouches, like those wherewherewith lame men doe helpe themselves, and euery man taketh his owne, and leaneth vpon it vntill Seruice be done. All their Bookes, which are many, are written in Parchment, for they haue no Paper, and the writing is in the Language of Tigia, which is the Abassine Tongue, that is the Language of that Countrey wherein they became first Christians.

All the Churches haue two Curtaines, one by the high Altar with Bels, and within this Curtaine none doe enter but the Priests; then there is another Curtaine in the midst of the Church: and none doe enter into the Church, but such as haue receiued holy Orders, and many Gentlemen and Honourable persons doe receiue Orders, that they may be admitted into the Church.

The greatest part of the Monasteries are seated vpon high Mountaines, or in some deepe Valley. They haue great Reuenues and Iurisdiccions, and in many of them, they eate no flesh all the yeare long. They eate also very little fish, because they know not how to take them.

No painted Crucifixes.

Vpon all the wals of the Churches are Pictures of Christ and of our Ladie, and of the Apostles, the Prophets, and Angels, and in euery one of them is the Picture of Saint George. They haue no grauen nor carued Images; neither will they suffer Christ crucified to be painted in the wals, because, they say, they be not worthy to see him in that Passion. All their Friers, Priests, and Noblemen, continually carrie a Crosse in their hand; the people weare Crosses about their neckes. Euery Priest alwayes carryeth with him a Cornet of Brasse, full of holy water, and wheresoeuer they goe, the people alwayes pray them to bestow holy water, and their blessing vpon them, which they giue vnto them, And before they eate, they cast a little holy water vpon their meat, and likewise into the Cup where they drinke.

Their principall Feasts.

The moueable Feasts, as Easter, the Ascension and Whitsuntide, are kept on the very same dayes and seasons, wherein wee obserue them. Touching Christmas, the Circumcision, and Twelfe-tide, and other Feasts of Saints they likewise agree with vs; in other Feasts they doe not.

When their yeare beginneth.

Their yeare and their first moneth beginneth the sixe and twentieth of August, which is the beheading of Saint Iohn. And their yeare consisteth of twelue moneths, and their moneth of thirtie dayes: and when the yeare is ended they adde fise dayes, which they call Pagomen, that is to say, the ending of the yeare. And in the Leape yeere they adde sixe dayes, and so they agree with vs.

Their Muscicall Instruments.

They haue Cymbals like ours, and certaine great Basons wherewith they ring. Flutes they haue, and certaine square Instruments with strings like Harpes, which they call Dauid Mosamquo, that is to say, Danids Harpe, and they play vpon these before the Prete Ianni, but somewhat rudely.

The naturall Horses of the Countrey are infinite, but are not very good, but are like vnto Hackneies, but those which come from Arabia and Egypt, are very excellent and faire, and the great Lords haue Races of these Horses, and as soone as they bee foled, they suffer them not to sucke their Dams about three dayes, whom they will presently trauell on, and taking the Colts from their Dams, they put them to be suckled of Kine, and they become exceeding faire.

These Letters following were translated into Latine, by Pa. Iouius, and reviewed after also and published by Damianus à Goss, and in Italian by Ramusio. That which is omitted, is the same with that in the former Letter.

The Letters of Dauid, the Mightie Emperour of Aethiopia, vnto Emanuel King, of Portugall, &c. Written in the yeere 1521. as also to King Iohn and Pope Clement.

IN the name of God the Father, who was from Euerlasting, and hath no beginning, &c. These Letters are sent from me Athani Tingil, &c. Emperour of the great and high Aethiopia, and of mightie Kingdomes, Dominions, and Territories, King of Xoa, of Cassate, of Fatigar, of Angote, of Baru, of Baaliganze, of Aden, of Vangue, of Goiame, (where Nilus springeth) of Amara, of Baguemedri, of Ambeaa, of Vagne, of Tigremahon, of Sabaym, from whence came the Queene of Saba, of Bernagaes, and Lord euen to the Countrey of Nubia, bordering vpon Egypt. These Letters are directed vnto the most mightie, most excellent, and victorious King, Don Emanuel, who dwelleth in the loue of God, and remayneth stedfast in the Catholike Faith, the Sonne of the Apostles Peter and Paul, the King of Portugall and Algarbi, a louer of Christians, an Enemye, Iudge, Emperour, and Vanquisher of the Moores and Gentiles of Africa and Guinea, of the Cape of Buona Speranza, and of the Ile of the Moone, also of the Red Sea of Arabia, Perfia, and Ormuz, of the greater India, and of all places, Ilands, and Countries adiacent, the destroyer of the Moores, and stout Pagans, the Lord of Fortresses, high Castles and Walls, the Inlarger of the Faith of Iesus Christ. Peace be vnto thee, King Emanuel, who relying vpon the assistance of God, destroyest the Moores; and with thy ships, thy Souldiers and Captaines, expellest them in all places like faithlesse Dogs. Peace be with the Queene thy Wife, beloued of Iesu Christ, Seruant of the Virgine Marie, the Mother of the Saviour of all people. Peace be to thy Sonnes, being now, as it were, in a fresh Garden, amidst the flourishing Lillies, a Table furnished with all Dainties. Peace bee vnto your Daughters, which are adorned with Princely Robes, as Palaces are with Hangings of Tapistrie. Peace vnto your Kinsfolkes, the Off-spring of of Saints, of whom saith the Scripture, Blessed are the Sonnes of Saints, and mightie abroad and at home. Peace be to thy Counsellors, thy Officials, thy Magistrates and Iudges. Peace be to the Captaines of thy Castles and Borders, and of all thy defensible places. Peace be unto all Nations, People and Cities, and to all Inhabitants, except Moores and Iewes. Peace bee to all Parishes, and to all that are faithfull to Christ, and to thy selfe. Amen.

I was aduertised (most worthy King, and my Father) that so soone as the renoune of my Name was brought unto you by Matthew, mine Ambassadour, you presently caused a great number of Arch-bishops, Bishops, and other Prelats to be assembled, to giue thanks unto our Saviour Christ, for the same Ambassage, and that the said Matthew was entertained with great honour and solemnitie,

10 &c. But let vs omit these matters, and consult betweene our selues, how wee may innade and conquer other Lands of Infidels. I verily will bestow 100000000. drachmes of Gold, and so many thousands of Souldiers. Yea, I will bestow Wood also, and Iron, and Copper, for the building and furnishing of a Navy, and great plentie of victuals. Oh King, and my Father, Emanuel, that one God protect and saue you, which is the God of Heauen, and almaiies of one substance, being subiect neither to youth nor old age. He which brought your message, was called Roderigo de Lima, and was the principall of all his good company, and with him came Francis Aluarez, whom for his honest demeanour, his singular Religion, and upright dealing, I could not but most entirely loue, especially, when as being demaunded as touching the Faith, he answered most truly and aptly. You ought therefore to exalt him, to call him Master, and to grant him authoritie to conuert the people of Maczua, of Delagua, of Zeila, and of 20 all the Ilands of the Red Sea, because they are upon the Borders of my Kingdomes, and I haue giuen unto him a Crosse and a Staffe, in token of authoritie, and so likewise commend you the same things to be graunted unto him, and let him be created Bishop of the said Countries and Ilands, for he deserueth so to be, and is meete for the administring of this Function: and God will so mightily blesse you, that you shall euer haue the vpper hand of your enemies, and shall constraîne them to fall downe before your feete. The same God pralong your daies, and make you partaker of the Kingdome of Heauen in a most Honourable place, euen as I would wish for mine owne selfe. I haue heard with mine eares, many good reports of thee, and with mine eyes I see those things that I neuer expected to haue seene: God prosper all your affaires from good to better, and grant you a place vpon the wood of life, where the Saints themselves are placed, Amen.

30 I, like an obedient Sonne, haue done those things which you commanded, and will hereafter doe, whensoever your Ambassadors shall come, to the end we may mutually assist one another. And unto euery of your Ambassadors which shall come, as the former did unto Maczua, or Delaca, or to other Hauens within the streits of the Red Sea, I will giue, and cause to bee giuen those things which you shall request, according to my earnest desire: that wee may prosperously bee conioyned, both in Counsels and Actions. For when your Forces shall resort unto those Coasts, I will there be present with my Armies also. And because that vpon my Borders there are no Christians, nor Christian Churches, I will freely giue unto your subiects those Lands to inhabite, which are next unto the Dominions of the Moores: for it is requisite, that you bring your good beginnings to a happy end. In the meane while, send mee learned 40 men, and Caruers of Silver and Golden Images, and such as can worke in Copper, Iron, Tinne, and Lead: as also Artificers, which may Print Bookes in the Letters of our language for the Church, and likewise such as can beate Gold into thinne Plates, and therewith can gild other Metals. All these shall be most honestly intreated in my Court, and whensoever they will depart, I will giue them liberall wages for their paines. And I sweare by our Lord Iesus Christ, the Sonne of God, that I will freely dismisse them, when they shall thinke good. And this I doe most confidently demaund, because I am not ignorant of your vertue, and know right well the goodnesse of your disposition, being also assured of your exceeding loue toward me: and this I know the more certainly, because you so honourably entertained, and dismissed Matthew for my sake. And this is the cause that maketh mee so earnestly to request. Neither let this cause you to bee ashamed, for I will pay for all things to the uttermost. That which a 50 Sonne asketh of his Father, ought not to be denied: you are my Father, and I am your Sonne: let vs therefore be ioyned together, as one stone in a wall is ioyned to another, so being two, we doe agree in one heart, and in the loue of Iesus Christ, who is the head of the world, and they that are with him, are likened vnto stones united in a wall. Amen.

Here is much omitted for breuitie, which in the former Authors may be seene: as that Matthew was not sent by him, but by Queen Hekua, &c.

IN the Name of God the Father, Almighty Creator of Heauen and Earth, of all things visible and Inuisible. In the Name of God the Sonne, Christ, who is the Sonne, and Counsell, and Prophet of his Father. In the Name of God the holy Spirit, the Comforter, the liuing God, equall to the Father and the Son, who spake by the mouth of the Prophets, inspiring the Apostles, that they might giue thanks and glorifie the Trinitie, perfect alwaies in heauen, and in earth, in the sea, and in the deepe. Amen.

His Letters to Iohn the third King of Portugall.

60 These Letters and this Messenger are sent from me, the Incense of the Virgine, &c. Now I send my message by Frier Christopher Licanati, being named at his Baptisme, Zaga Zabo, that is to say, The Grace of the Father, who shall sollicite my request unto you. Moreover, unto the Pope of Rome, I send Francis Aluarez, to performe obedience in my Name, as it is meete. Renowned King and my Brother, indouour thy selfe to confirme that friendship betweene vs, whereof thy Father was the Authour, and send often unto me thy Messengers and Letters, which I greatly desire to see, as comming from my deare Brother: for it is very conuenient, sithens we are both Christians, and sith the wicked Moores are alwaies at concord in their sect. And now I doe protest, that I will not hereafter admt the Ambassadors of the King of Egypt, nor of other Kings, which haue often sent Messengers vnto me, but onely the Ambassadors of your Highnesse, whose comming I earnestly desire; for the Moorish Kings esteeme not me to be their friend, in regard of our dissention in Religion: but they faime a kind of friendship, to the end they may more safely and freely exercise Traffique in our Kingdomes, whereby they reape great Commoditie. For they conuey mightie summes of Gold, whereof they are most greedy, out of my Dominions, whereas they are my Enemies, neither doe their Commodities please me any whit. Howbeit, this was to be tolerated, because it hath bene an ancient custome of my Predecessours, I doe not indeed wage warre against them, nor utterly destroy them, but spare them onely in this respect, least they on the contrary should violate and cast downe the holy Temple at Ierusalem, wherein stands the Sepulchre of Iesus Christ, which God hath left in the power of the abhominable Moores, and least they should make banocke of all other Christian Churches in Egypt and Syria; and this is the cause why I doe not invade and conquer them, and it is a great grieve vnto me. And I am the more perswaded hereunto, seeing I haue no Christian King neere vnto me to ayde me, and to comfort my heart. I my selfe (Oh King) can finde no cause of reioycing in the Christian Kings of Europe, when as I heare that they are at discord and warre among themselves. Be ye all united in one concord; For you ought all to bee conioyned together in a certaine league of amitie. And verily, if I had any Christian King bordering vpon me, I would not depart for the space of one houre from him: but I know not in the world what to say or doe, as touching this matter, when as it seemeth so to be appointed by God. My Lord, send (I pray you) Messengers often vnto me: For in seeing your Letters, I doe certes behold your countenance, because greater friendship groweth betweene men farre distant asunder, then betweene those that are neere together, in regard of the mutuall desire which they haue. For he that hath hidden Treasures, not seeing them with his eyes, he loueth them alwaies, and that most vehemently with his heart, as our Lord Iesus Christ in his Gospell saith, Where thy Treasure is, there is thy heart; Euen so my heart is with thee, seeing thou thy selfe art my Treasure, and thou likewise oughtest to make me thy Treasure, and sincerely to ioyne thy heart with mine. Oh Noble Brother, keepe this word: for thou art most wise, and (as I heare) like vnto thy Father in wisdom, which when I know, I presently gaue thanks vnto God, and abandoning sorrow, I exceedingly reioyced, and said; Blessed bee the wise Sonne of so great a Father, the Sonne of King Emanuel, which sitteth in the Throne of his Kingdomes. My Lord, see that you be not discouraged, because you are strong as your Father was: neither send you any feeble forces against the Moores and Gentiles. For by Gods helpe, and the indenour of your vertue, you shall easily vanquish and destroy them. And say not that your Father left you but meane forces: for they be very great, and God will euer assist you. I haue men, Gold and Victuals, like the sands of the Sea, and the Starres of Heauen. Wee two ioynd together, will destroy all the sauage and barbarous Moores. Neither doe I request ought else of you then men of skill, which may teach my Souldiers feats of warre. And thou (Oh King) art a man of a perfect age. King Salomon at twelue yeares old, undertooke the managing of his Kingdome, and had mightie Forces, and was wiser then his Father. My selfe also, when Nahu my Father deceased, was a child but of eleuen yeares old, and being inuisted into his Throne, I haue by the goodnesse of God, attained to greater wealth and strength then he. For in my hand are the Borderers and Nations of my Kingdome: Wherefore both of vs ought to thanke God for so great a benefit receiued. Giue care vnto me, my Brother and Lord: for heere in one word I request you, that learned men and Artificers may be sent mee, which can Print Bookes, and make Images, Swords, and all kind of Militarie Weapons: as also cunning Builders, Carpenters, and Physicians, which can both minister Potions, and heale Wounds. I would gladly also haue such, as can beate Gold into thinne Plates, and can artificially carue, both Gold and Silver, and also can digge Gold and Silver out of the Mines, and such as haue skill in Mining of all other Metals. Moreover, they shall bee welcome vnto me, that can make sheets of Lead, and such as can frame Bricks and Tiles of Clay. To be short, all Artificers shall be seruiceable vnto me, & especially Gun-founders. Assist me (I beseech you) in these things, as one Brother should assist another, &c.

His Letter to
the seuenth.

HAppy and Fortunate Holy Father, who of God art made a Conseruer of Nations, and holdest the Seat of S. Peter, to thee are giuen the Keyes of the Kingdome of heauen, and whatsoeuer thou shalt binde and loose, shall be bound and loosed in heauen, as Christ hath said, and Matthew hath so written in his Gospell. I, the King, whose Name the Lions honor, and by the Grace of God, Atani Tingil, &c. Emperor of great and high Ethiopia, of great Realmes, Iurisdicktions, and Lands, King of Xoa, of Caffate, of Fatigar, of Angote, of Baru, and of Baaliganze, of Adea, of Vangue, and of Goiamé, (where Nilus springeth) of Amara, of Bagua Medri, of Ambea, of Vaguc, of Tigremahon, of Sabaim, (whence was the Queene of Saba) of Barnagaes, and Lord as farre as Nubia, which is on the Confinés of Egypt. All these Prouinces are in my power, and many other great and small, which I reckon not. Nor haue I expressed the said Kingdomes and Prouinces by name, induced by pride or any vaine-glorie, but that the great God might be praised therefore, who of his singular bountie, hath giuen to the Kings my Predecessors, the Empire of so large Kingdomes of Christian Religion, and hath after exalted me with speciall Grace amongst other Kings, that I should continually be at the seruice of his Religion, and for this this hath made me Lord of Adel, andemie of the Moores and idolatrous Gentiles. I send to kisse the feet of your Holinesse, as other Christian Kings my Brethren are wont to doe, to whom, neither in Power nor in Religion I am inferiour. I in my Kingdomes, am the Pillar of Faith, nor haue I neede of other aydes, but place all my confidence and help in God, who hath alway sustained and gouerned me, from that time that the Angell of God spake to Philip, when he taught the right Faith to the Eunuch of Candace, a puissant Queene of Ethiopia, which went from Ierusalem to Gaza. Then Philip baptized the Eunuch, of whom afterwards the Queene was baptized, with great part of her Family, and her people which neuer since ceased to be Christians, and all of them from that time till now, haue beene strong in the Faith. My Predecessours helped of none but God, haue enlarged the Christian Faith in these great Kingdomes, which I enforce my selfe also to doe. I abide in my Confiner, as a Lion encompassed with a thicke Wood, strong against the Moores, and other Nations, enemies of the Christian Faith, which will not heare the word of God, nor my faithfull exhortations, I girt with my Sword, pursue them, and by little and little, chase them out of their nest, by the helpe of God which neuer failed mee, which hath otherwise happened to other Christians. For if they will extend the Confiner of their Kingdomes, they doe it not against Infidels, which they easily may, because one of them may helpe and succour another, being also marueilously furthered by the benediction of your Holinesse, whereof I also am partaker, hauing found in my Bookes the Letters of Pope Eugenius, which in times past he sent with his blessing to the King, the Seede of Iacob, of which blessing, hauing receiued it from hand to hand, I am glad and reioyce. Moreover, I hold in great veneration the Temple of Ierusalem, whither I often send due offerings by our Pilgrims: and much better and richer would I send, if the waies were not infested with Moores and Infidels, which not onely take away the Presents and Treasures from my Messengers, but hinder them also from free passage. And if the way were open, I would come into familiaritie, and commerce with the Church of Rome, as doe other Kings Christian, to whom I am not inferiour: and as they beleene, I also confesse one right Faith and Catholike Church, and beleene sincerely in the holy Trinitie, and in one God; the virginie of our Ladie, the Virgin Marie, and I hold and obserue the Articles of the Faith, as the Apostles haue written. At this present, our Lord God, by the hand of the most mighty and Christian King Emanuel, hath opened the way that we may know each other by Embassie, and Christians ioyned with Christians to serue God. But his Ambassadors being in our Court, newes came of his death, and that his Sonne Iohn (who is my Brother) hath receiued the Scepter in his Fathers Kingdome. Whence, as by his Fathers death I was much grieved, so was I marueilously cheered by the happy succession of his Sonne in the Kingdom: inasmuch as I hope, that hauing ioyned our Armies and Forces, we shall be able both by Sea and Land to open a way through the Prouinces of the wicked Moores, and set upon them with such furie, that we shall chase them out of their Seates and Kingdomes, and so Christians may more commodiously goe to the Temple of Ierusalem, and returne at their pleasure. And I, as I earnestly desire to be made partaker of the Diuine loue in the Temple of the Apostles, Peter and Paul, so I desire to haue the holy blessing of the Vicar of Christ; and without doubt, I hold that your Holinesse is the Vicar of Christ; and also that of the Pilgrims, which come from our Regions to Ierusalem, and to Rome, and not without great miracle returne, I heare many things spoken of your Holinesse, which cause me incredible pleasure and ioy. Yet should I haue much more pleasure, if my Ambassadors could vse a shorter way, and at all times relate the newes unto mee, as I hope they shall once bring me before I dye, by the Grace of Almighty God, who keepe you in health and happinesse. Amen. I kisse your holy feete, and humbly intreat your Holinesse to send me your blessing. Your Holinesse shall receiue these by means of our Brother Iohn, King of Portugall, of our Ambassador, Francis Aluarez.

Another Letter of his was deliuered by the same Aluarez, to the same Pope: desiring him to send him Artificers in Glasse, and Muscull Instruments, &c. Also to accord the Christian Kings, that they might take Armes against the Mahumetans, which assist one another, &c. But we haue beene already tedious, and therefore omit it: And the Letter of his mother Helena, sent 1509. by Matthew aforesaid, which in Goes aforesaid is to be seene. Aluarez was receiued by the Pope, Clement the seventh, at Bologna, January 29. 1533. in the presence of Charles the fifth Emperour, and Martin the Nephew, Counsellour and Ambassador of King Iohn of Portugall, and entertained as Ambassador of the said King David, in his Name, presenting obedience to the Pope, as more at large in Ramusio appeareth.

CHAP. VI.

A Rutter of Don Iohn of Castro, of the Voyage which the Portugals made from India to Zocz. Dedicated to the most Illustrious Prince, the Infant Don Luys, and here abbreviated: shewing the state of Socatora, and the parts on both sides the red Sea, as they were about eightie yeeres since, with the Harbours, Ilands, Depths, Shelues, and other things pertayning to the Historie of the Sea, Land, and People. The originall of which is reported to have beene bought by Sir WALTER RALEIGH, at sixtie pounds, and by him caused to be done into English, out of the Portugall.

§. I.

The sayling from Goa to Socatora, and into the red Sea, as farre as Mazua.

* This Voyage being occasioned, by sending the Patriarch Bermudez to Ethiopia, and relating how that State decayed, invaded by the Moors, and embroiled with ciuill discontent: containing also a more full intelligence of the red Sea, then any other Rutter which I haue seene, I haue here added; and next to it, Bermudez owne report, translated, it seemeth, by the same hand (not the most refined in his English phrase, which yet durst not be too busie with, wanting the Originall) and reduced to our method; here and there amending the English, which yet in part was done, as I thinke, and many marginall notes added, by Sir

He one and thirtieth of December, 1540. * at Sunne rising, we set saile from the Barre of Goa, the way of the Straights, the wind was off the Land to the Eastward. Wee coasted along the Coast, bearing but little saile: about ten of the clocke, we came to an anchor at a River, which is called Chapora.

The thirteenth of Ianuarie, 1541. in the morning we saw great quantitie of Oze, that growes vpon the Rockes of the Sea, and within a little while wee saw a Snake; the Sunne being vp, wee saw Land of the Iland of Socatora, in search of the which we went, and the Land bare with vs flat South.

Now, after we were at anchor in this part, I asked of the most principall Pilots of the Fleet, how farre they made themselves off the Land the day that they saw it, and I found, the chiefe Pilot was ninetie leagues short, when wee saw it; the Pilot of the Galleon Bufera, one hundred and odde; and others, eightie: those which made themselves the least, were seuentie leagues short. In such fort, that my Pilot, which made it sixtie fve, was the neereest to the Land. And I found among them all, a great wondring and a murmuring, how the error could be so great; and either because it was so, or because the Pilotes would make their reason good, they all cried out, affirming, that this deceit proceeded, of the way being shorter then the Cards make it. Likewise, the Morish Pilots made good their complaint, affirming, that from Goa to Socatora, there were no more then three hundred leagues.

The Iland of Socatora hath in length, twentie leagues, and nine in breadth; it stands in twelue degrees and two third parts, on the North side; the front of the Iland that is opposite to the Septentrionall part, runneth East and West, and somewhat to the North-west and South-east: the Coast of the Sea is all very cleere without any Rocke, or Shoald, or any other impediment that may hinder the Navigators: the ground in the Road is sand, and in some places stonie, but in such qualitie, that it will not cut the Cables. On this side the treuerse wind, or the North wind is so forcible, and bloweth with such a rage, that it raiseth great heapes of sand ouer the Hills, and doth driue them beyond their high and craggie tops. In all the circuit of the Iland, there is not any other place or harbour, where any ship may safely winter. The Coast of the Sea is very high in euery place, and begirt with very great and high Mountaines, with many Pikes, Piramides, and diuers other very faire shewes. In these Coasts of this Iland the tides are contrarie to them of India: for, when the Moone riseth, and appeareth in the Horizon, it is high floud, which the Mariners call, full Sea; and the Moone beginning to ascend in our Hemisphere, the tide begins to ebbe, till it commeth to the Meridian of this Iland, and being in it, it is dead low water; but the Moone descending from the Meridian, it begins to flow, by the same order and degrees that it was set in the great circle of our Horizon, and being set, it is here full Sea. I made this obseruation many dayes by the Sea shoare, and found alwaies the same operation. This Iland of Socatora, (if I be not deceiued) was called in old time, Dioscoridis. There was in it a Citie, called also Dioscorides, as it appeareth in Ptolomie, the sixth Table of Asia: but, by the manner that he had in casting it, and the place where he seated it, it appears

For prolixitie we haue omitted the way hitherto. A Snake. Socatora Iland. From Goa to Socatora is 300. leagues, as the Moors account. The Iland of Socatora is in length 20. leagues and nine in breadth. that he had euill information of the Trauellers. The Socatorians doe keepe the Law of the Gospel; and they were enlightned, and brought to the Faith by the blessed Apostle Saint Thomas, as they themselves beare record. In all the circuit of the Iland are many Churches, in which there is no Oracle, but the Crosse whereon our Sauour suffered. They pray in the Chaldean Tongue, as I was enformed, they want instruction, but they are very desirous of it, and demand with great efficacie the doctrine and customes of the Romish Church; and all of them doe confesse this alone to be good, and is to be kept; they call themselves by our names, as John, Peter, Andrew, &c. and the women generally Maries. To consider the manner how this People liueth, certainly is worth the noting; for, among them they haue no King, Gouvernour, Prelate, or person to obey, or who may gouerne them; but they liue in a manner like the wild beasts, without any order of Iustice, or politique life. In all the Iland there is no Citie or great Town, but the greatest part of the People dwellerh in Caues, and some haue little Cortages thatcht, separated the one from the other, liuing a life more then sauage and pastorall. Their food is Flesh and wild Dates, they drinke Milke, and taste the water very seldome. All of them are very deuoted to the Crosse, and for a wonder shall you find one person that doth not weare it about his necke: this People is of the best disposition in all these parts, they haue their bodies tall and straight, their faces well proportioned, their colour is swarthie, the women are somewhat whiter, and honestly faire. In all the Countrey there is no manner of weapons, offensive and defensive, except certaine Swords of dead Iron, very short; the men goe naked, and they couer onely their secret parts with certaine Cloth, which they call Cambolis, of the which they make great quantitie in the Iland. The Countrey is naturally poore, and no other merchandise are found then * Verdigrease, and Sanguis Draconis. But the Verdigrease is in great abundance, and esteemed aboue all. All this Iland is mountainous, and breedeth all sort of Cattell that is in our parts, of the which there is great abundance. The Countrey neither produceth Wheat nor Rice, nor any maintenance of this kind. I beleue, this is not the fault of the ground, but want of Industrie and Arte in the Inhabitants; for the Iland within the land is very fresh, and hath many Valleys and Plaines, very conuenient for to receiue all benefit that they will bestow on it. This People hath no manner of Nauigation, neither industrie for to catch the Fische, which by the Coasts of this Iland is infinite; they haue very few Fruit-trees, among the which the Palm-trees are esteemed, and nourished, as the principall part of their food to maintaine life: the Countrey yeeldeth all manner of Garden-herbs, and medicinable Herbs, the Mountaines are couered with the Herbe Basill, and other smelling Herbs.

The seuen and twentieth of Ianuarie, 1541. in the morning, we were very little beyond the Citie of Aden, in such sort, that it was to the North-west of vs, the distance might be about fixe leagues, the wind was at East, and faire, wee sailed West South-west, and wee knew that the Land that wee saw yesterday in the afternoone, and seemed to vs an Iland, was the Mountaine of Aden: this Mountaine is very high and faire, on euery side craggie and rough; vpon it there arise some very high pikes and sharpe, in all shewes it is very like, and of the making of the Hill of Sintra, which more then any other thing doth make it noble and famous. This Hill descendeth to the Sea, and with great violence, thrusteth within her waues, a very great and long point, and presently withdrawing it selfe a great space inward to the land, there remaine, made two nookes, as faire as compassed, wherein that which lieth on the East side, stands situated the strong Citie of Aden. This Hill in times past, was called Cabubarra, and was made famous by the Nauigators, and the Citie of Aden was knowne for Madoca. This Citie of Aden, within this three yeeres, is come to the power of the Turkes, by Treason which Soliman Bassa, Gouvernour of Cairo, did to the King of it, which past in this manner. The Great Turke making a great Armie, at the request of the King of Cambaya, and of all the Inhabitants of the Straights of Mecca, for India. Hee sent the Gouvernour of Cairo, called Soliman Bassa Eunuch, with a great Armie of Ships and Galleys for India. This Captaine being come to the Port of Aden, the King and Citizens, fearing the little trueth of the Turkes, denied them the entring into the Citie, but they provided them with all necessities of victuals and prouisions: Soliman, and also the Souldiers, not shewing any grieve at this hospitalitie, the King assured himselfe, and with many messages and visitations of great friendship, which past betweene them both, they came to conclude, to meete in the Admirall Galley, that they might intreat together about the Conquest, which newly he went to make in India. The day of the agreement, the King comming to consult with Soliman Bassa, was taken prisoner, and the Turkes, which for this act were prepared, assaulted the gates of the Citie, and being entred, easily possessed themselves thereof; and the day following, the King was hanged before the gates. The Citie being taking by this Treason, Soliman leauing a great Garrison within it, made his iourney in all haste toward Dio.

On the side of Africa, beginning at the Cape of Guardafui, in other times, called Aromata: and on the other side of Asia, from the Promontorie Siagros, or Cape of Fartaque, which is the same; all the Sea that is containd vnto the ancient Citie of the Heroes, which now is called Soez, is called the Arabick Gulfe, knowne vulgarly for the Red Sea. The space of Sea that lyeth betweene these two Promontories, and diuideth in this place Asia from Africa, may be the summe of fiftie eight leagues. And from hence, viz. from these Promontories, the Coast of e-uery side turning to the setting of the Sunne, doe runne almost in the same distance, till they come to two Cities, that is, Aden in Arabia, and Zeila in Ethiopia, or Abexi; and from thence the Coasts begin to streighen very much, and euery time more running with desert Coasts and little winding, till they meete in the place of the Mouth, with two Promontories, that is, Possi- dium on the Arabian side; and another which lyeth on the contrarie side, that is, of Ethiopia or Abexi, whose name, as well Ancient as Moderne, is not come to my notice; where as farre as these Promontories is the narrowest and streightest passage of the Streight. This streightnesse, of the neighbouring people, and of those which inhabit the Coasts of the Indian Ocean, is called Alhabo, which in the Arabian tongue, do signifie Gates or Mouthes; and in this place and mouth, 10 the Land doth neighbor so much, and the shewes which they make of willingnes to ioyne themselues, are so knowne, that it seemeth without any doubt, the Sea, much against their wills and perforce, to enterpose it selfe in separating these two parts of the World. For the space which in this place diuideth the Land of the Arabians, from the Coast of the Abexi, is about fixe leagues distance. In this space there lye so many Ilands, little Ilets, and Rocks, that they caule a double, considering this streightnesse without, that some time it was stopped, and so by these streight Sluces and Channels, which are made betweene the one Iland and the other, there entreth such a quantitie of Sea, and maketh within so many and so great Nookes, so many Bayes, so many names of great Gulfs, so many diuersities of Seas, so many Ports, so many Ilands, that it seemeth not that we saile in a Sea betweene two Lands, but in the deepest and most tempestuous 20 Lake of the great Ocean. Now returning to the Mouthes of the Streight, which is the intent of our Description, Wee are to note, that in this place the Land of Arabia stretcheth into the Sea, with a very great and long point, and so for this cause, as because it remayneth out of the Mouth, and a great Nooke from this Point, it seemeth comming from the Sea, that the Land of this Point is some Iland, very distant from the firme Land. This Point is the Promontorie, which Ptolomie calleth Possidium.

Against this Point or Promontorie Possidium, little more then a stones cast standeth a little I-let, called the Ilet of the Robones. For Roboan, in the Arabian tongue, is as much as Pilot, the which dwelling here did bring in the Ships that came from the Sea, and from thence directed them to the places of their Countrie that they went vnto. This Iland is round and very flat, the 30 circuit may comprehend the sixt part of a league, from it to the firme Land yee may passe, the Water being low, but the Tyde beginning once to flow from one quarter flood, it cannot be waded. To the Sea off this little Iland, opposite to the Coast, about one league, standeth an Iland, which hath in length about a league and a halfe, the which on that side that fronteth the Abexi, hath a very great Hauen and sure from all Windes, where a great Nauie may well bee harboured of Galleyes, but the other front of the Iland which is opposite, and fronteth the Land of the A- rabian, not onely wanteth a Harbour and Receptacle, but also wanteth a landing place. This Channell is sailed well in the middest North-west and by West, and South-east and by East:
through all the Channell is eleuen fathome deepe, we may passe either neere the Iland, or neere 40 the firme Land, or through the middest it is very cleane in euery place without any Flats or Shoalds, or any other inconuenience that may disturbe vs; the ground is a soft stone, which they call Corall stone, and scarcely shall yee finde a sandie plot, though you seeke it with great diligence. Being farre within the Channell, and going to seeke the Roade and Hauen, which may harbour vs from the Easterne windes, which in this place are very strong, the depth diminish-eth somewhat, but it is no lesse then nine fathome. Besides this Channell of the Arabian, there be many other whereby you may goe into the Streight safely, and being many, the mention is made of one onely of them, and they called it, the Channell of the Abexin; because from the Iland of the Gates, vnto the Promontorie opposite to Possidium, which is in the Coasts of Abexin, there may be of distance about fiue leagues, in this space there lye fixe Ilands very great and high, and seeing them from without the Mouth of the Streight, they put the Sailers in great feare 50 and doubt, shewing that they forbid the passage that way, but the truth is, that betweene them, there goe very large Channels and of great depth, whereby without any danger wee may make our way, and also if we will, leauing them all on the right hand, wee may passe betweene them and the Mayne of Abexi.

The nine and twentieth of Ianuarie, 1541. at noone, I tooke the Sunne, and being in his greatest heighth, it rose ouer the Horizon two and sixtie degrees and three quarters, the declination of this day was fifteene degrees, whence it remayneth that the Mouth of the Streight and Pro-montorie Possidium, standeth in twelue degrees and one quarter towards the North. The Pilot tooke the same heighth, the which being taken vpon the Land, it cannot choose but be of very great certaintie.

That night, two houres after mid-night, wee set saile from the Mouth of the Streight. The thirtieth of Ianuarie, 1541. by day, we saw the Land of both the Coasts, and wee were neerer the Land of Abexi, then to the Arabian; the Wind blew hard at East South-east, till noone; we sailed to the North-west and by West, making the way by a Channell that goeth betweene the first

first Ilands, and the Coast of the Abexi, the which vntill this day was vnknowne and strange to the Portugals; the distance wee went from the Land by this Channell, might bee about foure leagues; an houre after Sunne rise, we saw along the Coast a ranke of Ilands, the greatest part of them were low, and as the ranke of Ilands, to the Coast stretched North-west, South-east; the ranke of the Ilands might comprehend about sixtie leagues iourney. Now, sailing by this Channell with a prosperous winde, at whatsoever part we cast our eyes, we saw many little Ilands, as well on the one side as on the other.

By this Channell, which is called of the Abexi, we must not saile by night, and without the winde in the Poop, for if the winde change, we cannot come too and againe, nor come to an anchor in any place, till we are so farre forward as the first of the first Ilands, wee shall see to the Sea-ward nine little Ilands, and from thence forward the Sea remayneth free and open, and onely to the Land of vs there be a great quantitie of them; and some doe separate themselves from the Coast and the Mayne, about two leagues; but the greatest part of these Ilands doe lye along the Coast; the length of this Channell, which incloseth it selfe in the three first Ilands, and the Land of Abexi, may be about eight leagues: to make a safe voyage, it behoueth to goe neerer to the firme Land, then to the Ilands; but about all things, my opinion is, that none doe take it in hand without a Pilot of the Countrey.

The one and thirtieth by day, we came to a shoald, where were sixe fathom water, and to the Sea of it against certaine Ilands, which are called the seven Sisters; there is a Rocke of stone very dangerous, as the Moorish Pilots told me: so that the good Navigation in this part is to goe very neere the firme Land, and in no case goe to the Sea of this shoald. At night wee came to an anchor within a Hauen, which is called Sarbo, in nine fathome and a halfe water, all this day very close to the Coast we saw great quantitie of little Ilands.

The first of Februarie, I went on Land in the Iland, and Port of Sarbo, carrying the Pilot with me and the Master, that we all might take the Sunne: and in his greatest heighth it was risen ouer the Horizon one and sixtie degrees scarse: the declination of this day, was thirteene degrees and sixe and fiftie minutes; whence it remayneth manifest, this Iland and the Port of Sarbo, to be in fiftene degrees and seven minutes, towards the North side.

About foure and twentie leagues short of Magna, and distant from the Coast of the Abexi foure leagues, in fiftene degrees of heighth, there is a great Archipelago of Ilands; some of which lye so low, that they rise very little aboue the superficies of the Sea, and others doe rise so high, that they seeme to touch the Cloudes, and betweene the one and the other, there are so many Bayes, Ports, Harbours, as no winde can annoy vs: all of them want water, except one very high, which the Portugals call, The Iland of the Whale, because it resembleth one very much, and there is water, and plentie of Cattell, and here is a great Hauen where Ships may winter. Of all these, that which is most to the Sea, is one that in Arabique is called Sorbo, where at this present we lye at anchor. This Iland of Sarbo, is of length about a league, and almost halfe a league broade, the Land of it is very low, it hath many Trees but very low and barren, all the Plaine is full of grasse, in euery place yee finde the footing of Men and Cattell, but there was onely one Camell scene, for the which occasion, they called it, The Iland of the Camell; in all the circuit of the Iland, we found no water, though we sought it very diligently, except one Well digged in a stone, which according to the appearance of it, was to receiue the raine waters. Betweene these Ilands doe enter many armes of the Sea, Reaches and Channels.

The fourth of Februarie, 1541. at Sunne rise, we set saile from the Port of Sorbo, Februarie the seuenth, we sailed along many Ilands, which are distant from the firme Land about three or foure leagues; the greatest part of them are very low and flat with the Sea. Wee went to the Sea of them all about a league, and about euen-song time, we saw to Sea of vs a ranke of Ilands very long, which seemed to take some fve leagues distance, there was from vs to them about some foure leagues, all of them lay North-west and South-east, as farre as I could discerne. The Coast which all this day we saw, stretched North-west and by West, and South-east and by East. So that this Channell, wherein this day we sailed, hath in breadth about fve leagues, reckoning the space that lyeth betweene the one Iland and the other: the greatest part of this day I commanded to cast the Lead, and I found alwayes fve and twentie fathome water, and the ground Ozie.

The eight of Februarie, 1541. two houres after the Sunne rose, wee set saile. Most of this time we sailed to the North-west, at Sunne set we were almost entred into the Channell, that goeth betweene the Point of Dallaqua, which looketh to the firme Land, and an Iland, which is called Xamea, but hauing respect that night began to come on, and that many Galleons remayned farre off, and it would bee difficult to hit the Channell, and also considering, how at this time the winde was alreadie scarse, we tooke in our sailes, and with our fore-sailes we went rummore, sailing to the South-east; and two houres within night we came to an anchor in fortie fathome water, the ground Osie. All this day wee saw along the Coast many Ilands, so flat, that they and the Sea seemed to haue one superficies. The Coast that shewed it selfe to vs, stretched North-west and South-east, to a low Point, which is as farre forward as the Iland of Dallaqua.

laqua. Doubling this Point, the Land maketh a great Nooke, that entreth ten or twelue leagues into it.

The Iland of Dallaqua is a very low Land, and almost flat with the Sea, without rising in it, Mountayne, Pike, or any other height; it hath in length, according to the common opinion, five and twentie leagues, and twelve in breadth; the side of this Iland, which is opposite to the South, stretcheth East South-east, and West North-west, that is, all the Coast which I could comprehend with the sight, and along the Coast lye great quantitie of little Ilands, all very low, and beare the same course of the Coast. I onely coasted this side of the Iland seven leagues, and two distant from the Land, and casting many times the Lead, neuer found ground. The Metropolitan Citie, is situated almost in the Point of the Iland, which lyeth on the West side a frontier to Abexi, it is called Dallaca, whence the Iland tooke the name, which is to say in the Arabique tongue, ten leagues, and this, because in times past, the Custome-house thereof, yeelded so much euery yeere to the King. Euery Arabian league is worth ten thousand Seraphins, and euery Seraphin Arabique two Tangas larmas; in sort that ten Arabian leagues, are worth in our money fortie thousand Cruzados. The Point of this Iland on the West side, and opposite to the Abexi, is distant from the firme Land about fixe or seven Leagues, and in this space of Sea, there lye five Ilands, very flat; the first is distant from this Point one league, it is called Xamoa, it hath in compasse two leagues, in it there be some Springs and Wells, and betweene this Iland of Xamoa, and the Western Point of Dallaqua, is the principall Channell and most current for to goe to Maqua. In this Channell there are seuentie fathome water, the Land of this Iland is red; it produceth few Trees, and great abundance of Herbs. The King of it is a Moore, and all the People, he is resident the most part of the yeere in Maqua, because of the traffique he hath with the Abexins. This Iland at this present yeeldeth little; for after the rising of Suaquen, Maqua, Aden, and Indaa, it lost the traffique, and with the traffique the reputation.

The twelfth, the Naue of Galleons came into the Port of Maqua. Maqua is a small Iland, very flat, and in it in old time was built the Citie Ptolomaida, of the wilde beasts. This Iland hath in length about the fift part of a league, and of breadth a Caluer shot, it lyeth in a great and crooked Nooke, very neere the Point of the Nooke that is on the North-west side. The space of Sea that diuideth this Iland from the firme Land, is about a Faucon shot, and in some parts not so much; in this distance, to wit, betweene the Iland and the firme Land is the Hauen, in the which the Sea is not troubled with any weather, and the Current is very little, and all windes come ouer the Land, the depth is eight or nine fathome water, the ground is Ozie. The entrance of this Port lyeth on the North-east side, by the middest of the Channell betweene the Land and the Iland, because that from the Point which turneth to the East North-east, there goeth out a Shoald toward the Land, and the Point of the Nooke casteth another against the Point of the Iland, for the which they force the Ships to beware of the extremes of the Mouth of the Channell, and to seeke the middest of it. The Channell is very streight, it runneth North-east and South-west; very neere to this Iland of Maqua, toward the South and South-west, lye other two Ilands, the neereft to the firme Land is somewhat the bigger of them, and that which is more to the Sea, and lyeth toward the South-west, is the lesser, and very round. These three Ilands stand in a triangle forme, they are all very flat and barren, there is no springing water in any of them, onely in Maqua are many Cisternes, whereof the Inhabitants doe drinke and liue. Betweene these Ilands are scattered many Shoalds, but through the middest of them goeth a Channell where Gallies and rowing Vessels may passe at a full Sea. This Iland of Maqua was a little while since of the Signiorie of Preste Iohn, with all the Coast, contayned from the Cape of Guardafui to the Citie of Suaquen; but within these few yeeres, the King of Dallaqua hath vsurped it, and is resident in it the most part of the yeere, because of the traffique he hath with the Abexines, of whom he hath great quantitie of Gold and Iuorie. The ayre is vnhealthfull in the moneths of May and Iune, and very vntemperate through great and intollerable calmes, in such sort that as well the King as the Inhabitants, doe auoid it, and leaue it emptie these two moneths, and goe to Dallaqua. The firme Land of the Nooke, wherein standeth this Iland of Maqua, till yee come to a place of many Wells of water, called Arquito, by the Sea side, is very high and mountaynous, but from thence forward, the Sea coast is more open and cleere, and betweene the Hills and the Sea are great Fields and Plaines. There may bee from Arquito to Maqua a league. Arquito standeth to the South from the Iland: through all these Mountaines and Fields, are great number of wilde beasts of diuers kinds, to wit, Elephants, Tygres, Woolues, wilde Boares, Stagges, Elkes, and many other formes of Beasts, not knowne vnto vs; whence, with much reason, it is called Ptolomaida, of the wilde Beasts. And that Maqua and Ptolomaida, be one and the selfe same thing, the eleuation of the Pole doth testifie in this behalfe.

§. II.

Relations of Ethiopia sub Ægypto, and P R E S T E R I O H N : of Nilus, and the Abassine Customs and Neighbours. The cause and meanes of the decay of that great Empire, neuer since recovered. Of Marate and Suaquen.

He Preste Iohn, which by another name, is called King of the Abexi, is Lord of all the Land of Æthiopia sub Ægypto: which is one of the greatest Prouinces we know in the World. This Easterne Empire beginneth at the Cape of Guardafui, called in old time, the Promontorie of Aromata, and from thence running along the Red Sea with Desert coasts, & not very crooked, it reacheth vnto the bounds of the rich City of Suaquen: on the Northside it bordereth with the warlike people of the Nubijs or Nubians, which lyeth between the Land of the Abexij, and the superiour part of Egypt, called, Thebayda, and from hence running great spaces within the Land, toward that part where the Kingdome and Land of Manicongo lyeth, after it hath taken too it selfe some part of Libya interior, all the other on the Westside remayneth for his bounds, and presently turning againe behind the Springs and Lakes of Nilus, going through the fierie and vnknowne Countries, it finisheth and endeth on the Southside in the Barbarian Gulfe, which at this day is knowne of the Portugals, which doe nauigate the same on the Coast of Melinde and Magadaxo.

Nilus at this day is knowne by his ancient name, for of the Abexijs, Egyptians, Arabians, and Indians, it is called Nil, a thing certainly worth the knowing; the Springs and Lakes whence this Riuer proceedeth, are in the Confines that separate the Land of the Abexins, or Æthiopi-ans from the Safres, which inhabit the mayne of the Land, that goeth from Melinde toward Mosambique, as I vnderstood, by some great Lords, and other persons of Abexij. Which thing is held of them all for manifest, and well knowne, and hence appeareth, the little knowledge that the Ancients had of his originall. Now, enquiring of these persons, if it were true, that this Riuer in many places did sinke vnder the Earth, and came out againe many daies iournies thence, I knew there was no such thing: But that through all the Land where it ranne, it shewed it selfe vpon the Superficies thereof, carrying a great depth and breath, without hiding it selfe or flying from the sight of men, as yee reade in Plinie, Lib. 5. of the Naturall Historie: About the increasings or over-flowings of the Riuer, I asked very often the causes, this beeing a thing so disputed of all the ancient Philosophers, and I came perfectly to know of them the Solution of this doubt, hitherto neuer determined; and so almost iestingly, with certaine simple Questions, I came to know that which so great and proud wits of Philosophers knew not.

These principall Lords of Abexij, told me, that in their Countrey the Winter beganne in the end of May, and lasted Iune, Iuly, and part of August, but that in August, the Ayre is more pleasant, the weather milde and tractable, but that in the monethes of Iune and Iuly, for a great Wonder appeared, the Sunne; so many, and so continuall were the raines which continually fell from Heauen, with the which the fields and low grounds were so couered and over-flowne of the waters, that in these two monethes, they cannot goe nor passe from one place to another, and that this multitude of waters had no other issue or place where to gather themselves, but only to the Channell of the Riuer Nilus: because toward the Red Sea, there ranne along the Sea very great Mountaines, it was of necessitie, that the Riuer should increase and go out of his owne course, not being able to containe so great abundance and weight of waters in it selfe, and the Riuer running with such vehement and terrible rage, it is very apparant, that as well in the Egyptian, as in other Lands whereby it passeth, it would goe out of his naturall course, and cause, whereby it passeth, great over-flowings: and the Territories of Egypt being most plaine, of necessity, the over-flowings in it would be more copious, and the Riuer would haue a larger scope to spread it selfe with his waters in euery place, the which could not so happen in the high and Mountainous Lands.

Now then, since it was manifest, that all the inundations of Nilus in Egypt, begin to increase when the Sunne was in the Solstitium Estiuale, which is in the moneth of Iune, the Sunne entering in the beginning of Cancer, but passing by the Signe of Leo, which is in Iuly, the Riuer increased in greater abundance, and when it was in the Signe of Virgo, which is in August, where in this moneth the raines begin to assuage in the Abexij, and Winter takes his leaue, the Riuer began to decrease by the degrees it had increased, till it come altogether into his Channell, the occasion remayned manifest of the increasing of this Riuer, to be the great and continuall raines, which in the moneths of Iune and Iuly, did fall in the Land of Abexij, or Æthiopia, which is all one; Seeing that when these raines ceased in August, the Riuer at that same time did beginne to withdraw himselfe to his accustomed bounds. I was my selfe in Maçua, the moneth of Iune, and part of Iuly, where I saw great stormes, raines, thundering, and within the Mayne continually, we saw great blacknesse and cloudinesse, and tempests, and the Abexins said, that we saw but little to that which went within the Land. Likewise, wee haue experience, that the moneths of Iune and Iuly, is the Winter of Cape Bona Esperanza, and all this Coast where the raines are very continuall. In this manner, hauing resolued my doubt, of the flowings of Nilus, I asked them if the Riuer made any Ilands; they answered mee, that it made many; but one of them was very great, where was built a most rich and great Citie, which by due consideration ought to be the Iland of Meroe, and they told mee, that aswell in this Iland, as through all the Riuer there were great numbers of certaine fierce and pestiferous beasts, which, without doubt, must be the Crocodiles; and being desirous to know if it were true, that in a certaine place the Riuer fell from such a height, that with the great noise of the fall, those that inhabited in the bordering Townes were borne deafe: I found no Historie of this, onely they told mee, that in a certaine place, which they named, the Riuer did fall of a great Rocke, downe with a great noise and rumour, but that there was no other thing.

As touching the customes and manners of the Abexines, the Lecture that of them might bee made, it would disturbe the Historie of the Rutter, for which cause, I will touch in briebe some things most worthy to bee knowne; especially, of the ruine and losse of this Empire, in our unhappie dayes.

Preste Iohn, by name Atini Tingill, called after Dauid, raigning in the yeare 1530. in the Land of Ethiopia, he became so cruell to his Subjects, and did tyrannize so much ouer the people, that he fel into an vniuersall hatred of the Abexines; in this time Gradamet, King of Zeila, finding the time fit, began to attempt warre with Presbyter Iohn, to see what he could find in the minds of the Abexines, & this, not that he was able to take such an Enterprize in hand, but either he encouraged himself in the great enmitie the Abexines had with their King, either this warre was secretly moued by some Lords of the Kingdom. Now, beginning to enter through the Land of the Presbyter, and to take some Townes, he diuided largely the spoiles among his Warriours, among the which he had three hundred Harquebusses, Turkes, which was the greatest strength of his Armie, and franchized all the Inhabitants of the Townes, where through he passed, and exempted them of the Taxes and Impositions imposed by Presbyter Iohn, with which liberalities hee got the minds of the Abexines, and not onely of the vulgar sort, but also of the most principall Lords of the Kingdome.

The Presbyter Iohn, seeing the damage receiued of the King of Zeila, sent against him his Captaines, which beginning some Skirmishes, as soone as the Turkes shot their Calceuers among the Abexines, and did kill some of them, the feare they tooke of these shots was so great, that presently they set themselues in flight. The King of Zeila proud of this victorie, entred within the Land, confident alreadie in the fauour of Fortune, accompanied with great companies of Abexines, which followed his partie, and foraging the Land of Ethiopia, by that part which standeth vpon Magadoxa, and Melinde, to the end that by this way hee might in shorter time might come to a Mountaine, where was the great Treasure of all the Presbyters past, the Presbyter seeing that euery day his Abexines passed to the Campe of the Moores, determined to come to a battaile, before that so great Harpyes did make an end of deuouring the Land altogether, and the minds of his Subjects, and gathering his Armies, and going against the King of Zeila, hee gaue him battaile, in which the Presbyter Iohn was ouercome, because that the Abexines could not abide the Harquebusses, and so fled from them, as from a cruell pestilence. The Presbyter with-drawne after this conflict to the Mountaines with some of his, within a few dayes, hee left this life, in the yeare of our Lord 1539.

The King of Zeila obtayning so great a victorie, trauelled by great iourneyes toward the Mountaine, where the Treasure was of the Kings of Abexy, and comming to the foot, assaulting the paces with great furie, notwithstanding, they were vnaccessiblle, and were defended from the top, in the end they entred them, and gained the Mountaine, where was taken the greatest Treasure, that vnto this day we know together in the compasse of the whole Earth. Now, vpon the decease of Presbyter Iohn, the Abexines, which continued in the faith and loue of their Countrey, elected his eldest Sonne for Presbyter, and King of Abexy, being a yong man of little age, which finding the Realme vsurped by Infidels, and almost irrecoverable (and because there might remaine nothing wherein Fortune might not be contrarie to him, and fauourable to the Moores) it hapned that a Brother of his, dealt with some great men how to get the Kingdome, which was the ytter ouerthrow of the Abexines. The matters of Ethiopia, beeing in these termes, and the infortunate youth contending with his Domesticall and Native Countriemen, the King of Zeila came vpon him, but the new Presbyter not being able to resist, with-drew himselfe to the Mountaine of the Jewes.

We are to note, that in the inward part of Ethiopia, there ariseth a great and most high Hill, which hath but one onely ascending and very difficult, but on the highest top of it lyeth a very plaine Countrey, where there are great abundance of Springs, Fruits, Cattell, and Tillages, the Inhabitants of this Mountaine doe obserue the Law of Moses, not finding in all the Land of Abexy any Jewes: the Historie and Antiquitie how they haue arrived here, and the cause of neuer descending downe, and conuersing familiarly with the Abexines, is not come to my notice, though though I laboured it much. The new Presbyter receiuing of these Jewes friendly entertainment, and reknowledged for their Lord, they defended him from the Moores, and King of Zeila, which despayring of the victorie, and entring the Mountaine, rettyred backward. About this time we arriued at Maçua with all the Armie: which when it was knowne, it put the Moores in a great feare, and lifted vp the decayed hearts of the Abexines, in sort that the Presbyter emboldned himselfe to descend from the Mountaine, and seated himselfe with his people in certaine Mountaines towards the Sea and Towne of Maçua, where we were arriued, writing many Letters more then pittifull and miserable, and in all of them before the writing, came Our Lord Iesus crucified, of the which, hauing louing Answeres, and full of hope of succour, wee made our iourney toward Soez, and being returned againe to Maçua, it was ordayned to send him five hundred men with a Captaine. This done, we set saile, and came directly the way to India, and to this present, I haue not knowne what more hapned, or is become of the Presbyter, and matters of Ethiopia.

What these Portugals petformed in Ethiopia, you shal reade in the following Relations of Bermudez, Customes of the Abexines. They are esteemed great Warriours out of their owne Countrey.

The Abexines are naturally ceremonious men, and full of points of honour. Among them there is no other kind of weapons then Darts, in which they here figured the Lance where-with Christ was wounded, and the Crosse whereon he suffered for Sinners. Some, though very few, weare halfe Swords. They are nimble on Horse-backe, but badly apparelled, generally they are lying people and giuen to Rapine. Among them he is not counted rich, that possesseth many, but he that hath abundance of Cattell, and Camels, and notwithstanding, this they esteeme the Gold very much: In their owne Countrey they are weake and cowards, but in a strange Countrey strong and valiant, in sort, that it is a Prouerbe in all India, to say, That the good Lascarin, which wee call a Souldier, must be an Abexine; and they are so esteemed in Ballagate, Cambaya, Bengala, and in other places, that they are alwayes Captaines, and principall persons in the Armies. Their attyre is vile and poore: they weare Shirts of linnen cloth, and some great person weareth a Beden, the vulgar goeth naked, and couered with whatsoeuer cloth; they eate Bolliemus, and raw flesh, and when they lay it to the fire, they hold it so little at it, that when they eate it, the blood runneth out of it. In the Land there is no Cities, nor Townes, but they liue in the fields in Pauillions or Tents, like the Alarbes.

A kind of vpper garment.

They doe honour themselves very much of the Queene of Saba, and they say, she tooke shipping in the part of Maçua; and others affirme, that it was in Suaquen, and carrying great riches with her and Jewels of great value, she came to Ierusalem to see King Salomon, giuing him great gifts, and returne from thence with child by the King, to her Kingdome. It is an historie much talked of among the Abexines, that a Soldan of Babylon, moouing warre against Presbyter Iohn many yeares agoe, the Presbyter gathered a great multitude of people, with the which he put in practice to turne the Riuer Nilus another way to the Sea, so that it should not runne through Egypt. The Soldan amazed at so great an Enterprize, and seeing that the worke comming to perfection, it would be the vtter ouerthrow of Egypt, he sent vnto him his Embassadors with great gifts, by the meanes of the which he obtayned his friendship and peace with the Presbyter Iohn, and gaue a priuiledge to the Abexines, that they might passe through all his Countrey, without paying any Tribute, and at this day they pay no Tribute when they goe to visit the holy Sepulchre, and Saint Catherine of Mount Sinai; I asked within the streights of some old learned Moores for this Antiquitie, and they told mee the same, not digressing one iot from the Abexines.

The nineteenth, at Sunne rising, we set saile from the nooke which is beyond Maçua, halfe a league and an halfe of water, distant from the Land about halfe a league: This day the weather was very close, and it rained, and numbring our Armie, I found sixtie foure rowing Vessels, that is, three Galliots, eight small Gallies, and thirtie five Foyfts. By night the wind was North-west, it calmed, and blew a little at West, in the second watch it began to raine, and halfe the morning watch past, wee wayed our Anchors, and went rowing along the shoare till the morning, it rained very hard all this time.

The Portugall Armada.

The twentieth, at euening, we were as farre as the Point of the ranke of Ilands on the Northside, at this time wee might bee from Maçua, about fourteene leagues, the Coast from Maçua hither, stretcheth North North-west, and South South-east, there is in the distance fourteen legues, in the Ilands which we saw on the Sea-side, we knew that in some of them there was Cattell and water, with some few and poore dwellings, the distance between them and the firme Land, might be some foure leagues, the names of these Ilands where the Cattell and the Water is, are Harate, Dobull, Damanill, the Land of them is low, and round about it is full of Shoalds and Flats.

Harate, Dobull, Damanill.

By night all the first watch, the wind faire at East, we sailed to the North North-west, at the beginning of the second watch, wee fell on a sudden in certaine very whitish spots, the which did raise and cast from themselves certaine flames like vnto Lightnings, wondring at the shew of this strange euent, presently we tooke in our Sailes, and beleeuing wee were vpon some Shoalds or Bankes, commanded to cast the Lead: I found twentie sixe fathome water, now now this noueltie making no impression in the Pilots of the Countrey, and seeing how we went by a great depth, wee set sayles againe.

An Iland vnder water to be feared.

The one and twentieth when it was day, wee saw at Sea off vs, the low Iland, whereof the Moorish Pilots were afraid.

The two and twentieth when it was day, wee set sayle: my Pilot tooke the Sunne at the highest, and found himselfe in eightene degrees and an halfe. At this time we were as farre as a Point of sand very long, which the firme land thrust out, doubling this Point, we found the Sea very faire, and we sayled North-west and by West. An houre after noone, we came to an Hauen, called Marate. All the Coast wee saw this day, stretcheth North North-west, and South South-east, the Land by the Sea side is very low, and maketh neuer a Hillocke, but within the Land there arise so great Mountaines, that they seeme to reach the Clouds. 10

A Description of the Port and Iland of Marate.

Marate is an Iland very low: the land thereof is very Desart, and without water, it is beyond Maçua, about sixtie sixe leagues; the Iland hath in compasse a league and an halfe, the figure thereof is rather round then any other, it lieth from the firme land about three leagues, in the side of this Iland which is opposite to the South-west, and beholdeth the firme land, there is a very good Hauen, free from all winds, and especially from the Easterne winds: for on this side, the Iland doth cast out two very long points into the Sea, which stretch East and West, and a quarter North-west and South-east: betweene the which the land on both sides doth streighten very much, and makes a very great and hollow bosome, in the mouth and front of which lieth a long Iland, and very flat; and also some Heads of sand, and Shoalds, by reason of which no Sea can come in there: this Hauen hath two entries, one of them goeth on the East side, and the other on the West side, the one and the other very neere the points of the Iland, betweene the which the Hauen is made. The Entrie and Channell which goeth on the East side, stretcheth North and South, a quarter to the North-west and South-east, the depth is three fathom in the shallowest place, and comming out of this, it encreaseth presently, and within the Hauen wee haue neere the Shoare foure and fiae fathome, the ground is mudde. By night, the wind blew at East, and lesse then by day, we rode all night. 20

Foure or fiae fathom water.

The Ilands of Daratata and Dolcofallar.

The three and twentieth the Sunne being vp, we set saile from the Iland and Port of Marate, and found seuen fathome, and sandie ground; at eleuen of the clocke, wee came in sight of two little Ilands, which were farre to the Sea; one of them is called Daratata, and the other, 30

Suaquen Channell full of Shoalds.

Dolcofallar, from which to Suaquen is a dayes iourney: from noone forward, we sayled North-west and by West, till Euen song time that we entred the Channell of Suaquen, and entring into it we sayled North-west the space of a league, and presently there wee had ahead of vs certaine Shoalds, for which cause wee sayled West, and a quarter North-west, and sometimes West, to free our selues from them, and we sayled this way about three leagues, till we saw a great Iland ahead of vs; as soone as we saw it, we went by a tacke toward the Land, and came to an anchor betweene certaine great Shoalds of stone, where there is a good Hauen, called Xabaque, which is to say in the Arabian Tongue, a Net. At this time it might bee an houre before Sunne set. This day my Pilot tooke the Sunne in his greatest height, and he found himselfe in nineteene degrees scarce. 40

Xabaque Hauen in 19. degrees scarce.

A Description of the Shoalds of Suaquen. A Shoald vnder water.

The Shoalds of Suaquen are so many, and so intermingled the one with the other, that no information or picture is sufficient, I say not to passe them, but for to vnderstand them, the Ilands, Shoalds, Bankes, Rockes, Channells that are among them are so many. These Shoalds at the entring, when wee are readie to goe in, haue on the Sea side a Shoald vnder water, whereupon the Sea breaketh very much, and to the Landward a litte Iland, which stretcheth with the Shoald North-east, and South-west, a quarter of the East and West, the distance is about three quarters of a league: as soone as we enter by these Shoalds, the Channell appeareth to vs large and spacious, and the farther wee goe forward, so much more to the Seaward there appeare to vs such an infinite number of Ilands very flat, Flats, Heads of sand or stone, that they haue no number, the which toward the Land are not so many, though in comparison of any other Sea, it is the foulest and vnnauigable. The precept which most ought to be kept for to passe between these shoalds, is to take heed that we goe alwaies neerer to them that lie to the Sea, and keepe our selues the most we can, from the other that are to the Landward. The breadth of the Channell that goeth betweene the one and the other, in some places is about halfe a league, in others a quarter, and in others lesse then a Caluer shot. As touching the depth of water through all this Channell, wee are to note, that in the entrie of it we found sixe fathoms, and from thence to the Port of Xabaque it abated nothing of this depth, nor exceeding twelue fathoms: from the beginning of these shoalds to this Hauen, there may be about fiae leagues, the length of them may be eight or nine leagues, where there goeth another Channell surer for ships and great vessels, and wee may likewise passe these Shoalds, leauing them all to the Sea, going very close with the firme land, and this is the rightest way and most pleasant. 50

Infinite number of Ilands, Flats, and Heads of sand and stone. A precept how to auoid them.

Fiae leagues of Shoalds, eleuen leagues from Suaquen.

The foure and twentieth, the Sunne being vp, wee set sayle from the Port of Xabaque, and rowed by so narrow a Channell, that in the broadest place we could not goe abreast, but one after another, & wherefoeuer it widened it might be about a Crof-bow shot, the most we went from the

the firme land, might be a Cannon shot, and the least little more then a Crof-bow shot. The Shoalds, Rockes and Bankes, we had on eueny side, and were all vnder water, vpon them wee saw manifest signes to auoyd them; For wheresoever they lay, the water ouer them did appeare to vs very red, or very greene, and where wee saw none of these colours, it was manifest to be the deepe, and cleereft of the Channell, the water shewing it selfe darke. Now going by this Channell, compassed with so many controuersies; at halfe an houre past eleuen, wee came to an anchor vnder the lee of a little low and round Iland, in nineteene degrees. In this height Ptolomie placeth the Mountaine of the Satyres, of the which I found no memorie in the Pilotes of the Countrey, but going into the Land about halfe a league, I found the foot of so many kinds 10 of Beasts, and flockes of Pianets, so great, that it was a wonder, and all the footings came till they set their feet in the Sea, and the tracke was so great, that it occupied the greatest part of the field. I beleene that Fable so spread abroad of the Satyres to come from hence, which they say, inhabite these Hills and Mountaines, and likewise it is to bee noted, that in these foure leagues of Channell that is from Xabague to this Iland, the water is no lower then two fathoms and an halfe, nor higher then eleuen, and also that the tide in the Iland ariseth not aboue halfe a yard. And it begins to flow as soone as the day beginneth to ascend by the Horizon, according to the order of the tides of Socatora.

Rednesse of the water.

Mountaine of the Satyrs.

The fixe and twentieth by Sunne rising, we departed from this Iland, rowing along a Shoald of stone, that ranne betweene vs and the Land almost equidistance from the Coast, and from it 20 to the Land all the Sea was full of Shoalds and Bankes, to the Sea of vs there appeared neither Shoalds nor Flats, or any other impediment. At nine of the clocke, we came to an anchor in a little Iland, compassed with many Flats and Shoalds, where was a good Hauen: this Iland was distant from the other, whence wee parted in the morning, a league and an halfe, and short of Suaquen five leagues.

The seuen and twentieth the Sunne vp, wee set saile from this second Iland: two houres within night, we came to an anchor a league and an halfe from the second Iland, in eight and twentie fathome water.

The eight and twentieth by day, we bridleed the Oares, and set saile: at nine of the clocke, we came to an anchor about two leagues from the Land, in three and twentie fathome water, 30 the ground was a soft sand like oze, or mudde. This morning, wee found some Shoalds vnder water at Sea, but vpon them it shewed it selfe very greene or red. Two houres after noone wee set saile againe, at night wee came to an anchor in seuen and thirtie fathome water, the ground was sand, the place was short of Suaquen, a league and an halfe, hard by an Iland, the Coast runneth North North-west, and South South-east, and all along there runneth a Shoald that entreth into the Sea neere halfe a league, the Land vpon the Sea side differeth in nothing from that we left asterne.

The first of March, 1541. by day, we departed this place, which is short of Suaquen, a league and an halfe: hauing doubled a point which the Shoald maketh, being as farre as the place, wee approached the Land, and entring by the Channell inward, we came to an anchor within the 40 Hauen of the Citie of Suaquen.

Suaquen was called in old time, the Port Aspi, as wee may see in Ptolomie his third Table of 50 Africa: at this day * it is one of the richest Cities of the Orient, it is situated within the Arabike Gulfe, in the Coast of Ethiopia sub Egypto, called now, the Land and Coast of the Abexij. Among all the famous places, this may be equall or superior to them all in foure things. The first, in goodnesse and securitie of the Hauen. The second, in the facilitie and good seruice for lading and vnlading of the Ships. The third, in the traffike with very strange and remote People and Lands, and of diuers behaviours. The fourth, in the strength of the situation of the Citie. As touching the goodnesse of the Port, and the securitie of it, I will first speake of: Nature made this Port in such manner, that the storme of the Sea cannot come into it by any place whatsoever. Within the Hauen it is so quiet, and it runneth so insensibly, that scarcely yee can perceiue to haue any tides; the ground is mudde, the Road hath in all places five and six fathom, and in some it hath seuen, in this compasse and harbour of the Hauen, may well two hundred ships lie, and rowing Vessels without number. Yee may plainly see the ground, and where it appeareth not, it is so deepe, that at the least it hath ten or twelue fathom water. The ships are laden round about the circumference of the Citie, casting a planke into the Ware-houses of the Merchandise, and the Galleys fastning themselves to the stones and doores of the houses, set their Beak-heads ouer the streets, and by them as by Bridges they are serued. Now, touching the Traffique and Navigation that is in it, with People of many sorts, and strange and remote Countries: I know not what Citie can compare with it (except it be Lisbon,) for, this Citie tradeth 60 in all India intra Gangem, & extra Gangem, that is, Cambaya, Tanaçarin, Pegu, Mallagua, and within the Arabike line, in Iuda, Cairo, Alexandria, and from all Ethiopia, and the Land of the Abexi it gathereth great abundance and quantitie of Gold, and Iuorie. As touching the strength of the situation of the Citie, there cannot so much bee said that it is not much more, seeing that to come to it, the inconueniences, lets, dangers, and hinderances are so great, that it

seemeth almost impossible. Seeing that fiftene leagues about the Shoalds, Flats, Ilands, Channels, Rocks, Bankes, and Flats of Sand, and breakings of the Sea, are so many, that they put the Saylers in a great doubt, feare and dispaire. The situation of the Citie is in this manner: in the very midst of this Nooke standeth a most plaine Iland, which is almost leuell and euen with the Sea, and it is so round, that it seemeth a circle. It hath in compasse a quarter of a league, vpon this Iland is the Citie of a Suaquen, built in such manner, that in all the compasse of the Iland, there is not one foot of ground that is not replenished with houses, so that this Iland may rather be said to be full of Houses and Inhabitants, then built and inhabited of people, so that all the Iland is a Citie, and all the Citie an Iland. On two sides this Citie and Iland, doe come within a Bow shot of the firme Land, that is, on the East South-east, and on the South-west side, but all the rest is further of the Land: The Road in this Hauen or Nooke, is round about the Citie, from the edge of it to a great Crosse-bow shot of it. We may cast Anchor where wee list, and all this distance hath fixe and seuen fathome water, the ground is Mud. This Nooke where this Citie lyeth, as in his Centre, round about it along the shoare hath a great Shoald, so that the deepe is at the edge of the Citie, and a Bow shot round about it on euery side, and beyond this distance it is full of Shoalds. In this Nooke lye other three Ilands on the Land side, that lyeth to the North-west; the second of them that lye further in, are little, but the other neereſt to the Channell, is about the bignesse of the Citie. Betweene this Iland and the firme Land of the Nooke, on the North side, there goeth a great Channell very long, in which is seuen fathome water: Along this Channell may a great Naue lye at Anchor, without any danger of hurt from the Citie, or seeing more then their Maſts. When the morning appeareth in the Horizon, it is full Sea; and the morning comming on, it beginneth to ebbe till the day comes to our Meridian, when it is dead low water, and passing from hence to the setting in the Horizon, it beginneth to flow till day shutting in, and being shut in it is full Sea: from dead low water till full Sea againe, the water riseth not in the Citie more then a quarter of a yard, and along the Coast, the most that it riseth, is a yard and an halfe to be measured, and in some high places lesse then three quarters of a yard. But when I made this obseruation were new Tides.

The ninth of March, an houre before Sunne set, wee weighed Anchor from before the Citie, and lay at the mouth of the Channell. The tenth, we set saile from the mouth of the Channell of Suaquen; We lay all night at Anchor, and the Dew was so great, that it was wonderfull.

§. III.

Mountaines of Sand on the Coasts of Dradate, Doroo, Fuxaa, Arequea, Farate, Quilfit and Igidid.

THE eleuenth, the Winde was at North, and it blew so hard that it was a storme, it raised along the Sea Coasts great Mountaines of Sand toward heauen, and after they were very high it brake them, and the ayre remained as though it were a great mist or smoake; all this day we lay at an Anchor.

Many Rockes, Shoalds and Flats.

The twelfth, we went out of this Channell, two leagues beyond Suaquen, and being without we set saile, and being about a league and a halfe from the Coast, we met so many Rockes, Shoalds and Flats, whereon the Sea did breake very much, that wee were forced to take in our Sayles, and to row the space of three houres, till we were free from these Shoalds, and presently we set sayle againe. At Euen, we came to an Anchor within the Banke, entring a very narrow Channell, this Channell is one league beyond the other whence we parted, & three from Suaquen, it is great and spacious within, the ground is very cleane, there can no Sea come in nor doe any hurt.

The thirteenth, we went an houre before day out of the Channell, and to the Sea of vs about a Canon shot, we saw a very long ranke of Shoalds breake, which seemed to beare the same course that the Coast. At eleuen of the clock, the wind scanted and blew from the North North-west, for the which not being able to make any way, we were forced to fasten our selues to the Rockes of the Shoalds, and being here about three houres, at two of the clocke afternoone we set sayle, the wind was very much fresher, and about North North-east, we sayled North-west, and when we were with the banke of the Land, we tooke in the Sayle, and rowing, we entred a Channell, and well within the banke we harboured. This Channell and place is from Suaquen about seuen leagues, the Channell is very narrow, and windeth in many Crookes, the Coast from Suaquen hither, stretcheth North and South, and North & by West, and South and by East.

Obseruation of the Tides.

The fiftenth, I went a shoare, and obseruing the order of the flowing and ebbing of the Sea, I found that after the morning was ouer the Horizon, two houres it was full Sea, and thence it began to ebbe till two houres afternoone, at which time it was dead low water, and presently it began to flow till the Moone was set, and two houres after: Now measuring the quantitie, the tide did arise, I found two and twentie cubits.

Course of Tides.

The sixteenth, we went out of this Channell, that is seven leagues from Suaquen, the winde was at North, halfe a league at Sea we cast Anchor. The seventeenth, we entred into a very good harbour, called Dradate: the Coast from the Port of Suaquen unto Dradate, lieth North and by West, and South and by East: It is distant ten leagues, the Land ouer the Sea is all very low, and three leagues within the Maine, are great and high Mountaines.

The Port of Tradate, with great reason ought to bee placed among the great and famous Ports, it hath eleuation of the Pole, nineteene degrees five sixth parts, and is beyond Suaquen ten leagues. The mouth and entry hath in bredth, about a small Faulcon shot, and entring within, presently it beginneth to narrow, and close more and more, but in all his length, the depth 10 of water is twentie fathome, the ground is mud. About a quarter of a league within the Land, there is a great watering place of Wells, where is the best and greatest quantitie of water, that is knowne in all these Coasts. A great watering place.

The nineteenth, the Sunne being vp, we set sayle: we iournyed this day about three leagues and a halfe at Sea off vs we saw many Shoalds, the Coast stretched these three leagues and a halfe North and South. The twentieth, at Sunne rising the wind blew at North, and troubled the Sea: wherefore we were forced to seeke harbour within the Shoald, entring by a very narrow and troublesome Channell: after wee were within, the wind came North North-east, we lay all day at an Anchor. The one and twentieth, we went out of the Shoald, the wind was West North-west faire weather, we sayled to the North, distant from the Land about halfe 20 a league: an houre after Sunne rising, we were with a very long and faire point, which Ptolomie calleth the Promontorie of Diogenes.

Doroo, is a very great and faire Bay, it is fiftene leagues beyond Suaquen, and a halfe: this Bay on the South side thrusteth a verie large and bare point into the Sea, where there is built a great and round Turret in manner of a Pillar, Ptolomie calleth this Point, the Promontorie of Diogenes. Through this Channell, presently at the entrie, there is fixe fathome Water, and from hence it goeth diminishing till it come to three, and thence doth not descend; the ground is a verie hard Clay, the Bay is so great, and maketh so many Creekes and Nookes, and within it lye so many Ilands, and the firme Land is cut with so many Creekes, which doe penetrate so farre into the Land, that in euery place there may be many Vessels hidden, without any notice of them. A quarter of a league to the Sea of this Bay, there lyeth a Shoald that doth gird and compasse it in such sort at the mouth thereof, that no Sea can come into it, because it is alwaies about water, without hauing any entrance, except the mouth which about I haue rehearsed. This entry or mouth stretcheth East and by North, and West and by South. A Cannon shot from this Bay, is a Well, of great quantitie of water, but it is very brackish and salt. The two and twentieth, when it was day, wee departed, and made our way Rowing, the Sea seemed to be very full of Rockes, and getting free of some, we encountred with others; halfe an houre past ten of the clocke, we made vs fast to the stones of them. About Euen-song time, we were with the Land, and hauing doubled a low point, we entred into a very great Bay, which is called Fuxaa, there is betweene Doroo and Fuxaa three leagues and a halfe, the Coast stretcheth North and South, and seemeth to take something of North-West and South-East. The Bay of Fuxaa, is made Noble or famous, by a verie high and sharpe Pike, and in it the Pole of the North doth rise twentie degrees and a quarter. In the entry and mouth of this Bay, there are two verie low points: they lye North and by East, and South and by West, the distance is one league and a halfe. No great Sea doth enter heere, and for this cause heere is a good harbour, where there is ten and twelue fathome water, and the ground is mud, euery where else it diminisheth, till it come to five fathome. Along the Land of the Bay that goeth on the South side, there lyeth nine little Ilands on a row, and in other places are some other scattered, all of them are small, low, and compassed with Shoalds: In this Bay there is not any water, the Land is verie dry and barren. A Description of the Bay of Doroo. Promontorie of Diogenes. A Brackish salt Well.

The five and twentieth, wee iournyed along the Coast to the Sea off vs, about a league wee saw many Rockes: at ten of the clocke we entred into an harbour, verie great, which is called Arequa. There is betweene the Bay of Fuxaa and this Hauen foure leagues, the Coast runneth North and South, and taketh something of the North-west and South-east. Arequa is the strongest and most defenceable Hauen that hitherto I haue seene, it is beyond Suaquen two and twentie leagues. In old time it was called Dioscori, as wee may see in Ptolomie; in the midst of the entry and mouth of this Port, lyeth a great Iland, which hath in length about a Crosse-bow shot, and almost as much in breadth, and there runneth from it to the firme Land, on the South side a Shoald and a Banke, that ioyneth with the Land, in such sort, that not any thing can passe ouer it: but from the same Iland to the Land on the North side, which is about a Crosse-bow shot distance, there goeth a Channell that hath fiftene fathome water, it runneth North-west and South-east, and both neere the Land, and neere the Iland it is verie shallow and full of Rockes, so that the way lyeth in the very midst; the Channell hath in length about a Caluer shot, and presently the Coasts on euery side winding, doe make within a great and very faire Hauen, in which there is no feare of danger. This Port hath in length about one league, and halfe in breadth, it is deep in the midst, and neere the Land full of Shoalds, there is no water in it. The token we haue to know when we are as farre as it, is, that the Pike abouesaid remaineth to the West South-west. Here we agreed to send all the Armie to Maqua, and to goe forward onely with sixteene small Gallies.

Salaqua Hauen, four leagues
from Arequa.

The thirtieth at noone, we set sayle from the Port of Arequa, we came to an Anchor in a Hauen, which is called Salaqua, beyond Arequa four leagues, and from Suaquen fixe and twentie; the Coast North and South, and taketh somewhat of the North-east and South-west. The Land which is ouer the Sea, maketh many risings and hillocks, and behind them there arise great Mountaines: and we are here to note, that the Land by the Sea from Arequa, beginneth to make this shew forward, for hitherto it is all very plaine and low, till it reacheth to the Mountaines that are within the Maine. The one and thirtieth, we set sayle from the Port of Salaqua an houre before Sunne set, we fastned our selues to a Shoald, that is a league from the shoare, we might goe this day about seuentene leagues, and were beyond Suaquen three and fortie.

the Calmes.

Toro.

Magarçon.

Elmante.

From the Port of Salaqua forward, the Coasts doe begin to winde very much, and from Raseldoaer forward, the space of a league, the Coast runneth very low to the North North-east, and in the end it maketh a point of Sand, where there are thirteene little hillockes or knobs of stone, which as the Moorish Pilots said, were Graues, and from this point of the Calmes about two leagues, the Coast runneth to the North North-west, and from thence as farre as this Shoald, which is three and fortie leagues from Suaquen. It is the most famous and named point of all this Coast; because all that doe sayle from Maqua, Suaquen, and other places, to Inda, Alcocer, and to Toro, must of force fetch this point. As touching the Sea that lyeth within these seuentene leagues, I beleue there can be no rules or experience to be securely sayled, but that as well the skilfull as the vnskilfull, must passe at all aduentures, and saue themselves by chance, for the Shoalds are so many, and so great, the Sea so sowed euery where with Rockes, the Bankes are so continuall in euery place, that it seemeth certainly rather that we may goe it on foote, then sayle it; yea, although it be in small Boats, in these spaces which are contained; betweene Salaqua and Raseldoaer, are three Ilands lying in tryangle, neerer to Raseldoaer then to Salaqua. The greatest of them is called Magarçon, it hath in length about two leagues, the Land of it is verie high, and without water. This Iland beareth with Raseldoaer North and South, the distance is three leagues. The second Iland lyeth much to the Sea, and is called Elmante: the Land is likewise high, and without water; but the third Iland is very low, and all of Sand: it lyeth four leagues from Salaqua, toward Raseldoaer, the name whereof is not yet come to my notice.

A Description of the Port of Quilfit.

Rasilgid Hauen.

Moamaa Ha-
uen.

The second of Aprill, 1541. an houre before day, we loosed from the Shoald, that is three and fortie leagues beyond Suaquen, and went Rowing along the Coast, wee entred into a Riuer which is called Ferate: there might be from the Shoald whence wee departed to this Riuer, four leagues, and setting sayle a league from thence, wee entred into an Hauen very faire, which is called Quilfit. All this day we saw not to the Land of vs any Rocke, but to the Sea of vs we did see a Shoald. Ferate is a Riuer very great and faire, the Channell thereof hath of eleuation of the Pole one and twentie degrees, and two third parts, that separates two low Points; at the entrance are a small Caluer shot, and from each of them commeth a Shoald toward the mouth of the Riuer, so that the Channell or entry is in the very midst; this Riuer runneth East and West. The Land of euery side of the Riuer is very low, without Bush or any Trees of any other kind; in the mouth of the Riuer is thirtie fathomes water, and from thence it diminisheth till it remaineth in eightene.

Quilfit, is an Hauen no lesse faire and noble, then very sure and profitable, because being once within, we need to feare no winde or any misfortune. There are at the entrie of this Port two very low Points, which are coasted North-west and South-east, a quater North and South. The distance is almost a quater of a league. All the Hauen round about, may comprehend more then three leagues, and wee may lye at Roade in any place of it, and bee safe. In all this Hauen is twelue fathome water, along the Shoare the Coast is rockie, betweene this part and the Riuer of Ferate, which is a great leagues iourney, there crosseth a ranke of Mountaynes, one higher then the rest.

The third, one houre before day, we came out of the Port of Quilfit, and went rowing along the Coast. An houre before Sunne set, we came to an anchor in an Hauen, which is called Rasilgid, which in the Arabian tongue is, The new Head. This day we went about nine leagues, to the Sea of vs, we saw some Shoalds, but fewer then we had seene before. Two leagues from Quilfit there is a very good Hauen, which is called Moamaa, and presently from this Point of the Shrubs, vnto another Point of Sand very long, which is about two leagues, before the Port of Rasilgid, the Coast runneth North and South, and taketh somewhat of the North-west and South-east, the distance is about three leagues and a halfe.

Igidid, is a small Hauen, but a very pleasant one, it is beyond Suaquen seven and fiftie leagues; the proportion thereof is like a great Cauldron, and within is so round, that it seemes a part of a Circular: in the mouth and entrie of the Port are two Points; which stretch North and South. Within this Port, onely the Easterne winde can doe some hurt, all the ground is very cleane: at the Mouth there is eightene fathome water, and within thirteene; and halfe a league from it into the Land there is a Well of water, though little abounding, the water of it is very bitterish; the Port hath in compasse a great halfe league. It is a thing to be noted, that as well in this Port, as in all the rest, which I haue seene in this Coast, Riuers, or Harbours, none hath any Barre or Banke at the Entrie, but rather the greatest depth is at the Mouthes, rather then within. In this Port I found certaine Trees, which in the Trunke or Stock resembled the Corke Trees, for the Trunkes and Boughes of them were couered with a kind of Barke or Corke, and very different in all the rest, for the leaues of them were very great and large, and wonderfully thicke and greene, hauing certaine bigge veines that did crosse them, these Trees were with Flowre, and the Flowre in the Bud resembled the Mallow flowre when it is in the Bud, but that this was very white; and after it openeth, the Bud it resembleth the white Cockle. Cutting a little Bough or Leafe of these Trees, there runneth out a great streame of Milke, as if it were the dugg of a Goat. In all this coast I saw no other Trees but these, except a Groue that is a little beyond Maqua, hard by the Sea in the marsh ground; besides these Trees, within the Land, there are some Valleys where grow some Capers, the leaues of which the Moors doe eate. They say, that they be appropriated to the ioynts.

The fourth, from Sunne rising till eleuen of the clocke, the winde blew so much at North-west, that it was a great storme; and from eleuen of the clocke, it began to thunder very hard, and it hayled with the biggest drops that euer I saw; with these thunders, the Winde ranne through all the Points of the Compasse, and at last it remayned North. This day I carried my instruments on Land, and found the variation one degree and a quarter to the North-east, and the Port in two and twentie, by many obseruations.

Notwithstanding, that these operations were made a shoare, and with so much heede in the setting of the Instrument, that after once placed I neuer stirre it, till the end of all the obseruations, yet there cannot be but that some error may be in them and some difference, because the great heate and scorplings of the Sunne, did cracke the plate of Iuorie in the midst, and there remayned a great Clift as thick as a Portegue of gold, betweene the one halfe and the other.

The sixth, an houre before day, we weighed from the Port of Igidid. All this dayes iourney might be three leagues and a halfe.

The seventh, in the morning, the Winde blew fresh at North-west, we rowed to the shoare: and at eight of the clocke, in the morning, wee fastned our selues to certayne stones of a Shoald and a Shelve, that lyeth before a long Point, which hereafter I will call Starta; we went in this space about three leagues; but about noone we departed, and set saile, being in no little doubt, because on the one side and on the other of vs, we saw so many Shelues that it was a wonderfull thing: we were forced to take in our sailes, and helpe our selues with the Oare. At Sunne set we came to an anchor in a good Hauen, which is called Comol.

§. IIII.

A description of the Coast, that is contayned from the Port of Igidid vnto Comol, Raselnaxef, Xuarif, Gadenauhi, Xermeelquiman, Gualibo, Tuna, Alcocer, and Toro.

From a Point that lyeth two leagues beyond the Port of Igidid, to another, very long and flat, it may bee about foure leagues: these two Points stretch North-west and South-east, in this space there is a great and famous Nooke, and within it toward the long Point of the North-west, is a Hauen so close on all sides, that no Wind can doe it any harme, and it is very deepe. The Point remayneth an Iland, which by reason of the heighth and place where it standeth, without doubt it seemeth to be an Iland, which Ptolomie calleth Starta. But from hence to a great Point, which the Land ouer the Port of Comol doth thrust out, there may be five leagues, these two Points stretch North-west and by West, South-east and by East; betweene them both there is another great and faire Nooke. As touching the description of the Land vpon the Sea coast, we are to note, that from as farre as Igidid, till halfe a league short of the Port of Comol, along the Sea, the Land sheweth all along in small Hills and very close, and behind them there arise within a league distance, very great and high Mountains, rayising very high Pikes and sharpe Points, with other very faire shewes, the which the neerer they come to the Port of Comol, so much the neerer they come toward the Sea, and being come to the edge of it, they runne very high, ouer-pearing the Coasts, till they come within halfe a league short of this Port of Comol.

Comol, is beyond Igidid eleuen leagues, and from Suaquen sixtie eight; the Pole in it is eleuated two and twentie degrees and an halfe. This Port standeth in the end of this second Nooke, very neere the face of the Point, which the Land that lyeth on the North-west side, doth thrust out, the which though it be not very great, yet it is very sure and profitable: for toward the Sea side it hath certaine Shoalds ouer water, which defend it, that no Sea can come into it; the Land which is scene round about it, is very plaine and pleasant, and greatly peopled with Badois. Now, the Point of the North-west, wherewith the Land ouer this Port and end of the Nooke, commeth out into the Sea, is very long and faire: the Land of it is all low and equall. This Point is the Promontorie Prionoto, if wee looke well to Ptolomie in the third Table of Africa; which, because that as farre as it the great Mountaines doe end, which roame along all this Coast. Three houres after mid-night, we went out of the Port of Comol, and rowing a little while, wee all set saile and went along the Coast; but an houre before morning, some Foyfts strooke vpon Rocks and Shoalds, for which cause we strooke saile, and made our iourney, rowing vntill morning.

The eight, at breake of day, we came into a great and faire Bay, of which toward the North and North-west side, we saw no end, or any Point where it might end. We sailed in the broad and high Sea, the Shoalds on euery side were so many, that it was a wonder wee could make any profit of a large winde, for now going roamour, now by a tacke, sometime out of the way, and sometime in it, there was no way wee could take certayne and quiet. About Sunne set, wee found a very great Shelve, and fastning our selues to the stones of it, we tooke harbour. The ninth, being cleere, we set saile from the Shelve. We tooke harbour within a very great Shelve, which is called Xaabiliden: after we were at anchor, we saw to the Sea an Iland, which is called Zemorgite. This Port and Shelve stretcheth North-east and by East, South-west and by West. From the point of the Cape of the Mountains, to another Point which is beyond it, where are certain great Furies or Whinnes, the Coast runneth North-west and by North, and South-east and by South, bushes of the distance may be about three leagues & an half, or foure, & presently from this Point, the Coasts of the great nooke, beginne to wind toward the Land inward, drawing toward the setting of the Sunne, and afterward they turne againe very winding and crooked, making with so many turnings a great and large circuite, and from hence they wind outward, carrying a great and long front, till they thrust into the Sea a notable and great Point, called Raselnaxef, which in Arabique, is to say, the dry Cape which Ptolomie doth call. The Promontorie Pentadatilor, as we may see in the third Table of Africa, the Iland of Zemorgite, is distant from this Point about eight leagues towards the Sunne rising, and from it, as the Moorish Pilots told vs, is the first place from whence the Land is scene of both the Coasts, but the Coast of Arabia is a great deale further from the Iland, this Iland is barren and very high, and hath another fast by it very small, the greater Zemorgite, Ptolomie doth call Agabon, and maketh no mention of the lesser. Now, for a declaration of the shelve Xaabiliden, wee are to note, that in the end of this great Bosome farre to the Sea, there lyeth a very faire shelve aboue water, all of it, which maketh a figure like to two armes wide open with their hands, and because of this shew that it representeth, it was called, Xaabiliden; which in Arabian, is to say, The shelve of the Hands, the Port of this shelve is on the Land side, for on this side it windeth very much, and stretcheth such armes that keepe and shut vp the Hauen from all the winds of the Sea, this Hauen stretcheth with Raselnaxef, East South-east, and West North-west, the distance is about foure leagues.

The tenth, the Sunne being vp, we set saile to the North North-east, the wind began to blow fresher, and the Sea appeared to vs cleere and Nauigable, about halfe a league from the Point, we saw in the iudgement of all, a ship vnder saile, and making toward it, after wee were very neere it, we perceiued it was a white Rocke that was in the Sea, which, as wee had notice, deceiueth all the Nauigators, and presently we sailed to the North and by East. At nine of the clocke, wee were as farre as an Iland, which is called, Cornaqua, and wee passed betweene it and the firme Land: this Iland is small and barren, it hath in compasse about halfe a league, the distance from it, and the firme Land is about a league and an halfe, the Land of the Iland maketh the figure and shew of a great and mightie Lizard, with his armes stretched out, which is the occasion it is much noted and scene of the Nauigators, and therefore made famous, this Iland of Cornaqua beareth with the Iland Zemorgite, North-west and by West, and South-east and by East, the distance is about sixe small leagues, but returning to our way, about halfe an houre past ten, wee were as farre as a very long Point of Sand, entring a great way into the Sea, which is called, Raselnaxef; which in Arabique, is to say, The Point or Cape of the Nose. This Point hath not round about it any high Land, but a great or vast field doth begirt it, without seeing in all this space any Tree or any greene thing, and in the very face of the Point, is a great Temple erected, without any other building, and on euery side of it is a very cleere landy Coast, in manner of a Bay. Raselnaxef is very famous; all the trouble of their Nauigations, is, till they come to this Point, and whensoever they double or come to it, they hold themselves at home and sure. Now prosecuting our iourney running along the Coast, the wind was at South-east. At noone my Pilot tooke the Sunne, and found himselfe in twentie foure degrees of height, one sixt part, at this time we might be beyond Raselenfe three leagues, whence it remayneth manifest, this Point to stand in the height of twentie foure degrees; and of this it appeareth, that the Citie of Berenice, was built in this Point of Raselenfe, for Ptolomie doth place it vnder the Tropicke of Cancer, by the Sea-side in this Coast, and in his time they made the greatest declination, almost twentie three degrees fiftie minutes: Likewise, Pinie, Lib. 6. speaking of Berenice, saith, that in the Solsticium at high noone, the Gnomon maketh no shadow, which signifieth, this Citie to be vnder the Tropicke.

Note the Citie of Berenice.

Halfe an houre before Sunne-set, we were as farre as an Iland, which is called Xuarit, but passing forward a quarter of a league, we met certaine shelues of sand, and others of stone. Wee came to an Anchor betweene them in a good Harbour, which in the Arabique Tongue, is called Cial. In these shelues wee saw so great a quantitie of Foule, as hitherto in no part of this Sea wee haue seene: these shelues and Port of Cial, is beyond Suachen, one hundred and three leagues.

Xuarit Iland,

From Raselnaxef, till so farre as the Iland Xuarit, there may be betweene sixteene and seuentee leagues. The Coast when we haue doubled Raselnaxef, which by another name, I call the North-west point of the great Nooke, doth wind very much, and runneth into the Land, and turning outward againe, it thrusteth into the Sea: a verie long Point of Sand, called Raselenfet. These two Points stretched North-east and South-west, and take almost the whole quarter of North and South, there may be in the distance about sixe leagues large, and presently from Raselenfet, forward the Coast windeth directly to the North-west, till we are as farre as the Iland of Xuarit, this distance is betweene ten and eleuen leagues: the Sea that lyeth in this distance is in onely three places foule and full of Shoalds, the first is, to the Sea of the Iland of Connaqua, where is seene a great and very faire Shoald, which going ouer water raiseth a great ridge of very great stones, and runneth a great space toward the Land. The second place is in the Iland of Xuarit, for from this Iland, as well on the East as on the West-side, there goe great Shoalds and Flats toward the firme Land, in such manner that they seeme to shut vp all the Sea, that lyeth betweene the Iland and the Land, but the third remayneth manifest, to bee this part where at this present we lye at Anchor, called Cial, in the which the Sea is so full and thicke, with so many Shoalds and Flats, that they haue no number, neither can yee perceiue any part of it, that shewes it selfe free and void of them. The Iland of Xuarit is a Caleuer-shot in length, and in breadth almost as much, the Land of it is very low, and in the midst of it a great Bush very Greene, on the East-side there is opposite to it a great Rocke like an Iland, this Iland is distant from the firme Land little more then halfe a league.

From Suaquen to Raselenfe, the Countries are inhabited of a people, called Badois, which worship Mabomet, the one and the other called of the Cosmographers Ethiopians. And from Raselenfe vpward to Soez, and the end of this Sea, the Coasts doe appertaine to the great Region of Egypt, therefore the Inhabitants which doe inhabit betweene them and the Riuer Nilus, Ptolomie will haue them called, Arabique Egyptians. Pomponius Mela, and other Authors doe onely giue them the name of Arabians, but in these diuisions we must hold with, and follow Ptolomie, as Prince of the Cosmographers. These Arabique Egyptians; all those that doe inhabit from the Mountaines toward the Sea, are commonly called Badois, of whose customes and life, wee will intreat in some other place.

Arabique Egyptians.

The eleuenth, we tooke in our sayles, and Rowed along: at nine a clocke of the day we entered into a great Nooke, which is called Gadenauhi, there may be from the part of Cial to this Nook, about foure leagues: the Coast stretcheth North-west and South-east, and taketh of the North and South: the Land ouer the Sea, leauing the shape it had, to wit, of a Wall or Trench, it commeth very mountainous and doubled, making so many Mountaines, and so close, that it is a very strange thing. The Port of Gadenauhi, is beyond Suaquen, one hundred & seuen leagues, and in it the Pole is eleuated foure and twentie degrees, and two third parts; being low water, it was one houre after high noone, and flowing from that houre, comming to the Point of full Sea, it was one houre after the Moone rose ouer the Horizon, & from that houre the Moone ascending by the Hemisphere, it beganne to ebbe, till the Moone passed the Meridian, about an houre of time, and presently the Moone descending from hence, going to set vnder the Horizon, the Tyde began to flow till the Moone was set, and an houre after it was set, was full Sea. By night the wind was North-west, two or three houres after mid-night wee departed from Gadenauhi, and prosecuting our iourney, at the passing betweene the Shoald which commeth from the North-west Point of the Nooke, and the Iland of Babuto: we stricke and were fast vpon the Shoald, and all being troubled, wee were in the Net, (as they say) but in this there was neither danger nor hurt, insomuch that we got out of this place, and hit vpon the Channell, and went along the shoare, rowing against the North-west winde till it was day.

The twelfth, we rowed along the shore, one houre after Sun rise, we anchored in a haven, which is called Xarmeelquiman, which in Arabique, is to say, a cleft or opening of the Mountaines: This Port lyeth beyond Gadenauhi a league and a halfe. Xarmeelquiman is a small Port, and little pompous or proud in quantitie, but in qualitie great and Noble. quen, one hundred and eight leagues, it is much like the Port of Igidid. The twelfth of Aprill, we set sayle going along the shoare, the winde came fresher and larger, that is, at East South-east, about noone it blew verie hard, and it came with so great Gales, that it raised the Sands of the Coast very high, raising them toward the heauens, in so great Whirle-winds, that they seemed like great smoakes. About Euen-song time the Armie comming together, the Winde calmed altogether to some ships; and some other that came hard by, or a little behind, or more to the Sea, or to the Land, had the wind so strong, that they could beare no sayle. The distance from those that were in calme, and those that were in the storme, being no more then a stones cast, and presently within a little space, it tooke the shippes that were in calme with their Sayles, vp to the top, so that they had the Winde very fresh; and the other that went verie swift, remained in calme, and so in short time the one was reuenged of the other. This chanced going close all together, in such sort, that it seemed a thing done for the nonce, and in mockage. In this chance, there came some Gales of East, and East North-east winde very great, and so hot, that in their scorching they made no difference from flames of fire. The Dusts that were raised on the shoare, went sometime to one place, and sometimes to another, as they were driuen and cast with the Winds: many times we saw them make three or foure waies before they were alayed, or did fall in the Sea, with the Counter-winds that tooke them from diuers parts. This Mysterie and Chance among hills and high grounds had not beene much, nor any new thing to haue happened; but so farre from the Coast with the Sea Winds, certainly it ought to be much regarded. When these Counter-winds beganne to take vs, we were as a Port, that is called Xaona, and going on in this sort, now striking Sayle, now Hoyling, sometimes taking pastime at that which we saw, and other whiles dread and feare, we went almost till Sun set, when we entred into a Port, called Gualibo, which is to say in Arabique, The Port of Trouble; we went this day, and a piece of the night past, about thirteene leagues.

From Gadenauhi, to a Port that is called, Xacara, (which a very red hill doth beguirt) the Coast runneth North-west, and by North and South-east, and by South, the distance is about tenne leagues: and from this Red hill, to a Point that lyeth beyond this Port of Gualibo almost a league, the Coast runneth North North-west, and South South-east, the distance is about sixe leagues. In these sixteene leagues the Coast is very cleere, and onely one league beyond the Red hill lyeth a Shoald, distant from the Land halfe a league large. In the length of these Coasts contained in the sixteene leagues, are many faire and famous Ports, the most that I haue seene or thought to see in so short a space of way: among which Ports, there is one that is called Xaona, very great, where the Moores and Inhabitants doe say, A famous Citie of Gentiles was built in times past, which looking well to Ptolomie in his third Table of Africa, was called Nechesia. Along the Sea runne great and infinite Mountaines, very double and close together, and behind farre within the Land, there arise ouer them great and mightie hills. In all the length of the Coasts where these Mountaines are placed, there are two great Mountaines, not onely more Noble then the other their neighbours: but all those that are in this Coast, the one of is very blacke, and seemeth as though it were sindged, and the other is yellow, betweene them are certaine heapes of Sand: From the blacke Mountaine inward to the Land, there is an open field, where I saw many Trees very great and high, which tooke a great compasse with the tops. These Trees were the first I saw in this Coast, that seemed Domesticall and proper, to the Land: for the other, that before I made mention of, which are a little beyond Maqua, are like, and of the kind of them that grow in the Marishes, by the Borders of the Sea, and of the Riuers, and likewise those which stand in the Port of Xarmeelquiman, and the other that stand in the Port of Igidid, are wilde, and sad to the sight, without boughes or fruit, but hauing leaues they seeme naked and dry. These two Mountaines and Graue, stand about two leagues before the Port which is called, Xarmeelquiman.

Gualibo, is beyond Suaquen, one hundred and twentie two leagues. This Port is like in fashion and entry, very much to the Port of Xarmeelquiman, in this onely they differ, that the other hath ouer it many Mountaines, that enuiron it, and all the Land round about this, is plaine and vaste. The entry of this Port, is betweene certaine Rockes or Shoalds, whereon the sea breakeeth very much, the Channell is deepe and large.

The thirteenth of Aprill after Sunne rise, we weighed, and went out of the Port of Gualibo, the wind was North-west very strong, and made the Sea to rise very much, we rowed along the shoare: at ten of the clocke in the morning, wee entred into a Port, which is called Tuna, which is a league and an halfe beyond Gualibo.

Tuna is a small and foule Hauen, it is beyond Suaquen one hundred twentie three leagues and an halfe, the North Pole is eleuated in it twentie five deg. and an halfe, the entring of the Hauen is betweene certaine Rockes, and within, the greatest part of it is occupied with a shoald and stones, in such sort, that within there is a small and forrie Harbour, the turning which the point of the Land that is on the North side of the Port doth make, there is a good Harbour and Road against the North-west wind, the Land round about it is a very barren land; on the land of this Port on the North-west side there are three sharpe Mountaines of stone, made to my thinking, for a knowledge and token that there is an Hauen here.

One houre before Sunne set, we fastned our selues to a Shoald, which stands beyond Tuna a league, the Coast from a Point, which is almost one league beyond Gualibo, runneth with another Point that is beyond this Shoald, a league and a halfe, North North-west, South South-east, the distance is foure Leagues.

The fourteenth, we went along the shoare, the Sea rose very bigge, and molested the Rowers very much, but resisting both Winde and Sea, after high noone wee entred into a very faire Nooke, and in the hidnest corner of it, where it maketh a good Port, wee came to an anchor. This day and night we went about five leagues, and might be beyond Suaquen one hundred and twentie nine leagues, the Coast in these sixe leagues stretcheth North-west and South-east, the Land ouer the Sea coast, some of it is low and plaine, and some mountainous.

A very faire Nooke, one hundred twentie nine legues from Suaquen. Alcocer Port and Towne.

The fifteenth by day, wee were a league short of Alcocer, and making to it, an houre and a halfe after Sunne rise we came to the place, an cast anchor in the Hauen; we might goe the night past, and this little of the day about seven leagues, the Coast in this space runneth North North-west, and South South-east.

The height of Alcocer.

The place of Alcocer, noting well Plinie in the sixt Booke of his Naturall Historie, and likewise Ptolemie in the third Table of Africa, was called Philoteris, and all the Land that is contained from it vnto the Citie Arfinoe, and the end of this Sea was knowne by the name of Eneo; this place is so neighbouring to the Riuer Nilus, that the distance of both may bee betweene fifteene and sixteene dayes iourney, setting your face toward that place where the Sunne setteth.

A description of Alcocer. Alcocer sometimes Philoteris.

This is the onely Port in all this Coast, where all the prouisions, which the Land of Egypt yeeldeth at this day, doe arrive, which Land is now called Riffa, and from hence all the Townes, situated within the Coasts of the Streight, doe carrie them and prouide themselves.

Riffa, a fruitfull part of Egypt.

The Towne of Alcocer was built in old time two leagues further vpon the Sea coasts, but because of the euill discommoditie, and ioyntly because the Port was not sufficient for so great a resort, they past it hither; and yet at this day are the old buildings of the ancient Towne seene, and are standing, and is called the old Alcocer, by the which I meane Philoteris. But returning to the description of the new Alcocer, as twise I haue verified, it hath of eleuation of the Pole, six and twentie degrees and one quarter, toward the North side; it is beyond Suaquen one hundred thirtie sixe Leagues; the Port is a great Bay, and very open to the Easterne windes, which in this Coast are of great force and trauerse, right against the place lye some shoalds though small, whereon the Sea breaketh, betweene the which and the shoare the Frigats and Ships harbour, which come to seeke lading: the Towne is very small, and more then any other of the World, barren and miserable. The buildings differ very little from yards to put Cattell in; howsoeuer, the walls of the houses are of stone and clay, and others of sods, the tops of which haue no couering at all, except a few Mats or such base things, which defend the Inhabitants from the Sunne, and from the Raines, if peraduenture the Heauens doe send them now and then, as it is truth, that in this place they fall but seldome, and by a great chance. In all the circuit of the Place, Coast, Fields, Mountaines or Hills, there groweth no manner of Herbe, Grasse, Bush, Tree, or any other thing appeare, except certaine blacke scorched Mountaines, which make a great number of bare Hillocks, the which carrying this euill shew and melancholike sight, doe enuiron the place from Sea to Sea, and betweene them and the inhabiting, wherefoeuer any waste place chanceth to be, it is a drie and more then barren sand to the sight, mingled with infinite grauell. The Port is the worst of all that I saw in this Coast, in it for his excellencie is not any kinde of Fish to bee found, hauing through all the Coasts and Strands very great abundance. Neere the Towne are three Wells of water whereof the people drinke, whose water with great difficultie yee can discern from that of the Sea. Here is no kinde of Cattell.

New Alcocer, twentie six degrees and a quarter.

It raines seldome in Alcocer.

Three Wells of water neere the Towne.

The most expert Moores told me, that the name of Egypt was not knowne neere them, but that all the Land from Alcocer, and a great way behind, vnto Alexandria, was called Riffa. In which, more then any other Countrey of the World, there was great abundance of victuals and prouisions, Cattell, Camels, Horses, without hauing one foote of vnprofitable ground in all that Prouince. I asked them what language or customes they had: they answered mee, that they followed the Arabians in all things. I asked them also for the qualitie of the Land: they told, that it was altogether very plaine, and that it neuer rained in it, and that if at any time it chanced to raine, it was held for a Wonder, the which God hath prouided for, with ordaining that the Riuer Nilus should twice a yeere exceed his bounds and naturall course, and water the fields. I asked them also if from as farre as Alcocer, one might sayle by the Riuer to Alexandria: they told me they might, and from farre behind Alcocer toward the Abexi: but that there was along the Riuer many Ilands and Rockes, for the which good Pilots were needfull, or to sayle by day. I asked them more, what the cause was, that the men of that Countrey inhabited so great a situation as Alcocer: they answered mee, They being the neereft Sea-hauen to Nilus, and Prouince of Riffa, of all the Coast, from whence the fruits and prouisions of the Land were transported. I asked them for what reason the Inhabitants of this place did not couer their houses, and made roofes vnto them: they answered me, that for the Sunne, the defence of Mats was sufficient, and that with raines they were not molested, but that that against the malignitie and wickednesse of men, they were forced to seeke stronger defences, and therefore ordained to make the wals of stone and clay, and others of fods. I asked them what men these so fierce enemies of theirs were, against the which they armed themselves with so strong Bulwarkes. They told me that they were Badois, a peruerse people, void of all goodnesse; which many times with sudden assaults and robbings, did molest the place, and did rob the Droues that came from Nilus with victuals and other prouisions.

It neuer raines in Riffa.

So barren a Seat as Alcocer.

The eighteenth of Aprill, in the morning, we fastned our selues to a Shoald, that is beyond Alcocer, about foure leagues, and presently past noone we set saile.

The nineteenth, there tooke vs like a gush of the North North-west wind, faire weather, halfe an houre past eight of the clock, that we tooke Port in an Iland, which is called Suffange-elbahar, 10 we lost of the way we had gone foure or fve leagues.

The description of the Iland Suffan-elbahar.

Suffange-elbahar is to say in the Arabicke Tongue, a Sea Spunge, this Iland stands beyond Alcocer thirteene leagues, the eleuation of the Pole in it is seuen and twentie degrees, all the land is sandie without any Trees or Water, the Iland hath in length about two leagues, and lesse then a quarter in breadth, there is a good Hauen with all weathers, but in the firme Land are so many Nookes, Ports, and Harbours, that it is a wonder, the deepest Channell whereby the Sea that is betweene the Iland and the Mayne, is along the firme Land, because on the Ilands side there bee some Shoalds, in the mouth and entring of this great Port, that is on the North-side, there are certaine Shoalds aboue water, of the which comming in by day, yee need not feare, and in the other that lyeth on the South-side, in the very midst of the entry of it, there is a great stone. 20

A good Hauen
for all weathers.

The twentieth of Aprill, 1541. at Sunne-set, we might be about fixe leagues beyond the Iland Suffange-elbahar, the Coast in these fixe leagues runneth in this manner, from Suffange-elbahar, to a sandie Point, that is, beyond the Iland a league and an halfe, North North-west, and South South-east, and from this sandie Point forward, the Coasts doe wind inward to the Land, and doe make a great Nooke, within the which doe lye many Ilands, Ports, Creekes, Bayes, and many other notable Harbours.

The one and twentieth,

by day, we were fast by the Land of an Iland, which is called, Xednam, the wind was calme, we rowed along the Iland on that side which is opposite to the Land of the Arabian, this is very high and craggie, all of an hard Rock, it hath in length three leagues, and two in breadth, it is beyond Alcocer, twentie leagues, there is no water in it, nor any kind 30 of Trees. The Land of the Iland lyeth betweene both Coasts, there is from it to the firme Land of euery side fve leagues, beyond toward the North-west are other three smaller Ilands, the Land of them is low, and betweene the one and the other lye some Shoalds. An houre after Sun rose, we were vpon the Cape or Point of the Iland that lyeth toward the North-side, and from thence we crosse to the Coast of the Arabian, the wind at this time was calme, wee went rowing, but within a little while it began to blow from the South-east faire, and presently wee set saile, and sayled to the North-west. At eleuen of the clocke in the morning, we were with the Land of the Stonie Arabia, and presently wee sailed along the shoare: two houres before Sun-set, we came to an Anchor at the Towne of Toro, there may bee from the Iland of Xednam, to Toro twelue leagues, the Iland and Toro lye North and by West, and South and by East. 40

of the Towne of Toro.

Elana, a Towne now called Toro.

You shall reade another opinion of the gulfe Elaniticus, afterwards to be twentie leagues beyond Toro.

Making good consideration, the Towne of Toro, was called in old time Elana, as we may see in the writing of Ptolomie, Strabo, and other Authors, notwithstanding that in the Eleuation of the Pole, and situation, we find at this present a great change and diuersitie in these places: because those that write of the Towne Elana, did shew it to bee seated in the inwardest part of a very great Gulfe, called Elaniticus of the name of this place, and in the height of twentie nine degrees and one quarter. And now we know that Toro, hath eight and twentie degrees, one sixth part of Eleuation of the Pole, and is seated along a very straite and long Coast. The cause of this deceit, if it be true, that these places be both one, might proceed of the euill information that those persons gaue which saw it. But that Elana, is the Towne which now is Toro, appeareth, because that from it to Soez, as well by the one Coast as by the other, not onely wee find 50 no memorie of any Towne; rather the barrennesse of the Countrey, want of waters, and rough and craggie Mountaines, did giue vs to vnderstand, that in no time, there could bee any inhabiting, so that hauing respect to Ptolomie, his placing the Towne Elana, in the Coast of Arabia Petrea, in the place most neighbouring vnto Mount Sinai, and not to make any mention of a Towne betweene it and the Citie of the Heroes, which lyeth in the vtermost Coasts, where this Sea endeth, and seeing how in this Coast of Arabia, there is not any Citie, Village, or inhabiting that commeth so neere the height of Elana as Toro, and jointly with this it is neighbouring to Mount Sinai, and how from Toro to Soez, there is not any inhabiting, it seemeth a iust thing we should beleue that Elana and Toro be one selfe-same place. This Towne of Toro also seemeth to be the Port which the holy Scripture calleth Ailan, where Salomon King of Iuda, 60 commanded the ships to be made, which went to Tarsis, and to Ophir, to lade with Gold and Siluer for to make the Temple. For taking away the second Letter from Ailan, the ancient names are almost one thing. Neither stands it with reason it should bee in any other place for the Timber whereof this Armie was made, was brought from the Mount of Libanon, and Antilibanon,

10 tilibanon, the which was a manifest thing, that because of the great labour and expences, which of necessitie would be in the carriage, they would direct it to the neereft and fitteft Port for so great a businesse, especially the Jewes possessing the Region of Idumea, and that part of Arabia Petrea, which is containd from Toro to Soez. Strabo a Capadocian, doth hold that Elana and Ailan, are one selfe-same thing, and treating of this Citie in another place, hee saith: From the Port of Gaza, there is one thousand two hundred and sixtie furlongs to the Citie of Ailan, which is seated in the Gulfe, or inwardest part of the Arabicke Gulfe, and these are two, the one is toward Arabia and Gaza, which they call Elaniticus, of the Citie that stands in it; the other toward the Egyptian side toward the Citie of the Heroes, and the way from Pelusia to 20 this Gulfe is very little; This is that which I could take out of ancient Histories. The Citie of Toro is seated vpon the Sea-side, alongst a very faire and long strand, and before wee came at it about a Canon shot, it hath twelue Palme-trees close together very neere the Sea, and from them inward to the Land. There runneth a plaine field till it commeth to the foot of certaine high Hills, these Hills are those which come from within the Streight of Ormuz, called in times past,
 The Persian Gulfe, the which hitherto came running along the Coast, very high ouer the Sea, and as farre as Toro, they leaue the Sea-coast, and with a great and sudden violence, they returne from hence to the Mayne toward the North-east, as angry and wearied of so continual and long Neighbour-hood with the waters, by these Mountaines is diuided the Stonie Arabia, from A- rabia Felix. And on the highest tops of them, doe some Christians at this day leade a holy life, 30 but a little beyond Toro, by the border of the Sea, there beginneth a Mountaine to arise by little and little, the which thrusting a bigge and high Point into it, it seemeth to them that are in the Towne or Port of it, that it endeth there, and goeth no further, and remayneth, making a shew of three great and mightie Mountaines separate the one from the other. This Towne is small and very pleasant, and well seated, all the people are Christians and speake Arabicke, it hath a Mo-nasterie of Friers of the Order of Monferrat, in the which the Oracle or Image is of the blessed Virgin Saint Katharine of Mount Sinai. The Nation of the Friers is Grecian, the Sea Port of Toro, is not very great but sure from the winds that may doe it hurt. For it hath opposite on the Sea-side a very long stonie banke, which runneth along the Coast of the Towne, betweene the which and the Land is the Hauen, and here, that is, as farre as the Towne, both the Coasts 40 are so neighbouring, that the space of Sea that separateth them is about three leagues iourney, I being desirous to know some particularities of the Countrey, tooke notice of the Friers and the information, they gaue me was this.
 Touching Mount Sinai, they told me that it was thirteen smal iournies into the Land, in which there might be eightene leagues; the which Mountaine is very high, the Countrey round about it plaine and open, and that in the borders of it there was a great Towne of Christians, in the which no Moore came in, but onely one that gathered the Rents and Duties of the Turkes.
 And that on the top of this Mountaine, there was a Monasterie of many Friers, where the bodie of the blessed Virgin Saint Katharine lay buried. This Virgin, as Anthony Archbishop of Flo- 50 rence writeth, was carried away from the Citie of Alexandria by the Angels, and brought to this Mountaine, and buried by them; the Friers told me, that about foure monethes past, this blessed and most holy body was carried with great pompe in a triumphant Chariot, all gilt to the Citie of Cairo, where the Christians of the Citie, which is a great part of the people, did come to receiue it with great Procession and Solemnitie, and set it in a Monasterie much honoured; they told me that the occasion of this so great and strange remoue, was the many discourtesies which the Alarabes did to the Monasterie, and how far to excuse others, they were inforced to redeeme them for money, of the which the Christians of Cairo complayning to the Turke, obtayned of him that they might bring the bodie of this blessed Virgin to the Citie, which the Friers did withstand, but it auailed them nothing. I am in doubt of this so great a chance: for it may bee the Friers did faine these newes, for feare lest we should goe and take this holy bodie from them, 60 for they looked for vs with an Armie of ten thousand men; notwithstanding, they affirmed it very much, shewing great grieve and sorrow for the same. The Friers told me also, how that in the Mountaines, right against the Towne, which I haue said before, to diuide the Stonie Arabia, from Arabia Felix, there were some Heremites which leade a holy life, and that through this Arabia, there were many Townes of Christians I: asked them where they had notice that the Jewes did passe this Red Sea; to the which they answered me, that they knew no certaine place, but that there was no doubt of being betweene Toro and Soez. And that they crossed from the one Coast to the other, and that two or three leagues before yee come to Soez, in the Arabian Coast, there was that Fountaine which Moses caused to breake in the Rocke, when he strooke it with his Rod, the Jewes being in great dispaire for thirst. The which at this day the Arabian 60 Moores doe call, The Fountaine of Moses, and that the water thereof was more then any other pleasant and singular; likewise, I asked them how many leagues there were from Toro to Cairo by Land, they told me that seuen dayes iourney going meanly, and that the right way was by Soez.

leagues higher, and that when they were as farre as Soez, they went toward the Sun set. Hauing had this information of the Friers, I talked with a very honest, learned, and curious Moore, the which I neuer found in any Moore, and I asked of him, through what place he thought the Iewes passed this Sea, he answered me, that that which was in memorie of the people, and likewise in some Scriptures; was, that the Iewes comming away, fleeing from the Egyptians, arriued against Toro, on the land of the other side and coast that commeth from the Abexy, where all the power of the Egyptian come vpon them for to destroy them, and being in so great danger, Moses their Captaine made prayer vnto God, and presently strooke the Sea with a Rod twelue times, and there were presently opened twelue pathes, whereby all the people of the Iewes entred and arriued to the Land of the other side, where now stands the Citie of Toro: And the Egyptians 10 entring after them, the Sea closed vp, and all of them were slaine, whose number was about fixe hundred thousand men. And also that the Iewes comming to the place of Toro, Moses their Captaine did leade them the way to Mount Sinai, where he many times spake with God. I approued this opinion very much; for if this passage had beene by Soez, as some will say, what need had the Egyptians to enter into the Sea, to the end of persecuting the Iewes, being able to goe about the Nooke, and take the foreward of them, especially being Horle-men against Footmen, which shall manifestly be seene in the Picture of Soez hereafter, and although in all these things there was a Miracle, we see alwaies, that in the like chances, there is a shew and manner of reason. Being satisfied with these Histories of the Moore, I asked of him if it was true, that the Christians that were in Cairo, did carrie away from Mount Sinai, the bodie of Saint Katherine, he answered me, that no such thing was come to his notice, neither was it to be beleueed, 20 and that it was but foure moneths past since he was in Cairo, which Citie they cal Mecara, where he heard no such thing, and that it seemed an impossible thing to him, that the Christians round about Mount Sinai would permit such a thing, because all men held this woman for a Saint, and in great reuerence: Hee told mee also, that before wee came to Soez, by two or three leagues, there was a Fountaine, which God gaue to the Iewes, by the intercession of Moses, which Prophet they call Mucaa, whose water surpassed greatly all the rest. I asked him for the Towne of Soez, how it was. He answered me, that he was neuer in it, neither could any person enter, except those that by the Gouvernour of Cairo were ordained for the keeping of the Galleys, and that neerer then two leagues none might come to it vnder paine of death.

The two and twentieth of Aprill, a cleere morning, we departed from Toro. The foure and twentieth, we were in nine and twentie degrees seuentene minutes. 30

A Description of the Nooke or Bay beyond Toro, and how by it is understood the Gulfe Elaniticus. Of Soez, and of their returne homewards. Of the Badois, and of their customes, and why this Sea is called Red. 40

This Nooke supposed to be the Gulfe Elaniticus.

TWENTIE leagues beyond Toro, and fiftie two from Alcocer, the Land of Egypt, or Coast that commeth from Abexy, commeth out into the Sea with a very lowe and long Point, from the Coasts winding a great space inward to the Land, running very winding and more then any other crooked, after hauing made a very great and very faire Nooke, it entreth into the Sea with a mightie and great Point very high, from the which to Soez is three small leagues iourney, these two Points, betweene the which the Nooke is containned, stretcheth North-west and by North, and South-east and by South, the distance is fixe leagues, the Land by the Sea coast of this Nooke is most high and rough, and therewith it is barren and drie, within the Nooke it is so deepe, that if we come not very neere the shoare, with fiftie fathome we shall take no ground, which ground is a soft sand like Oze. This Nooke vn- 50 doubtedly, I hold to be the Gulfe which the Cosmographers doe call Elaniticus. But Strabo a Capadocian, and Ptolomie were deceiued in the knowledge and situation of it: for they placed it in the Coast of stonie Arabia, little more or lesse, where now stands the Towne of Toro; and that this is so, the words of Strabo, which I repeated a little before in the Description of the Towne of Toro, where the Arabicke Gulfe endeth, doe plainly say, to end in two Gulfes, one of them which standeth on the Arabian side, called Elaniticus, and the other on Egypt side where standeth the Citie of the Heroes. Ptolomie doth shew vs plainly the Gulfe Elaniticus to be in the Coast of Arabia, where now standeth the Towne of Toro, whereof I cannot but wonder euery time I doe remember how Ptolomie was borne in Alexandria, where he wrote his Historie, and dwelt in it all the dayes of his life, which Citie is very neighbouring to these places.

The fixe and twentieth, weighing presently our Grapples, wee set sayle; at eleuen of the clocke of the day we were fast by the shoare, where we found all the Armie, and striking our sayles, wee rowed a little along the shoare, and cast anchor; but two houres before Sunne set we weighed againe, the wind was at North, wee rowed along the Coast, and before Sunne set we 60

we tooke Hauen behind a Point which the Land of Arabia thrusteth out, where there is good being and harbour against the North winds: this day we went directly one league and an halfe, the point is short of Soez, three small leagues, it beareth with the North-west point of the great Nooke, which I said to be the Gulfe Elaniticus, East and West: there may be in the distance one league: from hence about halfe a league within the Land, standeth the Fountaine of Moses, of which I haue spoken alreadie, when I spake of Toro. And now, as soone as we were at anchor, we went on shoare, and we saw the end of this Sea, which seemed to vs alreadie infinite, and likewise the Masts of the Ships, and all things gaue vs great content, and ioynctly with it great care. By night the wind was at North very hard, we lay all night at anchor till it was day.

The manner of the situation of Soez.

A mightie Bulwarke of moderne worke.

10 The seuen and twentieth in the morning, the wind blew hard at North North-west, at ten of the clocke we departed from this Point, and made ahead to Soez, and to the end of this Sea, going along rowing, and being about one league from it, I went before with two Catures to spie or view the situation of Soez, and the place of landing, and wee came thither at three of the clocke in the afternoone, where wee saw in the field many troopes of Horse-men, and in the Towne two great bands of Souldiers, they shot at vs many shots out of a Blocke-house. The Armie of the Turke was as followeth; that is, one and fortie great Gallies, and nine great Ships, hauing seene all these things, we went toward the Land of the Nooke, which is on the West side, and came to an anchor neere the shoare in five fathome water, the ground was a soft sand, and very small, a very good harbour for ships: this day at Sunne set we saw the Moone.

20 It is to be held for certaine, Soez to be called in times past, The Citie of the Heroes, for it differeth nothing in heighth, situation and confrontings, as we may see in Ptolomie Tab. 3. Africa, especially, Soez being seated in the vttermost Coasts of the Nooke where this Sea of Mecca endeth, in the which the Citie of the Heroes was seated, as it is read in Strabo the seuenteenth Booke, saying these words. The Citie of the Heroes and Cleopatra, which some doe call Arfinoe, are in the vttermost bounds or end of the *Arabi*ke Sine, which is toward Egypt. Plinie in the sixth Booke of the Naturall Historie, seemeth to call the Port of Soez, Danao, by reason of the Trenches, which they opened from Nilus to this Sea; Soez hath of eleuation of the Pole, nine and twentie degrees three quarters, and it is the neereft Port and Towne of all the Streight to the great Citie of Cairo, called anciently Babylonia of Egypt, and from it to the Leuant Sea,

30 where is one of the seuen Mouths of Nilus, called Pelusium, may bee fortie leagues iourney, which place is called Isthmus, which is to say, A straight or narrow Land betwene two Seas. Touching this way, the words of Strabo in his seuenteenth Booke, are these. The Isthmus that lieth betwene Pelusium and the Extreme, where the Citie of the Heroes standeth, is of nine hundred furlongs. This is the Port of the red Sea, whither Cleopatra Queene of Egypt commanded the ships to be carried by land from the Riuer Nilus, after the victorie gotten by Cesar against Antonie, for to flee in them to the Indians; And likewise Sesostris King of Egypt, and Darius King of Persia, did take in hand to open a Trench vnto the Riuer Nilus, to make the Indian Ocean nauigable with the Sea Mediterraneum, and none of them finishing the worke, Ptolomie made a Trench of an hundred foot broad, and thirtie foot deepe, which hauing alreadie almost finished,

40 it is said, he left vnfinished the bringing of it to the Sea, for feare that the water of Nilus would become salt, the water of the Streight mingling it selfe with it. Others doe say, that taking a leuell, the Architects and Masters of the worke, did find, that the Sea of the Streight was three cubits higher then the Land of Egypt, and feared that all the Land would bee drowned. The Authors, are Diodorus Siculus, Plinie, Pomponius Mela, Strabo of Capadocia, and many other Cosmographers. Although the Towne of Soez was in old time great in name, at this day it is small enough, and I beleue it had alreadie beene vtterly lost, if the Turkish Armie had not lyne there. The situation of it is in this manner, in the front and face of the Land which is opposite to the South, where this Sea endeth, is opened a Mouth not very great, by the which a Creeke or Arme of the Sea entring a little space into the land, it windeth presently along the coast, toward

50 the setting of the Sunne, till a little Mountaine doth oppose it selfe, which alone riseth in these parts, from the which to the mouth and entring of the Creeke, the Creeke and firme Land remayning on the North side, and the nooke and end of this Sea on the South side, and the little Mountaine to the West, all the space that is contained is a very long and narrow Tongue or Point of sand, where the Gallies and Nauie of the Turke lie aground; and the warlike and ancient Town of Soez is situated, in which appeareth at this day a little Castle, and without two high and ancient Towers, as ancient Reliques of the great Citie of the Heroes, which was there in times past. But on the Point of sand where the Creeke entreth, there standeth a great and mightie Bulwarke of moderne worke, which defendeth the entrie and mouth of the Riuer, and likewise scoureth the Coast by the sterne of the Gallies, if yee would land in that place: and besides,

60 there runneth betwene the Gallies and the strand, a Trench with a Ditch cast vp, which maketh a shew like a Hill, in such sort that as well by mens worke, as by the situation and nature of the ground, the place is very strong and defensible. Now considering this landing of the place for to enter into it, it seemed to me not to be possible in any place, onely behind the little Mountaine and West side, for here we shall be free from their Artillerie, and possessing the Mountaine,

Red Sea, or

it will bee a great meanes to get the victorie: but wee are to note, that along this Strand is shoaly about a Bow shot, and the ground a soft Clay and sticking Sand, which I perceived, feeling the ground from within the Foyft, which is very troublesome and preiudiciall to them that are to Land; touching the Antiquities and things I could know of Soez, they were told mee by some men of the Streight, especially by the Moore that informed mee of the particulars of Toro, and all of them are as followeth, that is, that three leagues from Soez towards Toro, was the Fountaine of Moses, and the *Moore*s and Inhabitants doe confesse, that God gaue it vnto the Iewes by a Miracle; and also they haue in their memorie, that in this place there was a great Citie in old time, of the which they say, some buildings are yet to bee seene, they could not tell mee the name of it. They told me also that afore-time, the Kings of Egypt would haue made a Trench from Nilus, where the Citie of Cairo standeth vnto Soez, for to make these Seas Nauigable, and that they are seene at this day, although the length of time had defaced them and stopped them vp, and that those which trauelled from Toro to Cairo of necessitie should passe by them; some told mee that the occasion of this opening was not to ioyne the Straight with the Riuer Nilus, but to bring the Water to the Citie that was there. I asked them what Countrey was there betweene Soez and Cairo, they told mee that a very plaine Field, full of Sand and barren without any Water, and that from the one to the other was three dayes iourney going at leisure, which was about fifteene leagues, and that in Soez, and round about it, it rained seldome, and when it chanced, it held on much, and that all the yeare the North wind blew with great force.

From Toro to Soez is eight and twentie leagues iourney, without any Iland, Banke, or Shoald, that may hinder or doe any harme to the Nauigators, these eight and twentie leagues, lye in this manner: departing from Toro, through the midst of the Current, yee run about sixteene leagues North-west and by North, and South-east and by South, and hitherto the Coast commeth in an equall distance and separation, hauing from the one to the other, the space of three leagues, but in the end of these sixteene or seuentene leagues, the Lands begin to close very much, and to ioyne in such sort, that from Coast to Coast there is but one league, and continueth this narrownesse two leagues, and presently the Land that commeth from the Abexij withdraweth it selfe, making the great and faire Nooke aboue said; treating of the situation and place of the Gulfe called Elaniticus, the Channell in the middle distance, from the end of the sixteene or seuentene leagues till as farre as the North-west Point which commeth out of this Nooke, lyeth North North-west South South-east, the distance is eight leagues, in this place the Lands doe Neighbour very much againe, for the Land of the Arabian thrusting out a verie long and low Point outward, and the Land that commeth from the Abexij, comming forth with another bigge and high Point, at the end of the Nooke on the North-west side, there remayneth from Land to Land one leagues iourney or little more, and from these Points to Soez, and the end of this Red Sea, the Coast on each side doe wind, and make another Nooke, which hath in length little more then two leagues and a halfe, and in breadth one and an halfe, where this Sea so celebrated in the holy Scripture, and spoken of by Writers, doth finish and make an end; this Nooke is extended through the midst North and South, and taketh somewhat of the North-west and South-east, the distance is two leagues and an halfe: as touching the Land that commeth along the Coast from Toro to Soez; wee must note, that a Caleuer-shot beyond Toro on the Arabian shoare, there ariseth a Hill very neere the Sea-side, which is all bespotted with certaine red streakes, which goe from one side to the other of it; giuing it a great grace, this Hill runneth still along the Coast about fifteene or sixteene leagues, but it hath not these workes, and red streakes; more then sixe leagues space beyond Toro, and in the end of these fifteene or sixteene leagues, the Hill maketh a great knob and high, and from thence by little and little, the Hill doth forsake the Coast, and goeth into the Land till it come within a league short of Soez, where it endeth, and there remayneth from this bigge and high knob vnto Soez, betweene the Hill and the Sea, a very plaine and low ground, which in places hath a league in breadth, and in others neerer to Soez, a league and an halfe: By this Hill towards Toro, I saw great heapes of Sand along to the top of the Hill, reaching the highest of it, hauing no sandie places betweene the Hill and the Sea, and likewise, by the Clifts and Breaches many broken Sands were driuen; whence I gathered, how great the force and violence is heere of the crosse winds, seeing they snatch and driue the Sand from out of the Sea, and lift it so high; these crosse windes, as I noted, the Sands did lye and were driuen, are Welts and West North-wests.

But as touching the description of the Land, that goeth along the Sea, on the Coast of Abexij, from as farre as Toro, wee must note, that there ranne certaine great and high Hills or Mountaines very high, and ouer-appearing the Coast of the Sea, the which about seuentene leagues beyond Toro toward Soez, doe open in the midst, and descend equall with the Field, and presently they rise againe very high and continually along the Sea, till they come a league short of Soez, where they stay and passe no further.

I con-

I considering with great diligence, the fluxes and reflexes of the Sea that lyeth from Toro to Soez, found them to bee no greater nor smaller then the other of these Coasts of the Streight, but after the same manner. Whence appeareth the fallhood of some Writers, which said the pathes were not opened to the Iewes through this Sea, but that the Water ebbed so much in this place, that it remained all dry, the which the Iewes carrying for, had the passage free to the other side.

The rides from Toro to Soez, all equall with other Ports of the Sea.

Considering also, whereby Sesostre King of Egypt, and afterward Ptolomie could make the Trenches and Channels from Nilus to this Sea, for to make it nauigable with the Easterne Sea. I saw it was not possible except by two places, which stand from Toro to Soez. The first, by the Breach which the Hills doe make that runne along the Sea, by the Coast that commeth from Abexi, which Breach is seuentene leagues beyond Toro, and eleuen before yee come to Soez. The second, by the end of this Sea and Nooke, where the Towne of Soez standeth. For in this place the Hills on both sides doe end, and remaine all on Land and Field very low, without Hillocks or high Hills, or any other impediment. And in this place it seemeth to me more certaine and conuenient for to take so great a worke in hand, then by the breach I spake of, because in this place the Land is very low, and the way shorter, and hath an Hauen heere: and besides these two places, any where else I thought it impossible, because as well on the one Coast as on the other, the Mountaines are so great and so high, the which are all, or the greatest part of a Rock and hard stone, that it is not in the iudgement of men they may be cut, and bring through them a Channell or Trench that might be Nauigable. Whence it must remaine manifest, Soez to be the Port where Cleopatra commanded the Ships to bee brought by Land from Nilus, crossing the Isthmus, howsoever that a thing of so much labour and importance, in the which the breuitie was the greatest part of the Nauigation. It was manifest that they would seeke the shortest, neereft, and easiest way they could find of them all. And because this is that which commeth from Nilus, and the Citie of Cayro to Soez. Wee must make no doubt that this Navy of Cleopatra was brought hither; and likewise the Trenches from Nilus, whereby they would communicate these Seas, especially considering, how from as farre as Toro, all the Coast of Egypt is waite, and without any Port, except this of Soez, which stands in the utmost end of this Sea.

Cleopatra commanded the ships to bee brought by Land to Soez, from Nilus, crossing the Isthmus.

Considering also in the dayes we spent betweene Toro and Soez, I saw that the Heauen was very close ouer-cast with very thicke and blacke Clouds, which seemed contrary to the nature and condition of Egypt: for in it, as all men affirme, it raineth not, neither doe the Heauens or the Ayre permit any Clouds, nor Vapours, but it may be that the Sea of his owne nature doth raise here these Vapours, and into the Land the Heauen may be free, and void of them, as we see in Portugall, that in the Citie of Lisbon the daies being cleere and pleasant, and in Sintra, which is foure leagues from thence, are great ouer-castings, mists, and shewers. Now this Sea contained from Toro to Soez, is very tempestuous and suddaine, for whensoever it beginneth to blow from the North, which is the Wind that raineth in this place, though his force be not very great, presently the Sea is raised so high, and proud, that it is a wonder, the Waues being euery where so coupled and like to breake, that they are much to bee feared. And this happeneth not because of the little depth heere, for all this Sea is very deepe, and onely along the Coast that commeth from the Abexi, close with the shoare it is a little shoally. About this Sea, I saw certaine Sea-foames, which by another name are called, Euill Waters, the greatest that I haue seene, for they were of no lesse bignesse then a Target, their colour a whitish dun. These Sea-foames doe not passe from Toro downe-ward, as not willing to trouble or occupie a strange Kingdome, but contenting themselues with their ancient habitation, which is from Toro to Soez. And presently going out of this place or bounds, there are infinite small ones, and like the other, and they are bred and goe about the Sea; in the daies that I was in this Sea, contained from Toro to Soez, I felt by night the greatest colds I can remember to haue past, but when the Sunne came, the heate was vn sufferable.

The end of the voyage to Soez.

The eight and twentieth of Aprill, in the morning we departed from before Soez, toward Maqua. At Sunne set, we were one league short of a sharpe and red Pike, which stands ouer the Sea. This day we went about twentie leagues. By night wee tooke in our Sailes, and ran along the shoare with our fore-sailes onely, the Wind blew hard at North North-west: Two houres within night we came to an Anchor neere the shoare, in three fathome water, the Heauen was very darke, and couered with many thicke and blacke clouds. The nine and twentieth in the morning, we set Sayle. At nine of the clocke in the morning, we entred in Toro, and came to an Anchor, but within a little while we weighed againe, and went to an Hauen about a league from thence, which is called, The Watering of Suliman, where wee tooke in Water, digging pits in the Sand, a stones cast from the Sea, in which pits we found much water, though brackish.

The height of an Island that stands beneath the Toro.

The thirtieth, in the morning wee departed from the watering of Suliman: halfe an houre past ten, we tooke Hauen in the first of the three Ilands which stand two leagues to the North-west of the Island of Xednam, and presently I went a shoare with the Pilot, and we tooke

the Sunne, and in his greatest height it rose ouer the Horizon eightie degrees, a little scant. The declination of this day was seuentene degrees, fixe and thirtie minuts, whence it followeth, this Island to stand in twentie seuen degrees & two third parts. The first of May, the sun being vp we set sayle. About Euen-song time we were with a great Island, which hath in length two leagues, & thrusteth out a Point very close to the firme Land, where betweene the firme Land and the Island, is a singular good Harbor for al weathers, for all the ships of the world. The second of May, at Sun set, we came to an Anchor in the Port of Goelma, a Port onely for small Vessels, safe from the North, and North-west. Within the Land a little space, is a dry Brook, whereby in Winter the water of the floods, which descend from the Mountaines doth auoid, where digging a little, ye finde fresh water, and heere is a Well, though not very plentiful of water. This Port was called Goelma, which in Arabique, is to say, The Port of water, it lyeth to the North North-west of Alcocer, the distance is foure leagues.

Acallaihe Port, two leauges beyond Xacara.

A Description of the Port of Acallaihe.

A Description of the Port Bobale Xame.

The Tombe of an Arabian.

The fourth of May, we rowed along the shoare: almost Sunne set, we came to an Anchor in a Port, which is called Acallaihe, which standeth beyond Xacara toward the South-east two leagues. By night the wind was at North North-west, we lay all night at Anchor.

Acallaihe is a small Port, but very good, betweene Xacara and the blacke Hilocke.

Bobale Xame is a great Port, wherein may harbour many Shippes, it is very deepe within. This place was called Bobale Xame, because within the Land dwelt a Badoil, very rich, which was called Bobalel, the which came or sent to sell Cattell to the Ships, which did take or come into that Hauen, and Xame, is to say, Land. And heere wee found an honourable Toombe within a house like a Chappell, where was hanging a Guidon or Ancient of Silke, and many Arrowes or Darts round about the Graue, and about the Wals and Cords a great quantitie of Bulls did hang. At the head of the Graue there was a Table standing vpright, with a great Epitaph, and about the house, many Waters and Fragrant smelling things.

I enquiring of the Moores and Arabians of such a thing, I learned that here lay buried a very honourable Arabian, of the Linage of Mahomet, which crossing these Coasts, fell very sicke, and in this Port ended his daies: and they made him this Graue as a man of so high a Genealogie. Where the Xarifes Iuda and great Prelats gaue Indulgences, and granted pardons to euery one that should visite this house. But the offerings and reuerence which the Portugals did vnto it, was to sacke the house, and afterward for to burne it, that no signe was left where it had beene. In this Port wee found great footing of Tygres, and wilde Goats, and other Beasts which came all to the Sea, as though they came to seeke water for to drinke.

A Description of the Land of of Badois, and of their customes & life. What Badoile signifyeth Troglodithas, or Badois.

The Badois, which is the generall name for the Ithiofagis or Eiofagis are wilde or sauage. They haue no King.

The many times that I bring to the field the name and memorie of the Badois, and likewise the traelling by their Coasts and Countries, doth binde me to speake some thing of them. Badoil, in good Arabique, signifieth a man that liueth onely by Cattell: these men, called Badoies, is properly the people of the Troglodithas, Ophiotofagus, of the which Ptolomie, Plinie, Pomponius Mela, and other Authors doe write: the which Troglodithas or Badoies, doe liue in the Mountaines, and coasts of the Sea, which are containd from the coast of Melinde and Magadox, to the Cape of Guardafui, and from thence going inward to the Streight, they doe begirt and occupie all her Coasts, as well on the one side as on the other, and turning againe outward on the Arabian side, they runne along the Sea to the Streight of Ormuz, and all these Lands may rather be affirmed to be occupied by them then inhabited.

The Badoies are wilde men, amongst whom is no ciuill societie, no truth nor ciuilitie vsed: They worship Mahomet, and are very bad Moores, aboue all other People they are giuen to Stealths and Rapine; they eate raw flesh, and drinke milke; their habite is vile and filthy, they are greatly endued with swiftnesse and nimblenesse; they fight on foote and horse-backe, their weapons are Darts, they neuer haue peace with their Neighbours, but continually haue warre, and fight with euery one.

Those that dwell along the Red Sea, from as farre as Zeila vnto Suaquen, doe fight with the Abexys; and those from Suaquen to Alcocer, haue warre with the Nobys; and those which inhabite from Alcocer to Soez, and end of this Sea, doe molest continually the Egyptians. But returning by the Arabian side, by all the Coast of the Sea, that lyeth from Soez to the Streight of Ormuz, doe contend with the Arabians. Among the Badois there is no King or great Lord, but liue in Troopes or Factions; they permit no Towne in their Fields, neither haue they any certaine Habitation, for their custome is to be Vagabonds, from one place to another, with their Cattell. Not onely doe they abhor Lawes and Ordinances, but alio the Sutes and Differences that arise amongst them, they will not haue them iudged by any Custome, and they are content that their Xequie doe determine them as he list; their dwelling is in Caues and Holes, and other such like habitations, but the greatest part doe helpe themselves with Tents and Bothes; their colour is very blacke, their language the Arabian, the rest of their Custome and Life, I omit.

The tenth of May, by day, we weighed anchor from the Port of Igidid. An houre before Sun set we fastned on a Shoald, which stood about foure leagues from Farate toward the South. In this this Shoald is an excellent Hauē, and it is so great, that wee could not discerne with our sight the end of it, it lyeth almost East South-east, and West North-west, but it is very crooked and winding. The two and twentieth of May, 1541. by breake of day, we were one league short of the great Groue, that standeth foure leagues from Maczua, the wind was of the Land. About nine of the clocke it began to blow from the North North-east, a faire gale. We entred at noone into the Port of Maczua, where we were receiued with great ioy and feast of our Armie. From the day wee entred in Maczua, which was the two and twentieth of May, to the fifteenth of Iune, the winds blew alwaies at North, North North-east, and North North-west: but from the fifteenth of Iune, to the seuenth of Iuly, they blew Easterly, that is; East, East South-east, and South-east, many times they brought great stormes. The last day of Iune at night, we had a storme from the South-east of so much winde, that it droue the Gallions and they passed great danger of striking a ground. This storme brought much Raine and fearefull Thunders, and there fell a Thunder-bolt from Heauen vpon a Gallion, and comming downe by the Mast, it raced it all: and likewise the second of Iuly, wee had another storme from the East very great, which vnfastned many ships, and lasted the most part of the day. From thence to the seuenth of Iuly, although we had other stormes, they were but small: From the seuenth of Iuly, to the ninth of the same, the Wind came to the Land and brought two stormes from the West, but the wind was not ouer-much.

A thunderbolt

The ninth of Iuly, 1541. one houre after Sunne rose, wee set sayle from Maczua. The eleuenth of Iuly, by breake of day, we were two or three leagues short of the Point of Dallaqua, that lyeth on the North-side, and betweene certaine flat Ilands which haue some Woods, and doe lye scattered on this side of the Iland; wherefore wee set all Sayles and went aloofe all that wee could to goe betweene two of these Ilands, the wind was almost North-west verie faire, we sayled North-east and by North, hauing doubled a Shoald we came to an Anchor: and two houres after noone we set sayle againe, the wind about North North-east faire, wee sayled along the shoare of the Iland of Dallaqua. An houre before Sunne set, we were with an of Iland Sand very flat, which is called Dorat Melcuna, from the which to all parts there came out great Shoalds: Sunne altogether set, wee were a league short of the Iland of Xamoa, and from the Point of Dallaqua, which stands on the West side, and opposite to the firme Land of the Abexi, betweene the which and the Iland of Xamoa, is the most frequented Channell of those which sayle to Maczua. All the Coast of Dallaqua which we saw this day, is coasted North North-west, and South South-east, and it is all wonderfully low. The eighteenth, by breake of day, we saw the mouth of the Streight, and we might be from it three leagues, and we saw all the Armie lye at Hull, and presently we set sayle altogether.

Opinions of the Red Sea.

Before we departed from the Arabique Gulfe, or Streight of Mecca, which is all one, it will be iust to speake something of my opinion, and of that which I haue seene, touching the reason that moued the ancient men to call all this Sea, the Red Sea: and likewise, whether her colour doth differ from the other of the great Ocean, or not. Plinie in the sixt Booke of the Natural History, Cap. 23. rehearseth many opinions, whereby the people called this Streight the Red Sea. The first is, that it tooke this name of a King that reigned in it, called Eritbra, because Eritbros in the Greeke, is to say, Red. Another opinion was, that of the reflection of the Sun-beames, there grew in this Sea reddish colour. Some held, that of the Sand and Ground that runneth alongst it. Others also beleueed, that this water was Red of his owne Nature, whereby all this Sea got this name. Of these opinions the Writers chose them that they liked best, and seemed most certaine. Now the Portugals that haue Nauigated this way in times past, affirmed this Sea to be all spotted with certaine red strakes: the cause they attributed vnto it, is this. They said, the Coast of the Arabian was naturally verie red, and that as in this Countrey there arose many stormes, and did raise great dusts toward the skies, after they were verie high, driuen with the force of the Winds, they fell in the Sea, and this Dust being red, it did dye the water of it, whereby it was called the Red Sea. When I came to Socatora, till I past all the Coasts of this Sea, and set my selfe before Soez, I neuer left by day nor night, to consider of these Waters, and viewing the colour and manner of the Countrey that goeth along the shoare: and certainly, I was not so troubled for any thing, as for the bestowing my labour in obtaining the truth of the things, and to search out the occasion of them, and that I got of mine owne Industrie, and most clearly haue I seene many times, is as followeth. First, it is false to say, that the colour of this Sea is Red, for it hath no difference from the colour that all the other Water of the Sea doth shew vs, and to say that the dusts which the winds doe snatch from the Land and driue into the Sea, doe staine the Water where they fall, till now wee saw no such thing, seeing many stormes raise great dusts, and driue them into the Sea, but not to change the colour of the Waues thereof. And to say that the Land ouer the Sea Coast is Red, they obserued not well the Coasts and Strands: for generally on the one side, and on the other, the Land by the Sea is browne, and verie darke, and seemeth scortcht: and in some places it shewes blacke, and in others white, and the Sands hath their owne colour, but onely in three places there are certaine pieces of Mountaines which haue certaine veines of Red, where Portugals

neuer came, except these which now are here-away, which places are all farre beyond Suaquen, that is, toward Soez, and the end of this Sea ; but the three hills that shew this red colour, are of a verie hard Rocke, and then all the Land round about that we can see, is of the common and accustomed colour. But the truth of these things is, that the Water of this Sea taken substantially, hath no difference of his colour ; but in many places of it, the waues thereof came by accident to seeme very red, which is caused in this manner. From the Citie of Suaquen vnto Alcoer, which is, one hundred thirtie fixe leagues iourney, the Sea is all thicke with Shoalds and Shelues, whose ground is of a stone, called Corall-stone, which groweth in certaine Trees and Clusters, spreading one way, and another way certaine branches, properly as the Corall doth, and this stone is so like vnto it, that it deceiueth any person that is not very skilfull in the growth and nature. The colour of this stone is of two sorts ; the one wonderfully white, and the other very red. In some places this stone lies couered with very Greene Ozies ; and in other free from this Herbe, which Slime or Ozies in some places, is very Greene ; and in others it maketh a colour very like Orange-tawny. Now we must presuppose, that the water of this Sea is clearer, especially from Suaquen vpward, then euer was any, in sort, that in twentie fathome water ye may see the ground in many places. This presupposed, we are to note, that wheresoeuer that these Shoalds and Shelues did appeare, the water ouer them was of three colours, that is, Red, Greene, or White, the which proceeded of the ground that was vnder, as many times I saw by experience ; for if the ground of these Shoalds was Sand, it caused that the Sea ouer it appeared white ; and the ground where the Corall-stone lay couered with Greene Ozies, the water that couered it did giue a colour greener then the Weeds : but wheresoeuer the Shoalds were of red Corall, or of Corall-stone couered with red Weeds, it made all the Sea that was ouer it seeme very red ; and because this red colour comprehended greater spaces in this Sea, then the Greene or the White, because the stone of the Shoalds was the greatest part of red Corall. I beleue it was the reason whereby it receiued the name of Red Sea, and not of Greene nor White Sea : Notwithstanding, this Sea doth represent these colours most perfectly. The meanes that I had to obtaine this secret, was to fasten many times vpon the Shoalds, where I saw the Sea looke red, and commanded diuers to bring me of the stones that lay in the bottome, and the most times it was so shallow, that the Foyft did touch : and other-whiles, that the Mariners went on the Shoalds halfe a league with the water to the breast, where it happened that al or the greatest part of the stones they pulled vp were of Red Corall, and others couered with weeds like Orange-tawny, and the practise I had wheresoeuer the Sea seemed Greene, & found beneath White Corall, couered with Greene Weeds : and in the White Sea I found a verie white Sand without any thing else whereof it might proceede. For some Saylers giuing relation of the Red colour that they saw in this Sea, as of the greater and most compendious of all, being ignorant of the cause, or not being willing to offer it, for to increase admiration to their Navigations and Trauels : and seeing that men do not only know this Sea by the name of Red Sea, but doe beleue that the waters are naturally red. I haue talked many times with Moorish Pilots, and curious persons of Antiquities, which dwelt in some places of this Streight, about the name of this Sea : euery one did say to me, they knew no other name then the Sea of Mecca, and they wondred very much at vs, to call it the Red Sea. I asked of the Pilots, if they found sometimes the Sea stained red with the dusts that the winds brought of the Land, they told me, they saw no such thing. With all this, I reprove not the opinion of the Portugals, but I affirme, that going through this Sea more times then they did, and seeing all the length thereof, and they onely one piece, I neuer saw in the whole, that which they say to haue seene in the part.

The ninth of August, we entred in the Port of Angedina, and remained there till the one and twentieth of August, that we embarked in Foyfts, and going directly to Goa, wee entred ouer the Barre thereof vnder Sayles : and our Voyage was ended, and this Booke.

A briefe Relation of the Embassage which the Patriarch Don IOHN BERMUDEZ brought from the Emperour of Ethiopia, vulgarly called PRESBYTER IOHN, to the most Christian and zealous of the Faith of CHRIST, Don IOHN, the third of this Name, King of Portugall: Dedicated to the 10 most High and Mightie King of Portugall, Don SEBASTIAN of most blessed hope, the first of this Name. In the which he reciteth also the death of Don CHRISTOPHER of Gama: and the successes which happened to the Portugals that went in his Companie.

Printed in Lisbon, in the house of FRANCIS CORREA, Printer to the Cardinall the Infant, the yeere of 1565.

20 A Letter of the Patriarch Don IOHN BERMUDEZ, to the King our Lord.

MOST High and Mightie King, your Highnesse said to me few daies agoe, that you would be glad to know the truth, of what happened to a Captaine and people, which the King your Grand-father which is in Glorie, gave unto me for the succour of the Emperour of Ethiopia Onadinguel, *called Presbyter Iohn, for to avoid the errors which 30 some persons doe write of this; insomuch that even in the Name they erre, naming him Don Paul, he being Don Christopher his Brother. And others doe write, and say some things which did not passe in truth, neither did they see them. Therefore I, that saw it all, will tell you in briefe in this small writing all that passed. The Lord keepe your person, multiply your young age, and prosper your Royall estate. Amen.

So he calleth Atani Tingil before mentioned.

Don IOHN BERMUDEZ elected Patriarch of the Presbyter, and sent to Rome: His returne into Ethiopia: Arriuall at Maczua; The death of the Negus, 40 entertainment of him and CHRISTOPHER of Gama, with the Portugall Forces by the Queene Regent.

A Faithfull and good Christian, called Onadinguell, being Emperour in the Kingdome of Ethiopia, (vulgarly called Presbyter Iohn) and the Patriarch of that Countrey, by name Abuna Marcos, being at the point of death in the yeere of our Redemption, 1535. The said Emperour said to the Patriarch, that he requested him, that according to their custome, he before his death would institute me for his Successour, and Patriarch of that Countrey. And the said Patriarch did so, ordering me first with all the sacred Orders. The which I accepted with such condition, that it should bee confirmed by the chiefe Bishop of 50 Rome, successour of Saint Peter, to whom wee all were to giue obedience. The said Emperour answered me, that he was well contented: and moreouer he desired me, that for my selte, and for him, and for all his Kingdomes I should goe to Rome, to giue the obedience to the holy Father: and from thence should come to Portugall, to conclude an Embassage, that he had sent hither by a man of that Countrey, called Tegazano, in whose company came the Father Francis

Zaga Zabo the Frier mentioned in the 60 Aluarez. After many troubles passed in the Iourney, I came to Rome, the Pope Paul the third governing then in the Apostolike Sea: the which receiued me with great clemencie and fauour, and confirmed all things as I brought them, and at my request he ratified it all againe, and commanded me to sit in the Chaire of Alexandria, and that I should entitle my selfe Patriarch and Bishop of the Sea.

 From Rome I departed towards Portugall, where I came, the King your Grand-father of glorious Memorie, being in the Citie of Enora, who reioyced particularly at my comming, to conclude as he desired, the Embassage which the Tagazano had brought, for hee had bene here twelue yeares, without concluding any thing through meere negligence. For the which the Emperour Onadinguel commanded me, that I should take away his charge of Embassadour, and should apprehend him, and carrie him a Prisoner with me. And therefore I brought him a letter from the Emperour, the which I gaue him in Lisbon where he was, and he tooke it and kissed it, and reknowledged it to be true, and by it he acknowledged me for his Patriarch and Superiour, and kissed my hand, and gaue me his place, without speaking any more words. I commanded to imprison him with two chaines of Iron, on each arme one, after the manner of his Countrey: the which I tooke from him againe within a few daies, because his Highnesse intreated me. The Embassage which the said Emperour demaunded, was his perpetuall friendship and brotherhood: and therefore he desired him they would marrie their children interchangeably the one with the other; and that from Portugall a sonne of his should goe to marrie with a daughter of his, and reigne in his Kingdomes after his death, that this alliance betweene the Portugals and them, and alio the obedience of the Pope might be greater and endure. And likewise, he sent to request him, hee would send him some men for to defend himselfe from the King of Zeila, which vsurped his Kingdomes: and he would send him great store of riches, for he could verie well doe it. And likewise to send him some Pioners for to cut a hill whereby already Eylale Belale his Predecessour did bring the Riuer Nilus, to bring it now also that way to annoy Egypt. 10

The King your Grand-father hauing taken counsell, thought good to grant mee that which I demanded, and commanded to giue mee foure hundred and fiftie Caluer-men and Pioners, and that they should dispatch me that I might returne that yeere in company with Don Garcia of Noranya, which then went for Vice-roy of India. I fell suddenly sicke, and the Physicians said of poyson: as it was suspected the Tegazana caused it to bee giuen mee. The chiefe Physician which then was, named James Lopez, cured me, and he which now is, Leonard Nunyes, and others, which his Highnesse commaunded: for the which sicknesse, I remained that yeere in this Realme. 20

Presently, the next yeere, being recovered by the goodnesse of God, I went in his Highnesse Armie. I carryed alio Anthonie Fernandes, and Gaspar Suriano both Armenians borne, which by commandement of Presbyter Iohn, came to seeke mee, to the which his Highnesse did many fauours. We arriued in India safely, at such time as the Vice-roy Don Garcia, was come from Dio, with the Victorie which he had of the Turkes, Anthonie Selueyra, beeing Captaine of that Fortresse, the which Vice-Roy receiued vs with great ioy, and shewed me great honour, the Bishop of Goa came to receiue me with his trayne in Procession, with Crosse on high, and carryed mee from the Sea-side vnto the Sea in a Chaire, which the King your Grand-father gaue vnto mee for that purpose: going next vnto me on the one side, the Vice-Roy Don Garcia, and on the other, Don Iohn Deça, Captaine of Goa, and re-knowledging me for Patriarch, gaue mee the honour due vnto my dignitie. 30

Stephen Gama
Vice-Roy.

In the meane-while, the Vice-Roy sickned of a Fluxe, whereof hee dyed: and Don Stephen of Gama succeeded in his stead. The which I presently requested to dispatch me, and send me to the Presbyter Iohn with the succour, as his Highnesse had commanded, and he answered me, that he could not doe it, because one hundred thousand Crownes were not sufficient to dispatch mee or more, in hazard of neuer being recovered: and I answered him, that all that was nothing, for the Presbyter Iohn, which without missing it might spend a Million of Gold or more, for he hath innumerable riches. It was determined, that he in person should transport mee: and presently he commanded a good Nauie of Gallies and Gallions, and other ships well furnished, as for such a Voyage was necessarie, and many chosen men, of the best that were in India. With the which Armie we came to the Port of Maqua in the Red Sea: where we found newes that the Emperour Onadinguel, was dead of his naturall death; of the which we all were very sorrie, and I aboue all, as he whom it touched most. 40

Aba Joseph.

I encouraged my selfe, till there came from Presbyter Iohn two Friers, good religious men, one of them Prior Prouinciall of many Monasteries, and a great man among them, called Aba Joseph, which went to Ierusalem, and told vs how the Queene, and a Sonne and Heire of hers did maintaine their estate, and resisted their Enemies. This being knowne, the Gouvernour Don Stephen said vnto me, that I should send to visit them, as in effect, I presently sent by one Arias Diz, a Tawanie man borne in Coymbra. 50 gall.

In the meane-time, the Gouvernour like a good Gentleman, and willing to lose no time, and beeing a Captaine of a valiant spirit, went with the Gallies that came in the Fleete, to the Port of Suez, for to take or burne the Turkes Gallies, which were in that Hauen, which he could not doe because they were on dry Land.

Sixty fugitiues

Being there, tarrying the Gouvernours comming, there fled from the Fleete sixtie men in a Skiffe and a Boat to the firme Land, the which came to a Port of Land very dry and excessiue hot, and being willing to trauell into the Land, they found it so dry that they dyed for thirst, and being thus pinched with necessitie, one Captaine of the King of Zeila, that was in that Countrey sent to tell them, that he would send them Meate and Water, and would assure them their liues, so that they would giue him their Weapons: and they seeing they had no other remedie, and beeing pinched with need they gaue them: with which presently they slue them all. 60

At that instant the chiefe Captaine sent a Galley to Arquico, to seeke water, in the which he sent sent also a thousand Cotton Webs, for to change for Kine, or Beeues to eate: and they which carried them going from Arquico by Land, where the Armie was; a Bernagaiz, called Noro, Captaine of the King of Zeila tooke them from them, & sent word presently to the chiefe Captaine, that the King of Zeila his Lord was Lord of all Ethiopia, and had wonne all the Countreies of the Presbyter Iohn, therefore that he would make peace with him, and traffique with his Merchandize in his Countreies, in the which there is much Gold, Iuorie, Ciuet, Frankincense, Myrrhe, and many other Drugges, and Slaues, wherein they might make great profit: and hee also would giue him store of prouision, and would restore the Cowes that hee had taken, and would make amends for the sixtie men that were slaine.

Commodities of Zeila.

Sic ars deludi- tur arte:

- 10 I told the Captaine that hee should not trust the words of *Moore*s, for they were false, and that they said, was fained, to doe vs some harme; therefore that wee should also vse some slight with them, and it should be this. That he would send him a Present, and with it words of thankfulness for the good will that hee shewed vs, whereby he may thinke that he hath deceiued vs, and may be assured of vs: for by this slight we shall hinder his deceit. The chiefe Captaine did so, and commanded the Factor of the Armie to carrie to the Bernagaiz a Barrell of Wine, and another thousand of Cotton Webs; the Wine for a Present, and the Webs for to change for Beeues: and that he should tell him from him, that the other Webs, that seeing they were taken in good and lawfull Warre hee should not speake of them, and as touching the men that were slaine, that they deserued not to be reuenged, for as much as they were Rebels and Traytors, and deserued the death they had: and as touching Traffique and Peace, that for the present they were in the holy weeke, and could doe no worke, but as soone as the Feast was past, wee would doe that which he desired, and would bring our Wares ashore for to traffique with them.

The Portugall stratagema.

- 20 Having taken counsell againe, the chiefe Captaine commanded that the Boates should not go ashore, because no Moore or Blacke-moore might haue any meanes to goe thither, and giue him warning. And commanded the Souldier to be in a readinesse, the secretest that they could: and that in the Boates, and the other light Vessels that were in the Armie: in the which hee commanded they should make no fire, because they might not be perceiued: And commanded Martin Correa, that at ten of the clocke at night hee should land with sixe hundred men, and possesse the passages whereby they might escape, he went and killed some Turkes and Fartaquis, and tooke all the Carriage they had, which was but little, for he had no time to take any store. The Bernagaiz of Zeila, when he saw the King set himselfe to flight, hee likewise fled, and lighted vpon Martin Correa, where being knowne a Calecuer-man killed him; and men comming to rescue him were many of them slaine, Foot and Horse, and the rest saued themselves by flight. Our men thought good to cut off his head, and send it for a Present to the Queen, wherewith she reioyced very much; shee sent a great man of her Countrey, called Esmacherobel Tigremacan, to the chiefe Captaine, and to me, to giue vs thanks.

The King of Maczua flyeth, and the Bernagaiz is slaine.

- 30 As soone as the Gouvernour Don Stephen came, hee gaue order presently to dispatch and send me to the King and Queene, and because they vnderstood already, that the Enterprize was of honour and profit, many did couet it more then before: among the which, one was Don Christopher Gama, Brother to the Gouvernour: who desired mee very earnestly, that I would giue him the charge of all the men that he was to carrie, for he would goe with me. Presently there came where I was, Don Iohn of Castro, Don Manuel of Lima, Don Payo of Noronya, Tristram of Tayde, and Manuel of Sosa, and I granted their request, and gaue him the command of the men for Don Christopher: of the which they were all contented and satisfied, and the Gouvernour gaue me thanks for it. And presently hee commanded to enroll the men that hee gaue mee. So foure hundred men, among the which, there went many Gentlemen, and men of account, which besides the number limited, carryed Seruants, which increased the number and profited very much.

Returne of the Vice-Roy from Soer.

- 40 * This is hee which had bin with the Vice-Roy in the bottom of the Gulfe, and did write that former Rutter. Peter Borges Henriques, was before appointed Captaine.

- 50 Beginning to order our departure, there came the Christian Bernagaiz, which had beene there already, and brought some Camels, Mules, and Ases for to beare the Carriage, and also for seruice and to helpe. I commanded the Bernagaiz, and the Tigremacan, that they should command to bring vs some victuals and refreshing for all the Armie: which commanded to bring many Beeues, Muttons, Goates, Butter, Honey, Miller, Figges and Quinces, and other things in abundance.

The Vice-Roy and the Part company.

- 60 The Gouvernour with all the Gentlemen of the Armie came to Arquico, where they requested me to giue them my blessing: the which I gaue them on Gods behalfe, to whom I recommended them, and they went to Sea, and we remayned on Land very solitarie. And beginning to trauell, within three dayes we came to Debarua. Within a few dayes they vsed Schismaticall and Hereticall Ceremonies, differing from the Romane. I satisfied the best I could, Don Christopher and his men, and the murmuring ceased, and they concluded how to carrie the Ordnance when they journeyed. They made presently certaine Carriages like vnto ours: the which, because in the Countrey there was no Iron, they shod them with certaine old Calecuers, which brake, because they would serue for no other vse.

Wang of Iron.

I sent to the Queene, who came with all speed possible: whom we went to receiue out of the Citie, Citie a league, with all the men of Portugall in Warlike order, and Ancients displayed with Trumpets, and as well the Kings as of the Captaines. I say of the King, because wee had Ordnance, whereof she was amazed, being a thing vnaccustomed. The first thing she did, as one that had a respect vnto the things of God, she receiued my blessing: and presently receiued Don Christopher with great entertainment and honour, giuing him many thanks, that hee would vouchsafe to take that Enterprize, and charge to defend her from her Enemies. From thence we went to the Citie, and the next day we heard all Masse, and wee gaue order that Processions should be made, in the which we all went, and the Queene also, with two Infantes her Sisters in-law, and a little Princeesse her Daughter, which she brought with her, desiring all of God with great Deuotion and many teares, that he would vouchsafe to heare vs, and giue vs the victorie of his Enemies and ours.

§. II.

Don CHRISTOPHER and the Portugals Warre on the King of Zeila, and hauing in two Battels preuailed, in the third are ouerthrowne. A new Captaine appointed. Don CHRISTOPHERS resolution and death. Mountaine of the Iewes.

DEparting from Debarua, we went eight dayes by rough Countries: at the end of which wee come to plaine grounds, and very well inhabited, and better then they past, but in them there dwelt Christians, which for feare did follow the Moore: which as soone as they knew our comming, went presently to Don Christopher, and gaue him obedience. At the end of three dayes, we came to a very pleasant field, and in it a Fountaine of faire water: in the which we pitcht our Campe round about the Fountaine.

Goranya King of Zeila. Some call him Gradamet, Godignus calls him Gragna, which varietie happens by the different pronuntiation of so different a Language. Prouoking Presents.

The next day there came a Messenger to vs from Goranya, King of Zeila; with some of his men in company, and asking for the Captaine of those men, said vnto Don Christopher, that his King sent to aske him who he was, and from whence hee came, or who gaue him leaue to enter in his Kingdomes with men of warre: for those Realmes were his, and hee had wonne them by his Lance, and of his Gentlemen, with the helpe of his Prophet Mahomet: therefore if wee would become Moores, and serue him, hee would entertaine them well, and giue them his wages: And moreouer, Wiues and Goods to liue vpon: and if not, that wee should presently auoid his Countrey, and goe out of it. Don Christopher answered him, that he was a Captaine of the King of Portugall, by whose commandement hee came with those men for to restore the Kingdomes of the Presbyter Iohn, which hee tyrannously hath vsurped, and to take them out of his hands, and giue them to whose they were. And with this message he sent him for a Present, a Looking-glasse, and a paire of Mullets to pull the haire with, and an Egge of Siluer of Pegu, signifying, that those things pertayned to him. And to the Messenger hee gaue two Bracelets of Gold, and a very rich Sute of Cloth of Gold, which things the Queene had giuen to him; and he gaue him also a Cypres of Bengala, and a Turkish Caslock with his vpper Garment: this by my counsell in disgrace of the Goranya, raysed presently his Campe, and beganne to march toward the place where we were with one thousand Horsemen, and fise thousand foot, and fiftie Turkes Cateuer-men, and as many Archers.

Don Christopher commanded to place the Queene (who was very fearefull) and the women with all the Carriage in the midst of the Squadron. The Moore when hee saw vs goe vp a Hill (whereon stands the Church of the Ladie of Pitie) wheeled vpon vs to take the height from vs; and he came alreadie so neere vnto vs, that the shot began to fight on both sides. When I saw the Battle was begun, I called sixe Portugals, and with the Queene and her Sisters in-law I was going aside, and in this I knew the Moorish King, which came neere to his Antient on a Bay Horse, and I shewed him to Peter Deça a Gentleman, and a good shot: which shot at him and slue his Horse, and hurt him in the legge. His men came about him, and set him on another Horse, and tooke him from that place. Our Captaine Don Christopher was also hurt in his legge; and I commanded the Steward to set vp the Queenes Tent in signe of victorie. The Moore had inuironed vs on euery side, when they saw vs setting vp Tents, and their King hurt, they began to retyre, and goe after their King, which withdrew himselfe with the paine of the wound toward a Mountaine that was neere to that place to be cured.

At this instant there came to vs a Moore that had been a Christian, Cousin German to the Bernagaz, and told vs how the King was hurt in his legge: and how great a fauour God had done to vs therein, for if it had not beene so he had taken vs all, without doubt, but that God miraculously had deliuered vs from his hands: and that therefore hee with all his men did returne to vs, and would serue vs and pay the Tributes that vnto that time they payed to that King: and that that he went presently to his Countrey for to send vs Beeves and Prouision for our Campe: for hee was Captaine and Gouvernour of all that Countrey where we were: the which belonged to the Presbyter, and he also: and when the King of Zeila conquered it, hee yeelded vnto him, and now that he saw him ouer-come, he returned to vs againe, whereby he seemed to be a man of, Line he that ouer-commeth.

Tempora mutantur & nos mutamur in illis.

In the meane while, it pleased God that Don Christopher healed of his wound; but we suffered great hunger, for there was very little prouision in the Campe, and the people died with hunger. Don Christopher went to the Queene, and told her, that the people suffered great hunger, and that they had need to eat all they found, notwithstanding it was Lent, that it would be good to kill the Beasts, that they had in the Campe, for to eat: and with this request, they came both to my Tent, praying me that I would giue the people leaue to eat flesh in Lent, because of the necessitie there was: and besides, the Queene requested me, that I should giue her my Oxen that I had for my carriage, to giue them to the people, and as soone as her Captaine afore-said came, shee would satisfie me, which would stay three dayes: and so it was, for he presently came with great store of prouision, viz. Beeves, Sheepe and Goates, Butter, and other prouisions for Lent, and for Easter, which was already at hand.

Scarfitie.

Flesh in Lent.

As soone as Easter was past, the Goranya sent word to Don Christopher, that he would come to see him, that he should prepare himselfe; which he did as he had said. He came to seeke vs, with more and better men then before he brought: for, he had about two thousand Horse, and infinite number of foot, and an hundred Turks: for the which, the Queene was in such a feare with her Sisters in law, that they knew not what to doe, in such sort that being at Dinner, as soone as they knew the comming of the Moore, they would haue left Dinner. Don Christopher being the next day ordering his men, before day, for to set vpon the *Moore*s; the Queene sent for me, and said to me, that shee saw the great power that the King Goranya brought, and that it was impossible to scape his hands if we stayed, therefore that shee desired me that we should be gone, for shee had so determined, and that in any sort shee would doe it; therefore that shee requested me very earnestly, that I would not let her goe alone, seeing I was her Father, but I should accompanie her, and goe with her. And I, to shew her the loue that I bare her, and that shee should not thinke that I esteemed not her life, granted her request, and we both interpreted the flight. But Don Christopher, which was already warned for that purpose, sent after vs ten Horse-men, and some Foot-men, crying aloud, and saying, that it was neither seruice of God, nor the worke of a Father, to goe away and leaue them. Hearing these wordes, Shee by my meanes returned to the Campe weeping and bewayling her selfe. There Don Christopher said vnto me, that as a Father and Prelate, according to the good custome of the Portugals, he requested me that I should giue him my blessing, and should make him a generall absolution before he entred into the battell. I did so, and granted him a plenarie Indulgence of all his sinnes: which I might doe, because the Pope had granted it me, and was the stile of the Patriarchs of Alexandria. From thence we remoued with our Campe, by the breake of day, downe the Hill, and marched till we came to a Plaine; and presently, with great furie, they assaulted our standings on euery side. Our men defended themselves with the Ordnance and Fire-works, wherewith they annoyed them very much: and before they came, they had cast a great quantitie of powder in the wayes, whereby they were to come vp; the which, when they were in the heate of the battell, was set on fire, and it burned them, proceeding vnder their feet, they not knowing from whence it came, they vnderstood not the stratageme. Our men did cast among them certaine Balls of wilde fire, and Pots full of powder, wherewith they burned the greatest part of them, and the other retyred with feare, and durst come no more neere vs. The Ordnance killed many of the Horse-men, and of other People, that the field was all full of them, and the Horses ranne masterlesse about the fields. The Turks with their Peeeces and their Bowes, killed vs twentie men, and the master Gunner. Our men killed fifteene Turks. The Queene was next to me, embracing a Crosse, and weeping, and said vnto mee; O Father, what haue you gayned in bringing me hither? Wherefore did you not let me goe my way? I said vnto her: Lady, doe not afflict your selfe; commit your selfe to God, and open your eyes, and you shall see the great destruction that is done in your enemies.

The second battell.

Fierie stratagem.

At this time the Foot-men began already to flee, and the Horse-men durst not come neere, but skirmished a farre off; and the King said to his men, that the Portugals were no men, but Deuills, for they fought like Deuills. And with this he retyred himselfe towards the Hill, and left his Campe.

The victorie.

We gathered our Campe, and went forward as fast as wee could, but they fled as fast as they could, and wee could not ouer-take them. But wee found many Abexins on foote and horse-backe which returned to vs, which afterward were baptized, and loyall to their King. Of whose returne, the Queene and we all were as glad as of the principall victorie. We came to the campe of the *Moore*s, which we found forsaken without any people, but wee found in it all the spoile, for the feare which Saint James put them in, gaue them no leisure to take any thing away. Wee found it with Tents vp, and in them Apparell, House-hold stuffe, Mony, and other riches, and store of prouision, which were very needfull for vs, for it was alreadie very scant. Here wee stayed, and let the people rest two dayes.

Nazareth Country appertaining to the Patriarch.

This Countrey and all the borders, is called the Prouince of Nazareth, and it is of the Patriarchs, their owne proper with all iurisdiction, without the King entermeddling in it by any meanes, neither hath he any Rent thereof. It yeeldeth for the Patriarch three thousand ounces of gold every yeere, the which King Theodorus appropriated vnto them, for a certaine offence that he committed against a Patriarch.

From the Campe wee drew toward the Mountaines, where the King Goranya with-drew himselfe, and pitched our Campe in a field, at the foot of the Mountaine, inuironed with the carriages of the Ordnance.

The Turke solicit.

The Moore sent to Zebide to a Bassa of the great Turke which was there, to aske him succour, saying, that he should succour him, and not suffer those Kingdomes to be lost, which were all of the great Turke, and he held them for him, and that in token thereof, hee sent him one hundred thousand Oquies of gold, and twentie thousand for his person. An Oqui is a waight of gold, which in that Countrey is worth as much as ten Crownes or Cruzados in this, and weigheth as much. We with-drew our selues, while we knew what passed, to a strong Mountaine, the which was compassed on euery side with Rocks and Craggs, in such sort, that in it there was scarce a way for foot-men. For to carry the Ordnance and other carriage, was needfull to make a new way, the which the Captaines of the Countrey made with their men, and it was so streight, and so rough, that the Ordnance could not bee carried vpon the carriages, but they carried it on their backs with Leauers. Aboue was a Plaine where wee pitched our Campe. From thence the Queene sent through her Prouinces, and I also through mine, that they should bring vs store of victualls, and other prouisions necessarie, of which we were presently well prouided, and the wounded were well cured.

Mountaine of Iewes.

Being there well lodged, Don Christopher said vnto mee, that wee should remoue to a higher Hill which was neere from thence, because the Armie might be more safe; and that in the meane while he would goe to a Mountaine, which was neere from thence, inhabited with Iewes, in the which was a Captaine of the Moore with an hundred and fiftie Horse, as we were aduertised. And being gone with the Portugals, and some few of the Countrey, for to shew him the wayes; hee left with vs two Portugall Captaines with his men. As soone as hee came to the Mountaine, he set vpon the Moore, and killed sixtie Horse-men, and tooke thirtie Horses, the rest fled. The Iewes, inhabitants of the Mountaine, pursued after the *Moore*s, and taking the passages of the Mountaine, which they knew very well, they killed them almost all, and among them the Captaine, and tooke all the spoile they carried, and the women, which they brought all to Don Christopher, and gaue it him for a present, with the head of the Captain, which they brought also; and among other Gentle-women which were there, the wife of the Captain Moore was very faire, the which Don Christopher tooke for himselfe. And because two of his Captaines did looke too much vpon her, he was jealous of them, and tooke away their charges, they being as they said blamelesse.

The Iewes pursue the *Moore*s.

Sixe hundred Turks sent to aide the Moore.

Don Christopher being in the Mountaine of the Iewes, the Moorish King came to seeke vs with sixe hundred Turks, which the Bassa sent vnto him, and two hundred *Moore*s on horse-backe, and a great number on foot: and comming to the foot of the Hill where we were, he pitched his Campe. From thence he sent a man of his with a Boxe of pedlarie ware to our Campe, to sell Beades and looking glasses, and to tell Don Christopher that his Master was a Merchant, and came behinde, and would not tarrie three dayes, with very good merchandize that hee brought to sell him. This came to light vpon George of Abrewe, and Iames of Silua, that remayneth with vs, and kept the entrie of the Mountaine, which tooke away his Beades, and brought them vnto me, and I blessed them, and gaue them to the women and deuout persons, granting many pardons to them that did pray vpon them, because that their mockage might redound to the praise of God, and the profit of his faithfull. We sent in all haste to call Don Christopher, which was not come from the Mountaines. Meane while, the Turks in despite of our men entred the Mountaine, and did vs much hurt. Presently that night after they were entred came Don Christopher, and sent presently for the other Captaines, to take counsell with them what were best to doe; which told him, that it were best to set vpon the *Moore*s by night: for when the forces are not equall in strength, the weakest haue need to vse some policie; and this is one of the best we can vse with them, for the manner of the Turks is not to fight by night, in so much that come out of their Tents they dare not. And besides, we shall take them on a sudden and vnprepared, and we shall ouerthrow them before they can come to themselves: and for the more amazing them, we will assault them on two sides. This counsell seemed not good to Don Christopher, because mutable Fortune was willing to change her course; and God, to make an end of sensualities, which at such times, men that are Christians, should not remember. Don Christopher said, that he would giue battell to the Enemies by day, because they should not thinke that he was afraid of them, wherein he preuailed, though none liked his counsell.

Beades blecfed.

The vnfortunate battell.

As soone as it was day they went all downe, and before they set any thing in order (because the the misfortune was to haue some beginning) by a mischance, a Horse of ours brake loose, and ranne towards the *Moore*s Campe, they came out to ketch him, and our men went out to defend him, and in this sort the fight began without any order or gouernment. This skirmish lasted a great while; in the which many *Moore*s and Turkes died: and likewise of ours there died some; among whom Don Garcia of Noronia was one. The Ancient-bearer of Don Christopher fought with the Ancient Royall, like a valiant Gentleman, and in his defence slue some of the Enemies, and wounded them so fiercely, that they durst not come neere him, vntill that for wearinesse he could fight no longer; then they slue him. Don Christopher was wounded with a shot in the arme, of the which, although he suffered great paine, he left not therefore the battell till 10 very late, that hee found himselfe almost alone, then hee retyred to the top of the Mountaine with some few that he found about him. Before he retyred, I seeing the spoile of our men, said to the Queene that she should mount, and goe to the Mountaine: and because shee would not leaue some women that had not whereon to ride, I made her mount perforce, and one sister-in-law of hers and so I sent, them before, and I tooke her daughter behind me.

A Nurse of the Queene, a vertuous woman with two daughters, and other women, tooke a barrell of Powder; saying, God forbid, wee should bee deliuered to the power of Infidels, they brought it into the Tent; set it on fire and burned themselues. The like did fiftene or sixtene men which came fore wounded from the battell, and could not trauell. I went away with the Girle that I had behind mee where her mother was, which thought shee had lost her alreadye, 20 and when shee saw her shee gaue great thanks to God. Wee went a little farther into the Mountaine, and there we made another stand, tarrying for more men, and for Don Christopher, for whom the Queene was very sorrie, and wee all were very sad for his not comming, doubting he was dead or captiue. Being in this doubt, we saw him come hurt, as I said before, in an arme, with great paine of the wound; for it seemed he had the Bullet within. The Queene commanded me to cure him with a little Balme that she had, for to mitigate his paine; and shee tooke a Vaile from about her head, and tore it, and bound his arme therewith. But he tooke no rest, for he remembred more the losse and dishonour, then the paine of the wound: and said, that hee had better beene slaine, then to haue lost the Kings Standard; and that seeing it remayned in the power of his Enemies, that hee would not liue. I answered him, that hee should not vex 30 himselfe so much, for with his life and health hee would recouer againe (God willing) that which then hee had lost: for so wee saw it fall out euery day in matters of warre, &c. And as touching the Ancient, in that Countrey they tooke no such regard of it; and that presently they would make such another, hauing men to fight vnder it, and a Captaine to gouerne them: for the men are the true Ancient, and not the signe which they carried.

Lamentable and desperate act.

Wee made him mount, and went from thence, and with all speed wee passed two Riuer so great, that the Foot-men waded to the breasts. Wee trauelled till we came to the Riuer of the Draw-bridge, which they had told vs, which was so deepe, that it could not be passed but by that Bridge. There Don Christopher said to me, that he would not passe the Bridge, but would remaine on this side the Riuer: and called presently his seruants, which tooke him downe, and 40 set him vp a Bed whereon he cast himselfe. He called me, and requested that I would shriue him: hauing ended his confession, he said vnto me, that his will was to remaine there; I said vnto him, that I would not suffer it, and commanded those that were there to take the Bed, and to carrie him in it as he was, and he said that he would kill himselfe if they carried him from thence. When I saw his determination, I said vnto him, that I would remaine with him: he answered me, that I should not doe it; for I was necessarie for to gouerne those men, that they might not altogether be lost, and therewith all that Countrey: but that I should leaue him a little Balme for to dresse him with, and that his Chamberlaine, his Secretarie, and other three Portugals, with which he would goe hide himselfe in a Groue that was there. I could neuer vnderstand to what end he remained.

From thence I went to the Queene, and desired her to mount, and that we should passe on the 50 other side the Bridge; for it drew towards day, and our enemies would come: shee answered, that in no wise shee would doe it, nor passe any farther, seeing Don Christopher remayned there desolate. But I desired her to mount, saying to her, that not onely shee, but her sonne with all his Kingdomes would be lost if we tarried there. And with this the Queene mounted, weeping, and speaking so many dolorous words, as shee could haue vttered for her owne sonne, if he had remayned there. Wee commanded all the men to goe with the carriage, and all the people with the greatest haste possible: and before we had passed we heard a rumour of Men, and noise of Horses, for the which we made great haste to goe ouer, and drew the Bridge after vs. By this time it was alreadye day, and we beginning to goe vp the side of a Hill on the other side,
 60 we saw many *Moore*s about the place where Don Christopher remayned: the Queene, when she saw them, was greatly afraid, and said that wee could not escape. Her men told her that shee should not feare; for shee was alreadye in her owne Countries. Notwithstanding, wee went on with all haste possible for to lose them out of sight: and we trauelled all that day, passing many Mountaines and Riuer with great trouble, and heat of the day. There was by those Riuer great

Or Tamarindos: store of Cassia Fistola, and Indian Dates, whereof our men did eate, for they had no other food. Finally, we came to a Riuer somewhat big, where the people caught some Fish, which they did eate while the Captaine of that Countrey came with victuals, which presently brought great store: And there we began to rest, for we were alreadie in a sure Countrey.

Wee wanted fortie Portugals: To the rest that remayned, which were few more then three hundred, I made my speech thus, and said vnto them; that they saw very well that it was necessarie to giue them a Captaine, that might gouerne them and fight before them, seeing wee knew not what might become of Don Christopher, remayning as hee was willing to bee left. They answered me, that I should doe what I thought best; for they would hold it for very well done, and would obey whom I should command and ordaine. I declared vnto them, that I elected for their chiefe Captaine, one Alfonso Caldera, borne in Coimbra, a discret and valiant Gentleman: the which all receiued with a good will, except some Gentlemen, which because they were of Nobler bloud, thought that charge rather belonging vnto them. These murmured somewhat of that which I did: but did not leaue their obedience. I made also a Sergeant, and a Iudge, to looke to the Souldiers, that they did no wrong to the people of the Countrey; or betweene themselues, one to another.

There came to vs Iohn Gonzales, and Aluaro Deniz, which remayned with Don Christopher, of whom the Queene demanded what was become of Don Christopher: they told vs, how they being hid in the Groue where they remayned, there came a woman fleeing from the Moores, and came into the same Groue, and the Moore comming after her, found Don Christopher: and asked him who he was, and he told them that he was Don Christopher: whereof they were so ioyfull, that they could not beleue it: and they called an Eunuch which had beene ours that came there, and asked him if that was Don Christopher, and if he knew him well: and hee said, it was he without doubt, for he knew him very well. They presented him to their King, which also was very glad to see him. And after demanding some things of him, he said, that if he would become a Moore, that he would doe him much honour. Don Christopher answered him smiling, that he was the seruant of Iesus Christ, whom he would not change for a lying Dog. The King hearing what he said, commanded to giue him a boxe on the eare, and to pull him by the beard. He desired him with great Oathes and promises that he would write to his companions, that they should leaue Presbyter Iohn, and returne to their Countries: and he said, that he would doe it. And presently he wrote a Letter, according to the will of the Moore: the which sent the Eunuch aboue-said, that he should looke well what Don Christopher did write: and he did so, therefore Don Christopher wrote that which the Moore commanded, and no other thing: but set two thornes in his name, by the which he signified, that they should looke what they did. With this Letter of Don Christopher, the Gorania sent two Moores of his to our Campe, and they gaue it to me.

The Queene, when shee saw it, remayned almost dead, thinking that Don Christopher had written that Letter of purpose, and that it would somewhat auaille among the Portugals, by whom, vnder God, she trusted to haue her Kingdomes restored: and shee tooke very strangely that deed of Don Christopher. But after that we declared vnto her the deuise of the thornes that came in his Firme, shee was glad, and tooke it in good part; and euery one praised him very much. Finally, the chiefe Captaine Alfonso Caldera, in his owne name, and in the name of all his companions the Portugals, answered to Don Christopher, that he should giue many thanks to the King Gorania for his good will: but that they would not receiue of him that fauour, neither did they doubt that they should stand in need of it, rather to the contrarie, they hoped with the helpe of Iesus Christ their God, to finish the act; whereunto the King of Portugal all their Lord had sent them thither, which was, to take or kill him, and deliuer from his tyrannie, the Kingdomes of Presbyter Iohn.

This Letter being deliuered to Don Christopher, hee carried it to the Moore, and hee shewed him not therefore the worse countenance, for hee thought that Don Christopher had written faithfully, he asked him also wherewith he had cured himselfe, and he said vnto him, that hee could make a certaine Medicine wherewith the wounds were very quickly cured: and the Moore desired him to cure with it his Captaine generall, which was sore wounded: and he cured him with such Medicines, that the Dogge liued but three dayes. For the which, the Moore commanded to giue him many stripes and blowes, and said, that hee would command to kill him. Don Christopher answered him, that he could doe him no more hurt then to kill the bodie, for the soule God had power ouer it: and that hee was very certaine, that Iesus Christ would receiue his into euerlasting life. The Moore commanded that they should carrie him to the place where the other Portugals died, and that there they should cut off his head. The which head of Don Christopher, that King did send for a Present to the Gouvernour of Cairo: and one of his quarters he sent to Iuda: another to Aden: and one legge to the Bassa of Zebide, which sent him the succour aboue-said. So much doe they esteeme in that Countrey, to ouercome a few Portugals.

All the rest of the bodie of Don Christopher remayned there where they killed him: and from thence thence certaine Religious men carried it to their Monasterie which was neere to that place, and doe hold it in great reuerence with estimation of a Saint: for presently, and many times after, did God shew by manifest Miracles, his labours to bee acceptable and meritorious before Gods Diuine Maiestie, his death precious, and his soule glorified. Presently, as soone as they cut off his head, God shewed a great and manifest Miracle by him: which was, that in the place where they slue him, there sprung vp a Fountaine of running water, which had neuer been seene there, whose water giueth sight to the blind, and cureth sicke persons of other diseases, by the goodness and power of God. This Miracle is much like to that which God did in Rome, for his Apostle Saint Paul. The Reliques of the bodie of Don Christopher doe smell, yeelding so sweet a sent of themselves, that it seemeth rather heavenly then of the earth.

From thence the Moorsish King went toward a Kingdome, called Dembia: whereby the Riuer Nilus passeth, and maketh a Lake, which hath in length thirtie leagues, and five and an halfe in breadth. In this Lake are many Ilands: Asmache of Doaro, called Obitocon, which is to say, Don George, and Asmache of Guidmi, subiects of King * Gradeus, came with one hundred and fiftie Horse-men, and one thousand Foot-men. The Captaine conducted them vnto the Queene, which receiued them louingly, and asked whence they came; and they said, that they came from the Campe of Gorania, and that they departed from him there where they killed Don Christopher, the Moore going towards Dembia. The Queene asked them for the death of Don Christopher: and they told her the manner which wee already knew.

Wee comming to the skirt of the Mountaine of the Iewes, their Captaine came to vs with victuals and refreshings, and said to the Queene, that shee should come vp to the Mountaine: for in no place of that Prouince shee could bee surer then in that Mountaine; which had no more then one entrance, and that might easily be kept, and defended from the Enemies, if they came. This Captaine of the Iewes demanded Baptisme: and as soone as we were on the Mountaine, and had pitched our Campe, I baptised him, his wife, and his children. The Captaine Alfonso Caldera was his God-father: and they named him Don Christopher. From thence Alfonso Caldera went with ninetie Portugals, and some of the Countrey to forage some Townes which in that Countrey stood yet for the Moore: and they killed much people, burned the Townes, and brought great store of Cattell. Two honest old men seeing this, in the name of all the people, came to aske mercie of the Queene, saying, that they were hers, and were Christians, and that perforce they obeyed, and payed their Tributes to the Moore: and likewise for need, because they had none to defend them from the Iewes of the Mountaine, that did euill neighbourhood: therefore that it would please her Maiestie to forgiue them, which shee did.

§. III.
Commings of GRADIVS the young Negus, his reiecting the Patriarch and Pope: their reconciliation and battell with the Moores, in which GORANIA was slaine, and after him the King of Aden.

To this time came Arias Dix, which Don Christopher had sent to visite the King, the sonne of Onadinguall, and of this Queene, called Orta aureata, and the sonne was called Gradeus. This did not yet follow the Campe with his mother, because he was very young. This message brought Arias Dix, that the King would bee with vs within two moneths. The two moneths almost past, wee departed from the Mountaine of the Iewes, where we were, and went to other Mountaines in another Prouince, whither the King came within eight dayes, accompanied with fiftie Horse-men and many on Mules. All the Captaines went to receiue him a little way off the Campe, with all their men, Portugals, and of the Countrey, and accompanied him into the Campe. Entering into the Campe he went presently to my Tent, and there hee alighted to take my blessing. I came to the doore to receiue him, which he esteemed greatly: for in that Countrey they hold the Patriarch in that esteeme that here we doe the Pope. From thence he went to see the Queene his mother, and withdrew himselfe, and mourned three dayes for Don Christopher. He commanded his Tent to be set vp in the midst of the Campe.

Some few dayes being past, before we medled in any other thing, I sent to call the Captaine Alfonso Caldera to my Tent, with the other Captaines and honourable persons of the Portugall Nation in the Armie, and said vnto them.

My most louing children, and most Christian Portugals, I remember well, that a few dayes agoe, being in Debarua, some of your charities moved with a good zeale, did mislike some Rites and Ceremonies, which the people of this Countrey doe use, differing from the Romane customes. not be weeded of all the Weeds and Thornes that grow in it: for if wee seeke to weed them cleane, we shall also pull up the Wheate among the Weeds, as Christ saith in the Gospell. It is enough to doe now the principall, which is the obedience an uniting of the holy Mother Church: this is the Fountaine of all the rest, from hence depend all the other circumstances. This hath her foundation in the Head, which is the King. As soone as the King shall obey, all the rest will follow him.

Comming to the Kings Tent, I found him with his Mother, whereof I was very glad, and said to him these words.

Most louing Son in Iesus Christ: You know, that the most Christian King your Father which in glorie desired mee that I would goe to Rome, for mee and for himselfe to giue the obedience to the chiefe Bishop: and if you doe not remember it for your tender age, see heere a Letter signed by him, which hee gaue mee that the chiefe Bishop should giue me credit, and know that was true which I said to him on his behalfe: which as I say, was to tell him that your Father did acknowledge him to be the Successor of Saint Peeter Prince of the Apostles of Christ, and Vicar of his vniuersall Church, it is also reason you should succeed him in knowledge, in vertues, and in the feare of God. Therefore, you conforming your selfe with the will and Ordinance of God, and imitating the vertue and knowledge of your Father, ought to giue the obedience to the holy Father the Romane Bishop: for therein shall yee doe that which God commandeth, and shall haue for your Friends and Brethren, and helpers in your necessities, the King of Portugall, and all other Kings his Brethren and Friends.

To the which hee not regarding what hee said, like a youth of little age, answered thus. You are not our Father, nor Prelate, but you are Patriarch of the Frankes, and are an Arrian which haue foure Gods: and hence forward we will call you no more Father. I said unto him againe, that hee lyed, for as much as I was no Arrian, neither had foure Gods: but seeing he would not obey the holy Father, that I held him for excommunicate and accursed, and that I would stay no longer nor speake with him, and with this I rose to goe away: and hee answered me, that I was the excommunicate and not hee.

From thence without any more speaking to him, I went to the Portugals, which stood without the Tent, and told them what passed, and how the King would not obey the Romane Church, but that hee was an Hereticke like Nestorius and Dioscorus: therefore, I commanded them in vertue of obedience, and under paine of Excommunication of my part, and in behalfe of the King of Portugall (whose authoritie I had for it) under paine of capitall crime, in no wise they should obey that King, nor follow him, nor doe any thing in his fauour. Alonsus Caldeyra, and all the rest said, that their Fathers and Grand-fathers were neuer Rebels to the Church of Rome, nor to their King, neither would they be: therefore, that I had no need to lay an Excommunication upon them, but that I should suspend it, for they without it would doe all that I should command, as obedient children. And from thence they all accompanied me to my Tent, and they went to their Lodgings.

Within a little while the King sent a Captaine of his, to carrie three thousand ounces of Gold to the Portugals, to diuide among themselves and a rich of aduantage for the Captaine, and desired them not to leaue him, but to helpe him against his Enemies, as they had done thitherto. They answered him, that as for that time they would not receiue the fauour that hee sent them for the difference betweene him and mee, nor to therest, that hee said they could answere no other thing, but that in all things they would doe that which I should command them.

With this answere they tooke counsell, and agreed that the Queene should come with an Arch-bishop, which I had made, and all his Captaines to my Tent, to aske me pardon, I would command, and giue the obedience to the Pope. The Queene came and desired me in honour of the Virginitie of our blessed Ladie Virgin, before, in, and after the Conception, that I would goe with her to the Tent of her Sonne, which was very faire, for that which hee had done, and said to me, that he would aske mee pardon and obey mee in all things. I answered her, that I would not remoue from thence, but the way to Portugall with the Portugals my children, and companions. At this Answere, she kneeled on her knees before me, weeping, and said vnto me, that shee charged me on Gods behalfe, that I should not doe such a thing: but that I should goe with her, for all should be done as I would. I, moued with pitie and compassion, went with her: and comming to the Kings Tent, he came forth to receiue vs, and with great humilitie hee tooke my hand and kissed it, demanding me pardon for that which hee had said to me. And wee three sitting downe, he said, that he was contented to obey the chiefe Bishop: and that the obedience which his Father had giuen by me was sufficient. But I answered him, that it was not sufficient: but that he particularly should giue for himselfe the like obedience, for so was the custome of our Countries, that euery King when he newly reigned did send his Messengers to giue particularly for himselfe the obedience to the Pope wheresoeuer he was: and that seeing he sent not to Rome, as his Father did, that he should giue it to mee in the Popes name, for I had commission from his Holinesse, to receiue it of him. And besides, he should giue a publike Testimonie signed by him, and sealed in his name, and of all his Kingdomes and Prouinces, confessing in it, that the Truth of the Faith is this: that the Church of God is only one, and his Prelate the Vicar of Iesus Christ is also one alone, through all the Earth: by whom the Power and Iurisdiction of Ie-us Christ extendeth to the other Prelates, and Christian Princes. The which Writing, one of the principallest men of his Kingdome standing in a high Place or Chaire, should reade with a high and cleere voice, before all the people that were there with him. He did so, and commanded it to be done with solempne Pompe and sound of Trumpets.

This being done, within a few dayes, the Captaine Alfonso Caldeyra running a Horse, had a fall; of the which within a few dayes he dyed. Alfonso Caldeyra being dead, I tooke counsell with some principall men of the Portugals, and we thought it good, to make Arias Diz chiefe Captaine, because he was a discreet and a good Gentleman: which had discharged himselfe well in some important matters, which had beene committed to his charge. Especially, because the King Gradens desired it of me, I sent to call him, and desired him that he would take that charge vpon him. Hee tooke it, and promised to doe in it to the vttermost of his power.

The truth of Popish faith: or a new Article added to the Creed, to beleue the Papacie. Arias Diz, or Diaz, made Captaine or Generall of Portugals.

The Kings flight. * A proper name of a Ruler.

Within a few dayes the King sent me word, that hee would goe through his Countrey with his men, because we could not be there altogether, wherefore hee desired mee to remaine there with his Mother: and I answered him not, because I vnderstood that he would flye away. The King sent presently after me the * Azaige of Gallan, that with all reuerence and courtesie should say to me, that the King my Sonne did send to request me, that I should send him thither the Captaine Arias Diz with all the Portugals, for so it behooued for the seruice of God: I answered him, I would doe it with a good will. There remayned with mee fixe Captaines of the Countrey, with two hundred Horse, one thousand Targeters, and five hundred Archers, and fiftie Harping Irons, with their Hookes all very cunning in Armes. Euery Horseman carryed three sorts of weapons. With all this people I came to the skirt of the Mountain, where Goranya was, & caused to pitch my Tent very neer to the hill, and neer vnto it, all the Campe with Feasts and showtings, and sounding of Trumpets, as they are wont to do in Camps. The horsemen skirmished, and the Footmen reioyced, and said, We will all dye for the Faith of the Sonne of God. Our men entring into the Mountaine, went presently to a Towne neere from thence: in the which they found no people, but found some prouision, especially, Wine made of Honey in many pots of Earth, of the which two heedlesse men did drinke and dyed suddenly, for the *Moore*s had poysoned and left it, for to kill our men. Our people seeing the two men dead, would not drinke of the Wine, but broke the Vessels and spilt the Wine: and returned from thence.

Poysoned Wine.

With these newes, I sent presently two Horsemen to the King, that hee should come in all haste to possesse himselfe of that Countrey, before the Moore came; for I was alreadie going to hinder the comming of the Moore, and to take the passages whereby he was to come. And I sent to the Captaine Arias Diz, by a Portugall, to tell him that I stood in danger of encountering with the Moore, that he should presently come to me. The King doubted the Iourney, and would not come: but Arias Diz said vnto him, that it neither was nor seemed good, the Portugals to bee slaine in his defence, and for to restore him his Kingdome, and hee to runne away and leaue them. Arias Diz being departed with the Portugals, the King tooke counsell to goe after him: and set forward in such haste that he ouer-tooke them before night. And altogether travelled so much that night, that they came to our Campe before it was day-broke.

As soone as it was day, I left them which came wearie, and with the people that I had before began to ascend the Mountain before the Moore came, because they hauing that Mountaine, was a great part of the Victorie. We went by such narrow wayes, that wee could goe but two and two, and by Rockes and rough places, that had any bodie fallen from thence, had beene crused in a thousand pieces. We came to the top, by Gods assistance, and came to a Monasterie of Friers, which was on the Mountaine, which was of the Inuocation of Saint Paul. The Friers came out to receiue vs in Procession, with the Crosse on high, and censing with Censers, and leade vs to the Church to make our Prayers, and giue Thankes to God for the succour hee had sent them. Prayers being ended, the Captaines pitched their Campe, and rested. When the King knew that we were aboue, hee commanded his people to tarrie behind, and hee came with the Portugals, neere to the Ancient of the King of Portugall, leauing his owne. It might bee an houre before Sun-setting when he came vp, and his men came within night, for all the day was spent in comming vp to the Mountaine. So troublesome it is to ascend.

Monastery.

All the Armie prayed, and did sing Letanies, praying to God that hee would giue vs the victorie, and to our Ladie, and to all the Saints that they would pray to God for vs. The Religious men did the same in their Monasteries, and the people in their Townes. At this time there came innumerable people to ioyne themselves with vs, from the Prouinces and Countries round about. We saw from the top of the Mountaine, the *Moore*s of Goranya his Campe goe skirmishing in the fields that were beyond the Mountaine, and heard them say: Before foure dayes be past, yee shall all be slaine, and your King shall be gelt, and shall be Keeper of the King of Zeila his Wines: and the Patriarch that brought you hither, shall haue a roasted stake thrust through his fundament, that may passe through his necke, and come out at his head. The Generall of the Abexines asked leaue of the King to goe with some people to skirmish with those *Moore*s, and hauing gotten leaue he was shruen, and went downe with foure hundred Horsemen, with the which after hauing killed many Moores, he went so farre from his men that the Enemies compassed him round, and beeing very wearie, and wounded sore, they tooke him, and before they killed him, they cut off his priuie Members, for so doe that people vse, and afterward they killed him.

The death of this Captaine grieved the King so much, that hee wept publikely, and rent his haire: to the pulling off his Crowne, and hurling it on the ground. In the meane season, they came to tell him, that the King of Zeila was come, and pitched his Campe at the foot of the Mountaine, as one that determined to come vp. King Gradenus hearing the great noyse of the Ordnance, which resounded through the Mountaines, tooke so great a feare, that hee determined to flie.

The Bernagaix vnderstanding what the King determined, came in haste to call me at the Monasterie where I was, and shewed mee on the tops of the Mountaine, much people of the Abexines in armes, saying to me, that all those were doubtfull, and if they saw that wee suffered any detriment, or knew that the King did leaue vs, that they all would bee against vs, and would ouerthrow vs. Therefore it behooued me to be present, for to stay the King, and encourage the people: and that might not seeme, that I absented my selfe with distrust. I left presently the Monasterie, and went with him to the Campe: and the people that were on the Mountaines, when they saw me, made a great showt, and said; Seeing the Abuna goeth, the Victorie is ours. Comming where the King was, I saluted, and said vnto him. Hope in the mercy of God, which redeemed vs by his precious blood, that hee will giue vs the Victorie. And staying no longer, I went presently where the Portugals were, to whom I said. Sonnes, commend your selues to the Lord, and doe like your selues. And I commanded them to kneele downe there, and Enery one to say the Lords Prayer five times, and I did the same, in praise of the five principall wounds of our God and Redeemer Iesus Christ, and I granted them all a plenarie Indulgence, gining the blessing of God and mine.

The King and his people, when they saw vs set forward, were amazed at our great and determinate resolution, and stood on a high place, where they discouered all the Campe, for to see what we did. The Moores seeing vs come forwards, resolved to come and meete vs: We going downe the Hill, Goranya the King of Zeila came before his men, mounted on a white Horse, all in a complete Armour, and two Turkes with him on each side one: and comming neere vnto vs, within Caliuier shot, all three stood aside as they came, to giue place for his men to fight. In this space, one Peter of Lyon, which had beene Seruant to Don Christopher, a very low man of stature, but a very good Marke-man, and desirous to reuenge his Masters death, shot at him, and stricke him dead from off his Horse. The same day did others to the other two which came with him, and killed them likewise, shooting at them. The Moores, when they saw their King dead, some turned their faces, and some stayed them, in such sort, that they were troubled, and hindered one another, that they neither fought nor fled: our men seeing their disorder and confusion, set vpon them and slue many.

At this time came in King Gradenus his men, and the Moores and Turkes forlooke the Campe and the field: In the which our men found great Riches, Prouision, and Ordnance, and other weapons and furniture. They found the Turkes which then came by the way, with Wallets full of Bread and sodden Hennes, and others dead with the bit in their mouthes, and found their purses full of Money of their pay, which they a little before had receiued. They tooke here the King of Zeila his Sonne; the Queene fled to the Prouince of Dagna. They entred a good way into the Countrey of Dembia, whence they brought also many Silkes and Bedens, and Fotas of Ormuz, and rich Couerlets. The King Gradenus seeing the great and miraculous victorie which God had giuen him, commanded a Monasterie to bee built very richly, in the place where the battaile was fought, in praise of the secret of our Lord Iesus Christ.

And because it is not well that the base Spirit of an Abexine do passe without noting, which would haue gloried of that which he did not, and enioyed the labour of another; I will tell what he did. A Captaine of King Gradenus, which saw the King of Zeila slaine, went vnto him and cut off his head, and went to present it to his King; saying, That he had killed him, because hee should giue him the reward that therefore hee deserued, which was very great: for that death, was the principall cause of the victorie vnder God, and of the restoring of those Kingdomes. The King was very glad to know who had slaine his enemy, and thanked him heartily, and made him besides Captaine Generall of all his Kingdomes. But the Captaine Arias Diz, which knew the truth, and was present when the Abexine brought the head, and knew besides, that Peter of Lyon had kept the left eare of the Moorish King (which he cut off when he slue him) said to the King: I beseech your Highnesse, command to search the head how many eares it hath: they looked and found but one alone. Arias Diz said, A better Gentleman then that, hath kept the other which wanteth, which killed him, and cut it off, when you all looked from the Mountaine what we did, and that other did counsell you to runne away; and sent presently to call Peter of Lyon, that he should bring the eare of the Moorish King: Hee came and shewed the eare, which appeared well to be the fellow of the other. And moreouer, Peter of Lyon said, That

That the Abexine should shew the weapon wherewith he slue him; and what wounds he gaue him, to the which he answered nothing: Then said Peter of Lyon; Let them goe seeke the dead bodie, and they shall find that he was slaine with a shot, with which the Abexine cannot shoote: they went to see, and found it to be true, whereof the King and all his men were much ashamed, and that his Captaine in great disgrace.

We rested there neere two moneths: while we were there, the King sent the newes of the victorie to his mother, which was a daies iourney from the place where we left her: and he sent her word, that she should come where we were, that we might all reioyce and giue God thanks together, and to congratulate mee, because I gaue order to that which was done, and was the cause of that victorie. The Queene comming within a league where we were, the King knew it, and without telling me any thing, went with his Horsemen to meet her. The way where- by she was to come into the Campe, for the space of a Bow shot, was hanged with Curtaines of Silke, and Testers of the same, and on the ground rich Couerlets. They gaue meate in abundance to all that would haue it; and this lasted one whole weeke. The Queene comming by the way, she came to see me to my Tent, and asked me, What euill was it she had done to mee, that I being her Father, went not to meet her with her Sonne: I answered, That the fault was not mine, but her Sonnes, which would not take me with him, neither told me any thing.

A dissention amongst the Portugals about their Captaine, is here omitted.

The Queenes comming and entertainments

Hauiing past some daies, the King determined to goe and recouer the Prouinces of Maro, Ioia, Guidime and Goiamie, which the King of Zeila had in his power, and gaue order to beginne the Countries reduced.

Warre in the Confinnes of Ioia, which is a great and rich Kingdome; and said, that I and his Mother should remaine, taking our rest in his Countries. The King departed with all the Armie, as well of Portugals as of his owne men, to a Countrey called the Monasterie of Sion: where there are very tall men of stature, which seeme Giants. These as they were yet vnder subiection of the Moors of Zeila, would not obey King Gradens, although they were his, neither would they giue him prouision for his men. Alonsus of France seeing their disloyaltie, said to the Captaine Arias Dix: What doe you Sir? Wherefore do we stay longer on these, but enter them perforce. They sent for the two Fauconets, with the which, and with the small shot they assaulted them, and peppered them in such sort, that they said, the Portugals were no humane men, for they fought not like men. Finally, they chose for their best Market to yeeld themselves, and sent to tell the King, that they deliuered themselves into his power. And they also requested him, he would command the Portugals, not to take from them their Wiues, and their Daughters, nor steale their Goods, for they had heard that they vsed so to doe.

Tall men like Giants.

They yeeld.

Being there, the King of Aden sent word to the King Gradens, That hee should not thinke that the King of Zeila was dead, for he remained in his stead, and because he should not thinke that those were words of a Cow-heard, which threatneth and doth nothing, he would presently come to seeke him.

This was the King of Adelsaine.

Departing from thence, they marched so long, till they came to a very great Riuer, where they marched to meete the enemy, and to passe the Riuer, they inuented a good inuention of Leather Boats, which they made in this sort. They killed many Beeces, and with the skinnies lined the Boats of Wood, in which they passed the men: the Horses did swim ouer, for it was not so deepe to hinder the passage. This being done, men went ouer to fasten some Cords on the other side, for to passe ouer by them: This they did halfe a league distant from the Campe of the enemies, and by night that they might not be seene. Hauiing passed ouer the Riuer, they set vpon the Campe of the enemies, of the which they killed many, and among them the King of Aden. But there dyed also many Christians, and King Gradens was also hurt, and like to haue beene slaine, with the great disorder that hee and his had, because they knew not how to fight by night: for they disperle themselves through the Campe, and could not keepe together, nor helpe themselves, and therefore many of them were slaine. The Moors seeing that their King was slaine, set themselves to flight; The Portugals followed the chase of the Moors, till they slue the most part of them, and brough backe againe the Kings wife of Aden: and the

Leather Boats,

King of Adelsaine.

King gaue them great thankes, and praised God highly, for that so great and assigned victorie; and said, that he would haue of all, no more but the Sword and the Horse of the King of Aden, and that all the rest should bee the Portugals, as well that which they tooke in the pursute, as that which they found in the Campe, which was wonderfully rich, that all the Portugals should diuide it among themselves brother-like, seeing they had got it; and for himselfe and his, he would haue no more, then the peace and restauration of his Kingdomes, which by the vertue and Armes of Portugall he had recouered. But as touching the Queene of Aden, called Dinia Ambara, because it were not decent that she should be captiue of any man lesse then a King, that he thought good if she would become a Christian, that she should bee the Wife of Arias Dix, and that he gaue them for them, both the Kingdomes of Doror and Bale, which had beene hers, and tooke for himselfe onely Oygere.

Daror and Bale giuen Arias Dix.

§. IIII.

*Disgusts betwixt the Negus and the Portugals: ARIAS DIZ his treacherie.
Battell betwixt the Abassines and Portugals. Their exile; ARIAS his death.*

After the King Gradeus had recovered his Kingdomes, and was in peace, I tarried that he should solemnize and approue more the obedience which he had promised to the chiefe Bishop, and the conformitie of faithfull Christians, celebrating the Sacraments, and vsing the Rites and Ceremonies of the Romane Church. But hee as he promised it with an euill will, so he let it be forgotten, and did the contrarie. I sent him word, that the next day I would come and visite him: but he made no account of me, nor of my message, nor of my comming. I sent also to the Captaine Arias Diz, that I was come thither, that he should come to receiue me with his men, as it was fit, and they had for a custome. Hee came the next day in the morning with one hundred and fiftie Portugals: which came to take my blessing, entertaining and making great offers vnto me: and especially Arias Diz. 10

The King comming neere where I was, neither hee nor his did make any motion, but were looking out at their Tents and Standings at vs, as in mockage of vs. Arias Diz came to mee, and said: The euill will, Sir, which the King beareth you is well seene. And with this began to put forth his Horse, and to skirmish. Some other of the companie, when they saw him feast, did euen the same. But Manuel of Accunia, Gasspar of Sofa, and Deniz of Lima, which came neere me, said vnto me: Sir, dissemble with this tawnic Moore; for know yee, that all this which he doth, and sheweth outwardly, is malice and deceit: for his heart is as the Kings heart; and he will not stay long without shewing the signe of it in the Colours of our Lord and King; therefore trust him not, but redouble still vpon him; for all that he doth and sayth, is also feigned and false. The same did Lope of Almanfa, James of Abrew, and other honest men. Whereof I remayned much amazed: for I held him for no such man: but Gentlemen, and good men telling it me, made some impression in me to beleue it. At this time, wee drew neere where the King was, and dismounted, and I went to the Courtains where he was, and I heard him say, speaking to Arias Diz. Marke my Captaine generall, doe not carrie any more in my Kingdomes that Ancient of the King of Portugall: but carrie mine, and leaue that. Arias Diz answered him: I will not leaue the Colours of the King of Portugall. Then the King commanded a Page of his to take them, and carrie them away from thence, and Arias Diz consented, and suffered him to carrie them away. But a Portugall Gentleman, called James of Brito, tooke the Colours from the Pages hand: and because he would not let him goe, strooke him with his sword ouer the head, and made him leaue them perforce. 20

When I saw that, I returned to my lodging, and all the Portugals with me, and the Traitor Arias Diz also. Sending him away with this answer, Arias Diz remayned telling mee by way of counsell. Sir, I know not how well it is to speake hardly, and anger the King Gradeus, for wee are in his Kingdomes, farre from our Countries. At this, many Portugals arose, and said vnto him, that certainly it appeared, that he was a Traitor to the Crowne of Portugall, and his King; for his words and deeds declared it: therefore that hee was not to bee Captaine of the Portugals. 30

Hee answered, that he was Captaine of the Emperour of Ethiopia, and not of the King of Portugall: therefore that they could not call him a Traitor for speaking in fauour of the seruice of the said Emperour, to whom he did owe that and much more, for fauours which he had done to him, and marrying him with Dinia Ambar late wife of King Mahomet, and giuing the title of his Countries. Whereunto I answered, saying: Arias Diz, I haue notice, that you haue forsaken the Faith of the Baptisme, which you receiued among the Christians Catholicke, according to the vse of the Romane Church; and were baptised againe with the Baptisme of the Heretikes and Scismatikes of Alexandria, and haue changed the name of Arias into Marke. When he heard me say thus, without any tarrying he rose vp melancholie, and went to his lodging, with some few Portugals that accompanied him. 40

By this time the King sent me word, that he requested mee that wee would come the next day, because that day it was already late, and there was no time for it. Entering into his Tent, the King did not arise, neither tooke my blessing, as he was wont, neither gaue mee my seat in my accustomed place, but onely bowed his head a little, and let me stand. I seeing his new and vnaccustomed discourtesie, said vnto him. Not onely, King Gradeus, to the King of Portugall art thou vnthankfull; whose Colours thou didst despise, with the which, thou restoredst thy estate: but also to Iesus Christ art thou vnreuerent in my person, which doe represent him, thou also wilt bee cast away, and bee accursed and excommunicate, if thou dost returne to the Heresies of the Iacobites and Dioscorians of Egypt: the which for their sinnes and disobedience which they committed, rebelling against the holy and right Apostolike Sea 50

Sea of Rome were lost, and are Captiues to the Turkes, and Infidels: and so shalt thou bee, if thou wilt not amend. Hee answered me, that they of Egypt, and of the Sect of Dioscorus were not Heretikes, but that we were Heretikes that worshipped foure Gods, as the Arrians: and that if I had not beene his God-father, as I was, he would command me to be quartered. And hauing passed other talke of this qualitie, I returned to my Lodging, where I found many Portugals that tarried for me, to whom I gaue account of what had passed with the King.

Being in the Campe with the Portugals, the King sent me word, that I should not meddle in commanding in the Campe of the Portugals, nor make any alteration in them, for as much as they were deliuered to Marke, his Captaine generall; and that by him hee would they should 10 be gouerned, and by no other. I sent him word, that the Portugals were subiect to the King of Portugall, who had deliuered them vnto mee; and I, at the request of King Gradeus, deliuered them to a Portugall, called Arias Diz. But the Portugals said they would not, neither was it their honour to haue for their Captaine an Heretike and a Traitor; neither would they fight vnder any other Colours but of Portugall: and besides, seeing that King Gradeus did not maintaine that which he had promised, which was the obedience to the chiefe Bishop of Rome, Successor of Saint Peter, that they would not serue him, but would returne with mee to Portugall.

Peter Straw went with this answer to the King; and said moreouer, that if hee would not obey the Church of Rome, and publikely so proclaime, that we all would leaue him, and returne to Portugall, as we said. Whereunto he answered, that he was King, and Lord of that Coun-
20 trey, and that we should not goe out of it, except he were willing; for he would that Marco his Captaine generall should haue the command and iurisdiction ouer the Portugals.

The Portugals determined to die, or defend themselues from the tyrannie of the ingratefull man, and of a Traitor: and they asked me, what meane we should haue for to giue the battell to so great a number of people. When I saw their determination, I said vnto them; Sonnes, doe not dismay, for in the greatest tribulations is God, and so will he be with vs in this. And because our Campe had three entries whereby they might assault vs, wee tooke order to fortifie them with some Munition, because when it were so necessarie, wee would fortifie our selues within, and defend our selues as well as we might. The munition that we laid in those entries 30 as in effect it was done with their great hurt, as presently I will say: but before they assaulted vs, between eleuen and twelue at night, our Hors-men went out, and set vpon the Kings Camp: which sudden feare, and the noise of Trumpets, and Shot, did such effect, that all of them set themselues to flight, and had altogether beene overcome, if the number of our men had beene sufficient to haue followed them: but because they were but few, they retyred themselues presently.

The King in this hurliburly was seeking for a Horse to flee with the rest: but seeing that our men were retyred, quieted himselfe: and when it was day, hee commanded we should bee assaulted. Every one set in a readinesse, both his and ours, his Targettiers came, before which were the most and the best men that they had, and assaulted vs by the three places which gaue 40 entrance where the Powder was, where our men tarried for them; and comming with great furie, and cries, our men fayning weaknesse retyred inward, and gaue them leaue to come where the Powder was: comming vnto it they gaue fire, wherewith many were burnt and slaine, the rest fled away scalded and findged. When the King saw the losse of his people, and the deceit of the hope which he had, he tare his rich garments that he ware, which among them is a signe of great sorrow, and sent presently to call Marke. He came, and hauing taken counsell between both, they agreed that they could not overcome the Portugals by warre, without comming into great danger, and want: therefore, they determined to take them by sleight and deceit, in this manner. They sent to tell vs, that he repented him much of his errour, because God had manifestly shewed him, how much he had erred in not accomplishing that which he had promi-
50 sed and sworne vnto me, but that now he would accomplish it, and doe all that I would: and therefore he desired vs we would doe no more harme to his people: to the which we answered, that the euill we did was not by our wills; but that they had giuen a cause thereunto, whereof it grieved vs very much: therefore if hee did vs reason of himselfe, and did accomplish that which he had promised to God and to vs, that we would doe that which alwaies we had done, which was to serue and loue him as a Father and Lord: but if hee would haue any other thing, that we hoped in Iesu Christ, that he seeing our iustice, would defend vs from his tyrannie, and from the malices of Marke the Traitor. This answer the King imparted to Marke, to the which he replied, that to come the sooner to an agreement with them, hee should vse two poli-
60 cies: one was, to command all his Subiects, that none should serue vs, nor prouide vs of any thing necessarie, vnder paine of hauing his eyes pulled out for a Traitor: the other, to offer and giue vs much money and rewards, not onely promised for hereafter, but presently, for on the one side, the necessitie; and on the other, the couetousnesse would overcome vs.

The King did so, and sent vs presently an assurance with much money for the men, and for mee a great Present of Beeues and Muttons, and other things for prouision, promising mee that all should bee done at my will, and that against Christ-masse next, which was within foure moneths, I should celebrate generall Orders, as before wee had agreed. Besides the assurance of the King. The Bernagaz Isaac, did promise that he would be on our side, and fauour vs by himselfe, and with all his power: and more he said, and sware that he perceiued the King to be very repentant for the wrongs he had done vs. We being about to goe where the King was, Marke came with the Portugals that were on his side, and were with him, to accompanie vs, and so we departed altogether, and going by the way, I desired Marke that there might be no discord betweene him and the Portugals, he promised so to doe. The King shewed so great contentment of our friendship, that he came out to receiue vs out of the Campe, with all the great men of his Court: and all his men both high and low were very ioyfull.

Treacherous dealing.

Within a few houres, there came to me Baltasar Montera, Antonie Ferrera, Simon of Andrade, James of Brito, Antonie Vaz, and said to mee, that the treason which they had inuented for vs was discovered: for they had bidden them make them readie to goe banished euery one to his Countrey, farre distant one from another, charging the Lords of those Countries, to keepe them in good safeguard; all by counsell of the Traitor Marke. I went to the Lords of the Countries which carried them, and desired them to intreate them well, the which said to mee, Father, know you that Marke commanded vs to carrie these men in Irons, and giue them other apparell of Slaues, and vse them like Slaues; but for your sake, which are our Father, we will deale better with them. And I went presently to the King, and said vnto him: Now Sir, what shall I doe? I see you doe not fulfill your word, and you send my Brethren prisoners. The King answered me with a good countenance. Father, there shall no wrong be done to you; but because it is necessarie for vs to prepare to the Warres, which the Gallas make vpon mee, as you know, in the meane while you shall remayne in the Countrey of the Gaffates, praying to God for mee, and you shall eate the Rent of that Countrey, which will suffice well for you and yours, for the last dayes I being retyred there it sufficed mee and all mine: and I will command to doe you much honor, and to obey you as mine owne Person: and against Christ-masse, if it please God, I coming with health, as I hope, you shall celebrate your Orders, as we haue agreed. And as touching these men, which I command to depart from hence, let it not grieue you, for I doe it to haue no mutinie among the rest. In the meane while came Marcos in, and said to the King, I beseech your Highnesse to send to Alexandria for to seeke the Patriarch; he answered him: Blessed be thou of God, Marke my friend. That is done already.

The Patriarch sent to the Countrey of the Gaffates.

The King commanded a Captaine of his to carrie mee to the Countrey of the Gaffates, and should giue me the possession of it, and command the Inhabiters of it that they should acknowledge me for their Lord, and resort to me with the Rents which they accustomed to pay to the King, for so his Highnesse commanded it. I carried with me all my seruants, free and bond; and I carried besides a man of that Countrey, called Franciscus Matthaus, which had beene a seruant of the Ambassadour Matthaus, which Queene Helena sent to Portugall, in the time of the King Don Manuel, your great Grand-father of glorious memorie, and had beene with the same Ambassadour in Portugall. I gaue him the charge of all my house, because he was discreet, and had good knowledge. Taking leaue of the King, I trauelled eight dayes iourney, for it is so much whence the King remayned, to the Countrey of the Gaffates, which lyeth betweene many high and rough Hills, and is inhabited with a very barbarous people. After we had passed the Mountaines, we descended to a great Valley, so deepe, that it seemed we descended into Hell, and the Hills remayned so high that they seemed to reach to Heauen. The Captaine, which carried me, commanded all the principall men of that Countrey to meet, and said before me, that the King commanded that they should take mee for their Lord, and to pay mee his Rents, but that they should keepe me well that I went not away from thence, nor returne to the Kings Court, and they promised so to doe.

A rough countrey and barbarous people.

Arias or Marke the Traitor dyeth.

I was in that Countrey seuen moneths, in the which the King went to make warre vpon the Gallas, as he had said to me, and came from thence wearied, and almost ouer-come without doing any thing to his profit. Within a little while Marke dyed, and hee commanded him to be buried in a Church, where the Kings of that Countrey were buried, with great pompe; he and his shewing so great sorrow for his death, as though he had beene their owne Brother, or Father, and so they said, that in him dyed all their refuge and defence of their Countries. Knowing of the death of Marke, I determined my returne to the Court. And on a day, I commanded to take a Captaine that kept vs, for some fault that I found against him, and commanded to pull him by the haire and to buffet him, and to binde him hand and foot, and commanded my Caliuermen to shoot off their Peeeces neere vnto him, which was so afraid that hee bepist and berayed himselfe, and desired me for Gods sake to loose him, and he promised me to goe so farre from the place where I was, that he would neuer see me, nor I him.

A plot by fearing the people, to escape.

I commanded to loose him, that hee might giue newes to the rest, as in effect he did. And I commanded the shot, which were ten or twelue, to shoot off many shots, which resounded among the Hills that they seemed thunder; and by mischance they killed two men of those with the bullets which they shot at randome. Wherewith we skared them in such manner, that they fled, fled, and vnhabited the Countrey where we were : and the Captaines sent to desire me, that I would goe where I listed, for they promised me not to hinder my iourney. We made such haste on our iourney, that about euening Prayer wee had gone a dayes iourney, and made an end of comming out of the Mountaines. Two dayes before we came where the King was, we found a Portugall, called Franciscus Magellanes, who came from seeing certaine Lands which the King had giuen him : for he gaue Lands to all the Portugals. And after I told him how I came, he told me of the death of Marke, and how for his death the King had made one James of Figueredo Captaine of the Portugals, which within a few dayes died of a laske ; and before his death, hee had made two Captaines together, one for the right hand, another for the left ; for hee had ordained that the Portugals should guard him, and goe alwaies neere vnto him in two Squadrons : of the which he made Captaines, Gaspar of Sofa, and Lope of Almanfa. Which Lope of Almanfa, because he was a stranger, and of those that fauoured the partie of Marke, the Portugals would not that hee should bee their Captaine, and Gaspar of Sofa remayned ; wherewith I was very glad : for this Gaspar of Sofa was my Nephew, and my friend. Wee went all in companie till wee came neere where the King was, and there wee separated our selues. Hee went to tell the newes to the Portugals that were with the King.

The Portugals, as soone as they knew of my comming, came all to see mee with great ioy. The King also sent presently to visit me by his Page, and lent mee word, that hee was very glad with my safe arriuall, for he did greatly misse me. He commanded to giue me apparell, and besides, five hundred ounces of gold ; and I remayned more, because the Portugals desired me then by mine owne good will, because I perceiued that he did separate me from him, by reason of the other Patriarch, which was come from Alexandria, and was euery day to come to the Court, and he doubted that we should meete, and that we would make some tumult.

§. V.

The coming of another Patriarch. The Calide killed. Of the Gallas and other Prouinces, subiect and bordering on the Negus, and rarities there observed. The escape and returne of the Author.

After the King departed, the Asmache Robel came one day to mee, and said vnto mee : Father, I being so much yours, as you know, will discouer vnto you a secret that imports you very much ; but it shall be, you pleighting your faith vnto me neuer to bewray me, for if the King doe know it, he will command to cast me to his Lions. Sir, you are to know, that because you are of the obedience of the Church of Rome, the King will not that you be Patriarch of his Countrey, and sent to Alexandria to seeke another Patriarch of his obedience, the which is come already, and is in Debarua ; on the way toward the Kings Court, therefore the King will not carrie you with him, because hee will possesse the other with your charge ; and besides, because hee is much grieued at you, because you made him sweare to obey Rome, and publicly to proclaime that euery one should obey him. Now see what you will doe, for if you will be gone, I will absent my selfe from hence, that the King may not say, that I was consenting to your going. I thanked him heartily for the warning, and said vnto him, that hee saw, seeing it was so, how much it behoued me to goe to the Court ; therefore that hee should absent himselfe as he said, whilest I departed. Going on my iourney, I found a Portugall, called Manuel Aluarez, Groome of the Chamber of the King your Grand-father ; by whom I sent word to the Captaine Gaspar of Sofa, that I was going to the Court about a matter very important to them all, whereof I would tell him when I saw him ; for he was certaine, that the King would not be pleased with my comming, I requested him, that hee with all the Portugals should aide me when it were needfull.

The next day comming neere the Campe, I found another Portugall, called Laurence Gonsales, which told me that the King knew my comming already, and commanded they should take me, and carrie me to a Rocke where I might end my life, not being able to come out from thence. And because your Highnesse may know, what Rocke it was where he commanded me to be carried ; it is thus, That in the Countrey there be certaine high Hills, ouer-pearing the Countrey with great aduantage, and all about steepe like a broken Rocke, so that in no wise they may be ascended, but by very narrow wayes made of hand ; and on the top are great Plaines, some of a league and more, and some of seuen or eight leagues, with very good Fields, and Fountaines of good waters on the top, and other dispositions for people to liue in them, as in effect there doth. But the wayes are so dangerous, that none can come in or out from those Rocks, without the consent of them that keepe them. These Rocks serue for Fortresses, and therefore in that Countrey there are no walled Cities. To one of these, did King Gradem command mee to be carried by two of his Captaines, to make an end in it, without any hope of comming out. As soone as the Portugals knew that they carried mee prisoner, they came presently to rescue mee from the hands of those that carried me.

Within a little while, the King came also with his men, and pitched his Campe neere vnto vs, and sent word to Gaspar of Sosa, that he had not done well in taking me from his Captaines. And he sent him word againe, that hee knew no error in his action, seeing hee had deliuered his Prelate from the hands of Tyrants, the which for doing good to vnthankfull persons suffered troubles and iniuries. And that his Highnesse knew very well how much hee did owe the Patriarch, and how much fauour God had shewed him for his sake; and how, while he was in the Armie, and they did obey him, God gaue him alwayes the victorie against his enemies; and after we put him from vs, and dealt vncourteously with him, were ouer-come of the Gallas, which entred in his Campe, and came to slaughter his men neere to the Kings Tent, hauing no body to resist them; and his Highnesse saw himselfe in such a danger, that he fled from them with great dishonour. And finally, hee let him vnderstand, that hee and all the other Portugals would not forsake the Patriarch, which was their Father, and had brought them from Portugall, and prayed for them to God. The King seeing the Portugals resolution, he sent to desire mee to see my selfe with him: I said I would, and the Portugals said they would goe with me, and so they did. The King receiued me with so great curtesie that I misliked it. I gaue my hand to the King which asked it of me, and promised him not to goe from the Portugals, nor from his Kingdomes without his licence. Of the which hee was contented; and gaue mee for my maintenance so much Land, that the Rent of it was well worth twentie thousand Cruzados euery yeere, and ordayned that the Patriarch Ioseph, which hee had commanded to come from Alexandria, should bee his Patriarch, and I of the Portugals onely; and commanded that Franciscus Matthaus, which was my Aduge (as here an Archdeacon) and all the other Officers which I had, should serue Ioseph.

The King, to bring the Patriarch Ioseph to peaceable possession in his Countrey, thought it necessarie that I should be absent with all the Portugals, and therefore ordayned to place vs in some part of his Kingdome out of the Prouince, which he most frequented, which is called Amara, where then he was tarrying for the Patriarch Ioseph. And to busie the Portugals in something, he sent them to the Prouince of Doaro, which neighboureth vpon the Gallas his enemies, to lye there in Garrison in the frontier. The Prouince of Doaro is also neighbour to the Kingdome of Zeila. But the Captaine Calide was not contented that they were placed there, because he tooke away his liuing to giue it vnto them. And therefore determined to kill them, or driue them out of the Countrey. This Captaine was a great Lord, and mightie: for besides this Prouince of Doaro, being great and strong, he had also the Prouince of Bale, and the Captaine of Hadia for his neighbour and friend. From which Countries hee ioyned seuen hundred Horsemen, sixe hundred Archers, and sixe thousand Targetiers. He leuied these men so secretly, that almost hee came one morning before day to set vpon vs. But howsoeuer, wee alwayes kept a watch, and his men feared vs, and doubted the setting vpon vs, they were perceiued of our men, and could not giue the assault that they would. And because the Calide was knowne by the deuice he wore, our men ordayned that seuen Caliuier-men should haue an eye at him particularly, and shoot at him; for he being dead, his men were quickly ouer-come. So they did: and as he came in the fore-front, knowne among the rest, before the battell began he was slaine.

With his death some of his men made signes of peace, these were of those Lands which the King had giuen vs: which sent vs word that they were our subiects, and would obey vs, and pay vs our Rents as the King commanded, for that Rebellion was not moued by their will. The rest stood still without doing any thing, till we set vpon them, and made them flye, and we slue some of them. With the which newes the King was very glad, for he alwaies was doubtful of the Calide, for he was the neereft Heire to the Kingdome by his Mothers side. I say by his Mothers side, for by the Father he could not be according to the custome of that Countrey. The custome is, that all the male children of the Kings, except the Heires, as soone as they be brought vp, they send them presently to a very great Rocke, which stands in the Prouince of Amara, and there they passe all their life, and neuer come out from thence, except the King which reigneth departeth this life without Heires, for then they bring from the Rocke him that is neereft, to come and raigne. The which neither bringeth Wife nor Children from thence, if he hath any there, but they remayne vpon the Rocke, and hee marrieth in the Kingdome with another Wife.

By the death of the Calide of Doaro, wee rested foure monethes quiet, at the end of the which the King sent vs word, that we should stand vpon our guard, for he had intelligence, that the Gallas determined to come vpon vs on a sudden, for they desired to ouercome vs by whatsoever meanes they could: because they had not, nor all the Enemies of Presbyter Iohn any other grieffe or annoy, but that which we did vnto them. These Gallas inhabit in the Countries bordering to Magadoxo: they are a fierce Nation, they make warre with their Neighbours, and with all people; no more then onely to destroy them, and disinhabit the Countries: in the Countries where they ouercome, they kill all the men, they geld the young men, the old women they kill, the young they keepe for their vse and seruice. It seemeth, that from hence came the Suimbas, which came destroying all Guinea, for in their crueltie they are like. Hearing the warning which the King sent vs, we beganne to prepare our selues with things necessarie for the Warre, especially of Powder, for with fire principally did we our parts, and supplied the forces which we wanted. We had great store of prouision to prouide our selues with Powder, for in the Countrey there is great store of Salt-peeter, Brimstone, and many Others to make Coales, wherewith we made it very fine, we commanded also to rid the Countrey of the women, and youngmen, and all the people that could not fight: and the rich Inhabiters fled also with these great and small, with feare of the crueltie of the Gallas.

One day they appeared. They were many without number, and they came not disordered like barbarous people: but close in troupes like Squadrons, and assoone as they had sight of vs, they stayed tarrying for the rest, and from thence they came all in one bodie to pitch neere vnto vs, in a distance where our shot could doe them no hurt. We because they were many, and wee few, went not out to receiue them: but remayned in our Campe. We were at the most an hundred and fiftie (for the rest were already dead, almost all in the Warres, and some of sicknesses; which were not so many, as it seemed they might haue beene for our men, that Countrey being hot and situated vnder the Sunne) and so returned to India with Manuel of Accunia, assoone as the King of Zeila was slaine, for they thought that by his death all the contention was ended. Our Campe stood on a Hill, where we mastered the other grounds, and subdued those that did assault vs. There we defended our selues ten or twelue dayes tarrying for the King. In which time wee slue many of their men with shot and fire-workes: for they came neere vs without any feare, that we mist no assault of theirs, nor any stroke of ours that wee did not bestow it well.

By this time our Powder failed vs, and the King came not; wherefore we were faine to leaue the place and goe to seeke him. The Gallas did not follow vs, for peradventure, they desired also to goe from vs, and I doubt not, but that if we had had more forces, that wee had made them retyre in despite of them. By this time the King came, and hearing that the Gallas remayned Lords of the Countrey, he fell in a swoond, without any sence for a great space. And afterward wept like a child, and said. Great is my sinne, seeing it hath done me thus much hurt. Wonder how I lose not my wits, thinking on the great losse that I receiue. As in effect hee lost three great Kingdome: two of them, Bale and Doaro, as bigge as Castile and Portugall, and Hadia, alone as bigge as all France. This Kingdome of Hadia reacheth to the borders of Melinde. And in this Countrey is great store of Myrrhe, Incense, and Gumme Aunime. Some Portugals answered him. Let not your Highnesse grieue, for God can remedie it all, and will remedie it, if you will reconcile your selfe with the Patriarch Don Iohn Bermudez, which is the true Patriarch, and not regard the other Schismaticke. Whereunto he gaue no Answer, but set on forward, and said vnto me that we should follow him. And because he held at that time the warre with the Gallas to be vnfortunate; Hee determined to goe and see some Kingdomes of his Empire, which yet he had not seene, and at his returne to set vpon the Gallas, if yet they were not retyred to their Countries: for they came but to spoile and destroy, and so returne.

We trauelled toward the South-west from Doaro seuen or eight iournies, and came to a Kingdome of Christians, called Oggy, in the which reigned a good man named Frier Michael, Brother-in-law to King Gradens, and his Tributarie. Who made vs very welcome, and good entertainment to the people. This Kingdome hath five thousand Horsemen, of the which sixe hundred are great Horse and harnessed, and the rest are light Horsemen, and they ride on the bare Horse. It maketh also ten thousand Footmen: the which fight with Darts which they throw, and the Horsemen with long Speares like ours. The armings for their Horses are of Elkes skins quilted within, and garnished very richly on the out-side. He carryeth in his Armie sixe hundred Hand-mills, which women doe grind with. This Kingdome hath a Prouince of Gentiles, called Gorague, which bordereth with Quiloa, and Mangalo. These Gentiles of Gorague are great Witchers, and doe diuine in the Inwards, Guts, and Entrails of the Beasts that they sacrifice. They by their Witch-crafts make to appeare that the fire doth not burne in this manner. They kill an Oxe with certaine Ceremonies, and anoynted with the Tallow of that Oxe they command to make a great fire, and cause to seeme that they goe into it, and that they sit downe in a chaire, and so sitting at leisure in that fire they diuine, and answer to what is demanded of them without burning.

The Goragues doe pay to their King euery yeare for Tribute, two Lions of Gold, and three Whelpes of Gold and one Ounce of Gold, and certaine Hennes with their Chickens also of Gold: which all wayeth as much as eight men can carrie: and this Gold is fine and good. They pay him also sixe Buffes laden with base Silver. They also pay one thousand Bees alie; and many Lions, Ounces, and Elkes skinned. In this Countrey is great store of Ciuet, * Sandalos, * Or Dates, * Blacke Wood and Amber. The men of this Prouince say, that there come to traffique in it * Or Eben wood. White men: but they know not of what Nation, if Portugals, or Turkes, or any other Nation.

Westward from the Kingdome of Oggy lyeth the Kingdome of the Gaffates Tributaries also. The Gaffates are Gentiles, and vulgarly it is said that they were Jewes. They are a barbarous and euill euil people, rebellious & quarrellsom. There be many of them in other Prouinces of the Empire, but in euery place they are held for Strangers, & different from other people, and abhorred of them, as the Iewes are here. In this Kingdome they are Lords, and haue no other Nation among them, but some Christians which separated themselues from the Abexines, at the time they denyed the obedience to the Apostolike Sea: which Christians euen now doe say and protest to bee in the obedience of the same Sea. The Gassates doe possesse in these parts a great and rich Country, of much Gold, and of some good Commodities, especially of fine Cotton Clothes. Within the Countrey they haue spacious and plenteous fields. They say that in this Countrey there is an inuisible Wood, and it maketh men inuisible. The King when hee came to this Countrey, commanded to make warre vpon the people of the Countrey, and to enter with force of Armes into their Towne, because they had rebelled since the death of his Father, and would not pay him his Tributes, nor reknowledge him for their Superiour. The Gassates came at this, and a morning before day assaulted the Campe of the Abexines, and slue many of them. The Portugals were neere the Kings Tent, for they were his Guard: when they heard the cry and stirre, they came being alreadie almost day, and draue the Gassates out of the Campe killing many of them: and followed after them.

The Portugals here in their Townes found great riches, wherewith they returned ioyfull and rich. They found Bezutos, which are like fine Quilts: and they found Cotton-cloathes very fine like Lawnes: and they found Cypresses so fine, that a piece of thirtie or fortie yards would be containd within ones hands. They found also store of Gold in Pots, and Pans, and buried vnder their hearthes in the houses where they make their fire: for there they vse to keepe it hidden as most secret, and they themselues discovered it to our men, because they should not kill them. The King would make no long tarrying there, for his pretence was not to do them much hurt, but onely to threaten them: and because Winter came on wee left that barbarous people quickly, and went the way to Damute, which lyeth almost to the West from these Gassates.

On the West side bordereth presently with the Gassates, whereof I spake before, the Kingdome of Damute, which standeth vpon the Riuer of Nilus: that Riuer maketh there many turnings and very great. The entrance to this Kingdome is difficult, in respect of the rough and high Rockes that are by the Riuer of Nilus: in the which besides their beeing rough, there are also made in them at hand certaine passages, in the Rockes broken with the Pick-axe, and shut with gates and kept with men at Armes, in sort that with a little force they resist and defend the entry from their enemies, if against their will they will come in. These Gates, when the Emperour commeth thither, are broken and open freely to all that will passe through them. Damute is a great Kingdome, and hath many subiect Prouinces. The principall is of Christians, but some are of Gentiles. In all of them is found great store of Gold and Crystall stone. The Countries are very plenteous and fruitfull, especially those which are neere the Riuer Nilus, the which haue more Mountaines and Riuers then the others. They breed many wild and tame beasts, and strange Wormes and Serpents very venomous. They breed Oxen, Horses, Buffes, Mules, Asses, Sheepe and other Cattell: the Oxen are greater then ours, so much that some of them are almost as bigge as Elephants. They haue great hornes, that some of them doe hold a Tanker of Wine, and do serue to carrie in, and to keepe Wine and Water, and as the Tankers Barrells here. I was bold to speake this, because Don Roderick of Lima, brought one of these hornes of this bignesse to this Kingdome, in the time of the King your Grand-father, when the Embassadour Tagazano, and the Father Franciscus Alvarez came with him. There is found in these Countries a kind of Vnicorne, which is wild and fierce, fashioned like a Horse, and of the bignesse of an Asse. There be in them Elephants, Lions, Ounces, and other beasts, vnknowne here with vs.

There is neere to Damute, a Prouince of women without men: which doe liue after the manner of the ancient Amazones of Scythia, which in certaine time of the yeere permitted the companie of some men that were their Neighbours, and of the children which they bare, they sent the men-children to their Fathers, and the women they kept with themselues, and brought them vp in their customes and stile. In the same manner doe these of Ethiopia, and they burne also their left paps, as those did for to shoot more readily with their Bow, which they vse in their Warres, and in Hunting. The Queene of these Women knoweth no man, and for that act is worshipped among them for a Goddesse. They are permitted and preserued, because they say, that they were instituted by the Queene of Saba, which went to see King Salomon. In this Prouince of the Women there be Griffons, which are Fowles so bigge that they kill the Buffer, and carrie them in their clawes as an Eagle carryeth a Rabbet. They say, that here in certaine Mountaines very rough, and desert, there breedeth and liueth the Bird * Phenix, which is one alone in Which I speake not to disgrace the whole storie (which is vsfull) but to make the Reader warie where things are told vpon report, or are aduanragious to Rome or Portugall. Much of this Chapter seemeth to mee Apocrypha, but I leaue libertie of Faith to the most licentious Credulitie, which shall thinke fitter to beleue then to goe and see. And yet may Africa haue a Prerogatiue in Rarities, and some seeming Incredibilities be true.

the World, and it is one of the wonders of nature. So doe the Inhabitants of those Countries affirme, that this Bird is there, and they do see it and know it, and that it is a great and faire Bird. There be other Fowles so bigge, that they make a shadow like a Cloud.

Vpward by Nilus towards the South there bordereth with Damute, a great Prouince, called Conche. This is subiect to Damute, and Gentiles doe inhabit it: the Prince of it is called by the name of his Title, Axgagce, that is to say, Lord of the Riches, as in effect it is so. The Axgagce maketh when he needeth ten thousand Horsemen, and more then twentie thousand Footmen. He carryeth in his Armie one thousand Hand-mills vsed by Women, which doe grind with them the flowre necessary for the people. At the time that wee came to Damute, this 10 Prince was in Armes with the King of Damute: wherefore, the King Gradeus said to me, that as a Prelate and Mediator of Peace, I should send him word, how his Maiestie was very angrie against him, by reason of his Rebellion and Disobedience, and that hee determined to destroy him by means of the inuincible and more then humane force of the Portugals, which he brought with him for that purpose. I did euen so, and sent him word, that he should obey his Emperour, and bring him his Tributes, and see him, for I did assure him that his Maiestie would vse clemencie with him. So he did, and came presently with a great summe of Gold, and great quantitie of Bees, and other prouision in abundance for all the Armie: and many Slaues, Mules and Asles, for the necessary seruice.

20 The Axgagce prouided the Emperours Campe with all things in abundance, without wanting any thing. And at the last he himselfe came, accompanied with many and proper men on Foot and Horse: and he was verie richly attyred. Assoone as hee came to the place where hee might be seene from the Emperours Tent, hee dismounted from his Horse, and put off the rich clothes he had on, and remayning in others of lesse value, he came to the Tent, and tarried till they commanded him to come in. After that he entred into the first receit of the Tent (for it was diuided with certaine Curtaines) and there he cast himselfe on the ground vntill the Emperour commanded him to arise, and receiued him with good words, and commanded him to apparel himselfe, and commanded to giue him some meate, and there hee spake with him behind the Curtaines, without admitting him to his pesence, till after foure dayes he commanded him to come in where he was.

30 For this honor and courtesie that Gradeus shewed to Axgagce, he said vnto him, my Lord, I will doe you one seruice, that neither I nor my Fore-fathers euer did to your Father, nor to the other Emperours your Predecessors, which is to shew you the riches and secrets of my Countries: for with this condition we doe obey you, that you shall not see them but with our will. Finally, he led vs through his Countries to a great Riuer of sixtie fathome breadth, or more, in whose borders there be many venomous Snakes, so much, that their biting is mortall: but by the goodness of God, Nature hath prouided a remedie against that hurt: and it is an Herbe, that groweth in some places of that Countrey, which is so contrary to the Snakes I spake of, that they flye from it as from an Enemy, and came not neere him that hath it about him, neither hath their Poyson any strength where it is, either stamped and laid in a Playster, or the iuyce of it.

Fat and venomous Snakes.

Strange herbe.

40 We saw one of these Snakes that made an end of eating a Buffe that it had killed, and the King commanded to kill it, which had leaues of grease like a great and fat Hogge, which was good for the cold, and other diseases. There be others also, which they call, Of the shadow, because it hath a skinned on the head, wherewith it couereth a very precious stone, which they say it hath in her head. On the other side this Riuer is a barren ground and vnhabited, the kind of it is browne, red and dry, as that which wee see in some parts of Ribateio. This Earth hath two parts of Gold, and one of Earth, for so it yeeldeth in the melting whereof there be as many workemen in that Countrey, as here there are Smiths, and more, for in that Countrey there is more Gold, then here we haue Iron. The Lords doe not permit that any Bridge or Boate bee in the Riuer, that there may no easie passage bee had, and because euery one that listeth may not

50 goe ouer to gather the Gold. The meanes to passe that Riuer is this. They haue Buffes accustomed to passe ouer, and when they will goe ouer to the other side they put them in before, and they goe swimming fast by their tailes, and they fill certaine Bellows which they carrie with that same Earth, and tie them about their neckes, and come againe fast by their tailes as they went. In this manner the passage is not common to all. And those that doe passe are bound to try the Gold they bring, in the melting houses of the Axgagce, for they all are his, for to pay him his duties.

Incredible quantitie of Gold.

60 The King Gradeus to certifie himselfe better of the truth, commanded some of his men to go to the other side, which went ouer, and brought of the earth, which the others brought, the which being tried yeelded as much as the other, and the men of Gradeus said, that all the ground of that Prouince was of that qualitie, for they went a great way in it, and found it all to be so, and they said that the ground is so hot, that they could not lay them downe to sleepe vpon it, but that they sought Caues and Slates on which they lay, and also that there were in the Countrey certaine red and great Ants that did bite them, and were so many, that they did not let them sleepe. We thinking that we had reason to wonder at the great quantitie of Gold which we saw, the Axgagce of the Countrey said to King Gradeus, that hee should not wonder, for he would shew him yet more: and lead vs downe the Riuer towards the South-west, traueilling very easily two dayes, at the end of the which hee shewed vs on the other side the Riuer a Mountaine that in places glistered like the Sunne: and said vnto vs that all that was Gold.

With these and other entertainments that hee did vnto vs, King Gradeus was so contented, that he determined to make him a Christian: and he desired him he would be one, and that hee would be euer his very great friend. He answered, that with a good will he would be one. The King commanded presently to prepare his Baptisme, and a Bishop Prelate of the Monasterie, called Debra Libanus Christned him, which is the head of the Monasteries of Amara, and King Gradeus was his God-father; and they named him Andrew. There Andrew told King Gradeus, how he had in those parts certaine neighbours which did euill neighbour-hood to him, and did ouer-runne his Countries, robbing and killing his Subiects: and requesting him, that seeing God had brought him thither with that Noble people of Portugall, whose fame did feare the people of that Countrey, that he would reuenge him of his enemies which did him great annoy, and they would be warned not to offend his subiects any more. The King granted his request, and commanded his men and the Portugals to enter into the Countrey of the enemies, and ouer-runne it, warring against it with fire and sword, robbing and destroying their goods, taking the people captiue, and killing those which resisted. This they did for a great space of the Countrey, in the which they found great spoyle of rich Iewels, and much Gold which they brought. This being done, King Gradeus returned to Damute, where we heard the men of the Countrey say, that there were things to bee seene of great admiration; so much, that being told to them that saw them not, they seeme Fables, therefore they are not all to be put in writing. But beleue your Highnesse, that with reason is Africa called the Mother of Monsters; for so it is without doubt, especially in the Countrey within, neere to the Riuer of Nilus, where there are Mountaines, Riuers, and desert places, with great disposition of the Countrey and fauour of the ayre, and of the heauens to bring forth and produce what it listeth.

Returning from Damute by the Riuer Nilus, downeward toward the Red Sea, wee came to the Kingdome of Goiame, which bordereth presently vpon Damute. Goiame is also a great Kingdome, plentifull, and fruitfull, and rich. It is inhabited with Christians, subiect to Presbyter Iohn: It hath Gold, but not so much as Damute. In this Kingdome of Goiame there be certaine Riuers, in the which, vnder the Sand are found certaine spongie stones like our Pumice-stone, but that they are heauy and yellow; the which being tryed, are conuerted in Gold, the the most part of them, sauing some little drosse. In this Kingdome of Goiame is the Catadupa of Nilus, whereof Tully maketh mention in the dreame of Scipio, and I will declare to your Highnesse what it is, for it is a great thing, and worthy to be knowne, and it is not all a dreame, as in effect some things that some large tongued men doe speake of this, and of other things which they neuer saw, are but dreames.

This Catadupa is a great fall of the Riuer Nilus, from a high Rocke downe. The Rocke is almost halfe a league high, steepe downe, without any flant or hillocke, from thence falleth the Riuer Nilus, altogether in a deepe Lake, and close betweene great and high hills. The quantitie of water is great, for it commeth gathering from more then three hundred leagues to that fall, and it maketh so great a noyse, that it seemeth a great Thunder, and amazeth them that are not accustomed to it: it soundeth so, that three or foure Bow-shot round about, it stunneth the eares, in such sort, that in all that space there is no other noyse heard, be it neuer so big, but that: neither can the ayre receiue any other but that, which filleth all, so doth that sound drown all others, as the greater light doth darken the other smaller. That place is called in the Countrey language, Catadhi, which is to say, a noyse, or a great sound, whence it seemeth that Latines did make the name Catadupa. Westward from these two Kingdome, Damute and Goiame, towards Guinea, are barten grounds, and euill inhabited; and in them inhabite the Gassates, and other Gentiles very sauage. These are not well knowne, neither haue they dealings with the people of that Empire, to the which they neither giue their oath, nor owe any subiection, for almost all of it lyeth to the East of Nilus. There is Gold in those Westerne Countries towards Guinea, but that they say, that the Gold of the Land within hath sparkes of Sand, as some that commeth from the Antillas.

By the streame of Nilus below Goiame, neere neighbouring is another Kingdome of Abexines ancient Christians, great and good, called Dembia. In this Nilus maketh a great Lake, which hath in length thirtie leagues, and twentie in breadth, wherein are many small Ilands, all inhabited with Monasteries of religious men, of whom I made mention before. And this is not the spring whence Nilus proceedeth, for it commeth from farre aboue.

A little below there lyeth another Kingdome, called Agaoa, inhabited with Moores and Gentiles mingled together. This hath a King by it selfe, which neither obeyeth the Presbyter Iohn, nor the Turke. It extendeth to the Borders of Egypt: vnto Dembia the Riuer Nilus runneth, from the South-west to the North-east, and commeth within thirtie or fortie leagues of the Red Sea, almost opposite to Suaquen: and from thence windeth to the North-west, till he commeth commeth into the Mediterranean Sea. In this Nooke determined the King Onadinguell to make a Trench, and turne the Riuer Nilus to the Red Sea, as his Predecessour Ale Belale began to do, and therefore sent to demand Pioners of the King your Grand-father.

Trench intended from Nilus to the Red Sea. Subia Nubia.

To the West from Dembia lyeth a Prouince, called Subia Nubia (which now is of the Moors; and they say, that sometime it was of Christians, and it seemeth to bee so, for in it are some Churches found, yet old and ruinated) and presently ioyning with Subia Nubia. More to the West lyeth a Kingdome of Moors, called Amar, and it is very great, where through the Merchants of Cayro doe passe that go to Ialofa, and to Mandigna, and other parts of Guinea to seeke Gold: and from Amar they carrie Salt, which groweth there in Mines, which is very deere in Guinea, for the great scarcitie there is of it. Before we doe depart from the Riuer Nilus, in those Countries whereby the Riuer Nilus runneth, in Iuly, August and September, is the force of Winter, and therefore doth that Riuer increase then, and not at other times, and bringeth great store of water, for it commeth very farre about Damute, more then two hundred leagues, and to his entring into Egypt eight hundred, with turnings and windings which it maketh, and passeth by great Hills, where it gathereth great store of water from many Riuers of great waters. All men doe not know the inward parts of Africa, especially about Nilus, the which, neither the Inhabitants of it doe know, nor haue any notice of it all, for it is very great and difficult to search out; and therefore I digressed a little from my Historie, to giue an accompt briefly to your Highnesse of these things I saw, because peradventure there is not another in this Countrey that knoweth them by sight but I, that dwelt in it thirtie yeares or more. And moreouer, if it had not bene that iourney that I went with the King Gradeus, although I had bene there as much more, I had knowne no part of the Countries which about I haue rehearsed. Now I will returne to giue an account of my selfe, and of my Companions.

King Gradeus, after he had spent in his visitation tenne or twelue moneths, determined to returne toward the Prouinces of Simem and Amara, where the Kings and Emperours of that Countrey do make their abode and continuance, because the Countrey is better then the other, and more secure, and because they are borne and naturall from thence. In Amara and Uedremudro are Mines of Copper, Tinne and Lead. Heere are certaine Churches cut out of the hard Rocks, which they say the Angels did make. And indeede, the worke seemeth more then humane. The Traffique of these Prouinces to Damute, where the Abexines chiefly doe prouide themselves of Gold, is for the most part by Iron, whereof there is great store in them, especially in the Prouince of Tigremacan, which is also a neighbour with these: which Iron is so much worth in Damute, that they giue for it Gold by weight, quantitie for quantitie. I touched this matter here, because I thinke, that the Kingdome of Damute, and the Prouince of Couche doe confine with Sofalla, and if from Sofalla they haue the Iron that they haue need of, they will giue their Gold also for it. These Prouinces lye to the East from Goiame and Dembia; and the Prouince of Bethmariam remaineth to the South-east, where the King satisfied vs our Rents, which by the comming of the Gallas we had lost in Doaro.

Simem and Amara.

Of these see Aluarez.

The Prouince of Bethmariam is great, and well inhabited, and of great Rent, all the which the King released to vs the Portugals, and the Lands diuided among vs according to the qualities of the persons. He that receiued least for Rent to his part, had more then one thousand crownes a yeare; the Captaine had more then tenne thousand, and I had as much. The King gaue vs this Prouince, because it was a Frontier to the Kingdome of the Gafates that were risen, because that from hence the Portugals might make in-roads in their Countries, and punish them, and bring them to obedience. Finally, our iourney being ended, and the King seated in the Prouince of Simem, the Portugals did aske him leaue to goe and see the Lands which he had giuen them in the Prouince of Bethmariam. And I demanded also licence to goe to my Countrey of Portugall, as I meant, and he gaue it mee, vnderstanding that of Bethmariam. I asked him this cloaked licence, because I would not breake the oath that I had made vnto him, and because I knew that if I had asked it plainly, he would not haue giuen it me, but rather would haue hindered my comming, or taken away my life, as he desired many daies before.

Bethmariam.

Riches of the Portugals.

I was in the Prouince of Bethmariam as long as Winter lasted, which beganne to come on when we retyred our selues; and for to win their fauours and loue of my subiects, I cherished them all that I could, and did ease the rents that they were bound to pay me, to make them beneuolent and affected, that they should not bewray me when I would go away: for the King had commanded them all, that they should looke to me that I went not out of the Countrey. The same had the King also commended to Gaspar of Sofa, Captaine of the Portugals, the which for that respect sent many times to visite me: and I for to assure him, made my selfe sicke of the Gout in one of my Legges, I tooke my bed, saying; That I could not go on foote. In the meane season, Gaspar of Sofa went to the Court, and I had opportunitie to doe what I desired. And also, because I would haue no hindrance of them of the Countrey, I sent to call some of the principallest of them, and said vnto them, that I was very sicke as they saw, and would goe in Pilgrimage to the Monasterie, called Debra Libanus, to commend my selfe to God, and to request the religious men there, to pray to God for me; therefore, that I desired them they would resort with my Rents to a Seruant of mine, with whom I left the charge of my house and people.

And because the way to Debarua, directly was by the Countries where the King was, I determined to goe by another Countrey distant from thence, and vnhabited, and therefore I commanded to carrie prouision sufficient for my selfe, and seuen or eight persons which I carried with me, whom I most trusted, which I commanded to say by the way, that I went verie sick, and that I went to cure my selfe to Debarua, where the Countrey and Ayres are more healthfull. By this way I crossed a Nooke of Nilus, where I passed it twice, with great trouble, because the Coasts of the Riuer were very craggy, and with great danger of not letting me passe through certaine gates that are in them, guarded with armed men. Here I commanded my men that they should say, that a Seruant of the King came behind which was knowne, that carried me to Debarua to be cured: and with this deceit they let vs passe. At last, with the helpe of God, by the intercession of our Ladie, to whom I commended my selfe, I came safe to Debarua, where certaine Portugals receiued me which were there, with great ioy and entertainment: the Bernagaez of that Countrey, as soone as he knew that I was there, came to see me, and asked me, saying; What good comming is this, Father, to this Countrey? I answered, that I went very sicke, and that I went to be cured. He said againe, that he thought I would passe to the Countries of Franquia, which are neere the Sea; therefore that hee desired me that I would not doe so, but that I should rest a few daies, and returne vnto the King: I answered, that in no wise would I returne to the King, for he knew very well, and all men did know, how great reason I had to flye from him: but my intention was to dwell in that Countrey, in an hermitage of our Ladie that was there, and end my life there. Seeing that is your will, said he, I will write to the King, and request him, that he will let you be here, and that I take you to my charge, for to giue account of you, that you shall not goe away from hence, and I will send him word that you are very sicke, therefore trouble not your selfe, for all shall bee done at your will. And said moreouer, Father, That which I aske you for Gods sake, is, that you will suspend the excommunications, and cease from the curses which you lay vpon the King, and vpon all this Countrey, because some euill may not come to vs; and besides, that you incense not the King against you. He sent an honest man of his house to the King, which returned in few daies with the answer: And it was, that the King was much mooued against me, especially, because I said that he was an Hereticke and excommunicate. And the King said, That if it were not for the Portugals sake, that he had commanded me to be slaine. And yet said more, that I was a Traytor and forsworne, because I had broken my Faith and my Oath that I had sworne to him, not to goe out of his Countries without his licence. To which I answered, that he had giuen me the same licence, as it is said in the former Chapter. Finally, hee commanded that I should abide in Debarua, and not to go from thence without his speciall commandement; and to the Bernagaez, that he should haue a speciall care of me.

I was in Debarua more then two yeeres, commending my selfe to God, and said Masse the most daies in a Church of our Ladie that was there, where about nine or tenne Portugals that were there accompanied me, which came flying thither with others, from the vnfortunate battaile in which the Goranya ouercame vs, and tooke Dan Christopher. About this time, there came a Venetian, called Micer Suncar, which came from Gran Cayrus with a message from certaine Venetian Merchants which were there, and had taken in charge fortie odde Portugals, which were taken captiues in the parts of Ormuz, and the Turkes demanded thirtie thousand crownes: and Micer Suncar came to know of Presbyter Iohn if hee would ransom them, who ransomed them, giuing the said price, and other two or three thousand crownes for their expenses. There came also to mee a religious man of the company of Iesus, called Master Gonzaluo with his companion, which came from India to enquire after me, and the other Portugals, and of the estate of that people of Presbyter Iohn, which after I informed him how it was, went to the Kings Court, and did informe himselfe in that Countrey what I had done and suffered, to reforme that people to the obedience of the Church of Rome, and gaue a publike testimony and relation in the Cathedrall Church of Goa.

Being in Debarua, tarrying for passage to India, there arriued to the Port of Maçua, Antonie Peixoto a Portugall, with two Foyfts, whereof he was Captaine: Master Gonzaluo and I determined to goe and visite him, and goe with him for India, and that I might doe this without hinderance of the Abexines, I had a good excuse in this manner. The Church of our Ladie which we had in Debarua, was burnt a few daies before by a disaister, wherefore I desired the Bernagaez which had the charge of me, that he would let me goe to Maçua to aske some almes of the Portugals of the Foyfts to re-edifie the said Church, and that he would lend mee a Mule to ride on, and some men to accompany and guard me. He did it willingly, for hee thought I was already seated in the Countrey, and had no desire to returne to Portugall, and sent with me a Priest of his owne Sect and Nation, and sent besides other, fixe or seuen men to accompanie and guard me, charging vs to returne presently, and that we should not stay. And for more his assurance, there went in our company an Ambassadour of Presbyter Iohn to the Gouvernour of India, dia, for whose respect he thought also that the Captaine of the Foysts would not carrie mee, if he desired him the contrary. But Antonie Peixoto the Captaine was very glad to carrie me, and when the Ambassadour saw me embarked, went backe and would not goe with vs, thinking that for my sake he should not be well entertained among the Portugals. There went with me, as I said, Master Gonçaulso, and those few Portugals that were in Debarua. We came to Goa after the passing great Tempest by Sea, and want of victuals, Franciscus Barreto being Gouvernor of India, who receiued vs with great ioy, and commanded me to bee lodged in Saint Paul, with the Fathers of the company of Iesus, which shewed me great loue and honour while I was there, which was about nine or ten moneths, tarrying for shipping for this Kingdome. The Gouvernor commanded the ouer-seer of your Highnesse goods, to prouide me of all things necessarie, and so I was alwaies well prouided for of all things necessarie in the Countrey, and for the Voyage. The Patriarch Don Iohn Nunnez came thither I being there, and the Bishop Don Andrew with their companions.

As soone as the time of shipping came, I went to Cochin, because the ships are wont to depart from thence, and the Gouvernor commanded to giue me a good lodging in one of them, and prouision in abundance. Don Iohn Menesex the sonne of the Nayler, came for Captaine of that Voyage, and also another Don Iohn Menesex, of whom I receiued great courtesie and entertainment vnto the Iland of Saint Helen, where I remained against his will, contending much about it: There I continued a yeere suffering some bodily trouble, of hunger and other necessities, because that Iland is so distant from humane communication, that there commeth no people, but some fugitiue Slaues which had runne away from some ships that came thither: and it was said, that they had killed another Chaplaine, with the which mine beganne to be corrupt, and would not serue me. Wherefore destitute of all humane helpe in mine old age and sicknesse, I came perforce the next yeere to Portugall, in the ship called Saint Pablo, wherein Ruy of Melo came for Captaine. I came to Lisbon in the moneth of August, the yeere 1559. Your Highnesse reigning, whom God giue long life, with Peace and Grace in this world, and the glory of his Kingdome in the world to come, Amen.

home.

They brought newes of vs hither, as of men cast away: and without doubt, that was a great and inhumane carelesnesse, and was the cause that there was no more good done in the Countrey. For your Highnesse may beleue, that the matters of that Empire were in such estate, that if that small number of Portugals had bene maintained with supplies of men, it might haue gotten such a possession and authoritie, that King Gradem either with his will or without it, would haue obeyed the holy Mother Church: and his people with the conuersation of ours, and the doctrine of our Preachers, which would haue taught freely, had taken the true Christian Religion, and had left the errors of the Alexandrines, which for their sinnes are destroyed, they and their false Doctrine, whereby it hath no vigour for to resist the truth if it were preached and fauoured: for among them there are no proud and stubborne learned men, but there are deuout religious men, and very humble, which in good simplicitie desire to serue God, and take very easily the doctrine of truth, and apply their vnderstandings to it.

In Temporall things had such profit bene gotten, that neither Peru with his Gold, nor India with his Traffike, had surpass them: for there is more Gold in Damute and her Prouinces, then in Peru, which might haue bene gotten without the expences which the India maketh, and without warre.

Of my selfe I gaue also some account in this Treatise, though not much, not to trouble you, as I haue said: for I trauailed many yeares in those Countreies, and passed many troubles for the ser- uice of God and of your Highnesse, where with I should haue wearied your eares if I had told the, or the lesse part of them: For the first time I went to India, I went in company of Lope Suarez, Alfonso of Alburkerke being Gouvernour of it, and was there to the time of James Lopez of Sequera, by whose commandement I passe to the Presbyter Iohn of Ethiopia, in company of Don Rodericke of Lyma, and the Father Franciscus Alvarez, which returned from thence with an Ambassadour of that Emperour, called Tagazano, of whom I made mention in the beginning of this worke, in whose gage and hostage I remained in that Countrey: in the which they alwaies shewed me great honour and good vsage, to the Emperours taking me for God-father of his sonne and heire Gradem, and before the death of his Patriarch, called Abuna Marcus, he elected mee Patriarch of that Countrey and his Empire, according to his custome, and desired me on his be- halfe and mine to goe to Rome, to giue the obedience to the chiefe Bishop, and to desire him he would confirme to me that dignitie and Patriarch-ship, and from thence to Portugall, to doe that which I said in the beginning of this Booke. Which iourney I made by Land comming to Cayro, and to Ierusalem, and was taken by the Turkes and misused, and almost slaine, but by Gods assistance I came to Rome, in the time of the holy Father Paul the third, who not onely ap- prooued my election, but instituted me besides, and confirmed mee Patriarch of Alexandria, and gaue me personally the possession of that Seat. And in testimony of the truth of all this, he commanded to passe me his accustomed Letters and Authenticall Instruments, which were seene and approved in this kingdome, which I lost with many other things in the battaile where

Hence arose great hatred of the Abassines vnto Bermudez, insomuch that it was vulgarly bruted that he had stolne a Vessell of Gold out of a Church: so that hee was forced to returne into Europe. Him haue I (being then a Boy) seene at Lisbon, where hee made an end of his life and labours.

About those times, one Peter an Abassine, a Monke of Saint Antonies Order, with some others of his profession came to Rome, who being of a forward and industrious disposition, learned the Latine and Italian Tongues, and easily insinuated himselfe into the fauours of many; dealt also with Pope Paul the Third, very earnestly to send another Patriarke into Ethiopia: as for Bermudez, their wanted not causes of that hatred which he had incurred; but for any other, hee should no sooner set foot in Ethiopia, but all men would adhere to him, forsaking the Alexandrian and his Abuna. The Pope by Letters commended the businesse to the King of Portugall, to choose a man fit for this businesse, who named thereunto Peter Faber, and writ to the Pope to confirme him; but death tooke him away. rioke a Iesuit Priest. Who in the year 1555. arrived at Ercoco, which then belonged to the Abassine, to whom they went thence by Land: and having declared their message, and deliuered the Kings Letters, they find his mind altered (for he had written before to King John in that businesse.) But the whole Discourse will better appeare in Rodericks Letter in September, 1566. from Ethiopia to the Iesuites in Goa: which (so much as concerneth this purpose) I haue heere transcribed.

ON the fifteenth of May, we came to the King of Ethiopia. He was then in his Campe encompassed with many Pavilions. Being certified of our arrivall, hee commanded a Lodging to be provided where we might be entertained. The next day wee had access. Hee sate in his Tent spread with a faire Carpet, and adorned with silken Hangings on a Bed, the Curtaine opened. Iames approaching deliuered him the Kings Letters, which hee commanded to be read before all the Portugals in the Campe, with a loud voyce. In them the King signified amongst other things, that the next yeare hee would send thither one of his Household, and some Religious men besides, famous for life and learning. Claudius frowned at the hearing hereof, but answered nothing to the purpose: and thus dismissed, wee returned to our Lodgings. Two or three dayes after hee went to see his Grand-mother ten dayes journey thence: and we were left in the open field, not having one man in the Emperours name to provide vs any thing. Yet were we not forsaken of God, by whose providence and bountie it came to passe, that a Portugall tooke care of vs, and brought vs to a place whereof he was Lord, three leagues distant, entertained vs at his House, and commending to his the care of vs, followed after the Emperour. Heere wee spent almost a moneth, in which time I writ a Booke of the Errors of the Abassines, and the truth of the Romane Faith, to offer it to Claudius at his returne. For hee openly said, as I learned of a Portugall, neere about him, that hee neyther needed our Doctrine, nor intended to obey the Romane Church. It was also commonly reported, that some of the Chiefe men did openly affirme, that they would more easily subiect their neckes to the yoke of Saracens, then exchange their Customes with ours. Which did the more confirme mee, to deliuer my mind rather in writing then by word; so to learne his Answer and unmaske his opinion so long closely concealed. So soone therefore as hee returned to these parts, wee went to his Campe and were entertained of the Portugall Souldiers. For the Emperour had quite forgotten vs, nor cared to know how or where we lived. Now, because I had made my Booke in Portugall, and it was necessarie to turne it in Chaldee, I petitioned of him by Letters, to assigne me two of the best learned Monkes to turne some Doctrines of Christian Faith into the Chaldee Tongue: for I would in writing shew how undeservedly the Abassines reckoned the followers of the Romane Faith amongst Heretikes, and affirmed, that they were worse then Mahumetans: for so they openly said and reported.

And because I knew that they had a Booke which they called the Adulterie of the Frankes, made by the Alexandrine Schismatikes, wherein the Chalcedon Councell is reprooved, and many lyes are forged on vs; I desired of the Emperour that I might have the use thereof. The Booke hee denied, the Monkes he granted; which yet when they had begunne to translate the Booke, whether because they had beene so commanded, or else were afraid of any thing, or for some other unknowne cause, refused to proceed in the Enterprise: untill that by the Portugall Captaines intercession, they were commanded to finish it, assisted therein by a Portugall, an honest man, and well skilled in the Chaldee. When againe, I needed another to transcribe in right Characters that which was translated, he was also desired and obtayned of the Emperour. Yet had he scarcely begunne, when the Emperour in a rage sent to reuoke him, and in his name to tell me that I should not stay, but send him the Booke as it was, or surcease such busines. That the thing therefore might be no longer deferred, nor the Emperour have any excuse for his sinne, I thought it necessary to shew him the Booke ill written and blotted, appointing thereto a certaine day, which was the twentieth of August. When that day was come, with the Captaine and seven or eight other Portugals, I present my selfe before him, and having saluted him, shew the cause of my coming. He forbids me to proceed, and diuerting his speech to another matter, warily escheweth all the blowes made at him. Then I letting other things passe offered him the Booke, which beginning to reade, hee conceived so great fury, that he could not but utter his concealed Poyson. Thou askedst (said he) of me that thou mightest make a Booke wherein to declare the veritie of the Faith, and Monkes to translate it into Chaldee, both which I granted. And behold, thou hast done quite otherwise. For neither dost thou explaine the veritie of Faith, but dost ascribe Errors to them which are free from Errors. Thou shouldst also haue knowne how farre this thine Enterprise disagrees with thy condition, which art but a simple Priest. Knowest thou not that these things belong to Bishops, and pertaine only to great Prelates? Why hast thou thrust thy Sickle into anothers Haruest? I confessed my selfe a man of small worth, yet to haue done nothing discrepant with my condition, seeing I had writen those things which are plainly contained in the Booke of the Gospels, and in the Holy Councels, and which are to be beleued of a Christian man. Thou objectest, said he, many Errors to me and mine, wherewith we are not entangled, I determine not of your Faith, O Emperour, quoth I, but I am sure your Abassines are erroneous, nor doe I falsly ascribe any thing to them. If it please you to make tryall, you may command your Monkes and most learned men in your Empire to come hither, and I will make it appeare, that they are so ensnared in the Errors there mentioned, as none shall be able to denie. He replied, that he hated the Quirkes of Disputations, and that it was the custome of Ethnikes to commit their Superstitions to Questions, which Christians, especially the the ancient did altogether forbear. There had now passed aboue one thousand yeares since they professed that Faith: if any part thereof were false, how chanced that in so many yeares none durst doe as I had done? I answered, that God prouoked by bad workes of men often suffered them to fall into euill:

that he ought to giue great thanks to God that he sent in the time of his life and Reigne, one to shew the way of the sincere Faith. Then He. The Church of Christ hath bene diuided into foure Seas, we are in-grafted into one of these from the beginning; from it right and Lawes prohibit to be now separated. I assent (quoth I) that there were foure Patriarchall Seas from the beginning, but the Romane by Diuine Statute was preferred before the rest, as the Head Mother, and Mistris of all. When others haue failed, whosoener obey them against the Romane, are Enemies, and miserably diuided from their Head.
Looke in my Booke, there shall you find the Solutions of all doubts which you propounded. But take diligent heed that the speech of the Prophet, Noluit intelligere, vt bene ageret; be not applyed to you.
After many words on both sides, the Portugall Captaine being Interpreter, I added at last, that I wrote my Booke to that purpose, that I might know whether his Errours laid aside, he would obey the Romane Sea, and entertaine those Religious and Learned men which the King of Portugall sent him. For if hee would not entertaine and heare them, there was no cause that they should come to Ethiopia, which sought nothing but the saluation of the Abassines. He answered, that hee had Learned and Religious men in his Kingdomes, and therefore needed not that any should be sent from any other place; neither was it euer in his mind to subiect himselfe or his Countrey to the Romane Bishop. For that which Gaspar Magalanes had done in his name with the King of Portugall, was done by the mistaking of an Arabian Monke which translated his Letters and understood not his minde. Once; besides the Alexandrian Patriarch, whom alway hee hath obeyed faithfully, he would acknowledge no Superiour in holy things at all. Whereupon, being out of hope to mollifie his obstinate mind, hauing leane I departed. When I went away, looking vpon the Portugall Captaine, he highly commended my Learning, saying, that hee much maruelled how beeing so young, I could be so excellent in knowledge. I learned after that hee read my Booke thorow, and often had it in his hand, and shewed it to his Mother, often to his Brethren, and other Princes of the Empire.

It was also told me that the Abuna knowing what was in it, forbade the reading thereof with a grie-uous Curse. Therefore, the second day after a Messenger was sent to him from the Prete, which in his name might aske leane to reade it, which the Abuna denying, the Emperour in a rage gaue him many reproachfull and contumelious words, called him Heretike and Mahumetane, which read the Alcoran of the false Prophet Mahumet, and forbade so holy a Booke, and made by such an Author to bee read. He added further, that seeing he came into those Abassine parts to performe the Office of an A-buna and Doctor, he should speedily answer to those things which a simple Priest opposed. The Abuna denied that hee would enter into any Disputation against me: for he came into Abassia not to dispute, but to giue Orders. Nothing was more common in mens mouthes, and some Countries fauoured our part, others the contrarie: whereupon the Emperour sends for some Monkes in best reputation of Sanctitie and Learning, and commanded them to transcribe my Booke very purely. I was much afraid, lest they would haue left out some things which I knew the Emperour was disgusted eyther to heare or see, as those things which I had written of Pope Leo, and Dioscorus the Patriarke of Alexandria. For the Abas-sines thinke and say, that Dioscorus was a Saint, Leo a bad Man, whom they so much hate that they cannot heare his name without horror. Also they reiect the Chalcedon Councell for Errour in Faith, and say that it condemned Dioscorus vniustly. Therefore, euer since the time of that Councell (the Decrees whereof they wholly reiect) they haue bene diuided from the Romane Church.

They follow also the Heresie of Sergius Paulus and Pyrrhus, condemned by the sixth Synode at Constantinople, and many other Errours. When the time was come that the Emperour should answer me, as he had promised, I went to the Court, and sent one to signifie to him that I expected an Answer.
Whereto he said that his Fathers Ambassadour had bene tenne yeares in Portugall, neither could hee dispatch his Affaires in all that space: it is therefore meete that the Ambassadour of the King of Portugall should patiently waite my Answer. I perceiued whither these things tended, nor did I thinke it fit to stay any longer, but desired leane to depart into India. He cunningly deferred, as a thing vnmeete, that I so great a man should so soone be gone, specially hauing come to treat of Matters so weightie; nor could I spend my time better then in hearing there the Portugals Confessions. But if I were fully resolved to depart, I should yet giue him one monethes space to answer: that being past, if I had no Answer, I should dissemble an Answer, and might goe whither I would.

After this, on the fourth day of October, the Emperours Mother sent a Seruant to mee, desiring to speake with mee, and to see the Chalice which I had brought from Goa, a thing much magnified amongst them. I went presently with some Portugals, all which shee was willing should enter with me. After a few words, comming to talke of Religion, shee said, Seeing your Faith and ours differ nothing but are one and the same, What needed it I pray, to write any thing thereof, and make a causelesse broyle? Whereto I briefly, Whether your Abassines hold the right Truth you may perceiue by my Writings. This I affirme to thee, O Empreffe, although you had no other Errour, this one, that you are separated from the Romane Bishop, the Vicar of Christ on Earth, it would bee enough and more, vnto eternall destruction. She answered, that she and her people were subiect to Peter and Paul, the Apostles, and especially to Christ himselfe. I denied, that he is subiect to Christ which is not subiect to his Vicar; when Christ himselfe saith, He which heareth you * heareth me, and he which despiseth you, despiseth me. And if it be true which the Euangelist Iohn from the same Lord relateth, that there shall be One Shepherd, and one Sheepefold, whom did she thinke to be that Shepherd? She answered, Saint Peter *. If said I, Peter be that one Shepherd, the same Office must needs agree to them which in order succeed Peter. She answered, neither I nor mine deny obedience to Saint Peter: We are now in the same Faith wherein we haue beene from the beginning: if that bee not right, why did none admonish vs in so many Ages? Heere I, the Romane Bishop, which is Pastor of the whole Church of Christ, could not in the yeares passed send into Abassia, by reason of the Mahumetans stopping vp the passage. But the way by Sea being now open, he is able to doe it. Shee should take knowledge that the Common-wealth of Christ wherefoeuer it is, is one mysticall body, which in Heauen hath Christ the Head, in Earth the Vicar of Christ, which is the Head of all Christians. It may not bee doubted, but that members must be subiect to their Head, and to be directed thereby. From the time the Church began till the yeare 488. it was well in Abassia, and all the Patriarchs of Alexandria, but thenceforth they fell to ruine. If they would attaine saluation, they ought againe to conioyne with their lawfull Head, and become one bodie with him: for Christ himselfe had said, That there should be but one Sheepefold in the Church, and one Shepherd: but one body except it were monstrous, could haue but one Head; whereas the body of Christ is most perfect, and free from all filthinesse. So great a worke said she, as that is, to wit, that the rest of the members be ioyned with the Romane Head, belongs nothing to me, nor to thee. It is meete, that other Patriarchs congregated with the Romane, should deliberate of so weightie a matter, and decree by their authoritie what is to bee done: For to forsake old Customs and Rites by priuate counsell, and to undertake new, is a thing full of danger and offence. I on the other side said, That they were very ancient which the true Faith teacheth, nor haue any noueltie in them, and therefore it did rather take away then giue offence, whatsoeuer is done according to the rule of Faith.

After some other such like things, followeth in the same Epistle of Gonzalus. A few daies after, the Emperour remoued this Camp to a place a daies iourney distant, and we followed him. When we were in a certaine field, three Monkes came to me; one of which was accounted learned, and was very desirous to see and speake with me about Religion. In the beginning of his speech he confessed, that all our things pleased him, but yet he could not approue that we neither obserued the (Saturday) Sabbath, nor abstained from Swines and Hares flesh, vomiting out other venome. For he affirmed, that the soules of the iust departing out of this life, although nothing remaine in them to be purged, are not yet presently receiued in Heauen to see God, but are conueyed to earthly Paradise, there to expect the end of the world. That the Holy Ghost proceedeth onely from the Father. That the Sonne is equall to the Father in regard of his humane Nature. That onely Mahumetans and Ethnicks after their death, are cast into Hell, to abide there euerlastingly: but Christians which liue badly are there to be tormented in the fire of Hell, till they purge their sinnes: for all which are signed with the Character of Baptisme, shall at last be saued, and so he construed Christs words, He which shall be beleue and be baptized, shall be saued. But I so conuincd his errors by reasons and Scriptures, that coming neerer, he acknowledged himselfe satisfied. But lest his Fellowes which were vnllearned should heare, he whispered thus to mee. The things which thou teachest are true, and I will keepe them all in my mind, and so went away. The moneth being past, I went to the Emperour, and desired an answer and leaue to depart. Hee answered, I might be gone at my pleasure.

As touching the religious men which King Iohn sends me, when they shall come to Mazua, there shall be some to receiue and conduct them to me, I shall willingly heare them discoursing of the Faith. Then departed I from him and betooke me to my iourney. By the way, I visited some Townes of the Portugals, heard many of their confessions, brought some of them from Concubines to lawfull Wedlocke, their Concubines first (being Abassines in Sect and Nation) instructed in the Romane Doctrine, and reuoked to the Faith. Because the Churches of this Region are consecrated to the holies of Schismatickes, neither haue Altars accommodated to our uses, wee carried an Altar with vs. When I was in one of these Townes, one came thither to salute me, sent from a principall Abbat, which fixe miles off ruled two great Monasteries; one of Monkes, the other of Nuns. The name is Beluanos, or Plurimanes, famous in those parts. For from thence proceeds whatsoeuer is to bee beleued in all Abassia, because there is thought to bee the rule of Faith, and for that cause the Abbot himselfe is in great honour amongst all. I thought it meete to visite these Monasteries, and went together with the Portug I. my Companions. The Abbot was absent, I briefly viewed the Monasteries. Both they and the Monkes much differ from ours. Each of them hath his owne little house separated from others: hee hath his owne part of ground which he tilleth for himselfe. So are they all diuided in habitation and occupation, that you would thinke you saw not a Monasterie, but a small Village. And although the Monkes dwell on one side, and the Nuns on the other, yet are they not so separated, but that many Children are said to be begotten betwixt them. Their Order or Family is neither Franciscan nor Dominican, but is called Teclay Manot. This was the name of the Founder, which with them signifieth, The Pillar of the Faith. He hath great opinion of sanctitie among the Abassines, and is said to haue wrought many Miracles. That is the most famous, that hee slue a Serpent, esteemed by the Ethnicks for a God, and conuerted the Ethnicks: first to the Faith of Christ, and after that, many of them to this forme of life. Thus much Gonzalus.

* The Apostles were no body with this Iesuite; or all are swallowed into the Romish Whirlepooles: and no maruel, for Christs owne prerogative, Of one Pastor, is next arrogated: as if the Church had no Christ to be Pastor, nor no Apostles to heare, but the Roman: called to that headship by Phocas, and since this dispute, publishing a new Creed added to the Trent Councell. The Abassine and Iesuite haue diuided the truth betwixt them in some things, which in some other both want.

Omnia probate, quod bonum est tenete.

Letter of Alfonfus of France a Portugall, to Gonzalus.

* Therefore Claudius had objected foure Godsto Bermudez.

Exorcising the Seas & Winds. Let this be a generall rule to the Reader, to beleue a Iesuite left in things neereft Rome, in other things to giue him Faith, where this Romish Faith is not a brewing. For I disclaime not their humanity, though I trust not their diuinitie in all points. Yet euen Iannes and Iambres against Moses, did as great miracles as this, or as any which I beleue of their relation done by theirs. False Prophets haue, Deut. 13. and false religions, pretend miracles, 2. Re. 1. which Iohn Baptist, an extraordinary and true Prophet had not. * I rehearse these things in the Story of Iesuites, that the world may see by what art they attained to that reputation in the Papacy: dazeling mens eyes with a seeming splendour of humilitie, such as is reiected, Col. 2. ult. laying this low foundation to their haughtie aspiring, creeping to the lowest, and terrifying the highest. Phil. 1.

Alfonfus of France a Portugall, which had bene Interpreter betwixt the Emperour and this Gonzalus, did write to Goa to him, touching a discourse twixt the said Emperour and him, touching the said heresie of Dioscorus, which he had said might bee euinced by holy Scripture, and authoritie of Saints and Councils. If your Scripture, said the Emperour so deemeth of vs, God knowes what ours deemeth of you. I know, quoth I, That the followers of the Romane Faith are esteemed Heretikes of the Abassines, and accounted Nestorians, as if we admitted two persons in Christ, as well as two Natures; for so they had often objected to me with contumely: and after mention of his yearely re-baptizing, contrary to Saint Pauls saying; One Faith, one Baptisme, he grew very angry, and threatned me with his Sword, but seeing my constancie he departed. He concludes, I thus thinke Gonzales, that this Emperour will more easily endure the yoke of Saracens, then of the Romane Bishop.

On the thirtieth of March, 1556. Iohn Nonius Barret, Patriarch of Ethiopia, Andrew Oniedo, Bishop of Hierapolis, and other Iesuites sayled from Lisbon to the East. In the way a great Tempest happened, which (saith our Author) by the Patriarchs Prayers was appeased. For taking water in a vessell, and (attired in his holy Vestments) blessing the same, he sprinkling part of it in the Sea, part on the Sailes, Tackling, and other part of the Ship, with a certaine forme of Prayer brought to passe, that the Seas and Winds were quiet. Well; if hee could also haue giuen sound lims to Francis Rodericke, his fellow Ignatian, whose helpe he vsed in hearing the confessions of the Passengers, being a man lame and going on Crouches. So should hee haue freed him from that scoffe of the Moors at Mosambique, that his Arguments could not stand against Mahomet, himselfe being so lame; nor could they bee right, himselfe being so crooked. He answered well, That their Sect was more deformed then he, and wanted both feete and head too. But the Miracle might haue cured his bodie and their soules, or done good in Abassia, if their miracles were as readie before Infidels, or those whom they call Heretikes, whose curious eyes may examine them, as before Catholikes, whose credulitie rather makes then findes them. Once, miracles are not for Beleeuers (which must walke by Faith, not by sight) but for Infidels. But let vs leaue their mysticall tales, and come to the Historicall Relation. Hauing stayed a moneth at Mosambique, they proceeded to Goa, where discouraged by Gonzalus his Letters, he aduised with others, which thought it meetest that he should stay at Goa till King Iohn might haue knowledge, and that Oniedo with some others of the societie, meane while should be employed in that Ethiopian businesse. This was put in execution: and Nonius abode at Goa six years space, which he spent in his daily Massings, Contemplations, hearing Confessions: sometimes visiting the Kitchen (as before) alway mending his owne cloaths when they were torne; sweeping also his Chamber, and the rest of the house, carrying forth the Dust to the place appointed: often washing Pilgrims feete, and on set daies of Nouices; most obseruant of all the Lawes of the societie, how free soeuer from any Superiour, but the Pope onely. Hee dyed in December, 1562.

Andrew Oniedo a Castilian, was appointed by Ignatius, according to the Popes Order, an Adiutor to the former Patriarch whilst hee liued, and his Successour after his death: and was with him consecrated Bishop of Hierapolis, as before is said. His Kitchen and Chamber labours, and domesticall other seruices, fetching Water in Earthen Vessels on his shoulder, lying on the ground among Beggars and famous humilities, I omit (not enuying those new-coyned vertues to that new Societie; I hold it much better, they were all busied in the Indian Skulleries and drudgeries, then in European State-affaires. I know bodily exercise is easie to them which loue not their ease, and light to such as delight to be magnified, as hath appeared in Pharisees, Essees, in Baals Priests, Molochs Votaries, Turkish and Ethnicks Regulars; I had not mentioned these things, but that the Iesuits vse to insult and insult so much hereon) I magnifie more both Oniedo and others, for whatsoeuer labours vndertaken by the Kings Mission (I quarrell not altogether the Popes Commission) to reduce strayed soules, as were these of Abassia, whither we now follow him. I am not angry with vertuous designes, neither in Pope nor Iesuite; yea, in such things I honour them: neither will I for their sakes thinke worse of that which is a good deede, if not altogether well done, materially commendable, if any way formally defectiue. When they seeke knots in Rushes, and would deforme reformed Christians, let them haue Peters, Get thee behind me Sathan: but in conuerting the Gentiles from peruerse errors, or this Abassia from Iewish, Iacobite, Monothelite heresies, I will assst them with my Prayers, and applaud their endeouours: and say, Flesh and blood hath not taught them this, but the heauenly Father; and if Christ be truly preached, whether vnder a pretence or sincerely, I therein ioy, and will ioy. Let them still compass the world to win Profelites, if it be not to compass the world, and circumuent their conuerts; yea, as Moses learned of Iethro to rule Gods people, so I would some of ours in Virginia or else-where, would follow the Iesuites so farre as they follow Christ.

In the yeare 1557. on the Ides of Februarie, Oniedo with five other Iesuites, passed from Goa into Ethiopia: Their names were Antonie Fernandes, Andrew Galdanes, Gonzalus Cardoso, Francis Lopez, Emanuel Fernandes. There were besides some twentie Portugals: they arriued safe at Arceco. Had they stayed five daies longer, they had lost their Voyage, if not themselves.

For

For on the second of Aprill, the Turkish Admirall with a great Fleete tooke Mazua, (being then in the ayd of the King of Zeila) and Ercoco, also the only Port Towne then left to the Prete, fortifying them in such sort, that all passage to Christians was prevented. Let vs here insert the Letter of Emanuel Fernandez.

Mazua and Ercoco taken by the Turkes.

ON our Ladie day in March, 1557. we came to Baroa, and the Barnagallo being certified of our comming, came to meet vs, and received vs, especially the Bishop, with signification of honour and good will. There was great reioycing of the people to see him, which came with great alacritie to kisse his hand. In that Citie we stayed twentie daies, in which happened the commemoration of our Lords Passion; and the mysteries of that holy weeke, we performed in the most pious manner wee could. On Good-Friday we made a pompous Procession (respecting that place) from our Church to theirs. Great was the concourse of people to vs, approving and applauding the Romane Rites. Wee spent a good deale of time in hearing the Portugals confessions, and other holies. Many of their Servants and Children were annointed with Chrisme, and confirmed by the Bishop. The Barnagallo came often to visite him, and he often, but in vaine, exhorted them to the obedience of the Romane Church. The spring comming on, when those parts were in feare of the Turke, we went from Baroa to the Emperour, in which wee spent fiftie daies, euery where meeting some of Portugall race which needed Sacraments. Eight daies before our arriuall at the Emperours Tent, one of his chiefe men was sent to us to salute the Bishop in his name, and many Mules were brought for carriages. At last came one in the Emperours Name, to charge us that we should proceed no further without his command, which happened two daies after. When we were a little off from the Camp, the Emperour sent word, and we pitched our Tents, and therein abode that night. The day following about noone, many of the Royall blood, and others of the chiefe Nobilitie, not a few, preciously attired and well mounted, came to us in our Tents. Two of these were of principall place, to whom was the office committed of conueying the Bishop to the Emperour. Meane while the Emperour with his Mother and Brethren ascended into a high place, whence he might behold vs comming. When we were come, the Prete appointed that we should passe on Horse-backe into the first Court (an honorable courtesie, and differing from the Court custome) and before the entrance of the second Court, wherein was the Tent Royall, we alighted. At the doore of the Tent on both sides were many men, venerable by Nobilitie or age, ranked in goodly order, and leaning on stauies. Heere we stayed a while. Then came forth two (Haac the Barnagallo was one) which with lowly bowing of the whole body, saluted the Bishop, and (we attending) led him in to the Emperour. He also shewed no small signes of honour and loue to him at his comming. After that a few words had passed, Ouiedo produced his Letters from the Viceroy, the Patriarch, and others in India, which were presently read in the presence of all. The Emperour was not a little disturbed therewith, nor was able to conceale his backwardnesse to the Romane Church: but warily, and being well affected to the Portugals, he indenured as well as he could to hide it, and to seeme well apayed: not so yet, but some euident signes of perfidiousnesse appeared. And although he neuer purposed to relinquish his errors, yet at the first he well entertained the Bishop, and allowed him and his company large maintenance. Nor was there any which in word or deed durst wrong us, in respect of the Princes fauour. Set aside his prosodie, in the whole Abassine Empire, was not a man, whom the Emperour Claudius did not excede in prudence, magnanimitie, and other royall vertues. He was very gentle and affable to the Bishop, and alway gaue him some hope of reclaiming him. When they began to treat of Religion, Ouiedo desired him that he would be present at their disputations with them, which amongst the Abassines were esteemed most learned. He consented and often heard the Bishop arguing matters of Faith with a great troupe of men learned: but in regard of Claudius, all the rest of that faction were mute. He alone both in heat of speaking and eagernesse of victory, surpassed all which he brought into that contention with him, and with such dexteritie of wit did often defend his errors, that he wrought vs some trouble. And although Ouiedo alway got the victorie in dispute, the aduersaries yet (such is the custome of obstinate minds) with laughers and immodest clamors, boasted themselves to haue gotten the better. When therefore the Bishop saw that he preuailed nothing by this course of disputing, he gathered in writing the erroneous opinions of the Abassines, and offered the same confuted by reasons and authorities to the Emperours reading. He tooke the same and read it, and as he could, answered in writing to euery thing, stiffly auerring, that he would neuer yeeld obedience to the Romane Bishop, nor decline from his Predecessors steps in things of Religion, but would hold that Faith which they held; and therefore in vaine did any mortall man indenure to make him in any sort to relinquish it. Herewithall he began also to shew some tokens of indignation against the Bishop, and openly to affirme that his presence was distastfull to him. Whereupon lest he might prouoke against him and his the fury of an impotent man, hee thought best to yeeld to the time, and leaving the Emperour, sought to draw others to the truth. Thus farre Emanuel.

Baroa, or Barua.

Commendation of Claudius.

But when Claudius heard that many of the Nobles and others, both Plebeians and Monks were by the Bishop and his Companions brought out of their darknesse to light, he was much moued, the Abbots especially with complaints incensing him. Whereupon he sent for him, and sharply reprobued him, commanding him to treat of the mysteries of Faith with the Portugals, and their Posteritie, but with none of his Abassines. He answering, that he was therefore sent thither, and must obey God rather then Man, what danger soeuer he incurred; so prouoked the Emperour, that he reuiled him, and forbad him to come any more in his sight: telling him further, that his labour was vaine to impose on him or his the Popes yoake. This was in the yeare 1559. in Ianuarie. In Februarie following, the Saracens called Malachales inuaded those parts. On Maunday-Thursdai was a battell betwixt them and the Abassines, in which these were put to flight, and the Emperour flaine, his head cut off and sent with ludibrious triumph to the King of Adel. The Captaine of the Saracens, in acknowledgement that this victorie came from God, alighted off his Horse, and triumphed on an Asse. To Claudius hauing no issue, his brother Adamas Segnedus succeeded, a man of euill qualities, and a cruell enemy to the Romane Faith. He had beene before taken in warre by the Saracens, and carried into Arabia, where denying Christ hee turned Mahometan, but being redeemed by Claudius, he returned to the Abassine Faith. The Bishop went to gratulate his succession, and receiued honourable entertainment. But after that, vpon occasion of Conuerts to the Romane Church, he commanded him to bee brought before him, and sware, that if he proceeded in that kind, it should cost him his life: and then also rent his garment, and laid violent hands on him, at last condemning him to exile with Francis Lopez, in a barren high Mountaine, taking away his Chalice also, to hinder him from saying Masse. There they continued eight moneths, in Caves, lying on the ground, liuing on wilde herbs: this place also being a receptacle of Robbers, whence they set vpon Passengers. Hence at length he was deliuered by intercession of a Noble woman, which comming thither, saw (they say) a glorious light shining about his person and Mansion. He persecuted also the Abassine Conuerts with death and banishment: five of which being cast to the Lions, found the beasts more mild then the Emperour, who againe sent Andrew and them into exile: where being in danger of staruing, at Ouiedos prayer (I will not vrge your credit) a Riuer (like Jordan) opened her bowels, and yeelded them a hidden treasure of Fishes. Againe, he was reuoked, and againe for like reconcilements to Rome exiled, hauing before offered with his own hands to take away his life, his sword (by I know not what miracle) falling out of his hand. In this third exile, he adioyned all the Portugals, and that without their wiues and children. But a conspiracie being set on foot by Isaac Barnagasso, and others, which exalted Betanc Zarcar, illegitimate sonne of the Emperours elder Brother, this made him send for the Portugals from their exile. In the first battell Adamas was ouerthrowne: in the next, he tooke and slue his Corriuall. In the third, another legitimate Brother of Zarcar was set vp, and the Turkes called to help with their Ordnance, which put Adamas to flight. This was in the yeare 1562. in the next yeare he died.

The Empire was now rent into diuers factions, some creating the sonne of Adamas Emperour, others that brother of Zarcar, and some looking to other parts. Andrew, which was now Patriarch (Nonius being dead) got him into Tigrai, neere that famous Abbey, called Abba Guarima, and dwelt in Fremona, a small Village, sixteene yeares together, in which he neuer saw Abassine Emperour. For warre had set all things in such combustion, that although he might reduce some Abassines, yet for reconciling that whole State was no opportunitie. Malasequetus the sonne of Adamas reigned but seuentene yeares (Barnagasso being dead) the Gale in the meane time, inuading, waiting, ouerthrowing and spoiling all in their way, possessing with victorious armes, aboue one hundred Regions or Shires, the greatest part of the Empire in a short space. The Turks also from the Sea shoare which they held, made often inroads, slaying and captiuing many. Ouiedo meane while, was preserued at Fremona.

Sebastian King of Portugall vnderstanding how things were desperate in Abassia, dealt with the Pope to send this Bishop to Iapon, which by Pius the fifth was granted, in the yeare 1556. The Copie hereof he receiued the next yeare from the Iesuites of Goa, but excused himselfe in a Letter to the Pope, alledging the Impossibilitie of getting thence by shipping, the Saracens infesting those Seas. But if five hundred Portugall Souldiers were sent thither from India, which wee long (saith he) expect, and earnestly desire and hope in God to obtaine; there will be no doubt, but not onely the Abassine Rebels will come to the obedience of the Romane Church, but many Ethnicke people also to the Faith of Christ. For here are in Ethiopia innumerable idolatrous Nations, whom we may goe to without crossing any Sea, and easily draw to the Faith. We know for certaine, that many of the Kingdome of Damute (which they say, extendeth from Mosambike to Sofala) haue come to the Emperour, and desired to become Christians, reiecting notwithstanding for priuate respects, he desiring rather to haue them Slaves in condition, then in Religion Brethren. There were also three yeares since some of the Countrey called Sinari, which sought to make peace with a certaine Prince, the Emperours Kinsman, with whom they had warres, and offered themselues both to Tribute and Religion, but repelled by hatred and auarice, exceeding Charitie. There are almost innumerable of the neighbouring Ethnicks, whom the Saracen Merchants buy and sell to the Turkes, which all would giue their names to Christ, if Couetousnesse did not peruert their Princes. Those five hundred Portugall Souldiers, before mentioned, might preuent these euils, both with great commoditie to the Portugall affaires, and strengthening the Indian power. For if the Turkes (which easily they may) doe first possesse Ethiopia, it is hard to say, how much they may thence endanger the Indian businesse, being furnished in those places with necessaries for shipping, Iron for Armes, prouision for Armies, Slaves for seruice, and the like. That Emperour which persecuted the Romane Faith is dead. His

Sonne

Sonne which succeeded him is young, in iudgement weake, and in name rather then in power an Emperour. For hee hath the same Aduersaries which conspired against his Father, being both Principall in Nobilitie and the most in number. Whereby all things are so confused, and embroyled with Ciuill Dissensions and Forreigne Warres, that nothing were more to bee wished then some refuge of Peace, which the most know to consist in the Romane Faith. And although the Monkes and many Nobles doe oppugne our Faith, and persecute the Catholikes; yet the Communitie, so much prompter to truth, as it is lesse tyed with humane respects, doth appooue the Romane Decrees, as doe also of the chiefe men not a few.

We indeanour the Saluation of both by publike and priuate Preachings and Disputations, with Writings also refelling Writings, not altogether in vaine. For some are conuerted and more would be, but for feare of punishments, an eagre Enemy of the Truth in base minds. This is the cause that in these places especially, Religion desireth an armed hand, that they which will may come without feare to the Catholike Tents, and those which haue comne may abide constant. I am of opinion, holy Father, that this Ethiopian businesse is very conducent to the enlarging and splendor of the Catholike Religion, although it be, as other things of weight, intangled with many difficulties. Yea, if I bee not much deceived, no Expedition can now be offered, which can bring greater ornament to the Romane Church, or greater accesse to the Catholike Affaires. Here where now I am, about two hundred and thirtie Catholikes dwell, diuided in two little Townes, which therefore we haue lately built, that they which before with losse of their goods and greater danger of their soules, wandered like Pilgrimes thorow diuers parts of Ethiopia, might haue a fixed Seat, for instruction and Christian Sacraments. Others not a few else-where, waite the oportunitie to come hither, &c.

An armed hand and band required to further the Iesuits preaching in Abassia.

Thus did Oniedo moue the Pope and the King to suffer him there to abide whiles he liued, still vrging that band of five or sixe hundred Portugall Souldiers to be sent thither. In the yeare 1576. when the Abassine Emperour sent a Messenger into India for that purpose, the Patriarch againe writ to the Pope about it, reckoning many Commodities which thence might redound to stablish there the true Faith. His Miracles, in iudgements inflicted on such as tooke away his goods in procuring life and death by his Prayers, in chasing away Grasshoppers, &c. I omit. He dyed of the Stone in September, 1577. and was buried at Fremona, where the Abassines, as they vse to Saints, often made recourse to his Graue, and offered Wheate, Frankincense, and other Odours.

And there our Author relates many Miracles to be done, which yet in Iesuiticall Relations of remote parts are now no Miracles, nor rarities, they are so common. His five Companions Iesuites, are by the Iesuite our Authour also much commended for their Apostolicall life. Anthony Fernandez was set ouer the rest, and was the first which passed out of this life: Cardosus the next, slaine by Theeues. Gualdarius was slaine by the Turkes. Lopez liued longest, and dyed in May, 1597. before whose death Melchior Syluius was sent into Abassia, by the Arch-bishoppe of Goa. As for Melchior Carnerus made Bishop at Goa, to succeed Oniedo in the Patriarchate of Ethiopia, because he came not there, we haue also excluded him from hence. Anno, 1560. Fulgentius Frerius a Iesuite sent out of India to visit Oniedo, was taken by the Turkes in the Red Sea, and carried to Cairo: twentie yeares after the same happened to Anthony Monferrate and Peter Paex Iesuites, which were seuen yeares in Captiuitie. Abraham Georges 1595. sped better, being taken and martyred for confessing Iesus in Mazna. But hauing a Colledge erected at Din, P. Paex, Anno 1603. Anthony Fernandez two yeares after with Fran. Anthony de Angelis; Azenedus and Mangoni 1606. were shipped by Moores at Din, and carried to Abassia.

§. II.

Description of the Countries, and the seuerall Regions, Religions, and Abassine Opinions.

That part of Ethiopia, which is vnder or neere to Egypt, is called Abassia, namely, so much as is, or in more flourishing Estate of that Empire, hath beene subiect to the Negus; called Priest Iohn, by error of Conilanus, followed by other Portugals in the first discouerie, applying by mis-conceit through some like occurrents the Relations in M. Polo and others touching Presbyter Iohn, in the North-east parts of Asia, (therefore called a Priest because he had the Crosse, as the Western Archbishops vsed, carryed before him) vnto this King; the Abassines also in Europe, willing by names of neerer sound to confirme that fancie, tending as they supposed, to the credit of their Prince. On the East it is bounded with the Red Sea from ten to twentie degrees of North Latitude, ending in Suachen, anciently called Aspix. On the West with high Mountaines rising along, or neerer the Bankes of Nilus: the North parts extend as farre as Meroe, the South to Ania, thence reaching to Adel, a Kingdome of Moores, whose chiefe Citie is Ara in nine degrees of North Latitude. The whole circuit is sixe hundred, or after others betwixt seuen and eight hundred leagues. The Name Abassia

John Gabriel, sometimes Generall of the Portugals in Abassia, a man expert in many Languages, hath written, that the Abassine Empire containeth by ancient right, fixe and twentie Kingdomes, distributed into fourteene Regions: The first eight lye from Suachen Westward. Tigrai containeth seuentene Tracts or large Shires, each hauing a Lieutenant: the Turkes now possesse the Sea Ports hereof, and the Moores the adioyning Continent, the in-land parts are inhabited promiscuously by Christians and Heathens, blacke, miserable and deformed within and without, in soule, bodie and state. The next to Tigrai is Dancali, washed on the East by the Red Sea, thence extended Westward in a short and barren Tract of Land, inhabited by Moores, 10 tributarie to the Abassine. Angote followeth, the fourth Boa, the fifth Amara, the sixth Leca, all inhabited by Christians. The seuenth, is Abagamedri, very large, containyng seuentene Tracts, inhabited partly with Christians, partly with Ethnikes, as is also Dambea, hauing only two Tracts. On the other side of Dancali, along the Sea Coast runneth Aucagnerle, inhabited by Moores which acknowledge not the Abassine, abutting on Adel, the chiete Citie Zeila, sometimes Analites. Next to it is Dahali, extending towards Mombaza, the Inhabitants partly Christians, partly Mahumetans, tributary to the Negus. Oecie is within Land, partly Mahumetane, partly Ethnike, subiect to the Abassine: after which follow Arium, Fatigar, (both Christians) and Zinger, Ethnike. The sixteenth, is Roxanagum inhabited by Christians, not subiect to the Prete. Hence to the North is Roxa an Ethnike Kingdome, Goma inhabited by Christians and Ethnikes obeying the Abassine: towards Monomotapa is Nerea, both Christian and Ethnike, a 20 large Kingdome: Zethe only Ethnike, but subiect to the Emperour: after which are Conche, Mahola, only Ethnike, and Goroma which hath twentie Tracts of Christians and Gentiles, almost made an Iland by Nilus encompassing, able by the fertilitie to nourish diuers Armies (which almost continually infest it for that cause) the Sowers following the Reapers without other Tillage. The three last Kingdomes lye towards Egypt, to wit, Damote, Sua, Iasculum: Sua, the heart and sometime Chiefe Seat of the Empire: Iasculum extends to Cairo, inhabited by Mahumetanes, yearely euery Lent trauelled by Pilgrims to Ierusalem, going in Companies out of Dambea.

The names of the Prouinces are Dubane, Xuncho: Daraita, Bora, Calaoa, Aga; (these three are 30 inhabited by Christians in name, otherwise Ethnikes, the first of the former by Ethnikes, the next Saracens; the third Christians) Arima, Arbum, Xancala, Xancora, Suggamo, Bergamo, Aris (which is on the other side of Nilus) Euara. Of all these Kingdomes, besides Tigrai, Abagamedri, Goroma, and Dambea, scarcely any is subiect to the Abassine.

But foure

Riuers and Lakes.
Iewes.
Oara.

The same Gabriel recordeth foure principall Riuers in this Abassine Ethiopia, and as many huge Lakes. The first Riuier is Taucea, running from the South to the North, but intrapped and drunke vp of the thirstie sands before it can pay Tribute to the Sea. It hath neighbouring Mountaines of admirable height, almost inaccessible passage, and fortified scite, inhabited by Iewes, still obseruing the Mosaicall Ceremonies, dreadfull to the adioyning people. The second Riuier is Oara, running into the Sea of Zeila, richer in waterie treasures then Nilus: but such is the 40 Abassine Superstition, that they refuse to drinke of his pleasant waters, because it watereth in the passage the Regions of Mahumetans. (And is not some mens fancie of like phrenzie with vs, which refuse our Churches for the living, Church-yards for their dead; and others not so sicke, our Ceremonies and Rites, for a Popish passage, bee their Antiquitie, Innocencie, and seeming profitableness neuer so plausible, and nothing lesse then Popish?) The third Riuier is Gabea, which runnes towards Mombaza, and the fourth Nilus. The first Lake, is Aicha in Angote: the second is Dambeababar, that is, the Sea of Dambea, not farre from Gubbai, where now is the Emperours Court, if at any time he leaues his Tents for the Citie: it is about threescore miles long, and five and twentie broad, admitting Nilus on one side. It hath many Fishes, Riuier-hor- 50 ses, which endanger Sailers; and hath many small Ilands therein to which Traytors are confined. The third Lake is Zella, in Oecie, the fourth not farre thence Xacala. Antanio Fernandez a Iesuite, in a Letter dated 1610. attributes fortie Prouinces to Abassia, but in substance agreeth with Gabriel, whose Tracts are as huge as the others Prouinces.

Nature of the Abassine soile.

Wormes in the belly by vse of raw flesh.

The same Fernandez addeth, that the Abassine soile is for the most part hollow and full of deepe openings. In the midst of the Champaigne Plaines, in many places out of the hard Rocks arise Rockie Hills, which in times of warre serue them for Fortresses. The whole Countrey abounds with veines of Metall and Metall-medicines: but the Inhabitants partly by ignorance, and partly for feare of the Turkes Inuasion, if such things should bee knowne, suffer them to lye hidden in the Earth. Only they make vse of so much Iron as they find vpon the face of 60 the Earth without digging. Of Plants and Trees is great varietie: but fruits not so pleasant as in Europe. One yet there is very vsfull for the Wormes which breed in them by eating raw flesh, which would gnaw thorow their entrailes, if they did not preuent that euill with monethly purgations by this Fruit, which both kils the Wormes and emptieth the belly. Peaches, ches, Pomegranates, Indian Figs, Oranges, and Vines are there seene, but rare and few. Hares, Goats, Harts, Bores, Elephants, Camels, Buffals, Lions, Panthers, Tigres, Rhinocerotes, and other Creatures are there seene, and one so huge that a man sitting on Horse-backe, may passe vpright vnder his belly: his shape is like a Camell, but his nature diuers, feeding on leaues which he reacheth from the tops of Trees with his necke stretched forth. There are many Rivers and Lakes, in all which are Riuer-horses innumerable very hurtfull to their Corne: of great bodies, and a mouth so wide that they can gape a Cubit and halfe. By night they goe out of the waters into the fields to feed; for they liue on Herbs: and if the Husbandmen watch not well, in one night they will destroy their Corne. In the water they are very bold, and assaile men like fierce 10 Dogges, and cruelly teare those which they get. They are so afraid of fire that a little Boy holding a lighted Torch, may scarre away many thousands of them. There are some which hunt and kill them for their flesh, which differeth little from Beefe. In these Rivers and Lakes is also found the Torpedo, which if any man hold in his hand, if it stirre not, it doth produce no effect: but if it moue it selfe neuer so little, it so tormenteth the bodie of him which holds it, that his Arteries, Ioints, Sinewes, & all his Members feelee exceeding paine with a certaine numnesse: and as soone as it is let go out of the hand, all that paine and numnesse is also gone. The Superstitious Abassines beleue that it is good to expell Deuils out of humane bodies, as if it did torment Spirits no lesse then men. They say, if one of these alieue bee laid amongst dead Fishes, if it there stirre it selfe, it makes those which it toucheth to stirre as if they were alieue.

20 There is great store of this kind in Nilus, in the furthest parts of Goyama, where there is a Meere or Fenne without bottom, welling and admirably boyling forth waters continually, whence Nilus springeth. It ariseth small and first for a dayes iourney and halfe trendeth Eastward: Then it enters into a Lake as great as any imagined to bee in the World, running thorow the midst thereof with a swift course, flying all mixture of waters, and throwes it selfe from very high Rockes, whence hauing gotten freer scope, it expatiates it selfe a while, and shortly is as it were swallowed vp in deepe yauning Gulfes of the Earth, and so straitned, that in some places a man may stride ouer it. But after it hath passed five dayes to the East, it bends backe its course to the West, and sometimes greater, sometimes lesse, according to the Season, passeth towards Egypt. The Abassines report, that it is no hard thing to turne the Rivers course some other way, and to sterre Egypt, which I scarcely beleue.

30 The Abassine Aire is most part warme and temperate, but in low Land is exceeding hote, and somewhat vnwholsome. Their Winter is from the end of May to the beginning of September, and then it beginneth in the Red Sea. I haue found by experience, that this Sea from the change of the Moone to the Full, fourteene dayes together flowes in, and as many through the whole Wane ebbeth or runneth out. In Winter it raineth almost euery day in these parts, alway afternoone, and not without Thunder. From this Kingdome of Dambea where we liue, both Poles are seene, but Antarctike the higher. Neere it are many Stars in forme of a Crosse, whence it hath that name. In this Tract of Heauen appeareth a certaine spot like a Cloud: we suppose it a part more thinne then others not starred: let Philosophers examine. About this spot many Starres shine lesse then those which adorne the other Pole. The yeare beginneth heere with the Spring on the first of September. Their yeare hath twelue monethes, each of them thirtie dayes, and those which remayne from August to September, are reckoned by themselves. The Abassines no way more expresse their ioy and iollitie then by eating and drinking: and easily on Holy dayes they come to the Churches, which vsually are compassed with Trees for shade, where are many Vessels set full of their Wine, which after Seruice ended, they lucke in so vnmeasurably, that first Drunkenesse and then Brabbles, and lastly Frayes vsually follow. They make Wine of Honey tempered with Opium, both pleasant and profitable taken moderately.

Wine of Vines is rare, and for their Masse in Vintage time they vse Must, at other times Wine of Raynsins. Peter Paez a Iesuite writ, that Anno 1604. hee was with the Emperour who desired him to say Masse, which hee could not for want of Wine, which no where could be gotten.

40 At what time Rodericke Lima entred Abassia, Dauid reigned, and after hee had held the Empire thirtie sixe yeares, his Sonne Claudius succeeded: who in the yeare 1559. was slaine, hauing ruled almost twentie yeares. His Brother Adamas succeeded called also Mena, and reigned foure yeares dying in the yeare 1563. Sarsa Dengel succeeded, who leauing his former name, would be called Malac Seguetus, and died, Anno 1596. His Sonne Iames succeeded, a childe, which after seuen yeares was taken by his Subjects, depriued and sent into the Kingdome of Nerea, a certaine Cousin German of his vsurping the Scepter, which he scarcely held a yeare, being slaine by his Subjects, Anno 1604. Iames was restored, and in the second yeare after expelled and slaine in battell by another of his Vncles Sonnes, called Sacimus: Paez calls him Sasinozins.

60 Antonius Fernandez thus writeth of their apparell. The richer sort buy Garments of the Saracens, and clothe themselves in their fashions. The rest both men and women couer their bodies either with a Skinne or Pelt, or with a course Hempen cloth without other arte then the Weaners. When they doe reuerence to any, they put off this Cloth from the shoulders to the nauill, remayning halfe naked. They let their haire grow, and that serues them for a Hat and Head-tyre. For finer brauerie they curl and anoint their haire with Butter, which shewes in the Sun like Grasse in the morning dew. Lest their locks and curles should be disordered, when they goe to bed, each one pitcheth a Forke or Cratch a foote high in the ground, betwixt the hornes whereof hee reposes his necke, and sleepeth with his head hanging. They vse to brand markes in their bodies, especially in the face. And on their little fingers they suffer the nailes to grow as long as they will, like Cockes spurres, which also they sometimes cut from Cockes, and fit to their fingers. They colour their hands and feet (which are bare) with the iuyce of a reddish barke. They vsually are artlesse and lazie, neglecting hunting and fishing, and whereas Wooll, Hempe and Cotton might easily be had, yet the vulgar are clothed with vndressed Pelts, each wearing a Rammes Skinne tyed to his hands and feet. They lye on Oxe-hides without Quilts or Mattresses: for Tables they vse great bowles of wood, rudely hollowed, without any Naperie. Vessels they haue of blacke Chalke. Few but Saracens vse Merchandize and in few places: most exercise Husbandrie, the Gentry follow Armes and the Court. They haue no great Cities, but Villages unwallled and unfortified. Their greatest Towne hath scarcely one thousand sixe hundred Houses. Their Houses are small, without elegance, without storie, almost without arte, round and couered with Earth and Straw. They write no Letters, nor vse Records in Iudgements, or other Writings, but in their holy things, and Officers of Accounts for the King.

They vse no Dirges or Deuotions for the dead. They vse Pictures, but not carued nor grauen Images. They paint Christ, the Blessed Virgin and other Saints in blacke forme, as Devils and wicked men in white: so they paint Christ and his Apostles at the Maundie blacke, and Iudas white; Christ in his Passion blacke, Annas, Caiphas, Pilate, Herod, and the Jewes white: Michael blacke and the Deuill white. Their fasting is rigorous not freeing the Sicke. Some Religious men abstaine wholly from flesh, which is no easie thing farre from the Sea, where they haue few fishes. They fast Wednesdaies and Fridaies, not tasting ought till night, then eating Herbes without Oyle (which they haue not) or Butter, and Bread with Apples.

Their Temples are round and encompassed with a double porch, they neither walke, nor talk, nor spit, nor sit, nor laugh in the Church: nor admit Dogges or other Domesticke creatures into the Church-yard. Horsemen alight and walke on foot before the Church as they passe. The great Altar is in the midst, Curtaines being drawne betwixt the doore and it from one side of the Church to the other, wherein none not in Orders may enter: without may Lay-men stand, which haue Crutches to support them if they be sicke or old. Some Churches are only for men, others only for women: in small Villages they are common to both, but with severall Diuisions that they may not see each other.

Ludouicus Azenedius in his Letter 1607. saith, that they confesse not the number and kinds of their sinnes, but only say in generall, I haue sinned, I haue sinned. They vse not Confirmation, nor Extreme Vnction, nor the Communion-Viaticum.

Ant. Fernandez, 1606. writeth, that in Dembea where hee then was in the Citie of Gorgorra, some receiued the Romane Faith, others refused: that the Emperour that yeare writ to the Pope to send thither some Patriarch, and to the King of Spaine for Portugall Forces, to reduce his Empire to the Faith, to which the Princes and Grandes opposed, and must by Armes be forced; but hee feared notwithstanding the mutable inconstancie of the Abassines, which care little to hold promise. God open their eyes: of twentie parts of the Empire, seuentene are almost gone. The next yeare he writeth; we are here five Priests of the Societie, some of vs attend the Emperours Campe, to conserue and encrease our Catholike number. Many commend our Doctrine, but are afraid to professe it. They obserue Jewish Circumcision, Sabbath, abstinence from the flesh which is to the Jewes vnclane, and from Fish without Finnes, and though they confesse them forbidden by Gods word, yet will they not forsake them. Following the Emperour, I take view of a great part of the Ethiopian Continent. Touching their Rebaptisations, and tradition of Soules from humane seed, and equalitie of Christs humane Nature with the Diuine, with other Abassine errors, I haue had often conflicts with their learned men, which yeilded to other things easily: but in the two last opinions were obstinate. They call Dioscorus, Blessed, condemne Leo with the Chalcedon Councell, with many reproches, and Father on him many lies touching the Natures and operations of Christ. They hold also, that God doth effect nothing besides the Consecration of things and Miracles when they are done, and thence gather that the Soule is produced of Seed. They circumcise not onely Males, but with a peculiar Rite Females also. Yearely on Twelfth day they renew Baptisme: Apostates returning from Mahometanisme, are also rebaptized, and likewise they which haue committed some erroneous crime, or haue married, or haue entred into any Religious Family. On the otherside, they are so rigorous to Infants, that before their appointed day they die without Baptisme. They come to the Eucharist without Contrition or Confession, euen the most wicked amongst them. They dissolue Marriages when they list: before the day of Iudgement they say say, that neither the Soules of the Blessed are in Heauen, nor of the wicked in Hell: Purgatorie they deny, and the Spirits proceeding from the Sonne. These errors are common to all; some are peculiar to some of them, new Heresies daily springing vp without danger as euery man listeth.

In his Letters, 1609. In this Ethiopian Empire, euery man liueth in manner in Armes, nor is the Emperours life more quiet then of other men. For euery yeare, Winter being scarcely past, himsele in person and his Captaines, renew the Warres, sometimes against Rebels, sometimes against neighbouring enemies. It cannot be vttered what confusions haue happened these two last yeares. As soone as the present Emperour began his reigne, three or foure chiefe men vsur-10 ping the Royall name, rebelled against him, but were vanquished in battaile. This very yeare, the second of his reigne, as many as haue attempted the same and comne into the field. Neither of long time haue things bin quieter. We are also constrained to waue vp and downe with these stormes; sometimes flying to the Mountaines, sometimes hiding our selues in secret Caues, sometimes we pierce thicke Woods, and vnpassable places, and suffer innumerable euils, which wee could more patiently endure, if we could gather any harvest to offer to God. This very yeare, when the Emperour was gone against a Rebell, suddaine newes came to the Campe, that the Gala (a sauage Nation of Cafres, begotten of Deuils, as the vulgar report) were at hand. It is a hundred yeares since these passed from the fields and woods, where they liued by keeping Cattell, and shaking off the Ethiopian yoake, haue attained such power, that they possesse about the 20 twelfth part of Ethiopia, and are a terrout to all. The Emperour went against them, but was ouerthrowne, to the ruine well-neere of the whole Empire. I sought to comfort him as well as I could, but he gathering his forces, suddainely rushed on the Conquerours, and reconered his losse.

One Iuan de Baltasar, a pretended Abassine, and Knight of the Militarie Order of Saint Antonie, hath written a Booke in Spanish of that Order, founded (as he saith) by the Prete Iohn, in the daies of Saint Basil, with rules receiued from him, aboue seuen hundred yeares before any Militarie Order was in the world. I know not whether his Booke (which I haue by me) hath more lies or lines, a man of a leaden braine and brazen face; seconded, if not exceeded by the Morall, Naturall, and Politickall Historie of Ethiopia, the worke of his Scholler Luis d'Ur-30 reta, a Spanish Frier and lyer; The said Godignus euery where through his first Booke confutes him, it is more then enough that wee haue named such more then Vroptian, such Legendarie fore-heads: and though we will not blot Paper with mention of their assertions, yet haue their ouerflowing commendations of the Ethiopian Faith, and admiration of their State, made thus many Witnesses to be mustered, sometimes repeating the same things, by more abundant allegations to signifie and prooue the truth. We will further trouble the Reader with some extracts of Peter Paex, chiefe of the Iesuites in those parts. For Melchior Syluius a Priest of Goa, sent into Abassia, consulting with the Abassine Portugals, which way any Iesuite might be sent thither, was answered, that the Port of Bailur ouer against Moha, was freest of danger, which 40 Paex seeking to doe, by the Monson was preuented, and the next yeare by a Turke, Seruant of the Captaine of Suachen, trading at Diu, named Rezoam Aga, was in Armenian habite thither conueyed. His iourney himsele hath written in a Letter to the Iesuites at Goa, the foure and twentieth of Iuly, 1603.

THE two and twentieth of March we set Sails, Rezoam Aga sent me of his prouision twice a day, and landing at Mazua, procured me fauour of the Gouernour, with licence to goe whether I would into Ethiopia or Cairo. I thanked him, and said, That I would goe to a certaine Towne to see whether my Kinsman being dead, I might succeed in the Inheritance. The Banean Saranga or Captaine of the ship had receiued charge of the owner touching me, and sent two Saracens with mee, with whom, and five Christians of Abassia, I departed on the first of May. I went in a vile ragged habite for feare of 50 Theeues, which there vse to rob and kill, which so freed our Company, that as wee went by night none spake but whisperingly. Neere morning wee thought to haue slept, but a Lyon terrified vs, within eight paces of me, but with our shawting he departed. The next day we passed high and cragged Hills, for feare of Theeues, and came at night to a Village of Saracens. On Holy-Thursdai, we came to certaine Christian Herd-men, which supposing mee a Turke, fled, but learning that I was a Priest, kissed my hands with ioy, and refreshed us with store of Milke in vessels of Straw, which they set on burning stones to beate. Bread they had none, and was, they said, a rare thing to them, and farre brought. Their wines which had hid themselves, came the next day to intreat my blessing, some kissing my hands, others falling at my feete. We went thence ouer rough Mountaines, troubled also with raine, the way not aboue three foote broad, on both sides so steepe, that I durst not looke downe for feare of giddinesse. Blind al-6 most and wearie, we came at last to the top, and found a plainer path, (for I had not beene able to haue descended the like) and a Towne of Christians which brought vs their Bookes and Crosses. Herewe were inuited to a poore Cottage, which yet was in good season for vs, a violent raine following, which else had oppressed vs. On the tenth of May we came to Barua, where all my Company left me, but one Saracen and a Christian. Another Saracen which dwelt here sent mee a Hen, but the Christian which was with me, gat him away, because the Abassines (forsooth) eate not any thing killed by a Turke: and I for feare of offence, sent it backe with thanks to the sender, eating dry Bisket brought from Diu, without any other things, though faint. Neither would the Gold I had doe me any seruice heere to buy provision, their currant Money being stones of Salt. The Bread of my Companions was halfe baked Dough, of round forme, which they bake with putting a hot stone into the Dough, and rolling it, cast it into the fire, so that the out-side is scorched, the in-side unbaked. This they carried in their Budgets, but my stomacke could not beare it. Hither on the eleventh of May, came Iohn Gabriel, the Captaine of the Portugals, hauing receiued my Letters from Mazua, with other Portugals. To giue mee better entertainment, they killed a Sheepe, which I tasted not, they eating it a little scorched and halfe raw, after the Countrey custome. Here I had a Mule, and we travelled twentie together, yet not without feare of Theeues, the raine also towards euening daily molesting vs (and we were forced to lye in the open fields) heat also exceeding in the ascent of an exceeding Mountaine, and as exceeding cold on the top. On the fifteenth of May, we came to Fremona, where Ouiedo and others of our Fathers were buried in the chiefe Church of the Portugals. We were receiued with great deuotion of the people. I went to the Patriarchs house, which is round as an Apple and couered with straw, as are all which we haue yet seene in Ethiopia, (all of Earth, and round, little, without distinct roomes; except those of the King and great men which haue severall roomes, but yet of Earth and Thatched.) The Patriarchs house was twentie palmes or spans ouer. Heere were Melchior Syluius his things, which had carried with him the holy Vestments. Sunday following being Whitsunday, I celebrated a dry Masse and preached. Many came to Confession. The Portugall Captaine was sent for to the Court by the new Emperour, to whom I writ, who by writing welcomed me, and licensed me to goe to him, which I purpose at the end of September, which is the end of Winter: for of him depend all the Priests, and all will be Catholikes if he command, as well Clergie as Laity. The Emperours name is Malac Sequed, aged fiftene yeares. On the last of Iune, Syluius returned from a worse iourney then that of ours, more craggie and rough, of twentie daies, which hee goeth twise in the yeare to Nanina, to the Catholikes there. I send your Worshipps the head of the holy Patriarch, although not whole, hauing bene often digged up: I adde three pieces of the skull, and the iaw with eight teeth. On the other side, send you me, I pray, some Image of the blessed Virgines Conception, of fine or sixe spannes, for the seruice of this Temple wanting an Image. I haue placed the head of Father Francis Lopes in my Bolster, being yet hairy, for my more viue memorie of his life, which what it was you shall receiue by our informations, as also of Father Abraham, of whom you haue heard no fame, &c.

While Paez remained at Fremona, hee translated the Catechisme into the Amaran tongue (which is there counted the most elegant) and made the Children learne it by heart. In this yeere 1603. great misery happened by Grasse-hoppers, from which, Paez freed the Catholikes, by Letanies and sprinkling the Fields with Holy-water; when as the Fields of Heretikes, seuered onely by a Ditch, were spoyled by them. Yea, a Heretike vsing this sacred sprinkling, preserved his Corne, which to a Catholike neglecting in one Field, was lost, and preserved in another by that coniured aspersiion (so neere of kinne are these Locusts to the Deuill, which is said * to hate Holy-water, or else make a quere for other Locusts, worse then the Egyptian mentioned Apoc. 9.) About the end of September, when hee had thought to haue gone to the Court, newes came, that the Emperours Sisters Husband conspired against him, and imprisoned him, alleading that he was no Christian, because one of his Guard was an Ethnick, and that his Father was not the King, but one Batius a vulgar person. He being produced and thus accused, stood mute; because (said hee) his Subiects presumed to iudge their Soueraigne: Hee was sent into close keeping to Damijeta.

The Viceroy of Tigrai passing by, Paez went to salute him: who willed him to sit downe on his Carpet, when all the rest stood: and asked why the Portugals did not now as in time past, frequent the Red Sea; whether they were afraide of the Turkes. Hee answered, that Turkes rather feared the Portugals, and fled into the Countrey when they aproached the Coast: but this was the true reason that all the ships of India came thither out of Portugall Ports, and most of their goods appertained to the Portugals.

He went to the Monasterie Conegorum, where he saw their Church, the Altar inuironed with a threefold Curtaine, reaching to the wall on both sides, sometime couered with stone, now with straw, the Saracens hauing spoyled the former, and therefore darke: they shewed him a Crucifixe painted on a Linnen cloth, as a precious thing, yet artlesly wrought. They set him on a Carpet, themselves and the Portugals sitting on the ground. Ouer against the doore, were ten faire stones, in the midst whereof, they say, the Emperour is inaugurated. A little further are thirteene stones in Pyramide fashion, the greatest whereof is twelue spannes broad, and about sixtie high, with much workmanship, the matter admirable whence it could bee brought hither. The Viceroy forbade his Iudges to meddle with the Towne of Catholikes, and appointed Paez their Iudge. The Galla did much mischief at this time, and slew the King of Narea, tributary to the Abassine, whom also they assaulted, but were ouerthrowne. After this, the King sent for Paez, who was brought to the King, sitting on a high Throne, and kissed his hand, being bidden also to be couered, and to sit on the Carpet. After this, followed another day day; a dispute about abolishing the legall Rites, two wills in Christ, and Purgatorie, all which, they denie. The King was desirous to see their Masse, but for want of Wine, he could performe onely a dry Office; for which, the King caused a great Tent to bee erected, and in it, another lesse for his Throne: the Iesuite preached with great applause; whom the Empresse also desiring to heare, when the Emperour saw him standing, hee arose from his Throne, and inuited him to make his Sermon out of it, himselfe sitting on the Foot-stoole. Another time, when in conference, Paex called himselfe the Emperours Subiect; no, said hee, my Father and King: and gaue great hopes of the conuersion of that Nation, which were dashed by his death, which Paex signified in his Letter, the thirtieth of Iuly, 1605. Namely, that Zezelazeus, whom the Emperour had deliuered from exile, and exalted, had conspired together with Eras Athanatheus, (the next to the Emperor) who yet made faire shew, and bound himselfe after the Alasine manner, in the bond of excommunication, to fidelitie and loyaltie, which yet he kept not: Zezelazeus gathered great forces, alleading against the Emperours, that he forsooke his Religion, and imbraced the Portugall and Romane; and therefore all that were zealous, ought to take armes against him. This made some sweare to kill all the Portugals, and the Iesuite especially. Before the battell, he wished him present to confesse himselfe to him. In the battell, Anabel which before had forsoken him, returned to his Part with his Sonne: but hee suspecting him; False Traitor thou wentest, said he, and so thou returnest, withall, killing him, which his sonne seeing ranne the Emperour thorow the necke, and thrust him off his Horse, whom Zezelazeus and the Saracens dispatched. Three daies hee lay dead in the field, naked and subiect to contumelies, and after that, meanelly buried.

Paex was all this while in Goyame, whence he was sent for by the Empresse, and kindly entertained. Sazinofius by election succeeded in the Empire foure Moneths, then forsaken, and Iames restored out of his Narean imprisonment and exile, passing thorow the Galle's Countrey with great hazard. In the yeere 1607. Sazinofius ouercame him in battell, neither was Iames any more seene. This Sazinofius was a man of singular arts and parts for warre and peace, munificent and faithfull, aged fise and thirty yeeres, affected to the Romane faith. A yeere and halfe he had to doe with Rebels, same affecting Soueraignty, which hee brought to Subiection. Much adoe he had also with the Galle (which came to subdue the Agai, which are white Christians, to sell them to the Saracens) whom in foure battels he ouerthrew. After this, followed another rebellion, with successe like to the former. Hee sent Zezelazeus prisoner into the Kingdome of Goroma, whence he escaped and was slaine of the Pesants. He sought to vnite the Abassine Church with the Romane, and writ to the Pope and the King of Spaine. His Letters to the Pope are these.

THE Letters of Malasegued the Abassine Emperour, let come to the holy Father Bishop of Rome, with the peace of Iesus Christ, which hath loued vs, and washed vs from our sinnes in his bloud, and made us a Kingdome and Priests to God and the Father. This peace bee with your Holinesse, and the whole Church of Christ, &c. Such is the spoile and ruine of our Empire by warres past, that although we haue subdued some Rebels, yet are there others more puissant abroad, the Ethnick Galla, which haue subiected no small part of the Kingdome, and daily molest vs with new incursions, miserably vexing old and young: which their rage cannot in seeming be repressed without the ayd of the King of Portugall. Wherefore we intreat him to send vs ayde as his Ancestors did to our Progenitors. And that my Petition may haue more weight, I thought good to write to your Holinesse, the Pastor and Father of all the faithfull, to signifie so much to our Brother, &c. October 14. 1607. The like he writ to the King of Spaine, Decemb. 10. as also did Eras Athanatheus.

The reason of this name, I thinke to be their custome of changing Name when they come to the Empire.

The Iesuites there giue their Agnus Dei's, Graines, &c. The Abassines weare Amulets of words of the Gospell, hanging about their necks. Amongst other Rebels which arose in Armes against Sazinofius, was not one farre from Fremona, which had beene an Anchorite, or Hermite in a Wildernesse twentie yeeres, not putting off yet his ambition of a Scepter. He had theeues to associate him, of which there are plentie. But I haue almost beene robbed of discretion, and seeme to haue robbed my Readers patience to wilder, and while him so long in this miserable Abassia.

The Commodities they carrie, are all kind of Indian cloathing, and likewise of our English Commodities, (Broad-cloath, Kerseys, Lead, Tinne; likewise, Veluets, Damaskes, masks, Sattens, Taffitae, and all other sorts of Silke Stuffs. Their measure is about halfe a yard; Cloath, which is worth in Moha foure Rials of eight, is there worth eight Rials. The price of Kerseyes, is halfe the price of Broad-cloath: The Colours they most desire, are Reds, Greens, Violets, Murreys, and other light Colours: Yellowes in no esteeme, nor Blacks.

Veluets of China of all sorts are worth ten Rials of eight the halfe yard. Veluets of Italy are much more worth: but not so profitable to the Merchants, because they are much dearer. Sattens of Florence are worth ten Rials; Damaskes of the better sort, worth eight or ten Rials. Taffitae three Rials; all colours well sold, excepting Yellowes and Blackes.

The Commodities of that Country, with their Prizes.

Ciuet, great quantitie is to be had, the price is three Wakias, (which is neere vpon foure ounces English, for five Rials of eight. Elephants teeth, the Bahar, worth thirtie Rials. The Bahar is three hundred and sixtie Rottollies of Moha. Waxe one hundred Rottollies, worth one Rial of eight. Gold the Rottolly, worth sixtie Rials, the Rottolly is neere vpon sixteen ounces and a halfe. Lead and Tinne in great request. Tinne worth the Rottolly, one Rial, Lead much more worth, because the Turk wil not suffer any to be carried into his Country.

Bezar-stones many are to be had, and little worth: here are many Beasts with one horne in their fore-head like a Vnicorne; which horne, they say, is good against poyson. There are of them which weigh eight pound, some seuen, foure, and three pound: the greatest and fairest, worth some foure Rials the piece, and those of a lesser sort worth lesse: among the Turkes and Moors in Arabia, euery pound is worth one Rial of eight.

From Grancairo there goeth in August a great Carrauan, and likewise another in Nouember. The Commodities they carrie from thence, are Broad-cloaths, Kerseyes, Veluets, Sattens, Damaskes, and all sorts of Silkes. From Cayro to Dombia is fiftie daies trauell by Carrauan.

The Kings State.

Firt, he sits on a gilt Bed-sted like those of China, and there commeth great troops of men daily to salute him; some daies two thousand, some daies more, some daies lesse; but Friday being their day of Fast, there commeth a farre greater quantitie.

CHAP. I.

The Historie of the first Expedition to Ierusalem, by GODFREY of Bullen, ROBERT of Normandie, and other Christian Princes: Written

30 by ROBERT, whom some call the Englishman, a Monke of Saint REMIGIVS, which was present both at the Councell of Claremont, and in the said Expedition: translated and abbreuiated.

40 IN the yeare of our Lord 1095. a great Councell was celebrated at Claremont, in Auvergne on the Confines of France, wherein Pope Urban the Second was present and President with the Bishops and Cardinals: where many French and Germane Bishops and Princes were assembled. Ecclesiasticall Affaires being there set in order, the Lord Pope went forth into a broad street (for no House was able to containe the multitude) and spake thus with perswasive pleasant Rhetoricke vnto them.

O yee Nation of the French, O Nation, (as appeareth by many of your workes) beloued and chosen of God, separated from all Nations, as well in situation of your Region, as in Catholike Religion and Honour of holy Church; to you is our Speech directed, and our Exhortation intended, willing to let you know what lamentable cause hath brought vs to your Borders.

50 From the Confines of Ierusalem and Constantinople a grieuous report hath spread and often come to our eares, that the Persians * a cursed Nation estranged quite and alienate from God, hath invaded the Countries of those Christians, and with sword, spoile and fire hath partly captined, partly slaine them; either subuerting, or else peruerting to their wicked Rites the Churches of God, polluting his Altars, circumcising Christians and shedding that bloud of Circumcision on the Altars, or in the Christning Fonts. Whom they please to kill with shamefull death, they open at the nauill, and taking out the entrailles tye them to a stake and whip them about the same, till being exenterated they fall on the ground: others they bind to a stake and shoot at; of others they make tryall whether with one blow they can strike off the head. What shall I say of that which may not, cannot, by saying be expressed, the rauishment of women? The Greeke Empire for the space of two monethes tourney, they haue ouer-runne and subdued. To whom then doth the reuenge and deliuerance belong but to you, whom God hath preferred aboue other Nations in honour of 60 Armes, courage of hearts, agilitie of bodies, and abilitie to abase euery Enemy. Let the Exploits of your Predecessors incite your manly spirits, the goodnesse and greatnesse of Carolus Magnus, and Lewis his Sonne, with other your Kings, which haue destroyed the Kingdome of Turkes, and in them enlarged the borders of the Church. And aboue all, let the holy Sepulchre of our Lord and Sauour mooue you, which is possessed of impure Nations; and those holy places which are shamefully abused and vnreuerently

uerently defiled by their filthinesse. O most valiant Souldiers, and the Progeny of invincible Progenitors, doe not you degenerate, but call to mind the vertues of your Ancestors. And if the deare affection of Wives and Children stay you, remember what our Lord sayth in the Gospell, Hee that loueth Father or Mother more then mee, is not worthy of mee. Euery one which shall forsake House, or Father, or Mother, or Wife, or Children, or Lands for my Name, shall receiue a hundred fold, and shall possesse eternall life. Take no care for your Lands and Goods, for this your Land is enclosed with Mountaines and Seas, is to strait for your multitude, and scarcely yeelds sustenance to her Inhabitants. Hence it is that you bite and deuoure one another, make warres and slay each other. Let hatred cease, braules be silenced, Warres be husht, and Dissentions be lulled asleepe. Enter the way of the holy Sepulchre, take away the Land from that wicked people and subdue it vnto you. That Land was giuen to the children of Israel, flowing, as sayth the Scripture, with Milke and Honey. Ierusalem is the Nauill of the Earth, a Land fertile aboue others, as it were another Paradise. This bath the Redeemer of Mankind made glorious with his comming, adorned with his conuersation, consecrated with his Passion, redeemed with his Bloud, sealed with his Sepulchre. This Royall Citie placed in the midst of the World, is now held captiue of her Enemies, and is by them which know not God, enthralled to the custome of the Gentiles. She seekes then and desireth to bee freed, not ceasing to pray for your succour: and that of you chiefly whom God hath best fitted for Armes, undertake yee this way then for remission of your sinnes, being assured of the immarcesible glory of the Heauenly Kingdome.

These and many like words with much Vrbane did Pope Urban pronounce, and so moued the hearts of all present, that with one voice they cryed, Deus vult, Deus vult; which the Pope hearing with eies lifted to Heauen, he gaue thanks to God, and acknowledged it the worke of God which put it into their minds.

a God wils, or
it is Gods will,

Let therefore this voice (saith he) be your word in your Warres, and when you shall giue the on-set on the Enemie, on Gods behalfe this shall be your vniuersall out-crie, Deus a vult, Deus vult. Wee neither bid nor counsaile that men aged and feeble, unfit for Warre should undertake this iourney, nor women without their Husbonds, and Brethren, or lawfull testimonies: for these are more hinderance then helpe. Let the rich helpe the poore, and carrie with them at their charge men fit for Warre. Priests, or Clerkes of any order may not goe without their Bishops leaue, without which this way would bee vnprofitable for them. For neither is it expedient for Lay-men to trauell, but with the blessing of their Priest. Whosoener therefore shall haue a purpose of this holy Pilgrimage, and shall make a Vow thereof to God, that he will offer a lining Sacrifice holy, acceptable to God, let him weare the signe of our Lords Crosse on his fore-head or on his brest. And hee which hauing performed his Vow shall goe thence, let him put it behind betwixt his shoulders. Both wayes shall such accomplish our Lords Com-mandement in the Gospell, Hee which doth not beare his Crosse and come after mee, is not worthy of mee.

b This was the deuotion of that time. Our Kings if they went to Normandie, had the Bishops blessing at the shoare, &c.

After this, one of the Cardinals named Gregorie, in the name of all that were prostrate on the ground, said his Confession, and so all knocking their breasts obtayned Absolution of those things which they had done amisse, and after their Absolution a Blessing, and after the Blessing licence to returne home. And that it may appeare that this worke was of God and not of Man (as after wee learned) on that very day in which these things were said and done, Fame preached it thorow the World; insomuch that in the Ilands of the Sea it was reported, that the Ierusalem Voyage was concluded in the Councell. All the Laitie returned home; and Pope Urbane caused the Bishops to assemble the next day, and consulted with them what course might bee taken for such a multitude of Pilgrimes, seeing there was not yet amongst them any Prince of Name. And they all chose the Bishop Podiensis, saying, that hee was a man fit for Affaires Diuine and Humane, well skilled both wayes and prouident in his actions. He therefore like another Moses, receiued the charge and conduct of the Lords people, with the Popes blessing and of the whole Councell. O how many of diuers age and condition receiued Crosses in that Councell, and vowed the way of the holy Sepulchre? Thence was it divulged abroad, and to the eares of Kings and Princes came this honourable Constitution of the Councell, It pleased all and more then three hundred thousand conceiue it in their purpose, and are now eager to fight with the Turkes.

Peter the Heremite, and Godfrey of Bullen.

There was in those dayes one Peter, which had beene an Heremite, much esteemed among them which are skilled in the World, and preferred before Bishops and Abbots in Religious account, because he neither did eate bread nor flesh: yet did hee vse Wine and all other food, and sought the chiefest abstinence in Delicacies. He at that time gathered no small multitude of horse and foot, and made his way thorow Hungaria, being associated to a Dutch Commander, called Godfrey the Sonne of Eustace Earle of Bullen, but in Office of dignitie hee was a Dutch Leader. He was a man of goodly countenance, tall stature, pleasant speech, worthy behauiour, and so milde of disposition, that he seemed more like a Monke then a Souldier; but when the Enemie was at hand hee was a dreadlesse Lion. Hee with his Brethren Eustace and Baldwin, and a great Armie passed the way of Hungarie, the way which Charles the Great appointed to his Armie to Constantinople. First therefore, Peter the Heremite with his, and a great multitude of Almanes came to Constantinople, and found there a copious band of Lombards, and many others assem-assembled from places farre distant. To whom the Emperour denyed entrance into the Citie, suspecting much the Christian valour, especially of the French. He granted them yet to buy and sell, but forbade them to passe ouer the Sea, called Saint Georges Arme, till the dreadfull Armie of the French was comne. For there was an infinite number of Turkes which brutishly thirsted for their approach, by whom they must needs be destroyed, if they passed sooner, as afterward it hapned. But euery company wanting a good Gouvernour, guided by an ill head, groweth feeble and is farre from safetie. Thus they wanting a prudent Prince to rule them, destroyed the Churches and Palaces of the Citie, spoyling them of their goods and leaden roofes, selling the same to the Greekes. Whereupon the Emperour Alexius being angry, commanded them to passe Saint Georges Arme, which going further, chose one Rainald for their Leader, not ceasing to commit the like out-rages, burning Houses, and robbing Churches. Thus came they to Nicomedia, and thence entred the Land of Romania: and hauing walked three dayes went beyond Nice, and found a Castle called Exerogorgo emptie of men, but plentifully store with Corne, Wine, Flesh and all kind of Prouisions. The Turkes for feare of the French had gone farre off, but sent their Spies, by whom they were informed, that these new Ghests were Wasters and Spoilers rather then Vlers and Possessors, whom therefore they begirt with a strait Siege, the besieged hauing exchanged their former Riots with such want of drinke, that they were faine to supply that want with letting their beasts bloud, to satisfie the Owners thirst, or else with their owne Vrine. This was about Michaelmas, when Rainald their Leader to saue his life made close composition with the Turkes and fled to them, leauing such as would not turne Turkes as he did, for loue of the World, to be by them turned out of the World by ludibrious and reprochfull deathes, or to hold a title of life with reall captiuitie and base seruitude.

Peter the Heremite was in the Castle Ciuio about Nice, against whom they remooued, and by the way encountred with Walter his Generall, whom valiantly fighting they oppressed with multitudes and slue: and after that, all the Christians they could meet with, they killed or captiued. Peter himselfe being gone to Constantinople, they forced his Castle. The Emperour and the Greekes playd the Greekes, and reioyced hereat, buying their Armes of the needie Souldiers, so to disarm them.

IN the meane-while, God stirred vp two Earles alike in Dignitie, Armes, Courage, Name, The second Bloud and Power, Robert and Robert, the Earles of Normandie and Flanders, and with them Booke. Hugo Magnus Brother to Philip the King of France, Stephen Earle Carnotensis and other inferiour Earles, many both of France, and of the Greater and Lesse Britaine from the North, and from the South the Bishop Podiensis and Raimund Earle of Saint Giles (or Tholouse) which being very rich sold all that he had and vndertooke the Enterprize. And now the West prepareth to enlighten the East, and with new raised starres to expell that darknesse, the brightnesse of their minds excelling that of their Armes, all resolving to die, or conquer. They passed the Alpes at diuers times and came to Rome (the Citie not being able to lodge them all) where hauing visited the holy places, and commended themselues to the Merits and Prayers of the Apostles and other Saints, and receiued the Popes blessing, they passed thorow Apulia; a Prince whereof named Boamund was then in the siege of Malphi, on the Sea-shoare, who hearing of their Leaders, Orders, honestie, their word Deus vult, their Weapons, Courage, Crosses on the fore-head or right shoulder, sent for two precious Garments and cut them into Crosses, and said, If any be our Lords, let him now bee ioyned to me, and yee that now are my Souldiers, become Gods, and enter the way of the holy Sepulchre with me, and take my things as yours. Are not we also of French bloud, and did not our Parent come out of France, and subdue this Land by Armes? Shall our Kinsmen and Brethren goe to Martyrdome and Paradise without vs? In all Ages to come a back-sliding cowardise will bee imputed to vs, if this diuine Warfare bee performed without vs. Presently all of them cryed, Wee will goe out with thee and vow the way of the Sepulchre; the Crosses not being sufficient. The Nobles of Apulia, Calabria, and Sicilia, did also the like, insomuch that the Duke of Apulia, Brother to the said Boamund (both Sonnes of Robert Wischard) was afraid to abide in his Dukedome, being left alone with children and women.

Whiles Boamund provided necessities, Hugo tooke Sea at Bari, to Dyrrachium, others to Brundium, or Otranto. The Emperour had commanded his Officers to take all these Pilgrimes and bring them to Constantinople to doe him fealtie, that what they tooke should be his. But when Hugo met there Duke Godfrey, he reioyced of his taking, both renewing their old friendship, and discovering the Emperours fraud: who before had laid ambushes to kill closely Duke Godfrees men as they went to provide necessities, which being perceiued by his Brother Baldwine, was with counter-ambush turned on the Imperials, and after another like assault on Godfrees Tents. The Emperour frustrated, sought to make peace, and permitted buying of prouision. The rest not long after arrived, and after them Boamund with Tancred his Nephew, and Richard the Son of Marchis, who passed by Bulgaria, and Andrinople, and being encountred by the Emperours Forces, in the way ouerthrew them, and after receiued faire semblance from him, but with no lesse malice. Homage was in conclusion required by the Emperour, that is, securitie of peace, that he should conduct and provide for them, accompanying them with his presence, and the assistance of his people, swearing to supply their necessitie in Armes and Clothes, and not to hurt or consent to the hurt of any Pilgrime. This they sware vnto, so long to continue as the Emperour kept his Oath. But the Earle of Saint Giles refused, and would haue him and his Citie destroyed. But being perswaded by the rest, he took this Oath, I sweare to Alexius the Emperour that neuer by me nor mine he shall loose life or honour or whatsoever hee now possesseth iustly or vniustly. And the Emperour sware, I Alexius Emperour sweare to Hugo Magnus, Duke Godfrey, and other the Princes of the French here present, neuer to hurt or suffer to bee hurt any Pilgrime of the Holy Sepulchre, and that I will proceed with them in Warlike Affaires, and according to my power will provide them sufficient Market. This they did, forced by necessitie, but hee chose rather to incurre Perjurie then not to remooue the French from his Frontiers.

After this Confederacie the Emperour commanded ships to be brought for transportation of the Armie. Godfrey and Tancred were first transported, went to Nicomedia, and staid three dayes: and seeing no passage the Duke sent before foure thousand men with Axes and Ploughes and other Iron Instruments to make way, the way being waylesse, thorow Hills, Dales and Praecipices. These made way with much labour to Nice, and set wooden Crosses at euery turning. They came to Nice the sixth of May, and before any prouision was brought a Loafe of bread was sold for twentie or thirtie pence. But Boamund brought plentie, and on Holy Thursday they besieged the Citie and addressed thereto their Engines, Slings, Rammes and the like. The Turkes made valiant resistance, shooting poysoned Arrowes, which killed whom they but lightly wounded.

Ours

Ours erect high Engines about the Walls, by which they might ouer-see the men on the Wall, and opposed Turrets of Wood to those of Stone. The fight was hote, and the besieged ready, to yeeld when they saw threescore thousand comming in their Troupes from the Mountaines, two for fight, whiles the thrd might enter the Citie. No Hunger-bitten stomacke is readier to flye to a Feast then the Christians to the fight, where hauing slaine them and returned to the Citie, they with Slings cast their heads into the Citie, and the next day hauing ships prepared, entred the Lake on the South-side of the Citie, which so afrighted the Turkes, that by the Turcopola they sent to the Emperour, that they would yeeld the Citie to him on composition to depart with their goods. This was done, and the Turkes carryed to Constantinople, (with purpose to haue them in better readinesse against the Frankes) after seuen weekes and three dayes siege, no Citie being so defensible in all Romania.

They departed thence & two daies after came to a bridge, and refreshing themselves there two dayes, they parted themselves being to trauell in a barren Countrey, the greater band being committed to Hugo Magnus; and with him the Bishop, the Earles of Flanders and Saint Giles, and Duke Godfrey: the other to Boamund. After three dayes march, this later Armie is encountred with three hundred thousand Turkes, whereat some shrinking and thinking to flie, Boamund a man popular, and Robert of Normandie a stout Warriour, commanded to pitch their Tents; but before this was done, one hundred and fiftie Turkes with poysoned Arrowes, began a skirmish turning their backes (according to their custome in their flight to wound the pursuers) and were taken and slaine. There was now no place for flight, the Enemie hauing possessed the Hills, and the Frankes hauing broken their Launces in those wicked bodies, it came to handie strokes, with the Sword.

Some got to the Christians Tents, and slay the Mother and Childe, whose cry comming to Boamunds eares, he commits the battell to the Norman Earle, and speedily repaires thither, chased the Turkes, and leauing some to guard them, returnes to the battell. Here hee finds the Christians so tired with labour, thirst and heat, that had not the women brought them water out of the adioyning Riuer many had dyed. Now had ours once turned their backes, but presently the Norman Earle displaying his Golden Banner, turned his Horse, and redoubled the Military word, Deus vult, Deus vult, otherwise that had proued a dismall day. But seeing Boamund and the Norman, they recovered their spirits, chusing to dye rather then to flye. The Turkes had so beset ours with their multitude, that no way was open but to their Tents: many perished by Turkish Arrowes; none was idle, the Souldiers fighting, the Priests crying and praying, the women conueying the slaine to the Tents, the Aire ouer-shadowed with a thicke Cloud of shot; when Hugo and Duke Godfrey came flying like prouoked Eagles, to their distressed Airies with fortie thousand freshmen. And now the cries of some fighting, and others dying, the ratling of Armors and cracking of Launces, filled the Hills and Valleys with confused noyses of insulting voyces, and resulting ecchoes; and manifold deaths are represented to the life in miserable spectacles.

The Turkes now looking backe to the Hills, see the Bishoppe Podiensis and Earle Raimund, with the rest of the Armie, descending to the on-set as a terrible storme, showing Souldiers, and powring Weapons, and not able further to hold vp head or heart, betooke them to their heeles: which put life into our wounded, to pursue and reuenge their hurts; insomuch, that the Hill is coloured red, the thirstie earth is drunken, & increaseth the Neighbour Riuer with new streames of Persian, Median, Syrian, Saracen, and Turkish blood, leauing their carkasses like Grasse-hoppers without number on the ground; the Night at last deliuering the remnant of these children of darknesse, from the Christian Zeale which now conuerted it selfe into Hymnes and Prayses of the Great Lord of Hosts.

The next day they buried their dead, distinguished by Crosses, the wiser sort giuing them the veneration of Martyrs, and the most Honourable Sepulture. The spoyle of the Turkes clothed with Silke, the halfe naked Christians, furnished them with Armes, and of beggers suddenly made them rich. The day after, which was the third of Iuly, they pursued the Turkes which fled as Birds before the Hawke.

Soliman their Leader (Sonne of that Soliman which had taken all Romania from the Emperour) had after his flight from Nice, procured tenne thousand Arabians to come to his aide: which being comne, hee told them that the vertue of the Frankes was either Diuine or Diaboli-call, whom wee, saith hee, had so conquered (in conceit) that wee had provided Withes and Halters to put about their neckes, when suddenly a people which feares not death came downe the Mountaines, and entred our Troupes. Alas, wee were three hundred and threescore thousand, and are all slaine or fled. This is the fourth day since, and still we tremble. And therefore if you will be aduised, get yee out of Romania. Thus they fled with him, in all Christian Townes as they passed, making a cheerefull countenance and semblance of Victorie; and spoyling all that opened to them, so to impouerish the pursuing Frankes by preuenting them of prouisions, leauing a Desert Countrey vnto them.

Veneration of Martyrs to their slaine friends, by zeale or superstition.

Compare this with eightie eight prouision Three hundred and sixtie thousand Turkes.

Thus were they forced to kill most of their Horses, and many to goe on foote; others, to ride on Oxen, Kine, and the great and strong Rams and Dogs of that Countrey. They passed thence therefore as fast as they could, and entred Lycaonia, a plentifull Countrey, and came to Iconium a rich Citie. When they went thence, they by counsell of the Citizens carried vessels of water with them, which serued till the second day after, that they came to a Riuer: where hauing stayed two daies, they went forward to Heraclea. Heere were a great multitude of Turkes, which seeing the Frankes approach, fled amaine, and left the Citie to ours, which stayed there foure daies. Then did Baldwin Brother of Godfrey, and Tancred, separate themselves with their troups, and went to Tarsus. Many Turkes were there which went to meete them, but were disperfed, and the next day the Citizens receiued them into the Citie. Here arose a contention betwixt Baldwin and Tancred, whether should haue rule of the Citie, which Tancred at last yeelded to Baldwin, whose Armie was the greater. In short time two Cities, Athena and Mannistra, were yeelded to them, and many Castles. The Turkes were now hidden in their strongest holds.

The greatest part of the French, entred into the Land of the Armenians, eagerly thirsting to make the Land drunken with bloud of Turkes; the whole Land was quiet before them, and the Armenians receiued them into their Cities. They came to a Castle which feared neither armes nor engines. A Souldier in the Campe, an Armenian, desired to hold that Land of the Princes, in the tealtie of God and the holy Sepulchre; whereto they yeelded, because they knew him to be a valiant man. After this, they came to Cesarea of Cappadocia, which voluntarily yeelded it selfe. Thence they went to a faire City which the Turkes had assieged a little before, three weekes, the Citizens whereof came forth to meete them. Another Knight in the Campe, named Peter de Alpibus, desired this, and obtayned it of the Princes. After this, they came to Cofor, a commodious and plentifull City; where they were gently receiued of the Christian Inhabitants, and stayed thee dayes, furnishing themselves with necessaries, and receiuing abundant refreshing.

Meane while, Ramiundus had intelligence that the Turkes were fled from Antiochia, and had left it weakely manned; who deuised thereupon, to conuey thither five hundred Knights*, to take the Towre before the rest knew of it. But when they were come into the Valley neere Antiochia, they then perceiued that the Turkes were not gone, but fortified the City all they could. They went therefore to the Castle of the Publicans, subdued it, and turned thence to the Valley of Rugia, where they slew many Turkes and Saracens: whereupon, the Armenians reioycing, yeelded themselves. They possessed themselves of Rusa and many Castles. The rest of the Armie with miserable disaster passed mountainous wayes, passable onely for Beasts and creeping things, yeelding a Foot-path indeed, a way of no wider space, Rocks, Shrubs, Thornes, proud Hills aspiring to the Stars, and Hells of deepe Valleyes affrighting the very eyes, where the Knights* and Esquires carried their Armes hanging on their necks, some throwing them away, to auoide the carriage, all enforced to goe on foote; yea, often bearing the burthens of their Beasts, which could not passe laden: neither might any stand or sit, by reason of the followers, or turne himselfe in those straits, to helpe him which followed. By this vnpassable passage (the embleme of the true and heavenly Pilgrimage) they came at last to Marasis, where they were receiued cheerefully with plentifull refection. Hauing staid one day, they came the next day into the Valley in which Antiochia is seated, chiefe City of Syria; whilome famous by Saint Peter Prince of the Apostles: in it, he placed his Episcopall Chaire, and* ordered Barnabas and Paul Apostles. But as first our Lord would conquer it with humilitie and preaching, so now with sublimitie of Armes. Ours came to the Iron Bridge, where they encountred many Turkes, which prohibited their passage, and made their way by force, and there found rich spoyles. They pitched their Tents on the Riuer's banke, not farre from the City; and the next day prepare to goe to the City, and lay siege to it in three place. For on one side the Mountaines prohibit acceffe and all militarie Art. On Wednesday, the twelfth Kal. of December, was this siege begunne, and because the City was not onely the minion of Nature, but Paragon of Art, the Princes consulted to vse more their Arts then Armes.

First therefore, they made a Bridge for commodious passage ouer the Riuer, for they found a copious Vintage, Caves full of Corne and prouisions, Trees laden with varietie of fruits, which the Armenians within the City made knowne to them. Engines were erected, Turrets of wood, Slings, Hookes, Rammes, Moles, and other deuises. There were within so many defenders, as might haue tryed it in the field with ours. They builded a Castle, if haply the Turkes preuailed, for better securitie. The Garison of Arech hauing cut off diuers of our Victualers, an ambush was laide, and many Turkes slaine, their heads cast (by Engines) into the City: and thence forwards, our men had freer passage to the Armenians for prouisions, which readily brought also to sell. Christmas Festiuitie was celebrated with ioyfull solemnity: after which, the Winter with Elementary forces, helped the Enemie to assault vs, and made prouision difficult: famine within; without, Haile, Snow, Ice, Windes, Armies without Armes, but not without harmes harmes, to them which were without shelter, exposed to their fury, euery way pinched, but in resolution, and therefore quickned by these spurres: they agreed that Boamund and the Earle of Flanders, with thirtie thousand choice Horse and Foot, should enter into the Saracens Land. From Ierusalem, Damasco and Aleppo, and other Countries, Persians, Arabians and Medes, had assembled to come to Antiochia, to raise that siege; but hearing that some of the Christians were entered their Countrey, they reioyced, securing themselves of victory, and diuided their Armie into two, to keepe ours from fleeing any way. The Armies met, these trusting in their multitudes, those in Gods Omnipotence, which gaue them a shamefull ouerthrow, and put them to flight; wherein our Foot mounted their Horses to pursue them. Once; they had beene 10 good Purueyors, to bring thus from farre vnto them so many Asles, Camels, and other Beasts, laden with Wine, Corne and other prouision, and the hungry he filled with good things: his Name be blessed for euer.

Famine and Plentie, and Famine.

The meane while the enemie had assaulted ours out of the City in their Tents, and slew many, and but for the Riuer had done more hurt; which disasters together with famine, made some of ours bethinke themselves of flying. An Asse-loade of Corne was now sold for seuen pound, an Egge for twelue pence, a Nut for a peny, and many died of hunger. Yea, the Pillars were shaken; Peter the Hermite and William Carpenter, fled away by night. This William was of royall descent, Vicount of a Castle, called Milidune: no shield, breast-plate or helmet, could endure the strong pushes of his Lance. Tancred hearing of their flight, pursued them, tooke 20 them, and caused them to returne with shame. For Hugo Magnus his lake, (whose Kinsman he was) and his former exploits, William was pardoned, swearing to doe so no more, which yet he soone transgressed, and closely fled. In the whole Armie were not found one thousand Horses fit for seruice. To adde to their sorrowes, one Tetigius, a Romanian, vndertooke to bring plentie of prouision from the Emperour by shipping, and left his Oath and Tents in pawne, which he neuer redeemed. The greatest part of the Armie compelled by famine, sued for leaue to depart, which the Princes with teares granted.

In this miserie, a Messenger brought them word of a great Armie of Turkes, which that night would bee at Arech the Castle aforesaid, purposing to set vpon their Tents vnprepared. This made them dance, which before could not goe, as if they had already conquered, chusing 30 rather to dye by the Sword then hunger. They sent Spies the next day, which returned word, that they neuer before had seen so many thousands of them together. Their huge multitude made ours beginne to flee, which Boamund seeing, he brake forth with such furie, that the enemy fled towards the Iron bridge; the Pranks lay frankly about them, and now the earth is couered with carkasses, the Ayre is filled with clamors, the Riuer is swollen with precipitated bodies, and more were slaine then escaped, which also returned to their Castle, rifled it, and then forsooke it, leauing it to Ours, which there placed a Garrison, returning to the Tents with great ioy and great spoiles. Their fellowes which that day had fought, and got the better of the Citizens, were now filled with double ioy. The Armenians and Syrians also now brought prouision to the Campe, and reioyced with vs. The Turkes after hauing ours at aduantage, put the horse-40 men to flight, and slue about one thousand foote-men: which they scarcely had done, when the rest of the Armie out of the Campe, reuenged the same with exceeding Vsurie. Duke Godfrey gloriously behaued himselfe with the death of many, whom a Goliath of theirs, a big and mightie man, had wel-nigh slaine, had not God and his valour protected him, whom he repaid with such furie, that lifting vp his sword, he claue his breast in the midst, diuiding his backebone and entrails passing thorow to his right thigh, his whole head with the right side of his body falling into the Riuer, the left halfe he sent backe to the Citie. This sight bred in them horror and amazement, for he was one of their Admirals (Amira's.) Euen the Riuer selfe with another Armie of carkasses, stood still to wonder at such a spectacle, nor could the vpper Waters enforce the lower (stayed with a new world of Inhabitants) to giue them leaue to see it, till their swelling indignation by force obtained it. In that conflict was slaine the Sonne of Cassianus, the 50 great King of Antiochia, and twelue Admirals of the King of Babylon, whom he had sent with their bands to ayde the King of Antioche. For that Prouince hath one Metropolitane, twelue Consuls, and one King; and they were gathered out of so many Proninces as there were Admirals. There were also seuen thousand taken Prisoners: the baggage was without number. And now the Turkes not onely ceased their clamors and scornes, but many fled closely out of the Citie. The next day the Turkes buried their dead beyond the bridge, which the Christians digged vp againe with disgrace, (for their fashion is to burie with Pals, Bowes and Arrows, Golden Byzantines,* and other things good for bootie) leauing another bootie to the Fowles. *A Coine.

60 IN these vicissitudes and entercouise of diuertified Fortunes, came Messengers from the King of Babylon, vpon safe conduct granted by the Princes. Against their comming the Campe was set forth, in goodliest shew of brauery, Shields hung vp vpon poles for the youth to runne at Quintane, (an exercise on horse-backe) Dice, Chesse, Militarie skirmishes of horse and foote, Running at to expresse their carelesse and fearelesse resolutions, whiles the elder and grauer sort assembled Quinsan.

with mature aduise and graue counsailes, to secure that securitie. The Babylonians approaching, marvelled at this sight, hauing heard before that they were both famished and heartlesse, and being brought before the Princes, thus spake; The Admirallus of Babylon our Lords sends greeting and friendship to you the Princes of the Frankes, if you will obey his will. In the Court of the King of Persia our Lord, is a great assembly for your sake, and seuen daies the Counsell hath bene prolonged. They marvel why you come armed to your Lords Sepulchre, dispossessing their people of their ancient possessions, and (which is unlawfull for Pilgrims) slaying with the Sword. And if you will come hereafter with Scrip and Staffe, they will cause you to passe with honour and plentie, they will make the foot horsemen, and the poore to want nothing going or comming. And if you shall please to stay a moneth at the Sepulchre, you shall want nothing, and walke thorow Ierusalem, and haue leaue to performe what veneration you will to the Temple and Sepulchre. But if you contemne this indulgence, and trust in your courage and weapons, we are confident that no humane power is able to force the Babylonians and King of Persia. Speake now your minds what you like or dislike herein. The Princes with common aduice answered. It is no maruell if wee come armed to our Lords Sepulchre, and exterminate your people from those Confines, seeing that they which haue before comne with Staffe and Scrip, haue bene shamefully both scoffed at and slaine. The Land is not theirs, though they haue long possessed it, because it was anciently ours, who for their malice and in-justice by ours were dispossessed. But now it is decreed in Heauen, that it shall be rendred to the children which was taken from the Fathers. And let not your Nation glorie that they haue conquered the effeminate Greekes, which by Diuine dispensation, the sword of the Frankes shall repay you. It is not of man to ouerthrow Kingdomes, but of him by whom Kings reigne. They say they will shew kindnesse, if we come with Scrip and Staffe: let their mercy returne vpon themselves; will they, nill they, our pouertie shall bee enriched by their store. Nor can any humane power affright us: for when wee dye, we are borne, and loosing a Temp'ral life, wee recover an Eternall. Therefore tell those which sent you, that the Armes which we haue taken in our Countrey, we will not lay by when we haue conquered Ierusalem. For we trust in him which teacheth our hands to fight, and maketh our armes as a bow of Steele, that all offences shall be remoued and Ierusalem taken.

The Embassadours herewith displeased, by leaue entred the Citie. Ours beganne to build a Castle at Machumar, before the gate of the Citie in their buriall place, destroyed their Sepulchres of Stone, which they vsed to their structure; being finished, it was committed to Earle Raimund: This straitned their issues, and strengthened ours, which hereby had libertie to forage, and brought in great booties, from a place where was an old ruined Castle, which also they fortified and commended to Tancred, who intercepted prouisions that were brought to the Citie. The Citie therefore desired truce, to treat in that time of conditions of yeelding. The last day of which, a famous Wallon Knight, was by them taken and cruelly murthered, whose Wife, by her teares, cries and complaints, exceeded teares, cries and complaints, hauing spent that store in prodigalitie of her sorrowes, and now by her miserie varnished with bright lustre of her exceeding beautie, and the deepe impression of Noble blood, which her impotent nailes scratched from that goodly countenance, and her impacience other whiles so seuerely recalled to the attendance on her great heart, that she abode as a Marble statue, spake more to commiseration and indignation with not speaking, then the best speaking Oratorie could haue pronounced.

Reuenge slept not long. For one Pyrrhus which had three Turrets in his command, sent secretly to Boamund, (with whom he had treated in the truce) to deliuer them all into his hands, and his Sonne for pledge of his fidelitie. Whereupon by night Boamund and the Princes (as had bene agreed with Pyrrhus) closely conueyed the Armie thither, which by day (to deceiue the Turkes) they had sent forth to forage. Thus scaled they the wals, (Fulcherius Carnotensis being the first which entred) and after set open the gates to the whole Armie: a Comet that night appearing, the heavenly Messenger of earthly mutations. The Citie was promised to Boamund, if he could make meanes to obtaine it, vpon occasion of Pyrrhus first sending to him.

ON the fift of Iune, the Christians entred Antioche, Fulcherius and his fellow Scalers inuaded the Towers, and killed the sleeping Watches, awaking them to a neuer waking sleep. They which were awaked out of sleepe by this noyse in their houses, ran forth of their doores to see the cause, and presently forth of themselves and seeing together. Death now filleth euery street and corner, confoundeth all ages, sexes, conditions. Some running out of the gates, were encountered by others comming from the Campe, and Cassian the King escaping into Tancred's iurisdiction in poore disguise, was there discovered by the Armenians, and his head brought to the Princes, together with his Girdle, which was valued at one hundred and sixtie Byzantines. Many fled to the Castle, which seemed impregnable, the Mountaine and the Building conspiring to deride affronts. Heereto from a neere Tower Boamund gaue assault, and (wounded) was forced to retire to another Turret, and the rest followed him. Onely one abode in the top, and seeing himselfe alone, mustered out of himselfe an Armie of resolute thoughts, out of the wals an Armorie of stones and mortar against his vnderminers, and laden with one thousand Arrowes, seeing Death importunate, he went forth to meete him, leaping in the midst of his aduerser squadrons with his Sword and Shield, to take vp company to attend him into the other world.

world. The night followed that bloody day, but forbad sleepe to both sides, feare and wearinesse executing that summons.

The next day, being Friday, whiles some were carrying out the dead, others assaulting the Castle, there was espied from the Turrets and Walls a Cloud of dust, which some suspected to be the Constantinopolitan Emperor, but proued Corbanan the General of the King of Persia, with a long and farre gathered Armie of Persians, Medes, Arabs, Turkes, Azimites, Saracens, Courds, Publicans and diuers other Nations. There were three thousand Agulans, which vse none other Armes but Swords, armed to point with Iron. Ours being wearied, gaue them leaue to prouoke, insult, & run vp and downe casting vp their Lances and Swords, and againe catching them. Sensadol, Sonne to King Cassian, had gone to Corbanan, promising (before in his Fathers name, now in his owne) to reigne vnder him, to deliuer him the Castle of Antiochia, and to doe him homage. The Castle was now deliuered. Soone after a rustie Sword and worle Lance, taken from a poore Franke, were presented to him, with insultation on all hands ouer that beggerly Nation which thought by such Armes to spoile Asia and subdue Persia. And presently sent for his Secretarie to write to the Chalife and to the Soldan, that he now held the French Armie inclosed in the walls of Antiochia, the Castle in his owne possession; and that the cry was more terrible then the Wolfe. And whereas you writ to me utterly to destroy them, be not offended if I send some of the chiefe bound to you. Their seruice will be usefull, and the French Kings Brother an honourable Captiue to Persia. Ply you your pleasures and get children to resist other Franks, if need be. As for me, I will not see your face till I haue subiected all Romania, Syria, and Bulgaria to your seruice. Thus did he sell the skinne of the Beare yet liuing. His Mother sought to disswade him by Prophecies, Starre-gazings, and other Wisardly Diuinations, which all (shee said) portended prosperitie and victorie to the Christians. But hee remayned deafe, and resolved to try it out from the Castle, the Turkes still annoyed Ours, and with successions of supplies had great aduantage; the streets were still couered, and Houses as it were roofed anew with Arrowes. But a worle Enemy, Famine did more harme; the legge of an Asse was sold for sixtie shillings, and the buyer esteemed frugall, the Hides of beasts were dressed for food, the children starued at the breasts of their Mothers. Many fled away and raised reports that the Citie was lost, or could not long hold out, Earle Stephannus Carnotensis by this newes caused the Emperour comming to their assistance to turne backe.

The Stories of these times are full of Visions: hence neglecting the Scriptures, they were fed with Legends. And would God the prodigall Sonne would yet leaue his Huskes, and returne to his Fathers house, where the poorest seruant hath better food. Of this Lance, see Fulcherius. The finder was found a deceiver.

30 BVt a certaine Priest comforted them with Relation of a Vision of Christ, the Virgine and Peter appearing to him and promising reliefe after fve dayes, which one Peter seconded with a second Vision of Saint Andrew, shewing him in Saint Peters Church in the Citie, the Launce which pierced the side of our Sauour, with promise of victory to the Bearers; which they went, digged and found it with great ioy, singing a Te Deum, & Gloria in Excelsis. All presently sware not to flie, nor desist from the Iourney of the holy Sepulchre. By night fire from the West fell from Heauen vpon the Turkes Campe, which cheered Ours and terrified them, as an Ensigne of Diuine vengeance by the Franks. Soone after the Turkes hauing assailed and slaine three of ours in a Towre, whiles none of our starued number could be brought out of their Houses to assist them; Boamund displayning, caused fire to be set on those Houses to bring them out by force, and such a wind arose with the fire that it burned two thousand Houses and Churches.

40 Peter the Heremite and Heluinus were sent to Corbanan, in Ambassage, which they performed stoutly in confidence of the former presages. The Bishop Podiensis (the Popes Legate) enioyned three dayes fast, and they all confessed themselves, obserued Processions, and on the third day receiued the Sacrament. After which by common counsell the Armie was diuided in sixe parts, the first Band committed to Hugo and the Earle of Flanders, the second to Duke Godfrey, the third to Robert the Norman, the fourth to the Podian Bishop, which carryed with him the Launce afore said, and a great part of Earle Raimunds forces, the fifth to Tancred, the sixth to Boamund. The Bishops, Priests, Clerkes and Monkes in their holy Vestments went out with the Souldiers without the gate, carrying Crosses in their hands, signing the people, and crying, Lord saue thy people, and blesse thine Inheritance: Bee thou to them a Tower of strength from the face of their Enemy, with other Psalmes. The like was performed by those which were on the Walls and Towers. Corbanan saw them comming forth, and said, let them all come out that we may the better take them. By him stood an Aquitaine Renegado, which for his belly had denied his Redeemer, and had told disgracefull reports of the Christian forcelesse famished Forces; by whom he now learned to whom euery Band pertayned. And seeing their Armes and Order, hee cut off the head that had brought him those Tales. Hee gaue also a signe to the Amira of his Treasures, that if hee saw a fire kindled in the head of his Armie, hee should flye with all speed.

When Ours were come into a certaine Valley, the Bishop of Podium armed, and holding the Launce of our Sauour erected in his hand, made a Sermon or Speech vnto them, exhorting to courage and charitie, promising Victorie to the Suruiuer, Heauen to the Dier, and blessed them. Then marched they on moderately, the length of their Armie from the Riuer to the Hill extending ding two miles. The Turkes diuided themselves in two Bands thinking to inclose Ours: but a seventh Band was appointed to encounter that diuided Armie out of the Souldiers of Godfrey, and the Norman vnder one Raimald. These met and fought, many beeing slaine on both sides. When the other fixe Bands were come within Arrow shot, the Turkes shot and the wind retorted their Arrowes on themselves, so that Ours could not find an Enemie, the Turkes flying from the first Band, which presently went to helpe Boamund, which bare the burthen of the fight, and Godfrey followed him. Whiles Ours are in the heat of fight a white Armie appeared from the Mountaines, whose Captaines are said to be George, Mauritius, Demetrius, and the Bishop presently cryed, that their promised helpe was comne. Fire was set to the Grasse when the Turkes fled, for a token of flight to the Campe, which yet were set vpon by the Surians and Ar- 10 menians. There dyed that day one hundred thousand Horsemen, for they would not take paines to number the Footmen which were slaine. The next day fiteene thousand Camels were found, Horses, Asses, Mules, Oxen, Sheepe, innumerable, with Gold, Siluer, Vestments and other things of price: with which they returned to the Citie, where they were receiued by the Priests in Procession. The Amra of the Castle seeing his fellowes runne away, asked for one of our Colours, and the Earle of Saint Giles (left to guard the Citie) gaue him his, which hee set vp, but hearing that the Citie was granted to Boamund, he sent for his Ancient, and couenanted with him to suffer the Castellans to depart with freedome, so as they which would might be- come Christians, the rest should haue a Conuoy to the Saracens. Himselfe became a Conuert: and after three dayes fast, the Gentiles were baptized. The battell was fought on the eight and 20 twentieth of Iune, on Saint Peter and Saint Pauls Euen. Hugo Magnus was sent in Ambassage to the Emperour to come to take his Citie, which hauing done, * he died. The other guiltie of breaking his Oath would not come.

They now consulted of going to the Sepulchre, but were forced to wait till October, by the drought and heate. One Pilet a Knight of Earle Raimunds, procured many to ioine with him, and went into the Saracens Land. The Saracens receiued him at Talaman: not farre thence hee wonne a Castle of the Saracens. They went to Marra, where many were gathered from Aleph (Aleppo) and other places: they discomfited the Turkes, but were not able to lay siege till October. The Bishop Podiensis dyed on the first of August, to the Armies great grieve, and was buried in Saint Peters Church. The Earle of Saint Giles went to Albaria, and forced the Citie, 30 commanding to kill all such as would not turne Christians, which cost many their liues, because they had taken it from the Christians, and vsed the same condition. A Bishop was also elected to gouerne it.

Sommer being past, the Christian Souldiers returned from their leuerall abodes to Antioch, and there met together on All-Saints day, beeing now farre more then when they had gone from thence. For from all parts of the World many worthy Knights and Footmen had followed the steps of the former, the Christian Armie daily increasing. And when they consulted of the way of the Sepulchre. Boamund demanded their couenant touching the Citie. Earle Raimund said it could not be done by reason of their Oath to Alexius. Hence grew many meetings and ill 04 greetings. At last the Bishops, Abbots, and more moderate Princes consulted how both might be kept: and it was agreed that both Boamund and Raimund should goe the way of the Sepulchre with the rest, the former fortifying the Castle, the other the Palace of Cassian, and the Tower on Saint Simeons gate.

And because Antioch hath long detayned vs in the narration, and in the siege, we will speake somewhat of it for their sakes which haue not seene it. Threescore and fise Kings are said to haue ruled there. It is enuironed with two Walls, the former of great square stones artificially wrought, and therein are distinguished in order foure hundred and sixtie Towers. It is goodly and spacious contrayning foure Hills great and high, on the highest a Castle, neither fearing forcible batterie, or suttile engining. There are three hundred and sixtie Churches in her Territorie, 50 and the Patriarch hath vnder his Iurisdiction, one hundred fiftie three Bishops. Foure Hills fortifie it on the East. Farfar runneth on the West. Ours besieged it eight monethes and one day, and were in it besieged three weekes of the Parthians, after which they rested there in quiet foure monethes and eight dayes, which ended, Raimund went to Rugia, and the next day to Albaria, which two Cities he had subdued: the fourth day to Marra.

The Citizens scorning the paucitie of his Souldiers, came forth to encounter him, but were soone repelled. The next day Boamund adioyned himselfe to his helpe. Iron Rammes were made, which being hanged with Ropes, and by the Souldiers hands drawn back might be forced on the Walls, with often pushes to shake downe the Wall. A Tower of wood was erected 60 higher then theirs of stone, with three lofts furnished with Militarie Engines, hauing in the two higher armed men with Pikes, Arrowes, Stone, Balls, and Fires: in the lowest were those which forced the wheelles on which the Tower was built. Others filled the Ditch, hauing applyed a Tortoise to the Wall so to bring thither their Machination. The Citizens had prouided wild-fire, and another Instrument to throw great stones, but in vaine. For William of Mount Pessul,

- Pessul*, with his Company in the highest storie, threw downe Mill-stones which brake the roofes of houses, whiles the others digged thorow the Wall. Others set a Ladder to the Wall, which Gulferius dela Torre first ascended, and many other followed him: whom the Citizens no lesse furiously assaulted, and forced some of them downe with deadly præcipice: whom others yet followed: the Priests also stood by the wooden Tower, calling on the Lord Iesus, to powre his wrath on the Gentiles which knew him not, and the Kingdomes which inuoked not his Name: and to bee our helpe in the nedfull time of trouble. The narrownesse of the Wall did not admit assistants to Gulferie, who laid about like a Lion, and was most laid at, his shield beeing operated with Arrowes, Darts and Weapons, that a man could not lift it, and hee was now spent and wearie when the
- 10 other had digged thorow, and soone chased away the Enemies: which so terrified those on the Wall, that Gulferie now without a shield full of heart and resumed life, made way with his Sword and killed more yet with feare (throwing downe themselves) then with his Weapon. Boamund signified to the richer Citizens to flye to a Tower, and there they might redeeme their liues, which vpon his word they did. Much crueltie was shewed by ours, ransacking not only their houses but their very entrails for Treasure: neither yet was there any of so great a multitude which would confesse the name of Christ. Every man had what hee could get. And Boamund of those in the Tower slue the old vnseruiceable, the rest he sent to Antiochia to be sold: but when hee could not perswade Raimund to deliuer Antiochia to him, hee left him and returned thither.
- 20 The Armie which stayed all this while there was so pinched with Famine, that (horrible to speake) they cut and eate vp the bodies of the Gentiles. The discord yet continued betwixt the Earle and Boamund, to the great displeasure of the Armie, Raimund pretending the Oath to the Emperour, and hauing pure Iustice on his part. This being discourted at Rugia and Capharda in diuers meetings, every one wishing, but not shewing how to effect, concord, they returned to Antioch. But the Norman Earle with all his abode with Raimund, knowing that hee was in the right. These two Earles order their Bands for Cesaria, the King whereof had sent to become Raimunds Vassall. But when he saw the Armie approaching, hee was troubled and forbade to sell them any thing. The next day he sent to shew them a Foord, whereby they might passe thorow Farfara a Valley, in which were twentie thousand head of beasts which they tooke:
- 30 and going to besiege a Castle therein, it presently yeelded to them, which Example another Castle followed. Thence they came to Caphalia a plentiful Citie in a specious and spacious Valley, whose Citizens were all fled, leauing their Garners and Gardens, and Houses plentifully prepared for those which at first were filled with wonder and doubt, and after with Iubilee. The like also was done by a Castle adioyning to that Valley, where they kept their Candlemas. The King of Camel sent thither to desire conditions of Peace, or rather to buy the same with goodly Presents. The King of Tripoli imitated his Example. Both their Gifts were receiued, but no peace giuen, except they would become Christians.
- A fortnight after they went to an old Castle called Archas, comparable to famous Cities, in Scite, Walls, Towers. Whiles they continued heere a doubtfull siege, fourteene Souldiers of
- 40 Ours, desiring Exploits went towards Tripoli, where they encountred threescore Turkes with a great bootie of Captiues and Cattell, and returned with the spoile to the Campe. Raimund Pilet, and Raimund Vicount of Tentoria, with their companies hereby instigated went to Tortosa, and making great fires by night, as if the whole Armie were there, so terrified the Inhabitants that they left their Citie in haste, stored as it was, to seeke a new Habitation, this beeing indeed a good Hauen for ours. Maraclea a Neighbor Citie also receiued them. Duke Godfrey hearing of this glorious successe, set forth from Antiochia with Boamund and the Earle of Flanders, and came to the Citie Licia, where Boamund parted from them. The Duke and the Earle came to Gibellum, and besieged it: but hearing from Earle Raimund of his difficulties, and of a battell approaching, they agreed on conditions before required with the Prince of that Citie, and hasted thither to the besieged Castle. Where the Duke seeing their small proficiencie, went to Tripoli, where followed so bloudie a battell that the water which runneth into their Citie stained their Cisternes; and then turning aside to the Valley of Defen (where ours had staid before a fortnight) there got three thousand Camels and innumerable Sheepe, Kine and Asses, to their great wonder whence they should come in that space. Thus richly laden they returned to the siege, and there kept their Easter (then the second day of Aprill.) This siege continued three monethes and one day, and then (preuailing nothing) they arose and went to Tripoli, and there established the peace which the King and Citizens had desired. The King deliuered three hundred Pilgrims of ours, and gaue fifteene thousand Bizantines and open Market to buy prouision.
- He couenanted also to become Christian if they could winne Ierusalem, and ouercome the Babylonian Warre, and be subiect to the King of Ierusalem. Here they staid three dayes, and seeing that Haruest was neere they agreed to take the next way to Ierusalem. On the fourth of May they set out, and passing certaine steepe Hills, they came to the Castle Betelon: the next day to the Citie Zabaris, where they could find no water for themselves and their Horses. The next day they came to the Riuer Braim where they refreshed themselves that night. The next night was was of our Lords Ascension, and they ascended a hill by a narrow way, where they feared, but found no enemy. Then came they to Baruth, a Citie seated on the Sea; thence to Sagitta, and after that to Sur, from that to Aora, thence to the Castle called Caiphas, and so to Casarea. In Casarea is Philips house still shewed, and the Chamber of his Daughters which were Prophetesses. Here they kept their Whitsontide, pitching their Tents neere the Citie. Thence they passed to Ramola, which the Saracens for feare had forsaken, neere which is the Church of Saint George, where hee lieth buried, for veneration of whom they elected a Bishop, and gaue him Tithe of all their Riches. It was meete that inuincible George, the Standard-bearer of their war should receiue that honour. Thence they turned to Ierusalem.

AS soone as they saw Ierusalem, they wept for ioy, fell downe and worshipped the Sepulchre. On the North side, the Earles of Normandie and Flanders encamped, neere Saint Stephens Church, in the place where he was stoned. On the West Duke Godfrey and Tancred. On the South (on Mount Sion) the Earle of Saint Giles. Whiles they rested in their Tents being wearie, some went to scoure and secure the Countrey. On Munday the fourth of Iune, they beganne the assault, and had that day ended the siege if they had not wanted Ladders. Another want of Bread succeeded for ten daies space, and then their ships of prouision arrived at Ioppe. The Water of Siloe could scarcely suffice the men. The Beasts were driuen sixe miles to water, with a great conuoy of fixe thousand Souldiers. Pilet and one hundred others, were sent to Iaphia or Ioppe, and some that went before to search the way, were set vpon by feuen hundred Turkes and Arabs, where Achardus a good Souldier sold his life deerely; but when the rest came in, the enemies fled. They were now prouided of victuall from the ships, but their thirst was so extreame, that they digged holes in the earth, and put the moist Turffes to their mouthes to moisten them; they licked the dewie Marbles, and sewed beasts skins new killed to fetch Water in: and some rather fasted, so to moderate thirst, then to drinke of that greasie Water. To the siege they addressed wooden Towers and Engines.

Duke Godfrey caused his to be applied on the East side, and the Earle of Saint Giles another, on the South. On Thursday they fasted, and gaue Almes to the poore; and on Friday the twelfth of Iuly, they ascended those Towers, and applyed scales to the Walls. Duke Godfrey with his Brethren Eustace and Baldwine, played the Lions. Procession was made about the wals with Crosses and Reliques, and Altars, whiles they fought on the wals. When the houre approached, in which the Sauour of men dyed for men, then did one Letoldus first from the Dukes Castle leap forth, and after him Guicherus, (which had slain a Lion by his strength.) The Duke followed his Souldiers, and his other Souldiers him, who chased the enemy from the wals, and pursue them into the Citie with a great shout. Which when Earle Raimund heard, which was labouring to bring his Tower to the Wall, hee called to his men to follow him to the gate neere the Tower of Dauid, and spake to them in the Tower to open; which presently the Admiravis which kept the Tower, hearing who hee was, did, and committed himselfe and all his vnto him, together with the Tower.

But Duke Godfrey sought neither Tower nor Gold, nor spoile, but reuenge for the bloud and wrongs of Pilgrims, whereto he neuer had more opportunitie, not then when at Antioche hee claue in sunder that Gigantean Gentile. And now he and Guicherus (which cut a Lion in sunder) claue humane bodies from the head to the raines, and on the right and left hand thorow both sides: the throng hindred euery mans flight. They which remained, fled to the Temple of Salomon, where they defended themselves the most part of the day; but ours before night breaking in, shed so much bloud, that slaine carkasses were tumbled on the Pauement to and fro in a streame of bloud; armes and hands dismembred floted in bloud, and were ioyned to others bodies, none being able to discerne; and the slayers themselves were scarcely able to endure those hot mists of bloudie vapours. After this vnspcakable slaughter, they grew more indulgent, and many captiues of both Sexes were spared. Euery corner was searched for spoile, euery man possessing what he tooke; Ierusalem at that time being rich. After this they did goe ioyfully to the holy Sepulchre, and gaue thanks to him which had bene there buried: going did I say? Creeping on their knees and elbowes, watering the Pauement with their teares. This done, they went to their houses, and refreshed themselves with food and sleepe. The next day they went armed to the Temple of Salomon, to make an end of them which had ascended the rooves, where onely Wings were wanting to flye from that which they could no way flee, present destruction. Some threw themselves downe headlong; others, offered themselves to seruitude. The liuing Saracens were enioyned to carry out the dead and burie them, and to cleanse the Citie.

The enemies destroyed, the Citie secured, victorie and glory atchieued, question was of a King, and Duke Godfrey was chosen by generall consent, the eighth day after the taking, who more adorned that Royall Dignitie, then it him, and was an Honor to his Honor, by Knightly bountie, bodily elegance, and excellent manners. The next care was of a Prelate, and Arnulphus was chosen on Lammas-day. This ended, Messengers were sent by the Neapolitans to King Godfrey, Godfrey, offering themselves to his subiection. (This Neapolis is a Citie of Caria, an Asian Province) to whom the King sent Eustace his Brother, and Tancred, to whom they deliuered their Citie. The Deuill bestir'd him, and enuying this rising Sunne of Christianitie after so long a night, raised vp Clement the Admiralis of Babylon, and all the East with him against them. He came with pompous preparation to Ascalon. Eustace and Tancred were sent for, and all goe towards Ascalon, a Citie of Palestina, fise and twentie miles from Ierusalem. Heere they had all first fortified their Spirits by the Eucharist, and proceeded from the Church towards Ascalon. The Patriarch left Peter the Hermite in his place, to ordaine Masses, Prayers, Processions. Neere Ascalon they tooke a great bootie of beasts. The next day, the Patriarch cursed all that should goe about to meddle with spoile before the victorie. This was on Friday, on which our Lord had dyed.

The King passed the Riuer, and pitched his Tents neere the Sea. Himselfe had the first Band or Vantguard, Robert of Normandie the second, Earle Raimund the third, the Earle of Flanders the fourth; Eustace, Tancred, and Guafton de Bebert, the fift. The Foot-men had set themselves with Arrowes and Darts before the Knights, Men at Armes *, and thus ordered, they marched towards the Babylonians. The King was in the left Wing, where was most danger, the Earle of Saint Giles in the right, the rest betwixt them. The Babylonian (whom none durst tell of the former bootie) being told that the Frankes were comne forth to fight, much disdained their paucitie, as a disgrace to haue so meane so confident enemies. The battell was begun by the Earle of Normandie and his Band, in that quarter where he espyed the Admiralis his Standard, and making way with his Sword thorow the midst of his enemies, by a bloudie passage arriued at him that held it, whom hee laid dead at the Admiralis his foote, and tooke the Standard, the Admiralis hardly escaping to Ascalon with his life, whence he might behold the slaughter of his people, which by noone were all put to rout and slaine in all places, euen to the gates of the Citie in incredible numbers. The spoile was exceeding rich. The Standard, which in the top of a Siluer Staffe had a golden Apple, was offered by Earle Robert of Normandie at the holy Sepulchre, the whole Armie hauing returned and entred into the Citie in triumph. This battell was fought the eighth of August. And thus Ierusalem, which is said to haue beene built by Melchisedech, (whom the Iewes say, was the Sonne of Noe) is now open to the Pilgrimes with praises, which before were receiued with contumelies. Of these Pilgrimes and Gates, it is said by Esay; And thy Gates shall be open continually, day and night they shall not be shut. And againe, of the French Nation, which he brought from the ends of the earth to deliuer it, I will bring thy Children from farre, their Siluer and their Gold with them, in the name of the Lord thy God, and the holy one of Israel which hath glorified thee. The Sonnes of thy Pilgrims shall build thy wals, and their Kings shall minister to them. These and many things else, we find in the Propheticall Books, which agree to this deliuerance made in our Age.

CHAP. II.

The Acts of the Pilgrimes in their Expedition to Ierusalem, before and after the taking thereof, extracted out of FVLCHERIVS CARNOTENSIS, which went thither with ROBERT, Earle of Normandie.

IN the yeare 1095. when manifold euils in all parts of Europe were encreased, the Faith languishing, Urban the second was Pope of Rome, a man excellent in life and manners, * which alway to the vtmost of his wit and strength, endeouored about all things to Exalt higher the State of holy Church. And seeing that the Faith of Christendome was decayed in all, both Clergie and Laitie, and the Secular Princes in continuall warres with each other, spoiling the goods, capturing the persons, (whom miserable prisons enforced to vnreasonable redemptions) violating holy places, burning of Townes and Monasteries, making a mockerie of things Diuine and humane, sparing no man: and hearing that the Prouinces of Romania * were possessed by the Turks; he called a Councell at Claremont. Herein he decreed the Churches freedome from all Secular Power, that Tithes of all which cometh by husbandrie, should bee proper to God, and neither sold nor detained; that he which should take a Bishop should be an Out-law, and the takers or spoilers of Clerkes, Monkes and Nuns, Pilgrimes or Merchants, should bee Anathema, as likewise Robbers and incendiaries. These and other like being ratified by the Councell, he exhorted them, (Not I, but the Lord) to exterminate the Turkes out of the Christian Confinnes. I speake to the present, I send to the absent, and Christ commands it. And all that goe thither, if they shall dye in the going by Land, passage ouer water, or in fight against the Pagans, shall haue present remission of their sinnes: which I grant to those which undertake the Voyage, hauing so great a gift from God. Those that haue formerly abused

This the state of the Church, that is, the Clergie, and more specially the Papacy. This the great article of Popish Faith.

warres against Christians, let them goe against Infidels, and let them now bee Souldiers which before were Robbers, and let them fight iustly against the Barbarians, which they did before against their Brethren, and for an eternall reward, which were before mercenarie for a few shillings, and for a double honour, which wearied themselves for double detriment of body and soule. Here they are poore, there they shall be wealthy; here the Lords enemies, there his friends. Let them not delay, but make Money of that which they haue, and the next spring set forward.

Many present promised to goe, of which was Ademarus, Bishop of Podium, afterward the Popes Legat, which ruled the whole Armie. These things ordered in the Councell, and the blessing of Absolution being giuen, they departed home, and divulged what had passed. Truce was euery where confirmed by Oath, and many of euery profession vowed to goe, the remission of sinnes being purchased. O what a goodly fight, and worthy it was to vs all, to see the Crosses of Silke, or wrought in Gold, or of Cloath which they ware on their Iackets, Coates, and Garments on their shoulders. Such a worke did Pope Vrbane meditate, by which the world after flourished, and restored the Churches Rights. But the Deuill raised vp Guibertus, Bishop of Rauenna, an Aduersarie to him, whom the perverseness of the Emperour, whiles Gregorie (Hildebrand) held the Seate, supported in his vsurpation of the Apostleship. But the better sort acknowledged Gregorie, and after him Vrbane, whom by the Emperours ayde, Guibertus forced from Rome, till that year when the Frankes went to Ierusalem by Rome, Guibertus being in Almaine, Vrbane by help of Matildis, obtained the whole Apostolike power, she being then verie potent in the Romane Countrey.

This Authour speaks like one of Vrbane's faction against Guibertus and the Emperour, ignorant of Papal sleights. This Stephen, Father of King Stephen, is called Comes Carnotensis, and is said to haue as many Castles as were daies in the year.

Anno 1096. some in March, others in Aprill, May, Iune, Iuly, August, September, and October, set forth, as they could make their provisions on this holy Voyage. Peter the Hermite went by the way of Hungarie. Raymond Earle of Prouince, with his Goths and Gascoines, and the Bishop of Podium, by Sclauonia, Hugo Magnus and Buamund by Bulgaria. In September, Robert Earle of Normandie, Sonne of William King of the English, with a great Armie of Normans, and English-men and Britans set forwards, and with him Stephen Earle of Bloise, and Robert Earle of Flanders. The Armies still increased as they passed, and were neuer vnited till they came to Nice. We Westerne Frankes passed thorow Italy, and found Pope Vrbane nere to Luca, with whom Robert the Norman had conference, and Earle Stephen, and wee also as many as would; and hauing his blessing, we went ioyfully to Rome. And when we had entered Saint Peters, we found before the Altar Guiberts men, which with their Swords in their hands tooke away the offerings: others ranne along the beames, and threw stones at those which were prostrate at their Prayers, seeking to slay those which were faithfull to Vrbane. Vrbane's men held one Tower of the Monasterie, which kept it for him, and withstood the Aduersaries. Many which went thither with vs, returned home, but we passed thorow Campania and Apulia, and came to Barrum, a good Citie on the Sea. We had thought to haue taken ship, but the weather being vnseasonable, Robert Earle of Normandie was forced to turne aside into Calabria, and winter there. But Robert Earle of Flanders with his troups passed ouer. Then verie many of the poorer fearing want, sold their Bowes, and taking their Pilgrimes Staues returned home, to their disgrace before God and Men.

Seeing such sacrilege and smelling, perhaps the Popes plot.

In March, 1097. Robert Earle of Normandie, and Stephen of Bloise returned to the Sea, and on the fifth of Aprill, then Easter-day, set sayle at the Haven Brundisium. There wee saw one ship, (without any cause appearing) sinke almost foure hundred persons of both Sexes drowned: on the dead bodies of which were seene Crosses branded on their flesh, a miraculous token that they departed in Gods mercy. The Horses and Mules, and much Money was lost. This so appalled many, that they forsooke their Pilgrimage and returned. But we foure daies after arriued at Duratum, and passed the difficult passages of the Bulgarians by Hills and Deserts, till we came to the Riuer Demon, where the Diabolicall Torrent drowned many, and many more had done, but for the helpe of the Horse-men. Wee ascended next day the Hill Bagular, and came to the Riuer Baldarins, thorow which wee waded, and came the next day to Thessalonica: and traueiling thorow Macedonia, we came at last to Constantinople: where after much adoe, our men did homage to the Emperour. Then passing Saint Georges Arme, we came to Nice, which the Turkes (who had come out of Persia, about fiftie yeares before) did now possesse, and all Romania as farre as Nicomedia. The Princes Buamund, Duke Godfrey, and Earle Raimond then in the siege, came to meete the Earles, Robert and Stephen. Then were many Armies combined in one Armie, wherein were a hundreth thousand armed men, with Corslets and Head-peece: which they that had skill of the number, esteemed to haue fixe hundred thousand men apt for warre, besides those that were vnarmed; to wit, Clergie-men, Monkes, Women and Children. What shall I say more? If all they which had come out of their Houses and begun this vowed iourney, had bene here together, without doubt there would haue bene sixtie hundred thousand Warriors. But some had returned from Rome, others from Apulia, others from Hungaria, or Sclauonia, many thousands were slaine by the way, and many died, the waies, fields, woods, presenting many buriall places of Pilgrimes.

Nice taken.

Nice being rendred, on the nine and twentieth of Iune, wee departed into the inner Countreies

- tries of Romania. On the first of July, we had newes of Turkes approaching, and set downe our baggage by a Fenne or Reedy place, and beheld Soliman which had held Romania with his Amira's of the Countries, aboute thirtie daies journey, being three hundred and sixtie thousand Archers, on horseback. Duke Godfrey, Earle Raimond and Hugo Magnus were absent, to our irrecouerable losse, both of ours slaine, and of Turkes escaped. For it was late before our Messengers could bring them the newes, and therefore it was late ere they could come in to our succour. The Turkes gaue such an on-set with shouts and shots, that our hearts failed, and we fled, being ignorant of such kind of fight. Others had on the other side the Reeds, assailed our Tents, and slaine many. But the fore-runners of Duke Godfrey, and Hugo, and Raimond on one side; and 10 we which fled on the other (whom they thought to returne in respect of them) made them retire. But we were thronged as sheepe closed in a fold, trembling, encompassed of the enemy, and could go no way. The Conscience of Lecherie, Couetousnesse and Pride, did now trouble many, this seeming to haue hapned for our sinnes. The cry of Men, Women, Infants, and of the Pagans rushing on vs, filled the Ayre. We confessed our sinnes, and the Podian Bishop with many other Priests in white, besought God, crying, singing, praying. Then Robert of Normandie, Earle Stephen, Buamund, and the Earle of Flanders, made resistance what they could. God was appeased, and wee seeing our fellowes which came last, resumed courage, and put the Turkes to flight. The battell and our straits, lasted from the first houre till the sixth. We marched to Antiochia in Pisidia, thence to Iconium, and could not tell whither to laugh or weepe, to see many 20 of ours wanting Horses, lading Rams, Goats, Swine, Dogs, with their carriages, the weight whereof galled their backes. A strange confusion was of so many tongues in one Armie, Frankes, Flemmings, Frislanders, Galls, Britons, Sauoyards, Loraines, Almanes, Baioarians, Normans, Scots, English-men, Aquitans, Italians, Apulians, Spaniards, Danes, Greekes, Armenians. Baldwin Brother of Godfrey possessed himselfe of Tarsus, and after of Edeffa, the Gouvernour whereof had sent to compound with him. In the way neere Samosate we were in danger, but gat safe to E-deffa, and were receiued of the Gouvernour, whom his Citizens after fifteene daies flue, but Baldwin kept the Citie, and thence made many roads vpon the Turkes. I Fulcherius Carnotensis, was the Chaplaine of the said Baldwin.
- In the moneth of October, the Frankes passed ouer the Riuer Fernus, or Orontes, to Antio-chia. Gratian the Amira, of Antiochia sent his Sonne Sansadoles to the Soldan of Persia for aide. The Turkes within the Towne killed many Christian Inhabitants (for feare of conspiring with the Frankes) Greekes, Syrians, Armenians. The Christians wearied with so long a siege, ascribed it to their Lecherie, Pride and Rapine, and by common consent put out all the Women, married and others, out of the Tents, which lodged in Tents neere. The Famine was great, and many were slaine daily; all were desolate, and many fled. The rest were pinched with cold, parched with heate, washed with raines, (their Tents being old and worne) lying in open 30 Ayre without any couert but heauen. Earle Stephen returned home. The next day after, was Antiochia taken, deliuered by a Turke, to whom Christ had thrice appeared, and bidden him deliuer the Towne. Gratian the Amira was slaine by an Armenian Peasant. It happened, that 40 after the Citie was taken, a Lance was found by a certaine man, which being found in the ground in Saint Peters Church, he affirmed to bee that wherewith Longinus pierced the side of our Sauour. He said, this was reuealed to him by Saint Andrew the Apostle, thrice appearing to him, and shewing the place where he digged and found it. The Podian Bishop would not beleeue him, but Earle Raimond (to these two, he declared his Vision) was credulous: and when it was found, all the people reioyced, and one hundred daies after it was holden in great veneration, and gloriously handled by Earle Raimond, which also kept the Lance. But it hapned that the Bishop of Bare and many others doubted, that it was a counterfeit. Whereupon after 50 three daies supplication and fasting, a great fire of wood was made in the field neere the Castle Archas, then by them besieged, eight moneths after that Antiochia had beene taken, a iudiciall benediction being made on the fire by the Bishops. The finder of the Lance passed voluntarily and speedily thorow the fire, but was so burned, that in twelue daies after he died, and left the people sorrie for the worship they had done it. But Earle Raimond kept it, till by some accident it was lost.
- The Soldan of Persia sent Corbagath with a great Armie, which besieged Edeffa three daies, and not preuailing against Baldwin, they hasted to Antiochia: and sixtie thousand of them en-tring the Citie by the Castle, much annoyed ours. The Frankes were sad: and a Clergie man flying, our Lord appeared to him, and told him, that At his Mothers request he would help them. To another appeared a Brother of his before dead, and told him, that their fellowes which had died 60 in that expedition would take their parts, and fight against the Turkes. The Christians went out of the Citie against Corbagath, which would not leaue his Chesse at first, but after was forced to leaue the field, notwithstanding his huge troups esteemed to be sixe hundred & sixtie thousand Horse and Foot, and ours famished and few, which were enriched with their spoiles. Many of them were slaine, and their Women in the Tents. After Antioch was taken, the Podian Bishop died, and the Princes wrote to Pope Urban: To the holy Lord and venerable Pope Urban, of Buamund, and Raimund Earle of Saint Giles, Godfrey Duke Lothariensis, Robert Earle of Normandie, Robert Earle of Flanders, and Eustace Earle of Bullon, Greeting and faithfull Seruices; and as Children to their spirituall Father, true subiection in Christ, &c. They relate the occurrents of the Warre, and desire him to come in person, and sit in Peters Chaire, whose Vicar hee is, where the name of Christians beganne, and to open to them the Gates of both Ierusalem, &c.

Robert the Norman was offered the Kingdome of Ierusalem, & neuer throued for refusing it, saith Malmesbury, and Math. Paris: Earle Raimund also had the offer.

Bara and Mara being taken, Buamund returned to Antioch, and chased thence Earle Raimunds men, and possessed the Citie and all the Prouince. But Earle Raimund and Robert of Normandie proceeded towards Ierusalem: and in the year 1099. besieged Archas at the foote of Libanus. Duke Godfrey and the Earle of Flanders followed. In Iune, (to omit the rest) they came before Ierusalem, which on the fifteenth of Iuly, they tooke, and slue about ten thousand men in the Temple, called Salomons: shot also many which were vpon the roose. Our feete in the Temple (Usq; ad bases, forte brachas) were steeped in blood. Our men opened their entrails to search for Byzantines, and after some daies, made a great heape of carkasses, which they burned to search the Ashes: Five hundred Turkes which had betaken themselues to the Tower of David, agreed with Earle Raimund, and were sent to Ascalon. And now one piece of the Crosse was found, by reuelation made to a Syrian, which was carried to the Temple of the Sepulchre with Procession. Duke Godfrey was made King: and the King of Babylon, and Leuendalins his Generall, made hast with great Forces to besiege or fight with the Christians, and came to Ascalon, where the Christians obtained a glorious victorie. Robert of Normandie, and Robert of Flanders returned to Constantinople by shipping; Earle Raimund to Laodicea, where hee left his Wife, going thence to Constantinople, with purpose to returne: Duke Godfrey retained Tancred, and many others with him at Ierusalem.

Boamund was meane while at Antioch, and Baldwine at Edeffa, where hee had often fights with the Turkes, in the Confinnes of Mesopotamia. These by mutuall treatie agreed to goe together to Ierusalem; which also they did, and met at Valenum, together with three Bishops, being five and twentie thousand Horse and Foote. But passing thorow the Saracens Countrey, where no prouision could be had, our owne being spent, the Horses and Men were miserably pinched, both with famine, and also with cold, and raines continuing foure or five daies together, by reason whereof, many which wanted Tents perished. I Fulcherius there present, saw many of both Sexes, and very many beafts die with cold. Often also many were slaine by the Saracens, assaulting vs in strait passages, as likewise in foraging: Yea Knights of Noble descent hauing lost, 10 their Horses, were forced to goe on foote. So difficult is euery great designe: and a great matter it was that euer we got to Ierusalem, which was on the day of the Winter Solstice. We went after to Bethleem, thereto celebrate the Natiuitie where it was accomplished.

O how great a stinke was still about the walls of Ierusalem, arising from the fallen, scattered, putrifying carcases of the Saracens, which made vs to stop our noses: Daybert the Archbishop of Pisa, (which had come with vs) being made Patriarch, wee went thence to Iordan, (the former Armie had washed themselues there, and gathered Palmes at Ierico, according to the custome, in the Garden of Abraham, before the departure of the Earles of Normandie and Flanders) some of our Armie staying at Ierusalem, and some of the former going againe with vs. In the yeare 1100. on the first day of the yeare, we cut Palmes at Ierico, and the next day de-

20 parted. Our Princes passed by Tyberias, neere the Sea of Galilee, which is there eightene miles long, and five broad, of fresh water: and thence by Cesarea Philippi, called Paneas, where arise two Fountaines whence Iordan springeth, and passeth by the Sea of Galilee to the Red Sea. We came to the Castle Balbat, where three hundred men at Armes of the Turkes set vpon vs, and had slaine many, whose Arrowes being spoiled with the raine, they were vnarmed, if Baldwins care had not protected them. So passing by Tortosa and Laodicea, Boamund departed to Antiochia, where he was ioyfully receiued, and held his Kingdome fixe moneths. Then in Iuly following, one Gabriel, an Armenian, offering to render to him the Citie of Milutina, he went thither with small company, and in the way Danisman, an Amira, with a multitude of Turkes, slue

30 many, put the rest to flight, and tooke Boamund. Baldwin made after them, but in vaine, sauing that Gabriel rendred Milutina to him. In the midst of this his prosperitie, newes was brought him of his Brothers death in Iuly, the second yeare after Ierusalem was taken, and that all Ierusalem expected him to succede. Griewing somewhat at his Brothers death, and more reioycing for the Inheritance, hee let out to one Baldwin his Kinsman the Countrey which hee held, and with seven hundred men at Armes, and seven hundred Foot-men, on the seventh of October he set forth towards Ierusalem, passing by Antiochia, Laodicea, Gibellum, Mara- clea, Tortosa, Arobas and Tripoli. The King of Tripoli gaue him kind entertainment, and intelligence of Duchar King of Damasco, and Gnabaldole King of Caliptus, waiting and way-

40 laying his coming. Neere to Berito, about five miles distance, is a strait passage neere the Sea, which a few hundreds may make good against one hundred thousand. Heere they waited for vs, and heere wee were in ill taking, not knowing which way for to escape or get backward or forwards: how soeuer we made a shew of courage, I wished my selfe at Carnote or Orleans. Wee resolved after an ill nights rest, to goe backe the next morning, which we did, they pursuing vs in such sort, that we had no place left for flight or hope of safetie. But God mercifully saued vs with a great miracle, they being suddenly terrified, and their ships flying for feare of vs, and we made great slaughter, and got great spoile. The next day we returned againe, and found the streight aforesaid cleere, and passed the same with praises to God. The Amiras of Beruto, Sidon, also Tyrus, & Achon, made shew of friendship to vs. But Tancred which held the Castle Caiphas was maleuolent to Baldwin, wherefore we entred it not. We came at last to Ioppe, where the 50 Frankes acknowledged Baldwin for their King, and hasted thence to Ierusalem, where hee was welcomed with Procession of Clergie and Laitie, with Crosses and Candles. Daybert was not present as one accused, distasted of the people, and held in suspicion.

Sixe daies after, Baldwin set forth to Ascalon, whiles we wasted the Countries, diuers Saracens had hidden their goods and themselves in holes of the Earth, which being reuealed by the Syrians, they were forced out by fire, made in the entries of their dens and slaine, being usuall Robbers and Murtherers of Christians, we passed that way. When our prouisions were spent, we made an in-road into Arabia, and passing by Abrahams Sepulchre foureteene miles from Ierusalem, came into the Valley where Sodom and Gomorrha were destroyed, where is now the great Lake Asfalti, which they call the dead Sea. The length whereof from Zoara of A- 6 rabia, is five hundred and eightie furlongs to the places next to Sodom, the breadth one hundred and fiftie, so salt, that neither Beast nor Bird can drinke thereof, which I Fulcherius descending from my Mule, tasted, and found more bitter then Ellebores. And because nothing liues therein, it is called the Dead Sea. Iordan enters on the North; on the South is no passage out, neither River nor Lake. Neere which Lake or Dead Sea, is a high Mountaine salt also, by places, hard

- as a stone, and like Ice; which I coniecture, both by the waues washing it, and the showers falling downe, it make the Lake salt; or else the bottome thereof reacheth vnto the great salt Sea, by some inuisible passage vnder ground. A man can hardly sinke to the bottom if he would. Hauing compassed the South side of the Lake, wee found a Village, which they say, is Segor, of goodly situation, and abounding with Dates, whereof we fed pleasantly. Of other things we seldome found any, (for the Arabs hearing of vs, were fled) except some poore ones, blacke as Soote, which we contemned. There I saw Fruits on the Trees, which when I had broken the skin, I found to be dustie within and blacke.
- Thence we passed the Mountaines of Arabia, where the Inhabitants were fled from their Villages, and had hidden themselues in Caues. We came to a fertile Valley, watered out of the Rocke which Moses stroke with the Rodde, still continuing with such abundance, that Water-Mills are driuen therewith, where I Fulcherius watered my Horses. Wee found a Monasterie in the top of the Mountaine, called Saint Aarons, where Moses and Aaron were wont to speak with the Lord: and we reioyced to see places so holy and strange. And because from thence, till neere to Babylon, the Countrey is desert, we proceeded no further, but returned the same way we came to Ierusalem.
- In the yeare 1101. on Christmas day, in the Church of Saint Marie at Bethleem, by the Patriarch (then reconciled) was Baldwin anointed and crowned King, which Godfrey in reuerence to our Lord, there crowned with Thorne, had refused. Baldwin was feared as a good Souldier, but his people were few. Wee had yet no Port but Ioppe, neither was the way safe from thence for Pilgrims; but when we heard of any ships there, we went forth to meete them, which hauing visited Ierusalem, some stayed, others returned. Whereby the holy Land of Ierusalem remained emptie of people: nor were there to defend it from the Saracens, if they had dared to assault vs. For we had not then of men at Armes, aboue three thousand, and so many Foot-men as kept Ierusalem, Ioppe, Ramula and Cayphas. Neither durst we scarcely at any time assemble our forces, for feare of loosing our Fortresses: that it was not without miracle that wee continued among so many thousand thousands so strong. Wee durst aduenture no expedition, but neere to Ascalon or Arsuth. They which came by Sea brought no Horses, and by Land none came at vs; neither could the Antiochians helpe vs, or wee them. In March, Tancred left Cayphas to Baldwin, being sent for to Antioch to gouerne that Kingdome, till Buamund were free.
- A Fleet of Italians and Genuois, that had wintered at Laodicea, sailed thence to Ioppe, and came to Ierusalem, where on Easter Euen was great adoe, because the light which that day vseth to bee kindled from Heauen at the Lords Sepulchre, was not seene as in former times. But after much Ceremonies and Prayers, on Easter day happened to a Lampe in the Sepulchre, of which the Patriarch had the Key. The Genuois after Easter, forced Arsuth to yeeld themselves to King Baldwin, who also with their helpe besieged and tooke Casarea Palestina. I saw there many Saracens burned for the Bizantines, which they had swallowed, or hidden in their mouthes, that with a blow on the mouth many pieces flew out of their mouthes: women also had hidden them in places not to be named. Wee went to Ramula, and waited if the Enemie would fight with vs. Seuentie dayes after our departure, wee heard that they set forth to seeke battell, and Baldwin assembled his people from Ierusalem, Tiberias, Casarea and Caypha. And because we had but few Knights (or men at Armes) the King warned all that could to make their Esquires Knights: so that all together were two hundred and threescore, and of footmen nine hundred. Against vs were eleuen thousand men at Armes*, and twentie one thousand footmen. We carried the wood of the Lords Crosse which comforted vs, & was carried openly by a venerable Abbot. Baldwin comforted them also, telling them of Heauen open to the dying, glory among Christians to the suruiuing: but France is farre off, if we runne away. The Leader with five thousand of the Enemies were slaine: this battell was fought the seuenth of September. The next day we returned to Ioppe laden with spoile: encountring five hundred Saracens, which hauing fought and beaten a part of our forces in the battell, with their Armes halted to Ioppe, thinking to get the Towne; but not receiued, they thought vs to be their owne fellowes, supposing the Christians all slaine, in that error comming to vs, till they learned the truth to their cost. Two Newes-tellers had also signified to the Ioppites, the death of King Baldwin, and defeating of his Armie, whereupon they had sent by Sea to Tancred, yea, the Queene did write a Letter of that import to hasten him to their succour, who was also setting forth when the true report by a Messenger purposely sent, stayd him. Wee went safe to Ierusalem, and rested eight monethes.
- In the yeare 1102. the Babylonians were gathered together at Ascalon, to destroy vs utterly, being twentie thousand Horsemen and ten thousand Foot, besides victuals. These in May laid siege to Ramula. At that time many Frankes were at Ioppe, waiting a fit wind for their returne to France. These had comne the yeare before by Romania, and had lost their Horses and all they had. For William, Earle of *Poictou, and Stephen Earle of Blois, (which sought now to recouer the

In the Romanian Confinies, Soliman the Turke with great forces of Turkes had dispersed them, and almost destroyed them, slaying aboue one hundred thousand of their Horsemen and Footmen, also some of their women, and some he carryed away. Their Mules, Horses and Beasts of burthen and goods the Turkes had gotten. The Earle of Poitou saued only himselfe, getting on foot to Antiochia in lamentable case, whom Tancred entertained. Some went by Sea and they which had Horses by Land, which also in the way assaulted and tooke Tortosa, where Earle Raimond to their great disgult, remayned. Baldwin wayted for them at the Streights neere Beruto, eightene dayes: they came to Ierusalem, kept there their Easter, visited the holy places, dined with King Baldwin in the Temple of Salomon, and now waited passage at Ioppe, when this newes came that King Baldwin had taken horse to goe against the Babylonians. Stephen of Blois and Stephen of Burgundie, Gefferie of Vendon and Hugh Liziniac (brother to Earle Raimond) got Horses and followed. But Baldwin improuidently hasting, was in fight of the Enemies before his forces could haue sight of him, not attending the foot, and hauing but few Horses. So that, with two hundred men at Armes, he was encompassed of twentie thousand, where he expected

Where not daring to stay, with fiew followers he departed, and three dayes after, with one only, hungrie and thirstie escaped to Ar-suth. The two Stephens of Blois and Burgundie, were slaine. The King durst not aduenture by Land, and therefore sailed to Ioppe. Thence hee intreated an old poore Syrian, to carrie by by-ways, newes to Ierusalem, whither on the third day hee came, and ninetie men at Armes with some others of the Citie which could get Horses, set out for Ioppe, whither not without skirmishes and losse the most came. Also Hugh of Tiberias had before comne with eightie men at Armes. With such forces as he had, he set forth to meete the Enemy then approaching within three miles. Their huge numbers encompassing ours, were yet chased out of the field, leauing
- 30 their Tents to the Frankes, with Camels, Asses, Money. For the King had then the word of our Lords Crosse, which if hee had in the former battell carryed, it is not to bee doubted, but God would haue shewed mercie to his people, if the King would haue gone wisely with his people to the battell. All Winter after they were quiet. Anno 1103. the King besieged Achon, but not able to take it, he waited the Countrey and returned to Ioppe. Buamund was now restored to libertie and his Antiochian Principalitie, adding also Laodicea which Tancred had taken from the Constantinopolitans, giuing him recompense for it in his owne Land. King Baldwin in a skirmish was very dangerously wounded neere the heart.

- Anno 1104. the King againe besieged Achon (or Ptolemaida,) assisted by a Fleet of Genuois, of seuentie ships beaked, ^b and after twentie dayes siege tooke it: of great import for the Port, which within the walls harboureth many ships safely. Buamund and Daibert by Sea went to
- 40 Italy, he to get people, the other to complaine of Baldwin to the Pope, who fauoured him, but in his returne he dyed.

^b Rostrate, that is, the beaks, or stems couered with Iron or Brasse.

- Anno 1105. Earle Raimond dyed in his owne Towne before Tripolis, whom succeeded his Nephew William Jordan. The King of Caliptus receiued a great ouerthrow by Tancred, which then ruled in Antiochia, and lost numbers numberlesse. The King of Babylon ^c raised a great Armie which he sent to Ascalon, against which Baldwin moued from Ioppe, and sent to Ierusalem that they should fast, pray, and make Procession barefoot, which was done, my selfe beeing one. The Patriarke went and carryed the Crosse. Our men at Armes were fiew hundred, besides other Horsemen which had not that Militarie place, and two thousand foot. The Enemy was fiftene
- 50 thousand, foure thousand were slaine, of which was the Amira of Ascalon; the Amira of Achon was taken. Their Nauie before Ioppe returning to Babylon, (Cairo) was assailed by Tempest, and miserably disperst, whereof fiew and twentie ships were taken by vs, beeing full of Saracens. On Christmas Euen at Ierusalem, we felt a great Earthquake.

^c That is, as in other places of the storie, the Egyptian Chalifa: Cairo being by some called Babylon.

- Anno 1106. a Comet appeared fiftie dayes decreasing, beginning in February: also three Sunnes, a smaller on each hand of the true, both in quantitie and light; a great white Circle enuironing, and in it a Rain-bow of foure colours, the Bow toward the Sunne, and reaching to the other two Sunnes. In the next moneth, the Starres of Heauen seemed to raine. Hugh of Tiberias against the Damascens, had a notable Victorie, with sixescore, chasing foure thousand, and soone after dyed of an Arrow shot.

Such a triple Sun and Rainbow was scene 1621. in Devonshire.

- 60 Anno 1107. seuentie of ours chased fiew hundred of theirs, besides one thousand footmen. Buamund returned out of France with fiew thousand men at Armes, and threescore thousand footmen, without women; provided a Fleet at Brundisium, sailed into Bulgaria, tooke Analon, besieged Duratum a yeare, and forced the Emperour to sweare to protect the Pilgrimes thorow all his Empire, and he also sware fealtie to the Emperour ^d after which, with part of his Ar-

mie hee returned into Apulia, the greater part according to their Vow, repaying to Ierusalem by Sea.

Anno 1109. Bertran sonne of Earle Raimund came out of Prouince, and with ninetie ships of the Genuois besieged Tripolis, but (by dissention betwixt him and Jordan his emulous Kinsman) to little effect. Baldwin came to the siege to intreate the Genuois to his assistance against Ascalon, Beruth and Sidon and began to agree the two Earles; but Jordan was slaine as hee rode in the night with an Arrow, no man knew how nor whence. Bertran sware fealtie to King Baldwin for his Fathers Inheritance (the cause of their quarrell) and when the Saracens had compounded to surrender the Towne, their liues saued, (which the King had confirmed by Oath) they permitted our chiefe men to enter part of the Towne. Meane-while, I know not how, a sudden tumult happened amongst the meaner Genuois, who scaled and entred the Towne without the Princes knowledge, and put all to the sword, no equitie being able to make restitution of their heads. But in the Kings circuit they escaped.

Anno 1110. King Baldwin with Bertran tooke Berith after seuentie five dayes siege: and after with Tancred passed ouer Euphrates, where they found the Turkish forces, which yet refused fight, and with wearisome delayes, caused that they furnished Edessa with victuall (the Turkes hauing wasted the Countrey and taken the Castles and Husbandmen which serued them with food) and departed againe ouer the Riuer, where the Turkes tooke and carryed into Persia, many of our footmen. In the meane-while, a Fleet arrived at Ioppe out of Norway, and the Westerne Sea conducted by that Kings Brother, which with their Sea-seruice ayded the King in the siege of Sidon, which yeelded vpon composition in December.

Anno 1111. Tancred sent to Baldwin, who with Bertran assembled all their forces against the Turkes, which in great multitudes had passed Euphrates out of Persia. They passed by Apamia, which Tancred had taken the yeare before: but the Turkes refusing to fight, they departed, Tancred to Antiochia, the King to Ierusalem. Preparation made, hee besieged Tyrus or Soor aboute foure monethes in vaine, his two Towers of wood which he had raised higher then the walls, beeing disappointed by two which the Citizens had erected on their walls by night, whence they being higher, cast fire into the other and consumed them. And ours which in conceit had diuided the prey, returned home with shame. Anno 1112. Tancred dyed.

Anno 1113. the Turkes passed Euphrates, and committed great spoile ouer the whole Countrey, and in a battell King Baldwin lost his Colours, Tents and goods, twelue hundred footmen, and thirtie of the best men at Armes. The Saracens before subiect, tooke Armes against vs. Sichem, which we call Naples, was taken. The Ascalonites came to the Suburbs of Ierusalem, and spoiled their Haruest: nor could a Messenger passe betwixt the King and them; nor durst the Husbandmen reape their Haruest in the Countrey, or exercise other busineses. But our Armie being renewed by Christian Pilgrimes from beyond the Seas, the Turkes departed towards Damasco, and King Baldwin to Achon, where he found the Countesse of Sicilia, (Wife of Roger the Brother of Robert Guiscard) comne to become his Wife.

Anno 1114. an infinite multitude of Grasse-hoppers, from the parts of Arabia, came into the Countrey of Ierusalem, which in Aprill and May much wasted our Corne. Two Earthquakes had happened the yeare before: two also this yeare, one so great in the Region of Antiochia, that many Townes were halfe or wholly ruined, throwing downe their walls, and the Houses, and killing the people: ouerturning the Castle Trialet neere to Euphrates, Mariseum with the walls, Houses and people was extinct: a great part of Mamistria fell.

Anno 1115. in Iune the Turkes passed the Riuer into Syria, and Doldequin King of Damasco, knowing that they hated him for the Murther of their former Generall Manduef, entred league with King Baldwin and Roger Prince of Antiochia, knowing that a three-fold Cord is not easily broken. When Baldwin was comne into those parts, the Turkes hid themselves, whom thinking to haue beene gone out of the Countrey, he returned. Meane-while, the Ascalonites had besieged Ioppe by Sea and Land, but returned frustrate: againe they sought to take it vnprouided, and made a second assault ten dayes after with like successe. The Turkes spoyling the Countrey of Syria, the Antiochians ouerthrew them in battell, slue three thousand and tooke many with rich spoyle, and three hundred thousand Byzantines. This yeare Mamistria was the second time subuerted by an Earthquake, wherewith also the like happened else-where in the Countrey of Antiochia. This yeare the King built the Castle Mount Royall within three dayes iourney of the Red Sea.

Anno 1116. the King went to the Red Sea, and found the Citie Heli, where the Israelites rested after they had passed the Red Sea: the Inhabitants being Fishermen were fled into their Boats. In the end of the yeare the King being sickly and fearing death, put from him Atlanda the Countesse of Sicilia, whom he had vniustly marryed, his former Wife still liuing at Edessa.

Anno 1117. the said Countesse returned into Sicilia. Grasse-hoppers deuoured the Vineyards, Corne, Trees of all kind, eating all greene things and the barks; going forth in Bands like an accurate Armie, some on foot, some flying. In the following moneth Iune, the Moone on the thirteenth day of her age was all red and after blacke, and two houres together lost the light, which which happening not in the full we tooke for a signe. In Iuly happened an Earthquake in December, the whole Heauen was fire like bloud, in some places shining white. Pope Paschal died in Ianuarie after, and King Baldwin in Aprill, and his Wife in Sicily, Alexius the Emperour, and the Patriarke Arnalphus.

In the end of March 1118. Baldwin had spoyled the Citie Pharamia, walking on a day by Nilus, his old grieve renewed, whereof he dyed in the way, being returned as farre as Laris. He was buried neere to his Brother Godfrey in Golgotha, hauing reigned eightene yeares, three monethes. Baldwin Earle of Edessa his Kinsman was elected in his stead, and was consecrated on Easter day, hauing comne accidentally to Ierusalem to speake with the King. That yeare the 10 Babylonians came with an Armie of fifteene thousand Horsemen, and twentie thousand foot, to Ascalon, and a great Fleet of ships attended on them by Sea. King Baldwin assembled his owne with the Tripolitan and Antiochian forces, and sate three monethes neere to them, neither side aduenturing the hazard of battell.

Anno 1119. Roger Prince of Antiochia, made an Expedition against the Turkes, and neere to the Towne Arthasium, was slaine with seuen thousand of his people, and of the Turkes not twentie. And no maruell? for they abounding in wealth exceedingly, neither feared God, nor reuerenced man: the Prince vsed manifold adulteries, dis-herited the Sonne of Boamund, re-mayning in Apulia with his Mother, hee and his liued luxuriously and proudly. King Baldwin sped better in a battell neere Sardanium, twentie foure miles from Antioch. Our men at Armes 20 were seuen hundred, the Turkes twentie thousand. Gazi was their Generall. A certaine Turke spake to a Franke which vnderstood the Persian, saying, Your God hath forsaken you, seeing yee neither hold his Law as ye were wont, nor faith and truth amongst your selues; This wee know and haue obserued, and to morrow shall ouercome you. Hereof wee might well indeed bee ashamed when a faithlesse Turke objected our want of faith. The battell followed, long doubtfull; at last the Turkes fled, some to Aleppo, some into Persia, God deliuering the King by vertue of the Crosse carryed by the Bishop of Casarea: who after two dayes keeping the field went to Antiochia, the Patriarke therof came forth to meet the holy Crosse, the King and Bishop; & on the day of the Exaltation of the Crosse they entred with the Crosse into Ierusalem reioycing, the King staying at Antiochia to set things in order, hauing that Kingdome added to his other of Ierusalem. On Christmas day 30 he and his Wife were crowned at Bethleem.

Anno 1120. the King remitted Tolls and Imposts, and hearing that the Turkes were comne into Syria, hee very humbly desired of the Patriarke and the Clergie, the Crosse to bee deliuered him, saying, that his men should be thereby fortified, and not trusting in his owne or his peoples force, he should obtaine it in stead of many thousands. Heere grew some reasoning betwixt those which went and those which staid, whether the Crosse ought for such a necessitie of Christianitie to be carryed to Antioch, or the Church of Ierusalem be depriued of such a treasure. We 40 said, Alas wretches, what shall we doe, if God permit the Crosse to bee lost in Warre, as once the Israelites lost the Arke of the Couenant? Nilling and willing we did it, with many teares shed for it, and Songs in prayse of it, conueying it out of Towne bare-foote, the King, Patriarch and people, with which the King departed weeping. The Turkes were neere Antiochia, but now retyred to Caliptus: some skirmishes happened in which many on both sides were slaine or wounded, but without battell ours returned to Antiochia, and most of them into Persia: and in October we entertained the most glorious Crosse of our Lord into Ierusalem with great ioy.

Anno 1121. the King set forth against Tuldequine, King of Damasco, who with the Arabians his Confederates spoyled the Countrey neere to Tiberias, tooke the Castle Iarras and razed it together with the Towne. Anno 1122. the King went to Tripolis against Earle Pontius, which refused to bee subiect to him, as his Father Bertran had beene, and the matter betwixt them was peaceably ended. Hee 50 went also against the Turkes which besieged Sardanium, and repelled them. Blessed therefore bee the Banner of the most holy Crosse of our Lord, a present helpe to true beleeuers, vnder whose protection and consolation, the faithfull without any losse returned home: they being ten thousand, ours but one thousand and two hundred. Meanewhile, Gofeline Earle of Edessa, was taken, and his Cousin Galeran, by Amira Balac, and soone after King Baldwin also.

Anno 1123. Henry King of Almaine, was pacified with Pope Calixtus. A great Fleete of Venetians which wintered at Corfu, being one hundred and twentie Saile, besides smaller Vessels, in which were fifteene thousand armed men, Venetians and other Pilgrims, and three hundred Horses. The Kingdome in Baldwins Captiuitie was committed to the gouernement of En- 60 flace, which then held Casarea and Sidon. The Babylonians with a Nauie of nintie Ships, came and besieged Ioppe: another land Armie was gone to Ascalon. The Ioppites men and women resisted valiantly: yet, had the siege continued, so few could not haue holden out. But the rumor of the Christian Fleete had scarred away the Enemies, when they had now made a breach in the Wall. Our men were vnited from all places at the Castle Chaco, and marched with the Crosse to Ramath neere Diospolis. Wee at Ierusalem made Prayers bare-foot, and Processions thorow all the Churches of the Citie, and gaue almes. Ours hauing receiued Benediction and Abolution of the Patriarke; fought neere Azot or Eldot, now called Ibenum, being brought to a small Village. Their Horse-men fled, their Foot were slaine, and their Tents were left to our men. And of thirtie thousand Babylonians, twelue thousand were slaine by Land and Sea, of ours in this fight but ten: after which, the Patriarke returned to Ierusalem with the Crosse; which was receiued without Dauids Gate, and with honorable Procession conuayed to the Temple of the Sepulchre. The Generall of the Venetian Fleet came to Achon, which hearing of the defeat, diuided his Nauie, with one part going towards Ioppe, sending the other into the Mayne to make the Saracens beleue that they were Pilgrimes comming from Cyprus. Meeting with the Fleet of Saracens, they made such a slaughter that the Sea for foure miles space was died red: for they slue the men and tooke the ships. After which they fell vpon ten other ships laden with victuall and timbers for Engines, Pepper, Cinamon, and diuers Spices, Munition and Money. Some ships they burned on the shoare, the most they brought to Achon. Eustace dyed, and William de Buris succeeded in the Protectorship. Baldwin escaped out of his hard Imprisonment, where he and Earle Ioseline were bound by a strange stratageme. Fiftie Edeffens, making shew as if they were Pedlars or poore Merchants: and waiting an occasion got into the inner gate, where the Captaine or chiefe of the Warders was at Chesse, to whom they made shew of complaint for some wrong offered: and seeing oportunitie, suddenly drew their Swords, and slue him, layd hold on the Launces (or Halberds) there standing, and laid lustily about them. The clamour brings many to see the businesse which they were suddenly sent to tell in another World, about one hundred Turkes being slaine, they shut the Castle, take out the Captiues, erect the Christian Colours. Balac had dreamed that Ioseline had pulled out his eyes, whereupon hee sent to put him to death, and before the Messengers were arrived, this had happened. Balacs best beloued Wife was in the Castle. Earle Ioseline by night, with three of his Seruants, gat out of the Castle in a Moone-light night, thorow the midit of the besiegers, and by night trauell got to Euphrates, and with two blowne Bladders and helpe of his companions, beeing ignorant of swimming, gate ouer: where vnder a Tree resting himselfe almost tattered and starued, hee was knowne by a Countriman, which hauing a Wife, and a little Daughter, and a silly Asse was willing to attend him with his Family. The Earle rode on the Asse, and carryed the poore mans childe crying and vnquiet, till they came through the Enemies Countrey to his owne Castle Terbexell. Thence (hauing repaid the poore Armenian) he hasted to Ierusalem where hee offered his Fetters in Mount Caluarie, and with the Crosse & an Armie had returned to Cartapeta, but in the way newes came that the King was againe captiue, whereupon after much spoile in the Saracens Countries, they parted the prey and departed home. Balac had vndermined the Castle, erecting timbers in the Mines, and filling the holes with wood, which he fired, and the Earth by that meanes falling, part of the Castle fell therewith, so that they within were forced to yeeld to mercie. The King Galdran he spared: the rest were hanged, or flayed, or cut asunder in the middle. The King was sent Prisoner to Carra.

Anno 1124. the Patriarke agreed with the Venetians to besiege Tyrus. Balac laid siege to Ierapolis, called Mumbeth, which Ioseline hearing (beeing then at Antiochia, hee came with his forces and gaue him battell, in which Balac and three thousand of his men were slaine. Balacs head was sent to Antioch: and his Esquire bringing the newes to the Campe at Tyrus, was knighted by the Earle of Tripolis. Tyrus was yeelded on the seuenth of Iuly, and the thirds giuen to the Venetians in the Citie and Port by composition.

The Kings libertie.

He same yeare in the end of August, King Baldwin agreed for his libertie, and returned to Antioch. His ransome was one hundred thousand Michaelites (a principall Coine in those parts) which not knowing how to pay, hee was perswaded to besiege Halapia, then being in some distresse. The Halapians were assisted by the Saracens beyond Euphrates, whereupon the King returned and went to Ierusalem. But hearing of Bursequines spoiling the Confinnes of Antioch, assisted by Doldequine of Damascus, who had taken Caphardan, and besieged Sardan, and thence removed to Hafard: he with the Earles of Tripolis and Edeffa, came and gaue them battell, and winning the field, got enough to redeeme his Daughter, which remayned pledge for his ransome. Hee invaded the Territorie of Damascus: but being told of the Babylonians comming to Ascalon, (for it was their custome foure times in the yeare to direct forces thither) hee set forth thither and curbed their insolence.

Anno 1126. he made an expedition by Tyberias and Decapolis, and to the Plaines of Medan, where where the Riuer Dan, betwixt Tyberias and Scythopolis runneth into Jordan, making vp that name; before which, that which descends into the Sea of Galilee, is called Ior, as some say, though Beda and others be otherwise minded. He encountered with the Damascenes, in a dreadfull and long doubtfull battell, which inclined at last to the Kings part. Hee restored Antiochia to Boamund the yonger, in marriage with his Daughter; against whom, Earle Iosceline conceiued such hatred, that he called in Turkes to his aide, and entred the Territories of Antioch with Fire and Sword, in the abience of the Prince. At that time Roger Earle of Sicilia, frustrated of his hopes in Africa, with his Fleete wanne Syracuse, slaying all, of all Ages and Sexes.

An. 1127 William an English man, was made Archbishop of Tyru, being before Prior of the Sepulchre; who being consecrated by the Patriarch of Ierusalem, would needes against his will, seeke his Pall at Rome, where Pope Honorius much honored him, and sent Giles his Legat with him, to make the Patriarke of Antioch to deliuer his Suffragan Bishops to him, vnder paine of Suspension. The yeere following, Hugo de Paganis, first Master of the Temple, and some other Religious men, which had beene sent by the King into the West, to excite aides of those Princes, returned with many Noble-men. Whereupon all the Easterne Christians agreed to besiege Damascus. Anno 1130. But hauing lost many in forraging and skirmishing, the Elements with thunders and raines compelled them to retire home. Boamund was one, which in his returne to his Prouince, found Rodoan the Turke, committing spoiles, and in seeking reuenge lost himselfe and his life. The King made haste to set things there in order, where his Daughter the Princes Wife, sent to Sanguin the Turke for aide, to hold Antiochia to her selfe. The Messenger by the way was intercepted, and brought to the King. She prepared to withstand her Father, but in vaine. He returning to Ierusalem, fell sicke, and because the Patriarkes house was neerer the place of the Resurrection, lay there; and taking the habit of Religion, hauing commended the Kingdome to Fulke his Sonne-in-law, with his little Sonne Baldwin, he died in August, 1131.

This Fulke had married the Kings eldest Daughter, Milifend, being Earle of Anion, Turon, &c. and had beene at Ierusalem in Pilgrimage, and maintained one hundred Horse-men a whole yeere at his charge, winning such loue of the King and people, that the King bestowed his Daughter and succession on him. Honorius dying, a contention grew for the Papacie, twixt Innocent and Peter, called Anacletus, the matter was tried on both sides with blood and slaughter. Innocent obtayning, ordained the Church of Tyre to be subiect to Ierusalem, and to haue the same place with that Patriarke which before it held with the Antiochian. Great stirre arose about the Earle of Ioppa; who, being accused by Galternus Casariensis of treason, was sentenced to acquit himselfe by combat; but he appeared not, and was therefore condemned: whereupon hee went to Ascalon, desiring aide of the Enemie, which added fewell to the fire, and inuaded the Christians on that confidence. Peace was concluded, and the Earle after that in Ierusalem, as he was at play, was murdered, and the King suspected as procurer thereof, whereof hee cleered himselfe by execution of the Malefactor.

Pontius Earle of Tripolis, with all his power, fighting against the Damascens, was taken and slaine, his Armie disperfed, the Bishop taken, and a great multitude killed. The Antiochians had deliuered their Citie to Raimund, with Boamunds daughter to Wife, which the *Constantinopoli-*tan misliked, and by great power sought to subdue all that Principallitie, with Horses, Chariots, Treasures beyond number, and Forces infinite, passing Saint Georges arme, and violently forced Tarsus, and placed his owne, expelling thence the Antiochian Forces. He besiegeth Antiochia. Sanguin the Turke takes the aduantage to inuade the Countrey of Tripolis, and besieged Mount Ferrand. Both parts sue to the King for aide, who going first against Sanguin, receiued an ouerthrow; the Earle of Tripolis was taken, and almost all the Footmen taken or slaine with all their carriages. The King fled for succour to a Castle vnprovidd, out of which whiles his subiects seeke to deliuer him, Neapolis was taken by other Saracens with cruell execution of all sorts. Sanguin put the King to such straits before succours could come (which on all hands were provided) that he was contented to agree on conditions to resigne the Fortresse after much Famine and death. Antiochia was also grievously assaulted, but peace was by mediation concluded betwixt the Emperour and the Prince, which did him homage.

The Emperour hauing wintered in Cilicia, the next Spring layeth siege to Cesarea, assisted with the Prince of Antioch, and Earle of Edeffa to satisfie them, which yet by their negligent labours and diligent play, gaue him so little satisfaction, that being offered money, he accepted it, and returned to Antioch, where arose a tumult about his demand of a Garrison, which grew to blowes, wounds, deaths, which caused the Emperour to remit his demand, and to returne home. Meane-while, Theodericke Earle of Flanders, the Kings Sonne-in-law came to Ierusalem, with a strong Armie. These with the Ierosolymitans besieged a Den of Theeues neere Mount Galad, being an inaccessible Caue, where a Nest of Adders resided, wayting all opportunities of mischief: which while they were doing, the Turkes tooke Tecua. The Master of the Temple came vpon them with his forces, and chased them, but minding the spoyles, the conquered returned and regained the victorie with great slaughter and spoile.

But Sanguin feared the encounter and returned. Pancas after a strong siege was taken. The Popes Legate commeth into those parts, and after much stirre deposeth Ralfe, the Patriarke of Antiochia; compels him to deliuer his Ring and Crosse, and commits him to the Prince to Bonds and Imprisonment in a high Mountaine, whence escaping to Rome, and obtayning some glance of Papall light, in his returne hee was poysoned. The Legate returneth to Ierusalem, and dedicates the Temple in great solemnitie, and celebrates a Councell with the Patriarke, the Armenian, Median, Persian, Cappadocian Bishops, and reformation was promised in the things wherein they dissent from vs. Aimerike an vnlearned man was chosen the Antiochian Patriarke.

The Emperour makes another Expedition within foure yeares after the former into Cilicia, and to Edessa, with innumerable Treasures and People, where after much labour to little effect, the next Spring in hunting a wild Boare, with a Poysoned Arrow hee hurt his hand as hee was shooting, whereof he dyed, Anno 1137. and King Fulke, by like disadventure followed, in the following of a Hare falling from his Horse, his braines with the violence thereof, forced out of his nose and eares. This happened in Nouember 1142.

Baldwin the third succeeded. Sanguin the Turke Lord of Nimue (now called Musul) came and besieged Edessa, the Metropolis of Media called Rages, a Citie better stored with Merchants then Souldiers, and by vndermining tooke it, neither sparing age or sex; amongst the rest, Hugh the Archbishop was slaine, who hauing horded infinite Treasure, to spare it hee was prodigall of his life, and fame and it also, to a cruell vngratefull Heire. He proceeded to besiege Calogenbar on the other side of Euphrates, where one night in his drunkenesse hee was slaine of his seruants; liuing and dying, Sanguine, one of his Sonnes succeeded at Musul, Noradine, another at Halapia. The Captaine of Bostrum vpon discontent with the Damascens came to Ierusalem, and offered to yeeld the Citie to the King, who went with an Armie, but too late, the Enemy hauing possession before, wherefore after many dangers and losses he returned. Not long after the Edessans (Noradine being else-where busied) send to Earle Iosceline, who commeth and suddenly becommeth Master of the Citie, which he was not able to hold, Noradine returning with a strong power, and recouering it with exceeding slaughter of the Citizens and of the Earles Armie.

After this, Pope Eugenius sent Preachers to excite men to take the Crosse (amongst them Bernard Abbot of Claronale) which went thorow Kingdomes and Regions, whereby Conrade the Emperour and Lewis King of France with many Princes embraced the word and signe of the Crosse, which yet did in all that Expedition nothing acceptable to God, our sinnes deseruing it. As they which were present, constantly affirme there were in the Emperours Campe seuentie thousand * harnessed Horse-men, besides Foot-men, Children, Women, and Horse-men of lighter Armour. And in the Armie of the French as many armed Horse-men, and a Nauie; able if God had blessed them to haue conquered all the Easterne Prouinces. The Greekes either by command, or corrupted by the Enemy, led ours by vnpassable passages, so that their Enemies made such slaughter, that of all those thousands of Horse-men, and innumerable Footmen, scarcely the tenth part escaped. The French followed the Imperials in like fates, the glory of the Frankes and vertue sometimes dreadfull, being made a mockerie to their Enemies, Famine and Disorder pursuing the residue which escaped the Battell which was in Ianuary 1146.

Anno 1148. Noradine inuades the Territories of Antiochia, and in Battell Raimund the Prince with the strength of those parts were slaine. Raimunds head and right hand were sent to the Calipha of Baldac: all the Countrey was ouer-runne by martiall furie. The Soldan of Iconium inuades the Countrey of the Earle of Edessa, takes many Cities and Castles, and besiegeth the Earle in Turbessel, and vpon conditions departeth. This Earle a voluptuous and dissolute man reioycing at the fall of Antiochia, fell soone after into his Enemies hands, which carried him to Halapia, where tyred with miserie he dyed.

The power of the Frankes consisted in the Kingdome of Ierusalem, the Principalitie of Antioch, the Earldome of Edessa, & the Earledom of Tripolis. After the former miseries in other parts happened a dissention twixt the King and his Mother, which diuided the Kingdome betweene them in ciuill combustions. The Queene betakes her to Ierusalem, whither the King followes with an Armie, and (notwithstanding the Patriarkes admonition) besiegeth it, and after that the Citizens had let him in, laid siege to the Tower where she was, till at last agreement was made on both sides, internal grudges and reliques of faction stil remayning, whiles without as two Millstones, Noradine and the Soldan of Iconium, ground the State betwixt them to powder. The Soldan of Iconium hauing inuaded againe the Countrey of Edessa, lest miserie should want, the Constantinopolitan sends a great Armie and challengeth the Countrey which the King yeelds to, taking with him the people (which hereupon with their wealth departed) whereof Noradine vnderstanding with great power assailed them, their carriages being sticked with Arrowes like Hedge-hogs, yet they shifted away, the Turkes wanting victuals to follow them. In one yeare did Noradine dispossesse the Greekes of their new Possessions, a rich Countrey beeing quite lost, and three Archbishopricks cut off from the Church of Antioch, the Edessan, the Hierapolitan, and Coricen. The Earle of Tripolis was murdered by the Assisines.

- A huge Armie of Turkes called Hiaroquin, whose Progenitors had held Ierusalem, made an expedition thither for recouerie of their pristine possession; where, tyred by the difficultie of the way, they were made an easier conquest to the Sword of the Christians, so that five thousand being slaine, the rest were glad to retire. This was Anno 1152. The King besieged Ascalon two Moneths; after which, according to the custome, at Easter was a passage of Pilgrims in great frequencie, which came thither with huge bands of Horse and Foote, the Campe daily increasing, the Pilgrims which would haue returned being forbidden, and their Ships being imployed in this seruice. Ours with Masts of Ships, made a wooden Tower, and of the other materials of the Ships, engines and Pent-house provisions for securitie of the approachers. After
- 10 five Moneths siege, and daily killing and wounding on both sides, the Babylonian Fleet came to their succour. Gyrard of Sydon the Admirall of our Fleet, thought to encounter with them, but seeing their multitudes fled; they being seuentie Gallies and other Ships of huge greatnesse and great provisions, which the Egyptian Prince had sent. A peece of the Wall being razed, they which would haue entred, were forbidden by the Templers (that being the custome for all men to hold whatsoeuer spoile they got) in hope of gaine, so that their couetousnesse exposed them to the slaughter. And our men fainting were incouraged, and the Citie was yeelded, on composition to depart with bag and baggage. Ascalon was made Bishop by the Patriarke, against the will of the Bishop of Bethleem, which appealed to the Pope, and by his sentence excluded the former. Nocquin a Turke seeing the Ascalonites destitute of sufficient guard, hee
- 20 (which had vnderooke to guard them into Egypt himselfe) fell vpon them, rised them, and left them wandring in the Desert. This hapned, Anno 1154. Mischiefes neuer alone.
- Anno 1155*, was a grieuous famine, and but for the store of Corne which they found in Ascalon, the people had all perished. And the yeere following, the soile about Ascalon, which
- hostilitie had not permitted to be tilled in fittie yeeres, rendred sixtie-fold increase. Great contention grew betwixt the Patriarke and Hospitalars, about Titles of their goods, and other their insolencies. The Roman Church not considering what it granted, gaue cause hereof, freeing the place from iurisdiction of the Patriarke. This place of the Hospitall was giuen first by the Egyptian Calypha's to the Amalfitan Merchants of Italie, to build them a house, where they erected a Monasterie of Saint Mary, of Latin Monkes; and another Nunnerie of Saint Mary Magdalen; and after that an Hospitall, and an Alrar in honor of Saint Iohn Eleyman, or the
- 30 Almoner. The maintenance of these was yeerly almes: which continued till Ierusalem was won by the Christians, Gerald being then Master of the Hospitall, to whom Raymund succeeded, which now by Roman priuiledge did thus domineere. The Patriarke went a dangerous iourney with others to Rome, where he receiued bad entertainment, the Cardinals (all but two) following Balaam sonne of Bosor, and going after gifts. The Emperour of Constantinople at that time by the Popes consent inuaded Apulia. Lib. 18. Famine and plentie.
- About this time the Soldan of Egypt slew the Calypha, to make his sonne Noseredine, Calypha; but the fact being knowne, the Countrey was too hot for him, who flying the Egyptian Fryingpan, fell into the fire of the Frankes, which slew him and tooke Noseredine, whom desiring to
- 40 become a Christian, the Templers sold to the Egyptians for sixtie thousand Egyptian pieces of gold, which carried him in an Iron Grate into Egypt, and there cut him in small pieces. The yeere after, Ranialdus de Castellione Prince of Antiochia inuaded Cyprus with hostile Legions, a Christian neighbour Countrey, alway friendly to vs. He ouerthrew their Armie, wasted Cities, Townes, Monasteries, rauished Nunnes, obtayned infinite spoiles, which he soone spent as prodigally. The King also brake his league with the Turkes at Paneas, for greedinesse of spoile to pay his debts: which was soone reuenged. Noradine besieged the Towne, which the King caused him with an Armie to leaue, but so, as waiting better opportunitie, which hee soone found, to doe more hurt to the Kings Armie; taking the most of the geeat Men therein, the King hardly escaping, and consequently (in that time) the Kingdome. He againe besiegeth Paneas, and againe by the King is repelled. After this, the King besieged Cesarea, and with the
- 50 helpe of Theodorick Earle of Flanders, then with his forces present, wanne it: and after that Harenc. He dyed, Anno 1162, and his brother Amalricus succeeded. Cesarea taken.
- He in his first yeere descended into Egypt, and fought with Dargan the Soldan, and obtained victorie; who, lest he should proceed further, brake the bankes of Nilus then swolne, to ouerflow the Countrey. Dargan was soone after slaine. Noradine inuaded the Countrey of Tripolis, but by helpe of Westerne Pilgrims then comie thither, his Armie was dissipated, himselfe hardly escaping, with one Legge bare, leauing his Sword behinde. Of these Pilgrims Gilbert de Laci, and Robert Mansel were Commanders. To recouer his credit, he besieged Harenc, where Boamund the third Prince of Antiochia, Raimund the Earle of Tripolis, and Caliman
- 60 President of Cilicia and Toros, an Armenian Prince opposing, were discomfited, and the three former, with diuers other Nobles taken, Anno 1165. Baldwins death Amalricus succeedeth. Lib. 19.
- Syracon* tooke an in expugnable Fort by corruption of the Keepers, called Canea de Tyrum. He prepared great forces against Sauar the Soldan of Egypt, by authoritie of the Calypha of Baldac, carrying Water in Bottles thorow the Desert. Amalricus followed him, his whole Armie meeting

ting at Belbeis or Pelufium. Sauar gaue him royall entertainment, shewed him his Treasures; and Cabere (Cayro) liating on the left hand Babylon, which the Arabs call Macer, (infinite ruines remaine ten miles beyond Nilus, still called Memphis, and therefore this is not the old Memphis) Iohar built Cabere, in the yeare after Mahomet 358. The King and Soldan agreed to goe meete Syracon, which was passed ouer the Riuer before they came. Some remainders they tooke, which told them, that in the Wildernesse such a tempest of Sand in manner of Clouds, and a thicke Mist hapned, that they durst not open their mouthes or eyes, and were forced to alight and lye downe, lest the Whirle-wind should lift them vp in the ayre, to receiue greater fals on the earth. The Sands there, are moueable with the winds like waues of the Sea, and no lesse dangerous. Many were lost, together with their Camels and prouisions, and many scattered in the Deserts. Sauar, to hold the King with him in that danger, encreased the tribute, and gaue larger pay to his followers: to which the Calipha also bound himsele, Hugo Casariensis being therefore sent to him. He and Galfridus came to Cabere, and entred the Palace Cascere, passing by darke passages needing lights, (in euery of which was a guard) vnto more spacious places open to the Sunne, where they saw Galleries borne vp with Marble Pillars, the Roofes gilded, with carued workes, the pauements diuersified, presenting a Royall splendor. There were marble fish-ponds, many strange Birds vnkowne in our World, with their prouisions. Then they passed to places as farre exceeding these, as these the vulgar. Heere was admirable varietie of admirable beasts. By many turnings they came to the Palace of this Palace, where were greater Gards, more glorious Courtiers, and supereminent riches. The Soldan which conducted them, twice prostrated himsele with a kind of adoration, and the third time being prostrate, he laid aside his sword from his necke. Presently the Curtaines embroydered with Gold and Pearle were drawne from about the Throne, where the Calipha sate in more then Royall habite, attended with a few Domestickes and Eunuches. The Soldan approached with reuerence, and kissed his feet, and then acquainted him with the affaires of the present state, to which hee gaue a gentle Answer. And when Ours desired him to confirme it with his hand, his attendants made strange, as a thing vnheard off: but at last the Soldan vrging, he stretched forth his hand, but veiled: to whom Hugo, Sir, Faith seekes not corners, and in faith betwixt Princes all things ought to bee bare with open sinceritie: whereat hee vnwilling, yet smiling, gaue him his bare hand, (which the Egyptians much grudged at) putting it into the hand of Hugo, vsing the words of the compact. Hee was as the Lord Hugo hath told vs, a young man, browne, tall, comely, liberall, had innumerable Waues: his name was Elbadech, the Sonne of Elseis.

The diuision betwixt the Calipha of Baldac, and this hapned by the Schisme of Hali, which made himsele a greater Prophet then Mehemet: those that acknowldge Mehemet the greatest being called Sunni, and the followers of Hali, Sfia. In the yeare 286. of Mehemet, arose one Abdalla, of *Hali*s Posteritie, which from Selencia a Citie in the East passed into Africa, and called himsele Mehedi (that is, making plaine) which built Mehedia, tooke Sicilia, made spoiles in Italie, and called himsele Calipha, first of all the followers of Hali: His great Grandchildes Sonne Ebuthemin, by Iohar his Captaine subduing Egypt, built Cabere, which signifieth conquering: whereupon leauing Caroca in Africa, where foure of his Progenitors had dwelt, he made that the Imperiall Seat, opposing himsele to the Easterne Calipha, as I haue more largely shewed in mine Historie of the Eastern Princes, & their Acts from Mehemet to this day (1182.) with great diligence, King Amalricus procuring me the Arabian Bookes. But leauing these digressions, a battell was fought betwixt the King and Syracon, very various both getting the better and the worse, neither partie conquering nor conquered in the whole, but in diuers parts of their Armies. Saladine Nephew of Syracon tooke Hugo Casariensis. The Bishop of Bethleem, the Kings Chancellor (in which office I succeeded) was wounded and lost his baggage. Syracon passed thence to Alexandria, and the Citizens receiued him. The King followed: but Syracon leauing the Citie to Salahadine, escaped by night. The King besieged the Citie and put them to great straites. Hugo (then captiue) was vsed as an Instrument of Treatie, and the Citie yeelded to Amalricus, Anno 1167. But Amalricus by Gerbert Master of the Hospitall his meanes (Pelufium beeing promised to the Hospitalers) brake his league and entred Egypt in hostile manner, the Templers refusing to follow, either of enuie to the Hospitalers, or of conscience, which the King violated.

Pelufium was taken, no Age or Sexe spared, and Mahazam Sonne of the Soldan was taken. Sauar sends to Noradine for aide which sent Syracon thither with an Armie. The King proceeded towards Cabere, but went slowly vpon promise of great summes from the Soldan, which deceiued him. His Nauie passing vp the Riuer by the arme thereof Carabes, forced Tapis. The King laid his siege to Cabere, but vpon promise of money remoued a mile further. Milo de Planci disturbeth the businesse, but Syracon more, who entring Egypt, the King went to meete him, but missing returned home. Syracon taking the oportunitie entred Cabere in peace, treacherously slue Sauar, and was by the Calipha made Soldan, soone after dying, and Salahadine sucsucceeding. The Easterne Emperour sent in succour of the Holy Land, a strong Fleet of one hundred and fiftie Gallies of Warre, besides other Vessels of seruice, whereupon, Anno 1169. Amalricus againe entred Egypt, and came to Damietta, which hee besieged in vaine, if it bee not more then vaine, that themselves forced with fire, famine, raines, returned (so many as were left) home frustrate. Lib. 20.

The yeare following followed a most terrible Earthquake, vtterly ouerthrowing strong Cities, inuoluing the Inhabitants in the ruines, filling euery place in the Land with laments. Thus fared it with the Cities of Syria, and Phœnicia throwne to the ground, and Antiochia in Cœlesyria was quite ouerthrowne; the Walls, Towers, Churches, Houses so ruined, that to this day they cannot be reduced to a meane restauration. Gabul, Laodicea, Nerea called otherwise Halapia, Casara, Hannin, Emissa, and many other Cities in that Prouince, Townes without number, fared likewise. Tripolis was made a heape of stones, and publike Sepulchre: scarcely any escaping. Tyrus lost her Towers. These terrors continued three or foure moneths, thrice or foure times a day. Palestina remayned free. Const. Fleet.

After this Salahadine inuadeth the Countrey, taketh Gaza, makes cruell executions and returneth into Egypt. Milo the Armenian adioyneth himselfe to Noradine, vexeth the Antiochian Territories. Salahadine spoyleth all the Countrey beyond Iordan. Anno 1173. Amalricus dyeth, and his Sonne Baldwin succeeded, whom his Father at nine yeares of age had committed to our Erudition (then Arch-deacon of Tyre) his right arme was stupified and senselesse, the beginning of an incurable Disease, when he was a stripling proofing a Leprosie. Hee had a Sister named Sybilla. In the first yeare of his Reigne, William King of Sicilia, sent a Nauie of two hundred ships against Alexandria, which returned with great losse and shame. Salahadine the Sonne of Negmend, Brother of Syracon, was called by the Damascens, and made Lord of Damascus, the Sonne of Noradine being disherited. Corobedi Lord of Musul, came in his Nephewes behalfe against him, but in vaine, Salahadine winning the rest of the Countrey. After this with a huge Armie, he entreth the Kingdome, layeth all waste, is encountred and ouerthrowne by the King; Salahadine flying with scarce one hundred Horse, an innumerable company being taken or slaine. The King 1178. inuaded the Enemies Countrey, and hardly escaped the Lord Constable and others being slaine. In a battell also against Salahadine, ours hauing gotten the field laden with prey, are spoiled and made a prey to the conquered. The Earle Trecensis and the Brother of King Lewis of France, Peter, and other Nobles with a great power came into Syria but could not withstand the current of Salahadines victories, which now possessed himselfe of a Castle which the King had lately built neere Iordan, and rased it. Hee makes league with the King and breakes it, and takes diuers holds by Sea and Land, annoying the Kingdome. But wearie of blood I follow this Author no further, whose storie is left vnperfect, as the King then was in state of bodie, committing the Gouvernement of the Kingdome to Guido of Liziniac, on whom before he had bestowed his Sister in Marriage. I will likewise commit you to an English Author and Acts in these businesses. Terrible Earthquake.

If any bee offended, that the date and yeare of each Exploit is not mentioned, it is because the Author had not done it. Baldwin the fourth his Leprosie.

SALADINES taking Ierusalem and the Holy Land.

ABout the yeare 1118. the Hospitulers were begunne by Hugo de Paganis, and Godfrey of Saint Omar. These were Knights religious in manner of Canons Regulars, deuoting themselves to the seruice of Christ in Chastitie and Obedience; to whom King Baldwin gaue a residence in part of his Palace, the Canons of the Temple of our Lord gaue the street adioyning to build Offices; the King, Patriarke and Prelates gaue Benefices for their maintenance. Their first profession was, for remission of their sinnes, to secure the wayes for Pilgrimes against Theenes. Nine yeares after, at the Councell of Treca, a rule and white habit was designed them by Beginning of the Templers.

- Pope Honorius: and nine yeares after that their number (being but nine) beganne to increafe together with their Possessions; after which in the time of Pope Eugenius, they sewed Crosses of red Cloth to their Mantles. In a small time they were so many, that in their Couent they haue three hundred Knights, besides other Brethren, whose number is almost infinite: and their Possessions on this and the other side of the Sea are said to bee so immense, that there is no part of Christendome, which hath not bestowed on them part of their goods, and they are now richer then Kings. And because their abode is neere the Temple, they are called Brethren of the Soldierie of the Temple: and hauing continued some time in good order, the humilitie of their profession now being neglected, they haue withdrawne themselves from the Patriarke their founder, withholding Obedience, and the Churches Tithes, and are become very troublesome to all. 10

In May following, hee beganne his Pilgrimage, leading with him seuentie thousand Horse-men armed, besides light Horse-men, * Footmen, Women and Children. Lewis King of France followed him with no lesse an Armie of armed Horse-men. They went asunder for better prouision for themselves and their Horses. Passing Banaria, the Danow, Austria, Hungarie, and both Pannonias, also the Bulgarian Prouinces, Mesia and Dacia; Conrade came into Thrace and to Constantinople; thence (after speech with Manuell the Emperour) passed into and thorow Asia to Lycaonia. The King ſwore in the preſence of Albert and Theodine the Popes Cardinals, that hee was not conſcious of Thomas his death: but becauſe he had ſpoken raſhly, and had brought vp ſuch bad Souldiers (which ſo auenged him) hee deſired and obtayned abſolution, promiſing as he was inioyned, To giue ſo much money as ſhould maintayne two hundred Knights, to the defence of the Holy Land for one yeere, and that he ſhould permit appeales thenceforth to be made freely, and that the cuſtomes which in his times were brought in contrarie to the liberties of the Church, ſhould be reuoked, and that the poſſeſſions taken from the Church of Canterburie ſhould be reſtored. To this the two Kings, both Father and Sonne, ſware in remiſſionem omnium peccatorum. Soone after he came to Canterburie, 1174. and bare-foot, in manner of a penitent went to the chiefe Church, and with abundance of teares, to the Martyrs Sepulchre, where he continued long proſtrate in prayer. He there proteſted his innocency, but becauſe his words gaue occaſion of the Biſhops death, hee deſired of the Biſhops preſent abſolution, and ſubmitting his bare fleſh to the diſcipline of Rods, he receiued three or foure blowes of euery religious man, of which a great multitude had aſſembled. After which he put on his clothes, gaue precious gifts to the Martyr, aſſigning further fortie pounds a yeere for lights about the Sepulchre, and continued the reſt of that day and the night following in bitterneſſe of minde, continuing his prayers, vigils and faſts till the third day. In the yeere 1176. hee granted the Popes Legat, that no Clergie man ſhould be brought before a ſecular Magiſtrate for any crime, but for Foreſt and lay fee: that Biſhoppricks and Abbies ſhould not be holden about a yeere in the Kings hand: that the killer of a Clergie man ſhould be arraigned before the ſecular Iudge, in preſence of the Biſhop: that Clergie men ſhould not be compelled to trialls by combat.

Anno 1177. the Kings of England and France did ſwear to goe together in the ſeruice of Chriſt crucified to Ieruſalem, and to take the Croſſe, and to hold firme league. An. 1179. a Councell was holden at Rome againſt Albigenſes, that Eccleſiaſticall perſons ſhould not be compelled to ſtand to the iudgement of Lay-men, that Archbiſhops viſiting Churches ſhould be content with fortie or fiftie horſes, againſt pluralities, &c. About the ſame time Pope Alexander writ to Priſt Iohn, King of the Indians, ſhewing that Philip a Phyſician had told him of his deſire to be inſtructed in the Catholike and Apoſtolike diſcipline, and that they diſſented in nothing from the Doctrine of the Apoſtolike Sea: and that, as Philip had learned of his ſubiects, he deſired to haue a Church and ſome Altar in Ieruſalem, where religious men of his Kingdome might reſide, and be more fully inſtructed in the Apoſtolike diſcipline: He therefore deſiring, to reuoke him from thoſe articles in which they erred from the Chriſtian faith, ſent the ſaid Philip to his Maieſtie, to be further inſtructed, &c. Baldwin, then King of Ieruſalem, being leprous, ordained Guido de Liſniaco Ouer-ſeer of the Kingdome, whoſe gouernment being not prosperous, it was committed to Raimund Earle of Tripolis.

This Priſt Iohn was not that in Abasſia, nor that in Tartaria, but one in India.

In theſe times, Saladine Soldan of Damaſco, hauing ſubdued the Saracens in the Eaſt, paſſed ouer Jordan, ſpoiled Crach Caſtle, burned Neapolis, deſtroyed Arabia, waſted Gerinum. And Baldwin being dead, Baldwin a child of five yeers old ſucceeded, his nephew by his ſiſter Sybilla: Raimund was Protector. The Clergie and People ſeeing the ſtate of the Kingdome vnlikely to continue, ſent Embaſſadors to Henrie King of England, ſolemnly offering the Kingdome of Ieruſalem, and keyes of the holy Citie and Sepulchre. Heraclius the Patriarke vnder-tooke the Embaſſage with the Maſter of the Hoſpital, and others, bringing by the way the Letters of Pope Lucius. He found the King at Reading, Anno 1185. whom with his Courtiers they prouoked to teares. They brought vnto him the Keyes of the Natiuitie, of the Paſſion, of the Reſurrection, of the Tower of Dauid, and of the holy Sepulchre, and the Banner of the Kingdome: which all he much honored. The Popes Letter was this. *Lucius Episcopus ſeruus ſeruorum Dei, &c. Whereas all thy Predeceſſors, aboue other Princes of the Earth, haue long ſince flouriſhed in glorie of Armes, and Nobilitie of minde, and the Chriſtian people hath learned to haue them Patrons in their aduerſitie, worthily is there recourſe to thee, the Heire, not of the Kingdome alone, but of thy Progenitors vertues, with a certayne preſumed ſecuritie, when danger, yea deſtruction is feared to hang ouer the Chriſtian people, that by the arme of Royall Greatneſſe aide may be yeelded to his members, who by his pitie hath granted thee to attayne the height of ſo great glorie, and hath ordained thee a Wall inexpugnable againſt the wicked enemies of his Name. Your Maieſtie may further take notice, that Saladine the cruelleſt perſecutor of the holy Name of the Crucified, hath ſo preuailed in the ſpirit of furie againſt the Chriſtians of the Holy Land, that except the courſes of his crueltie be by ſome obſtacles ſtayed, hee hath confidence that Jordan will flow into his mouth, &c.*

The Popes Letter.

Hereupon, a Parliament was aſſembled at London at Clerken-Well, in which the King adiured all his Subiects, in the audience of the Legats, to ſhew what might be moſt expedient for his ſoule, promiſing to perſorme whatſoeuer they ſhould aduile. His Parliament aduifed that hee ſhould moderately gouerne his Kingdome, and preſerue it from barbarous incurſions, rather then in his owne perſon to prouide for the ſaſetie of the Eaſt. As concerning the Kings Sonnes (one of which the Patriarke deſired, if the King reſuſed) it ſeemed vnfitting to determine any thing in their abſence. The King with the Patriarke paſſed the Sea to Roan, and had three dayes conference with the French King, and in their preſence many Nobles receiued the Croſſe.

- Both the Kings promised the speediest helpe, and the Patriarke returned home.
- Baldwin dieth.* Anno 1186. Sybilla the Child being dead, Sybilla was crowned Queene, as Heire to the former Kings, but was enioyned to diuorce solemnely Guido her Husband, with condition vpon Oath, to receiue him for King whomsoever she should choose. Guido himselfe also intreated it, that the Kingdome should sustayne no damage for his sake, and returned home. Saladines comming being bruted, shee assembled the Lords Spirituall and Temporall to consult about a King: and when they granted her to name whom shee liked, all beeing in expectation, shee said vnto Guido there present, My Lord Guido, I choose you for my Husband, and deliuering my selfe with the Kingdome to you, doe publikely protest that you shall be King. Heereat all were amazed that one woman had deluded so many wise men. 10
- Truce broken.* About this time, Saladines Mother in confidence of the Truce passed with great riches from Egypt, into the parts of Damascus, by the borders of Iordan, and was robbed by Reginald of Castellion. Whereupon Saladine demanded satisfaction and restitution according to couenant: but Reginald returned harsh Answer. Saladine glad of the occasion, prepared himselfe for reuenge. In the end of January, the Kings of England and France tooke the Crosse.

Hee slue the Master of the Templars, with threescore of his Brethren, and besieged Caluaria. The King assembled all the strength of his Kingdome, the Earle of Tripolis being chiefe Commander. They fought and Saladine preuailed. The Earle of Tripolis is said to haue throwne away the Kings Stan- 20

The Earle of Tripolis and some Templers escaped. Saladine made vse of his victorie, sent the King and Captiues to Damascus, tooke Ptolemaida; and after that Ierusalem, each man redeeming his libertie at ten Bizantines, a woman at five, an infant at one, the rest to bee slaues, which had not to pay, of which poorer were fourteene thousand. They entred the Citie and caused in foure corners of the Temple their Superstitions to bee proclaimed. Hastening thence he possessed himselfe of all the Cities and Townes, but Ascalon and Tyrus, and Crach or Mount Royall. For the redemption of those fourteene thousand, it is to be noted, that Crosse, Chalice, Guildings, and Church-garments were sold by consent. 30

- Anno 1188. at the preaching of the Popes Legate, the Emperour Fredericke tooke the Crosse. The Kings of England and France agreed after much consultation, together with the Earle of Flanders, to take the Crosse, which the King of England did at the hands of William Archbishop of Tyre, * sent by the Pope for that purpose. Whereupon both in the Empire and in both Kingdomes, Archbishops, Bishops, Dukes, Mar- 40
- queses, Earles, Barons, Knights, Gentlemen, and the vulgar did the like. It was also ordered, that all of the French Kingdome should weare Red Crosses, of the English White, of Flanders Greene, all things to remayne in the present State thorow all their States, till fortie dayes after their returne. But the French King entring vpon the King of Englands Territories, disturbed the Affaires of the Crosse, King Henry righting himselfe by Warre. The Emperour Fredericke 50
- sent a Letter of Defiance to Saladine, and challenged to himselfe the old feathers of the Romane Eagle, euen vnto Ethiopia and Persia, which Saladine answered and out-braued, setting forth the puissance and numbers of the Saracens, demanding also the three remayning Holds to bee surrendered to him. He deliuered King Guido, taking his Oath to forsake the Kingdome, and betake himselfe to Sea. But the Clergie of the Kingdome deliberated and determined, that Faith is not to be kept in the perill of Religion, and therefore the King being absolved from bonds, many Pilgrims resorted to him, and with the people of the Countrey made a great band. The King with the Hospitulers and Templers, Venetians, and Genuois came to Achon, and layd siege to it, which continued to the comming of the Kings, Philip and Richard, and then was taken.
- The meaner sort of men are so possessed with deuout Zeale, that they stay not the com- 60

Saladine came with a great power to raise the siege, but frustrated of his hopes, he returned with shame, a Nauie of twelue thousand Danes and Frislanders, comming to the ayde of the Chri-

Christians, after three dayes weary fight. Meane-while the French King with Earle Richard, against his father King Henrie continued the warre, with much spoile and bloudshed on both sides. Saladine also agreed with the Emperour of Constantinople, and resigned the Churches of the Holy Land vnto him, therein to obserue the Greeke holies. The Emperour promised to send Saladine one hundred Galleyes, and Saladine him the whole Holy Land, on condition to hinder the Westerne Pilgrimes. And if any at Constantinople accepted the Crosse, he was presently imprisoned. About the same time some Northerne Pilgrimes sayling thorow the English Seas, agreed with English Pilgrimes, and set forth together from Dordrechtmouth, which passing by Lisbon, were requested by the King of Portugall to helpe him to subiect the Citie Syluia, iweaving to permit the spoile to them. They tooke it, and of sixtie thousand Inhabitants, spared onely thirteene thousand from the sword; dedicating the Mahometan Temple for a Christian Cathedrall of our Lady.

King Henrie, wearied with the French and his sonnes actions, died, and left his sonne Richard his Heire: of whom the Poet, Mira canam, sol occubuit, nox nulla secuta est; and of his Father, Sufficit hic tumultus, cui non suffecerat Orbis. He left aboue nine hundred thousand pounds in gold and siluer, besides Plate and Iewels, and precious stones. At the same time died Geffrie Bishop of Ely intestate, of whose goods were confiscate three thousand markes of siluer, and two hundred markes* of gold, besides other treasures in Plate, Iewels, and Gold. King Richard deposed almost all the Sheriffes from their Offices and their Dependants, to wring great summes by redeeming them. And for regayning of the Holy Land, hee set almost all things to sale, Donations, Castles, Mannors, Woods, Townes, Sheriffewicks, and the like. Hugo the Pompons Bishop of Durham, bought to him and his Church the Kings Towne, Seggesfield, with the Wapintake and all appurtenances, and the Earledome of Northumberland, giuing ouer and aboue one thousand markes to be Iustice of England, and to redeeme his voyage to the Holy Land. And for further securitie, hee with infinite money obtayned of the Apostolike Sea (which is wanting to none that giueth money frankly) license to remayne, notwithstanding his voluntarie vow.

The Christians and Saladine had a bloody battell, with great losse on both sides. The French King sent to treat with the King of England, for their meeting in the Holy Expedition, and securitie of their Countries meanwhile. King Richard hauing fasted and prayed at Thomas Beckets Tombe, vowing to performe to the Church those things, for which he had suffered: passing to Normandie, in the Sea hee vowed to that Saint to erect in his honor a Chappell in the Holy Land, he being his Protector by Sea and Land; which he performed after at Achen. The Bishops of Ely and Durham, had chiefe charge of the Kingdome in his absence: the one being chiefe Iustice (and hauing the Kings Seale) from the great Riuer to the South, the other to the North: but this double-headed beast agreed not. The Archbishop of Canterburie interdicted the Lands of Earle John, whose appeale the Popes Legate receiued, and released the Interdict. A tenth part of moueable goods, was giuen for the Holy Land affaires thorow the Kingdome, which instead of almes, vexed the Clergie and Laytie with spoile in the exacting. Likewise the King fayned that he had lost his Seale, and made a new, that all men which would bee secure, were forced to seeke the new Seale, and many to follow him therefore out of the Land, and to fine with him at his pleasure.

Anno 1190. the Kings of England and France, sware to each other the Articles of the league (their Earles and Barons did likewise) as also, that if one died in the Expedition, the Suruiuor should haue the money and people of the deceased. William an English-man, vowed in his way to Ierusalem, that if he arriued safely at Achen, he would build a Chappell to Saint Thomas the Martyrs honor, with a Church-yard, which he did, and was made there the first Prior. Saladine corrupting Commanders with money, burned the Christians Fortifications. King Richard procured his Chancellor, the Bishop of Ely, to be the Popes Legat.

The two Kings met at Nizeliac, where in the Church of Saint Denis, King Richard tooke his Scrip and Staffe. They came to Lions, and passing the Bridge, it brake, and many were drowned in the Rhosne. Their people were so many that they could not goe together; and therefore the French King went to Genna, the English to Messana. Here King Richard found many Pilgrims which had spent al their prouision with long stay, whom he adioyned to his own troups. King Richard was requested to visit the Pope, which he refused, obiecing to the Cardinall the Roman Simonie, which for consecration of a Bishop, had taken seuen hundred markes, and for the Legantine power of the Bishop of Ely, had taken fiftene hundred marks, and infinit summes of the Archbishop of Burdeaux, accused by his Clergie. Queene Elenor followed and ouer-tooke her sonne. The same yeere, the Emperour Frederick, betwixt Iconium and Antiochia, was drowned in the Riuer Saphet, falling off his Horse. The English fleet, on holy Thursday, were mightily embroyled in the Spanish Seas with a Tempest, and Thomas of Canterburie three times appeared visibly, bidding them not to feare, for He and the Martyr Edmund, and Saint Nicholas, were appointed Patrons of the Fleet, and the Tempest presently ceased. Many ships were dispersed, one of which came to Syluia, and eightie well armed men of the companie, were entertayned by the King of Portugall against the Emperour of Morocco, with good conditions. Ten other ships came to Lisbon, and diuers trauelled to Marsiles thence by Land. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Baldwin, Hubert of Salisburie, came to Tyrus. Iohn, Bishop of Normich, went to the Pope, and emptying his purse, was released of his vow.

Philip, King of France, arrived at Messana, and was entertayned in the Palace of King Tancred. King Richard comming a few dayes after, was forbidden entrance by the French, fearing that prouision would not be procured sufficient for both. The Citizens were willing to receiue him, which the French forbad, ascending the walls armed and keeping the passages. Richard called to armes, and by hostile force entred, putting the French to slaughter and flight, which kindled a fire in the French Kings brest, neuer after till himselfe was extinct, extinguished. King Richard tooke in Calabria the strong Fortresse, called Lemba Maris, and another betwixt Calabria and Messana, called the Monasterie of the Griffons. The Griffons hauing slaine many men and horses of the King, he brake in by force and tooke their Citie. The Citizens gaue him pledges, and he fortified there a Castle, called Mategrino. A Councell prouinciall was holden at Westminster by the Bishops Legat, little or nothing to the good of the Church. The Church of Normandie then obtayned her freedom, King Richard granting that Clergie men should not be attached by Seculars, and matters of Oathes, Marriages, Vluries, &c. should bee tried in the Spirituall Court. Baldwin the Archbishop dying at Achon, bequeathed all which he had to the succour of the Holy Land, which Hubert his Executor distributed faithfully. William of Ely meane-while made a ditch about the Tower, and exercised his bought Dignities with immoderate exceffe to re-fill his emptied bags, prouing burthensome to all Churches, both Conuentuall and Cathedrall, riding thorow England with fifteene hundred horse, with troups of Clergie men and Knights, attended at Table by Noblemens sonnes, whom hee married to his Nieces and Kindred: buying any Land which was to be sold, giuing and retayning at pleasure Abbies vacant, by feare or price obtayning euery Castle and Towne, followed with Minstrels and Songs of all sorts: none durst murmur against him.  50 The Armie which besieged Achon, was besieged with Famine, which with a well furnished Nauie King Richard relieved, in the way sinking a Dromund, a huge ship of Saladines going to aide the besieged, frighted with Wild-fire, Vessels full of unknown Serpents, & five hundred Souldiers.
 The Kings diuers, whiles it was becalmed, bored many holes therein, so that the goods hee sa-came to capitulation; and Saladine couenanted to render the Crosse (before taken) and fifteene hundred choice Christian Captiues, and seuen thousand Bizantines to saue the liues of the Sara- six hundred Saracens lost their heads. The French King enuying the glorie of all the Christian Hee left the Duke of Burgundie with one thousand men at Armes in shew to doe seruice to King Richard, instructed before in Treacherie. Thus swearing to invade no mans Land there present, he returned; and King Richard repayred the breaches, and ditched and fortified Achon.

uenanted by Oath to redeeme them at fiftie two thousand Bizantines, or else to returne them.
The Prince sealed them vp, and all Christians were deiected, the time being at hand for the pay-

King Richard besieged the Castle Darum, the next of Christendome towards Babylon, and wanne it. Soone after hee tooke a rich Carouan of Merchants guided by *Saladine*s Souldiers, with teuen thousand Camels richly laden. The Duke of Austria came about that time to per-forme his Vow in the Holy Land seruice, where a quarrell falling out betwixt his Harbengers, and a Norman of King Richards, the King inconsiderately, taking his mans part, caused the Dukes Colours to be cast into a Iakes, which the Duke seeking to right, was further wronged with Icoffes; whereupon the Duke seeing himselfe contemned by the King, turning to the King of Kings inuoked him with teares to his reuenge, which after fell out accordingly. King Richard with his late gotten spoile would haue gone and laid siege to Ierusalem, where the feare 50 of his name and comming had already terrified the Inhabitants. But this was hindred by the Duke of Burgundie, (enuying that Triumph to King Richard) counselling the Templers, and French to his part. Saladine also with great gifts corrupted the Duke, sending him by night fue Camels laden with Gold, Siluer, Silkes, and other Riches. Whereupon the King conuin-cing him by witnesse, called him Traytour, and hee returned from the King in displeasure to racens,) and beyond belief so laid about him, making way for the rest, that they in the Towne also made out, and quited the field of them. This hapned on Lammas day. Salaadine in his rage sent for an old Prisoner, whilome Prince of Antiochia, and asked him, What wouldst thou doe if thou hadst me in thy power as I now haue thee? Hee (adiured to tell the truth) said, hee would cut off his head; which was his owne sentence, and Salaadine himselfe the Executioner. An Heremite told the King he should not winne Ierusalem, and gaue him a piece of the true Crosse, as he said. Whiles the King abode at Ioppe, seuen weekes, an infectious Disease seised on him, and the most of his, deadly to all in manner which had it, except the King. 10 sicknesse, his Enemies increasing daily: he determined to returne home for the reparation of his Purse and force, concluding meane-while a Truce with the Pagans for three yeares. By Sea hee was incountred with a terrible Tempest, some drowned; others wracked, few attayning their desired Port. This hapned in Autumne, whereas Salaadine dyed in the Lent following, and had they stayed, had facilitated their Designes; both by his death and the dissentions which followed amongst his sonnes and followers. Hereunto was added the Conspiracie of the Earle of Saint

20 Giles, and all those Princes by whom he was to passe: which made him purpose to returne by Germanie. He came to Gazara in Sclanonia; where some notice of him being taken, he with his small company hasted away at mid-night: but a worse and darker mid-night hapned. For with one man and a Boy which could speake Dutch, he trauelled three dayes without eating or drink-king: he came to Gynatia in Austria, and being suspected by the Boyes change of Byzantines, and after by the Kings Gloues which vnawares he had carried vnder his Girdle, hee was beset and yeelded himselfe to the Duke, who committed him to strait custodie, and in the yeare 1193. sold him to the Emperour for threescore thousand pound of Siluer, Collen weight. Heere hee was againe imprisoned, and a strong Gard set on him, with whom he made himselfe merrie in sports, making them drunke, trying of Masteries, in all seeming Master of himselfe and his hard fortunes. The Emperour would not admit him his presence or speech, and pretended 30 many calumnies against him. At last, by mediation of friends he obtayned a hearing, eloquently cleered himselfe of Imputations, and wonne much respect both of others and the Emperour Henry, who after vied him more familiarly, and demanded one hundred and fortie thousand Markes of Siluer for his ransome. This was brought by the Kings Letter, and the Emperours Golden Bull into England by William Bishop of Ely aforesaid: and all Bishoppes, Clergie-men, Earles, Barons, Abbots, Priors were assessed at a fourth part of their Rents, to ransom the King. Also they sold for that purpose their Chalicees of Gold and Siluer. John Bishop of Norwich, thorow all his Diocesse tooke halfe the price of their Chalicees and Goods. The Cistercian Order (free before from all Taxations) gaue all their Wooll to his Redemption. No Church, no Order, no Degree, or Sexe, was passed by, which was not hereto compelled; manifold Tempests, Inundations, and Winter Thunders hauing thorow that yeare fore-signified the same, causing also great scarfitie of Corne and Fruits.

King Richard being Prisoner, his Brother John made compact with the French King, and sought to be crowned in England, but the vertue of the English was more loyall. Philip the French King inuaded Normandie with a very great Armie, not sparing Order, Age, Sexe, vling no lesse the Treason of King Richards Subiects corrupted by him. He besieged Roan, but by the Earle of Leisters Prowesse and the Inhabitants valour, was repelled with shame.

Anno 1194. King Richard hauing paid the greatest part of his Ransome, and giuen Pledges for the rest, arriued at Sandwich on the Sunday after Saint Georges day. Presently he visited Thomas Becketts Tombe, and was with Festiuall Solemnitie, receiued soone after at London. He hastened to Saint Edmonds to performe his Deuotions; and thence to Nottingham; against those which had conspired with his Brother John, some of whom he suffered to redeeme themselves; so to redeeme his Pledges, and to inuade the French which continued spoyling his Land with fire and sword. The Sunday after Easter he ware his Crowne at Winchester. His Brother John humbled himselfe and the King receiued him to fauour. This was done in Normandie, where he pursued the warre against the French. He procured the Duke of Austria to bee excommunicated by the Pope, and his Land to be interdicted: whose Land was further smitten with Famine and Pestilence, and the Inundation of the Danow, which drowned ten thousand men: himselfe also falling off his Horse, his legge was incurably hurt, which beeing cut off, yet the paine continued and killed him, before beeing penitent, absolved, and absolving King Richards Pledges.

6 Anno 1195. Pope Celestine writ to Hubert, Archbishop of Canterburie, and to the Bishops of England to preach the Crosse, Gining Indulgences to those which undertooke it, the Remission of imposed Penance by the Priest, as his Predecessors had done; namely, that they which with a contrite heart shall undertake this expedition, and for the Penance of their sinnes; if they depart in the Faith, shall obtaine full Indulgence of their crimes and life eternall. Also their goods and families, after they haue taken the Crosse, shall be under the protection of the Romane Church, and of the Bishops and Prelates. And nothing which they then at their crossing did quietly possesse should be called in question, but till their retorne or death should remaine quiet : Others which minister of their goods, shall obtaine Indulgence according to the Prelats moderation. Hee exhorted him to be instant in season and out of season, going about the Prouince, King Richard and the French came to agreement, but the Archbishop of Roan interdicted all Normandie, because of a Castle which King Richard there fortified against his will. Anno 1199. King Richard died, and Iohn his Brother succeeded. The same yeare the Kingdome of France was interdicted by the Popes Legat, for the taking of the Elect of Cambray prisoner, who was freed before the sentence could. Hee came also to the King of England, threatning like interdict, if the Bishop Beluacensis were not deliuered, whom yet because he was taken in Armes, he dismissed not without his ranfome.

Anno 1200. an Epistle from Heauen was sent for the keeping of the Sunday or Lords day, from the ninth houre on Saturday, till Munday Sunne rising, which the Pope approued, and sent Preachers thorow diuers parts of the world, Eustace Abbot of Flay comming from him into England for that cause. (But of visions the Stories of these times are full.)

In the yeare 1215. was holden the great Councell of Lateran, in which after other things, the affaires of the holy Land were propounded. We will and command (they are the words of the Pope) that Patriarchs, Arch-bishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and others, which haue cure of soules, doe preach studiously the word of the Crosse, beseeching by the Father, Sonne and holy Ghost, one onely true and eternall God, Kings, Dukes, Princes, Marquesses, Earles, and Barons, and other Nobles, and the Communalities of Cities, Villages and Townes, that if they goe not personally, they will send a sufficient number of Warriours with expences for three yeares, for the remission of their sinnes, &c. If any refuse, let them protest to them on our behalfe, that they shall answer this at the dreadfull Iudgement of the iust Iudge, &c. And we define that all which shall haue taken the Crosse, shall be vnder Saint Peters protection and ours, and vnder the Arch-bishops, Bishops, and Prelats of the Church, and all their goods, &c. as before.

THE truce being expired in the first generall passage * after the Councell of Lateran, the Christian Armie was assembled in Achon, with the three Kings of Ierusalem, Hungarie, and Cyprus, the Dukes of Austria and Morauia, and great Forces of the King of Germanie, with many Arch-bishops, Earles, Gentlemen. The Patriarch of Ierusalem tooke vp the Crosse (which had beene hidden * till this time, it being before, as some say, diuided, and the one part lost, as you haue heard, and now this other part succeeded) and the Christian Armie in the Vigill of Saint Martin, washed themselves in Iordan, and hauing visited the holy places, returned to Achon. The King of Hungarie soone after departed to the great detriment of the holy Land being requested to the contrary by the Patriarch. But away he went excommunicate with his followers, carrying with him Pilgrimes, Gallies, Horses, Armes. Others cowardly abode in Achon, a finfull Citie, and full of all vncleanness: the King of Ierusalem and Duke of Austria, Hospitalars, and others, fortified the Castle of Casarea. The Templers and Hospitalars of the Dutch house, fortified the Castle of the Pilgrimes. In Bebon of Frisland appeared a white Crosse in the ayre towards the North, another toward the South, a third particoloured, in the midst, with the forme of a Crucified man. Other Crosses after appeared, whereby the Prouince of Colen was prouoked to the holy Land seruice. These with the Frislanders prouided three hundred ships, made with great care, which in the way came to Lisbon: and their dissention diuided them, some staying with William Duke of Holland, in the siege of Alchacia a Moorish Castle, where they wan a great battell against the Moores, and slue one of their Kings, after that taking the Castle also.

Anno 1218. The Christian Nauie passed from Achon to Damiata, and besieged it, where after great losse of their owne they tooke a Tower. Saphidine Sonne and Succellour of Saphidine (by the murther of his Bretheren) died, and Coradine his Sonne razed Ierusalem, making the Walls and Turrets rude heapes, and leauing nothing but the Temple and Tower of David in reuenge of the siege of Damiata. The next passage brought many Pilgrimes from diuers parts of the world, with the Popes Legat, Ranulph Earle of Chester, Saer Earle of Winchester, and William Earle of Arundell, Robert Fitz Walter, Iohn Constable of Chester, William de Harecourt, Barons, and Oliuer the King of England Sonne, with many others. Many lost their liues on both sides, and by inundation of the Sea and Riuer, brought new prouisions of vnwelcome Fishes into into their Tents, and did much harme, carrying their workes to the other side, the water betraying them to the fire. A grievous disease, for which the Physicians knew no remedie, infested the Campe, (by the description it seemeth the Scorbute) which killed many. Many conflicts on both sides swept away many. Damiata was in this long siege assaulted with Sword, Famine, Pestilence. Nilus refusing this yeare to visite a great part of Egypt, made the Soldan to feare a Famine, and in these straits hee offered the true Crosse, which Saladine had taken and all the Kingdome of Ierusalem, and to repaire the ruines of the razed Citie, and restauration of Captiues, (onely he would hold Crac and Mount Royall, paying twelue thousand Byzantines yearly tribute, for the Carauans securitie which trauell to Mecca) if they would leaue Damiata.

10 The Princes liked it, the Clergie refused, and on the seuenth of Nouember, the Christian Armie Damiata taken tooke it, without resistance, it hauing beene a buriall place of her Inhabitants, and now stinking like a Graue, the streets and houses being strewed with carcases, eightie thousand had dyed therein during the siege, besides three thousand which they found yet remaining. The spoyle thereof was very great, and equally shared where theeuery preuented not.

After Damiata taken, the next passage came so many Pilgrimes, that Taphnis Castle was taken, and both fortified. The Soldan tooke the Castle of Cesarea, and did much hurt to Achon and Tyrus. Anno 1222. Philip de Albencio a stout Souldier, and the Master of King Henrie went to the Holy Land. Anno 1224. Baldwin Earle of Flanders returned, and was knowne and acknowledged of many. But his Daughter denyed him to be her Father, and procured him to be 20 hanged betwixt two old Dogges.

This Baldwin, with the Venetians, the Duke of Louaine, the Marquesse of Mount-Ferrat, Simon de Monfort, and others, intending the Holy Land, by opportunitie of Greeke combustions at Constantinople, tooke Iadera, besieged Constantinople seuentie two daies, and tooke it, (being before fired) on the twelfth of Aprill, 1204. By common consent Baldwin was elected Emperour: and the Greekes vpon that occasion began another Empire at Trebezond. Baldwin by Venetian helpe conquered Thrace, and after the Greekes betaking themselves to the King of Bulgaria, in a battell against him and the Scythians he was said to be slaine, Anno 1206. the Scythians putting all Thrace to spoyle and sword. Henrie, Baldwines Brother, was chosen to succeed; who ayded by the Marquesse, now King of Thessaly, expelled those Barbarians, and recorded the Couna 30 trey, and after eleuen yeares troublesome reigne, died. Peter his Sonne-in-Law succeeded, who was treacherously slaine, and Robert his Sonne succeeded; whose Wife a beautifull Ladie in a tumult, was by a Burgundian (to whom she had before beene betrothed) taken in the night, her nose and eares cut off, her Mother throwne into the Sea; and her Husband then absent, had his griefe so present, that he liued not long after, leauing a little Sonne Baldwin, the last Latine Emperour of Constantinople, affianced to John of Brenne, whom Pope Innocent had made King of Ierusalem: the Greekes easily recouering in that opportunitie. The first Baldwin thus reuiued, whether he were a counterfeit or no, is vncertaine. Certaine it is, that our Authour saith, all that were of counsaile to that his hanging, dyed an ill death. The last Baldwin sought by helpe of Frankes and English, (for here he had large gifts) but in vaine to recouer that Empire.

Rufull report.

40 About this time great multitudes tooke the Crosse thorow the world, insomuch that of the Kingdome of England onely, sixtie thousand and more sufficient men, besides women and old folkes, tooke the Crosse; Master Hubert testifying, that he (being a Preacher of the Crosse) had so many in his Catalogue. On Mid-somer night, the Lord appeared in the Firmament, in crucified forme and bloody, to shew (saith our Author) how acceptable that deuotion was to him. This was seene neere Vxbridge by a Fish-monger. Peter Bishop of Winchester, and William Bishop of Exeter were two of these, which spent fve yeares in that Pilgrimage. Friderike the Emperour tooke shipping toward the Holy Land to performe his vow, but returned, pretending sicknesse, so that fortie thousand men which waited his comming that passage, returned frustrate to their homes, and many to their long home. Whereupon Pope Gregorie excommunicated

The Romans expelled the Pope out of their Citie to Viterbium, and thence to Perusum, hee hauing no other weapon of reuenge but excommunication. The same time, the Earle of Tholouse had a great victorie against the Crusado Armie, which the Pope had with like Indulgence to that of the Holy Land, excited to warre against him and the Albigenses, (which for denying the Papacy were condemned Heretickes.) Friderike yet made best speed to the Holy Land, where the Clergie, because the Pope had excommunicated him, counselled him to reconciliation, and would not communicate with him. But the Templers and Hospitalars received him with reuerence. The Soldan sent him rich presents. Pope Gregorie in his absence raised warres by John de Brennes, King of Ierusalem, which out of France and other parts, gathered a great Armie and inuaded, helped by the Popes pride.

Emperour intending to goe to Iordan after the custome, the Templars and Hospitalars treacherously gaue intelligence to the Soldan, that he might intrap him: partly enuying his successe, loath any should there haue honor but themselues; and partly, because they heard that the Pope had inuaded his Territories. The Soldan abhorring such perfidie, sent their Letter to Fredericke, and laid open that hellish myserie. Hence arose grudges, and the Templars and Hospitalars drew the Patriarke into their conspiracie, which published a Letter diffamatorie against him. Pope Gregorie exacted tenths for the maintenance of those his warres against the Emperour, thorow England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, which were rigorously, vnder paine of Interdiction and Excommunication exacted, not as the twentieth before to the King, but as might best be for the Popes aduantage, and the people forced to pay it before hand, euen for the crops on the ground. 10
The Prelates sold their Ornaments and Church plate for expedition, and Stephen the Popes Procurator, hauing Vsurers attending like Rauens, saue that they preyed on the liuing. All this notwithstanding, the Emperour returning, soone recouered that which the Pope and his King Iohn had taken, and some composition was made betwixt them. Pope Gregorie sent Preachers, and writ to excite men to the holy Warre, and sent others for money to release those vowes, Nec sciri poterat in quam abyssum tanta pecunia qua per Papales Procuratores colligebatur est demersa. Unde negotium Terra Sancta nunquam felix, &c. He after excommunicated him againe, and chose another Emperour, absolving his Subiects, perswading them to be faithfull in infidelitie. But the wickednesse of the Roman Church deserued that the Popes authoritie was not re-ceiued: he addeth of it, Deposito rubore velut meretrix vulgaris & effrons omnibus venalis & exposi- 20 ta, usuram pro paruo, simoniam pro nullo, &c.

The Truce betwixt the Emperour and the Soldan expiring, the Pope sent and writ againe, granting Indulgences as before, and freeing from Vsuries, employing the Preaching Friars and Minors in this Crosse businesse, who by the Popes Mandate, were attended by the Archdeacons and Deanes, which in euery place caused the Parishioners, men and women to assemble, not one vnder paine of excommunication, being absent. Many Noblemen of England tooke the Crosse, Earle Richard the Kings brother, Earle G. Marshall, Earle Iohn of Chester, the Earle of Salisbury and his brother, and many other honorable personages. Earle Richard made sale of his woods, and of whatsoeuer he could for that prouision. But the Preachers preaching the same Indulgences to them, which gaue so much money as would beare the charges, hindred mens deuotions. 30 For this proued a common and vsuall course, to exchange vowes for money. Aboue one hundred Knights Templars were soone after slaine in a battell with the Turkes, besides other multitudes, Anno 1238.

Many crossed Nobles were assembled at Lions, to goe to the Holy Land, when a Messenger from the Pope forbad them to proceed; notwithstanding, that was the place and time appointed by his Preachers, and that they had sold and pawned their goods and lands for that Expedition.
Many returned home discontent: Many held on their way. Anno 1240. Earle Richard and the other English Nobles, tooke leaue to set forth on their Holy voyage. That yeere, the Christians not agreeing in the Holy Land, sustayned great losse, innumerable being slaine and taken. Earle Richard passed on his way into France, and was by the Popes Legat forbidden to proceed, who 40 answered, that he had prouided his Ships, Moneys, Armes, and detesting the double dealing of the Roman Church, committed himselfe to the Sea. The Soldan of Damasco gaue the Christians all which they challenged beyond Iordan, to helpe him against the Egyptian. Earle Richard came to Achon a little after Michaelmas, where he was receiued with all solemne significations of ioy. The third day after his comming, he caused Proclamation to be made, that no Christian Pilgrime should depart home for want of money, for he would entertayne them in his pay. He writ thence of the great Schisme and mischiefe thereon attending, complayning of the Pope:
the King of Nauarre and Earle of Britaine, were gone fiftene dayes before his comming: Truce was concluded by him with the Soldan, many Places and Prisoners surrendred vnto him, which he there in his Letter particularly nameth. Further, that he and the Christians fortified Ascalon 50 Castle with two Walls and high Towers, to preuent the worst, if the Saracens should violate the Truce. Hauing receiued on Saint Georges day all the Prisoners, hee returned homewards and landed at Trapes in Sicilia, and hearing of the captiuitie of certayne Bishops, he went to Rome.
He caused also the disperfed bones, of those which had beene slaine in the dismall battell of Ga- za to be buried. The Emperour receiued him honorably, hauing married his sister Izabel, daughter of king Iohn. He was welcomed into England by the King his brother, in Februarie, 1242.
The French Nobilitie much honored him as their Patron, for deliuerie of their prisoners. The Pilgrimes departing after Earle Richard, the Templars enuying, scoffed and derided his acts, and brake the Truce which he had made, which the Hospitalars obserued, whom therefore the Templars besieged in Achon, chasing also the Dutch Knights, turning the great Reuenues a- 60 gainst Christians, which were giuen against Saracens. This dissention continued betwixt them with great scandall. It hapned that the Tartarian Deluge, hauing then ouer-flowed the Easterne World, and ouer-whelmed Persia, the Chorosmines by them expelled and forced to shift, were entertayned by the Soldan of Babylon, and promised, if they could driue out the Christians, that

that they should possess their Countrey. Whose multitudes so terrified the Christians, that they consulted to remove all the Inhabitants of Ierusalem to Ioppe, and began in the night to performe it. The Corofmines entring, found certayne Banners, which they erecting, some Christians called backe their fellowes, as if some notable triumph had hapned to the Christians, which returned either into the Citie or Suburbs, where the enemy presently assaulting them slue seven thousand. The yong Men and Maydens they made slaues. They entred the Holy Citie, and slue the old and feeble persons (which had not gone forth, but fled to the Sepulchre for Sanctuary) and Nunnes. The Christian Souldierie sought to reuenge it, fighting with them a bloudie battell till night, losing innumerable, yet killing many more. On Saint Lukes day, with the generall power of the Holy Land assembled to the Patriarke, they fought against them, now strengthened with new supplies from the Soldan, where the best was, that they sold their liues at a deere and bloudie rate, more perishing of the Infidels, but the Christians losing almost all. The Master of the Templars, and the Maister of the Hospitalars and Dutch knights fell, and but eightene Templars and sixteene Hospitalars escaped. The number of the slaine was inestimable on both sides. The whole Land put on irrecoverable confusion.

And although Pope Innocent, at the Councell of Lions, seemed zealous of this quarrell, yet that other quarrell to the Emperour more possessed him; and the Councell withstood him to his face, taking authoritie to appoint Collectors for that Subsidie, whereof the Roman Court had beene so often, so fraudulent a Disburser. The French King lately sicke, had vowed a Holy Land voyage, if he recovered, whom almost all the Nobilitie followed. But the Pope prosecuting the Emperour, and causing a new to be chosen, little succour could be sent them, so that many despayring, became Apostata's. The Soldan himselfe detested, and openly protested against the Templars and the Pope. The Bishop of Worcester, William de Longa Spata, and many Nobles of England, in imitation of the French, tooke the Crosse. This William imitated Earle Richard, who couenanting with the Pope got great treasures, by dispensing with that Holy Land vow, desired the Pope to grant him fauour in that kind, which hee did, cutting a large thong of anothers hide. The Earle gathered infinite summes by the Popes grant, taking of one Archdeacon sixe hundred pounds, and William got about one thousand markes. King Henrie with great deuotion carried some of the blood, sent him from the Holy Land in a CrySTALL vessell, pretended to be that of Christ, from Pauls to Westminster.

Anno 1248. the Earle of Leister tooke the Crosse to expiate his sinne, in marriage of her which had vowed chastitie. His wife and many Nobles and Knights, followed the example. The French King began his iourney, first seeking in vaine to reconcile the Pope to the Emperour. Hee tooke ship and left many behind, which returned and were dispensed with by the Pope then at Lions, giuing him their prouisions, and emptying their purses. William Longspat followed with two hundred Horse-men, whom the French King kindly entertayned, and be- fought the French to lay aside their wonted enuie to the English. Anno 1250. King Henrie tooke the Crosse of the Archbishop, and the Archbishop himselfe, the Kings brother William de Valentia, and many Courtiers; the Abbot of Burie, and many others followed: some being of opinion, that the King did this but for a colour to get money. Five hundred Knights, and innumerable crossed people met at Bermundsey (hauing sold or morgaged their Lands and Goods, and inuolued themselves in vsuries for the Holy Land businesse) to consult of their vowed voyage, intending so to serue the King of Heauen, howsoeuer their earthly King stood affected. Which to preuent, he procured the Popes Letter by money to suspend their iourney till himselfe went. The French besieged, and were besieged at Damiata by the Soldan, and Scarfitie, where many perished by Famine and Sword, and many ran to the Enemy and became Apostataes. The French also were enuious to the English and William Longspat, hauing taken fortunately a rich Carauan with Camels, Mules, Asses, laden with Silkes, Spices, Gold and Siluer, and other riches and prouisions, slaying and captiuing the men; the French quarrelled hereat, and tooke his purchase from him, the Earle of Artois the Kings brother being herein chiefe, which the French King not daring to remedie, hee left him and went to Achon. The French tooke Damiata, and the Soldan offered all the Holy Land and great treasures for the restitution. But they chose rather to remove towards Cairo, and the Earle of Artois proudly objecting to the Templars their pride, and calling W. Longspat (then returned) tayed cowardly English, saying, that the Armie would doe well if it were cleansed of tayles and tayed (this hee spake vpon occasion of wise counsell giuen him by the former.) William answered, We shall be this day, where I beleue, you will not come neere my Horses taye: which also hapned, the Earle being drow- ned in flight, and William brauely dying in fight, standing to it when he had no legs to stand on (they being cut off) to a miracle of resolution, and commending his valiant soule to the Hea- uens, hauing first sent many Saracens to Hell. This was the issue of the others daring temeritie and pride. Of all the Armie present, two Templars onely, one Hospitalar, and a base person escaped. The King was behind with the rest of the Armie, who made another as vnfortunate a battell, in which himselfe was taken, his Armie almost all slaine or taken. The Soldan laboured that none should carrie this newes to Damiata, which yet was done by Alexander Giffard, an English.

Mill-stone compact.

Soone after, the King of Castile tooke the Crosse, hauing conquered thirteene dayes iourney vpon the Saracens, thinking it better to get the Holy Land from them then any other. But the rapines and spoiles which the poorer iustayned from the great men, the Roman Church permitting, yea teaching, as often as they would goe to the Holy Land in pilgrimage, our Authour much lamenteth. And for the extortions of France, the French King saith, hee by permission of the Roman Church, gathered a third yeeres tenth of the Clergie, on condition that the Pope, to maintayne his warres against Fredericke, might gather as much more. The King would not after permit this, though his owne were gathered by Papall Ministers, that the Pope might hereby learne to how much his share would arise. The Popes Exactor met by chance on the way a poore Priest, hauing a piece of bread giuen him for sprinkling of holy water, whom he asked what his Liuing might be worth by the yeere. The Priest (ignorant of Romish sleights) answered, some twentie shillings. Two shillings then, said the other, must thou giue the King, holding him, that begged his liuing from doore to doore by the throat, and forcing him to sell his Bookes to pay him. The King borrowed money of the Templars and Hospitulars, sent two of his brethren into France, one being slaine, another vanquished, himselfe resolving neuer to returne, and liuing at Achon inglorious. Those two brethren with the Duke of Burgundie, went to the Pope, laying the blame on him, and if hee would not agree with Fredericke (which alone could remedie these mischiefes) he should no longer abide at Laons, but all France would arise against him. Fredericke by his death, instantly following, cut off those hopes. The Quarrels dyed not, but continued hereditarie to the Pope and his Sonnes. Guido, King Henries brother, came out of the Holy Land beggerly miserable, borrowing horses of the Abbot of Fewersham, which he neither repayed according to his promise, nor acknowledged so much as with thanks, but scoffed at his messengers sent to demand them.

The French Kings Mother and Brethren sent much money to him by Sea, which with the ship was drowned, he bearing this as his other disasters with admirable patience, beeing herein esteemed another Iob. At the same time a certain Hungarian Apostata, promised his Master the Soldan of Babylon, to present him infinite store of Christian slaues, and make the conquest of Christen- dome easie. He therefore hauing the French, Dutch, and Latine Tongues goeth about preaching, saying, that he had in charge from the blessed Virgin to call Shepherds and Herdmen, to whose simplicitie and humilitie it was granted from Heauen to conquer the Holy Land. For the militarie pride of the Frankes was not acceptable. Hee wanne faith by the indissoluble closenesse of his hand, in which he said was Our Ladies Charter. Shepherds and Herdmen without acquainting their Masters and Parents, and without care of prouisions followed him, vsing his Incantment wherewith he had so farre preuailed fortie yeeres before (hee was now threescore yeeres old) gathering an infinite number of children together, which followed him singing, whom neither Prayers, Threats, Flatterie, Gifts of Parents or Friends, nor Lockes and Walls could detain from him. (A certaine Iuggling Fryer Preacher, Robert Bugre, is said to haue infatuated in like manner innumerable and deliuered them to the fire.) But these were now fauoured, by the Queene Mother, hoping that they would doe seruice for her Sonne, inasomuch, that about one hundred thousand of this Rabble were assembled, and carryed a Lambe for their Colours. After this, Theeues, Exiles, Runna-wayes, Excommunicates, and like raskalitie resorted to them with diuers Weapons, and now they did openly things vnlawfull in Politie and Religion, preaching where they came, and at Orleance breaking into open hostility, at Burdeaux, Paris, and other places, which occasioned their dispersion and confusion. One of their Preachers came into England, and was here cut in pieces, his carkasse being left for the Fowles, hauing before caused much disorder. Many of them went ouer to the Holy Land.

Anno 1251. the Pope caused solempne preaching in Brabant, Flanders, and the Confinies of France, that whosoever would warre against Conrade the Sonne of Fredericke the Emperour, hee should haue greater Indulgence then for warring in the Holy Land. For if any should be signed (with the Crosse) against Conrade, both he so marked, and his Father and Mother should receiue remission of all their sinnes: which, the French King sending for reliefe, caused much murmuring of the French, imputing to the Popes vnchristian Warres against Christians to enlarge his owne Dominions, this neglect of the French King and Holy Land. And the Queene Mother caused the Lands of all which had taken the Crosse to be seised, and that if they would warre for the Pope, he should maintaine them.

Anno 1252. the King caused the Londoners to be assembled to Westminster, to the preaching of the Crosse, which yet in regard of the Romish extortions few receiued. Some Courtiers did, whom the King magnified, calling the other base Mercenaries. His reason was; hee had now obtayned of the Pope three yeeres tenths of Clergie and Laitie to that purpose, which would amount to aboute fixe hundred thousand pounds. He was thought to haue taken the Crosse only for this mony-purpose, which Vow hee then sware to performe both on his brest like a Priest, & after after on the Gospels kissing the Booke like a Lay-man, none being hereby more certaine of his purpose. Truce was concluded betwixt the French King and Soldan. But soone after, Anno 1253. came newes of miserable spoiles there made by the Saracens, Achon beeing only left free from their furie. Anno 1254. the French King returned home. Anno 1255. Conrade being dead, the Crosse was preached against Memfred King of Apulia, Sonne of the Emperour Fredericke. In which case the Pope intangled the King of England, giuing that Kingdome to his Sonne Edmund, to the great trouble of this Realme.

Anno 1259. the Templars and Hospitalars at Achon fell to ciuill Warres, well neere to the ruine of both Orders, and of the poore remaynders in those parts. Anno 1260. King Henrie hauing sworne to the prouisions of Oxford, repented of his Oath, and obtayned of the Pope Absolution. Anno 1264. Pope Vrbane gaue the Kingdome of Sicilia, to Charles the French Kings Brother, on condition to depriue Memfred thereof, whom Anno 1267. he slue in battell.

Anno 1269. Saint Lewis lent to speake with Prince Edward of England, and inuited him to vndertake with him a Pilgrimage to the Holy Land, which he did, King Henrie permitting all which would to goe with him.

Pilgrims.

Anno 1271. Prince Edward, and his Brother Edmund, foure Earles, as many Barons, and many Gentlemen, went his vowed Pilgrimage. His Wife Elenor accompanied him, who at Achon was deliuered of a Daughter, calld Ioan of Acres. The French King came safe to Tunis, where his Sonne first, and after himselfe dyed. The Armie was much endangered, but by meanes of Charles King of Sicilia, was freed, and Tunis made tributarie to Sicilia. Prince Edward had followed Saint Lewis thither: and when King Charles hasted backe, Prince Edward sware, that if all his company should forsake him, yet he and Fowine (his Horse-keeper) would hold on to Achon: and with the English he set saile thither. But a Tempest ouertooke the Sicilian at Sea, and drowned almost all his Armie and Treasure.

Anno 1272. Prince Edward at Achon, was much respected by the Amira of Ioppe, who writ often to him by a certaine Affisine. Who faining some secret businesse, the Prince caused all to depart the roome, and whiles he looked out of the Window, with a poysoned Knife he receiued two wounds on the arme: The Prince pulled the Knife from him, and killed him with his owne weapon, but withall in the wresting, wounded his owne hand. This grieved much the Amira, being ignorant of the Affisines designe. With much difficultie the Prince was cured of his venomous wounds.

Turnement.

Thus farre we haue followed our Author Matthew Paris to the death of King Henrie, which hapned, Anno 1273. and the death in manner of the Christian State in the Holy Land. Hee returned (which we adde out of Thomas Walsingham) 1274. hauing long in vaine expected the aids of Christians and Tartars at Achon, leauing Souldiers in his pay for defence of the Holy Land. He returned by Sicilia, and receiued kind entertainment of King Charles, and after of the Pope. His Turnement I omit: wherein the Earle Kabulanensis challenging him, laying hold on the Kings necke, and seeking to plucke him off his Horse, was by the great strength of Edward rayed from his owne Horse, and after a hot skirmish, forced to yeeld, that the name which had in this Voyage wanne honour in Africa, encreased it in Asia, might receiue further accomplishment in his European returne.

Anno 1292. Achon was taken by the Soldan, the Citizens hauing sent their vnseruiceable persons and relikes with their treasures before to Cyprus. Great slaughter was committed. In the beginning of Edward the Second, the Templars were condemned, imprisoned, and some burned. The Hospitalars planted themselves at Rhodes, and continued till Soliman the Turke dispossessed them: since which their residence hath beene at Malta. The Dutch Knights conquered Prussia. The Acts of the Tartars in the Holy Land you may learne in others. It is more then enough that I haue sumraed the Acts of almost two hundred yeares, with such expence of Christian blood and treasure abroad and such convulsions and confusions of Religion and ciuill Affaires at home as I know not to haue beene effected by any one particular cause since the World stood, the pretence being not the Monarchie of the World, but of a little Region, and that vnder colour of Religion. I honour the zeale and valorous resolution of our Progenitors, but I pittie the illusions and collusions which hapned to those Worthies by the Popes sleights, and the malice of the old Serpent, which a little to vnmaske, would to the studious Reader, perhaps be a recreation after these fields of blood. Some particulars whereof wee haue out of Histories of that Age deliuered: but the full cannot bee deliuered, as may appeare by this circumstance, that besides often, solemne, publike, Royall Expeditions, and the priuate occasionall Pilgrimages to the Holy Land continually; there was euery yeare against Easter a generall passage both for deuout visitation of the holy places and seruices in these holy Warres: which summes being added to these, amount aboue conceit; especially, if wee adde the Crusadoes which from this Example awed and tamed Emperors, Kings, Princes, States, Peoples, repugnant to the Popes designs, howsoeuer otherwise Catholike and Christian. All this blood was of Christians, besides the Riuers and Seas of Ethniike, (yet humane) blood hereby shed, of Turkes, Egyptians, Persians, Chorasmians, Tartars, and so many other Asian and African Nations, not to mention the Christians, Armenians, Syrians, and all the subjects of the Easterne Empire in this Warre so much interelld, by it weakned, after it irrecoverable, and now Turkish. But because to passe from one extreme to another, and suddenly to diuert the minde from such Martiall Actions and Passions to so high studious contemplations, would rather be exchange of toyle then recreation (as in the interim betwixt turbulent Acts on the Stage) I haue presented a Mical Pilgrime, whose old English Richmes may perhaps allay those former conceits of cryes, shriekes, wounds, deaths, desolations: and as when the Minstrell played, the hand of the Lord came upon Elisha, and hee prophesied; so in reading this, which tels the holy wares so farre sought, and so deere bought in these holy Warres, thou mayst haue the hand of the Lord not only to guide thee from such vanitie, but to lift thee to a higher pitch, and to make thee vnderstand (or some way to apply) concealed Mysteries and darke Prophecies, which that mystie Age, not seeing, fulfilled. The Author is vnkowne and his time: which yet is likely to haue beene about two hundred yeares since: Sir Robert Cottons rich Librarie hath yeelded the Manuscript, whence it was copied.

And after was beriet ther sone:
And so from thennez to Venece translate.
At ichon of thez placez and thou go ate,
Is vij. yere, and vij. lentonez to pardon,
To alle hem that thether wull come.
Pilgrimagez ther be no mo.
That euer any man dud goe.
But now at my yann turning,

From Ierusalem sothe to sayn, Euen to Iaff we turnet ayan.
Here we schippet alle to geder,
In the Galias that brought vs theder.

Thei were the worst of Cristianty.
The Pilgrymez bere me gud record,
For, thei tornet vs from bord to bord,
And iij. wikkez I dar well saie,
We myght not skape the Golf awaie:
But up, and don trauerse the See,

And on our list hand the Golf was,
As we from Iaff toke the rase.
On Turkey side we saie there,
The hee Hull that hight Mount Clere.
And vnder that Hull hit maie be,
The cheff bened of Synode:
That is a token to schippmen, Whereby thei the Costez kenne.
And after fully fifty mile waie,

The wiche Mirra calleth is,
And Sent Nicolas was boron ther I wis:
And Bischop ther was he made,
And his last ende there he hade:
In his grane he was laid thoo,
And after translate to Ballo,
That is in the Pole Lande,
And there be lithe I vnderstande.
And xx. mile that Castell fro,
Is a Hauen hight Cacabo:

Hit is right depe, and faire of floe,
In alle wedere hit is gude:
For schippez therein to take her rest,
In alle Turkey side hit is the best.
That Hauen tofore, as men said me,
Was some tyme a faire Cite:
And was cristenet as men telle,
Tille gret vengauce vpon hem selle,
For sinn that thei dud in the Toun,
Hem to amende thei were neuer bon.
That Cite was drant for the same case, Right as Sodome, and Gomore was.
Some wyndowez, and wallex yet ther be,
For I saie hem wit myn ee.
From that Hauen of Cacabo,
On our right hand as we dud go,
xxx. mile by Lond I wis,
To the Castell Ruge hit is:
We sailer therby taward Ierusalem,
And come therby hamard agayn.
And xxx. mile from that Castell,
Is a strong Ile trust me well:
The wiche in the langage of that Lande,
Is callet the vij. benedez, I understande.
What is the cause thei calle hit soo,
For vij. poyntez go out ther fro:
Alle gret Roches, and long ther thei be,
And ferre in sonder men maie hem see.
For a token men hold hem there,
By cause thei schuld by theim faire.

And sixty long mile, and ten,
VVe sailer to the Ile of Rodez then:
And rested ther a litle space,
To confort vs in that place.
And euen from Rodez to Venece,
As I went I come home, I wis.
And come to Padua the Cite faire:
There I rested, and toke the aire.
And from thennez to Castell Limimia,
And so to Bassiayn, ther are Castellez taa.
From thennez to Bononia full euen,
And there we were daiez seuen.
And so forth to Castell Sent Iohan,
And then to Mirandula that foule Toun.
And euen forth to Hostia Muche Marise ther schat thou in ga.
Then so forth to the Toun of Veron,
The Venyceanez be Lordez of ichon.
Then so forth to Castell Selucian,
And the Blaffard is thi money than.
From that place thou schalt to Trent,

And so forth to the Cite of Merane,

So draw the don to Nazaret,

 There is the Emperour money walking:
 Like a barre of siluer hit is,

 And so from Vlme to Ofselyng

 And from thennez to Duron,
 And then to Spire that rioll town.
 From Spire to Vormez are milez xiiij,

 And to Wesell, and Couelence, there is gud wyn.
 And so to Andernak that is thi waie,
 And then to Bun, I dar well saie.
 From thennez to Coleyn that faire cite,

 And then to Mastrik I the rede,
 And there new money most thou gette.
 And so forth euen to Disle,

And so thou schalt to Macheleyn,
 That is a town booth gud and syn:
 There gothe the money of Braban,
 And that deceiuet mony man.
 And so from Mechelyn to Gaunt,
 Into Flaunderez most thou haunt.
 And so to Burgez that faire town,
 And then to Newport most thou gon.
 And after that to Denkerke,
 And so to Grauenyng most thou linke.
 And to Calys a town full free,
 Thuse at the See-side we bee.
 And for hit is the comyn waie,
 From England to Rome, I will not saie:
 Ne tales make of her gouernance,
 For to all pilgrymez hit is no staunce.
 Then praie ne to the Lord of myghtes most,
 That brought this Pilgryme to Engeland cost.
 His lif to mayntene to his wille,
 In his seruice bothe lounde and stille.
 And when we out of this word schull wende,
 The ioye of heuen be vs sende:
 That is my praior, and schal be aie,
 We may be saued at Domesdaie:
 And so to his blis he vs bringe,
 Iesu that is heuen King:
 And secur therof, at we maie be,
 Saie alle Amen for charite.

The Churches Peregrination by this Holy Land way, and warre into mysticall narchie in and ouer Christendome, was aduanced in that Age and the following, and principally by this Expedition

§. I.

The Historie of the Normans, and their proceedings. Of V R B A N and B O A M V N D S policie, abusing the zeale of Christendome in these Warres: and of Satans loosing after one thousand yeares.

50 Hitherto you haue heard the Monke and the Priest Eye-witnesses of this Expedition: the one called Robertus Anglus, the other a follower of Robert the Norman: and after them the Tyrian Archbishop, and an English Monke. Neither let any maruell that in these Peregrinations, dedicated to the English name principally, I omit not the Norman, whose Father and Brethren reigned here, who for the hope of the English Crowne forsooke that of Ierusalem being offered, who dyed in England: and what shall I more say? What are Englishmen but in triple respect, Normans or North-men? From the North parts adioyning came the first Angles, or Saxons: from thence also the Danes, which made the next Conquests: and from these North parts, the scourge of the World, Omne malum ab Aquilone (ex Scanza insula que erat quasi officina gentium, aut velut vagina Nationem, the parts for most part still subiect to the Crowne of Denmarke) the same Danish people settling themselves in France, and called Normans, that is, men of the North, after a French civil-izing and Christianitie, made their third Conquest vnder Earle William. This three-fold Cord cannot be easily broken, nor can any Englishman at this day separate his Norman blood from the English, and indissoluble mixture euen from the last conquest remayning in the tongue and people, the Conquerors vtmost indeuours being herein conquered. A great part of Earle Roberts Armie was English, and as Eadmerus and all the Historians of that time testifie, the monie which defrayed his Armie was English, Normandie remayning therefore engaged to King William his Brother. Yea, Boamund also and Tancred were Normans: fortie of which Nation returning from a Ierosolymitan pilgrimage, behaued themselues so valiantly at the siege of Salerne, against the Saracens, that Guaimar the Prince sent Legats with them into Normandie, to draw some aduenturers into his part, where Giselbert a Nobleman, hauing slaine William, and fearing the anger of Robert then Earle or Duke of Normandie, embraced the occasion, and with his Brethren Ranulph, Aisclitin, Osmund and Rodulph, and their followers went into Italie to Prince Pan-dolph at Capua, Anno Dom. 1017.

Apulia and Calabria were then subiect to the Greeke Empire, which rather tyrannizing then ruling, by the Catapan or Deputie, Melus a principall man perswaded the Normans to inuade his Countrey so to shake of the Greekish yoke, and fought foure times with Bubagan the Catapan, in the three first battels winning much, which in the fourth at that fatall place of Canna hee lost againe: the remayning Normans betaking themselues to Pandulfe and Guaimar. After this Maniacus the Catapan sent to Guaimar to send him his Normans, to fight against the Saracens in Sicilia. Lately before (this was, Anno 1039) the sonnes of Tancred (inuitd by their Countrimen) had comne thither with three hundred men at Armes, by whose helpe he recovered Syracuse, and the most part of Sicilia, which after their departure the Saracens next yeare repoisessed. Anno 1041. Arduinus a Lumbard offended with Maniacus, for taking from him a Horse which he had taken from a Saracen, incited Earle Ranulph a Norman, to assist him in the warre against the Catapan, wherein many fights ouerthrowing the Greekes, matters succeeded so prosperously, that William one of the sonnes of Tancred was made Earle of Asculum, Drogo his Brother obtayned Venusia, and the rest of Apulia was shared amongst the rest of the Normans. In this Expedition, William, Drogo, Humfrie, Richard, Roger, and Robert the Sonnes of Tancred were renowned, of whom many Dukes and Kings in Italy after descended. Henry the Emperour confirmed to Drogo Earle of Apulia, and to Ranulph of Auersa, all which they had gotten. To Drogo succeeded his Brother Humfrie, 1051. who inuading the possessions of the Church, which Pope Leo seeking to recouer by battell, was beaten out of the field with exceeding slaughter on both sides, and besieged in a Castle whither he fled, was taken and forced to receiue the Norman into communion.

Baielard the Sonne of Humfrie, by Robert called Wischard (brother to the said Humfrie) was expelled from his Countrey of Apulia. He added also Rhegium in Calabria, and Troia in Apulia to his conquests, stiling himselfe Duke of Apulia and Calabria. His brother Richard winning Ca-pua, vexed the confines of Campania, and both molesting the Papall Possessions were cursed by Pope Nicholas, who yet vpon their Oath of vassalage to the Church, receiued them and confirmed the one Prince of Capua, the other Duke of Apulia and Calabria, paying twelue pence a yeare on euery yoke of Oxen. Anno 1062. Robert with his brother Roger, warred against the Saracens in Sicilia. Richard inuaded a great part of Campania neere to Rome it selfe, and sought to become Patricius; whereupon Henry the Emperour entred Italy, and Richard forsooke Campania.

Anno 1078. Nicephorus put downe Michael from the Empire of the East, who came and sought to Robert for ayde, who being compounded with Jordan which had succeeded his Father Richard, went into Greece, and prosperously succeeded. Hence he was called backe by Hildebrand, or Gregorie the Seuenth, which before had excommunicated him, to helpe him against Henrie
the Empeour then hauing taken Rome by force; who hearing of Roberts comming with a strong Armie (leauing Boamund to pursue his Grecian affaires) went with Clement or Guibert, his new made Pope into Etruria. Thus was hee dreadfull to the Easterne and Western Emperours at once. He dyed, Anno 1085. Roger his Sonne succeeded. This Historie both as of Normans, and as a preamble to the Expedition of the Franks, is not vnworthy recitall.

Roger the younger brother succeeding in the Dukedome of Apulia and Calabria, as also in the quarrell of Urban successor of Gregory against Guibert (who also confirmed his Dutchie to him as Vassall of the Church, the possessions whereof (such good fishing made he in troubled waters, he had euen to Tibur and Velitre * gotten into his possession) his brother Boamund * began to thinke of another succession, that as Roger had gotten the inheritance of Calabria and Apulia, from the Easterne Empire, he might also obtayne the like in Greece. This was not vn-knowne to the wiser in those times, as William Malmesbury * our Countriman testifieth, whose words are these.

Anno ab incarnatione 1095. Papa Vrbanus secundus, qui presidebat Apostolico culmini, euasis Alpibus venit in Gallias. Aduentus causa ferebatur perspicua, quod violentia Guiberti Roma extrusus, citra montanas ad sui reuerentiam sollicitaret Ecclesias. Illud repositum propositum non ita vulga-batur, quod Boamundi consilio penè totam Europam in Asiaticam Expeditionem moueret; ut in tanto tumultu omnium prouinciarum facile operatis auxiliaribus, & Vrbanus Romam, & Boamundus Illyricum & Macedoniam peruaderent. Nam eas terras & quicquid prateret a Dyrrhachio usque in Theſſalonicam protenditur, Guiscardus pater super Alexium acquirerat: idcirco illas Boamundus suo iuri competere clamitabat, inops hereditatis Apulæ, quam genitor Rogero filio minori delegauerat. Thus Urbanes intent was to get Rome from the Antipope Guibert or Clement, whom the Imperials and some Italians followed; neither had hee any great partaker in Italie but Roger, who sought his owne aduantage.

Anselme Archbishop of Canterburie was by King Rufus disposſſed of his reuenues, and lined in Exile for acknowledging him, as Eadmerus his companion in his Italian peregrinations to and with Pope Urban testifieth: no Bishop in England then daring to acknowledge either of the Popes without the Kings leaue, who also admitted no Papall power, but by his leaue in this Kingdome (for his and his fathers power in eales and ouer persons Ecclesiasticall, See Eadmerus and the Annotations of that learned and industrious Gentleman, Master Selden thereon, and therewith now published.) And Boamund enioying some Castles by his brothers indulgence, wanne many other, the men of warre following him. Nam ad fratrem specie tenuis Ducatus peruenerat (Malmesbury addeth toward the end of that Booke) alterum bello meliorem secuti. Iam vero parui momenti fuit quod paterni propositi sequax, Guibertum repellens Urbano validissime astutit, & constantem impulit ut Gallias ad Concilium Clari Montis accederet, quod eam Raimundi Provincialis Comititis & Episcopi Caturicensis Epistole inuitabant. Concilioq; celebrato libens occasionem accepit & in Græciam copias traiecit, subindeq; promouens exercitum modestè Raimundum & Godfridum operiebatur. Quibus venientibus sociatus magnum incitamentum ceteris erat, disciplina militaris scientia & virtute nulli secundus.

Eadmerus published by Ma Selden.

This Myſterie hath beene little obserued of most Authors, and was lesse obserued in those times by the zealous Princes of Christendome, whose valour, wealth, deuotion, glory and liues were engaged so deeply in this quarrell, most of all other deuices auailed the Papacie, in abasing the power of Princes Christian.

See how this agreeth with his cunning dissimulation before mentioned.

And well might Urban vse the helpe of Boamund and the Normans in that desigrie, which not only sorted to that expected effect to settle him in Rome, then held by Clement his Corriuall, but to a further aduancement of the Papacie in after times, then either hee or Boamund could then diuineor dreame of. For of the Normans disposition, Henry Huntingdon hath long since giuen testimonie that God had chosen them to exterminate the English, because he saw them eminent above all people in the prerogative of singular cruelty. For their nature is when they haue delected their enemies to the utmost, that they then depreſſe themselves, and bring themselves and their Lands into pouertie and waste: and alwayes the Lords of the Normans, when they haue trodden downe their enemies, seeing they cannot but be doing cruelty, they hostily trample vnder foot their own. Which plainly appeares in Normandie, England, Apulia, Calabria, Sicilia, and Antiochia, very good Countries which God hath subiected to them. Thus our Historian, and thus our Myſterians Urbanus (then for this disposition called Turbanus) and Boamundus vncharitably seeking their owne, abused the charitie and deuotion of those degenerated times.

Hen. Hunt. lib. 7.

So it was necessary that Myſteries should be carryed in mystie cloudes: which make mee not a little minde that Reuelation not fully reuealed, yet in some imperfect glimpses offering it selfe to view, this Historie vnmasking that Myſterie; or if it bee not the iust interpretation of the Prophecie (a taske too great for me to determine) yet not vnfit to be waied in the ballance of the Sanctuary together, and to be propounded to wiser considerations, at leſt by way of Allegoricall application, if not of Prophericall explication. Saint Iohns myſteriall Reuelation is deliuered in these words. Apoc. 9. 1. And the ſiſt Angell ſounded, and I ſaw a ſtarre fall from Heauen vnto the Earth, and to him was giuen the Key of the bottomleſſe pit. 2. And hee opened the bottomleſſe pit, and there aroſe a ſmoke out of the pit, as the ſmoke of a Furnace, and the Sunne and the ayre were darkened by reaſon of the ſmoke of the pit. 3. And there came out of the ſmoke Locuſts vpon the Earth, and vnto them was giuen power as the Scorpions of the Earth haue power, &c. 7. And the ſhapes of the Locuſts were like vnto Horſes prepared vnto battell, and on their heads were as it were Crownes like Gold, and their faces were as the faces of men. 8. And they had haire as the haire of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of a Lion. 9. And they had breſt-plates as it were breſt-plates of Iron, and the ſound of their wings was as the ſound of Chariots of many Horſes running to battell. 10. And they had tayles like vnto Scorpions, and there were ſtings in their tayles, and their power was to hurt men ſiue monethes. 11. And they had a King over them which is the Angell of the bottomleſſe pit, whoſe name is in the Hebrew Tongue, Abaddon, but in the Greeke Tongue, hath his name Apollyon. After the ſiſt Angel ſounding, followeth the looſing of the foure Angels bound in the great Riuer Euphrates, for to ſlay the third part of men. And the number of the armie of the Horſemen were two hundred thouſand thouſand. And thus I ſaw the Horſes in the Viſion; and them that ſate on them, hauing breſt-plates of Fire and of Iacint, and of Brimſtone; and the heads of the Horſes were as the heads of Lions, and out of their mouthes iſſued Fire and Smoke, and Brimſtone. By theſe three was the third part of men killed, by the Fire, and by the Smoke, and by the Brimſtone which iſſued out of their mouthes. For their power is in their mouth, and in their tayles: for their tayles were like vnto Serpents, and had heads, and with them they doe hurt.

in the other the Saracenicall Souldiory: both which agree to our present businesse, where Papall superstition, and Saracenicall crueltie begot in strange copulation such numerous innumerable deaths. As for the Starre it noteth an Ecclesiasticke Angell, or Bishop, as the Revelation it selfe reuealeth *. This Starre is not fixed, but falleth from heauen, the care of Heauenly ^a affection, heauenly ^b conuersation, and bringing soules by Pastorall vigilancie to the heauenly ^c Ierusalem, and Church of the first borne, whose names are written in heauen; and falleth to the earth, that is, to minde earthly pompe, and secular glorie, whose God ^d is their belly, whose glorie is in their shame, who minde earthly things. That the Pope hath euidently done this, their owne Histories make mention; first by Phocas, obtaining a Monarchie ouer the Church, and since Hildebrand exalting it ouer Kingdomes, States and Empires, and now at this day exercising nothing of a Bishop, but the Title, leauing the Cure to his Vicario di Roma ^e, whiles his Cardinall Consistorie are not Vigiles Ecclesie, but Consudices Orbis terrarum, & Principes mundi, regum ^{*} similes, veri mundi Car- dines, and himselfe hath turned Pasce oues into Rege, and playes the King, and playes with Kings, making and marring Kings and Emperours, and wearing himselfe a triple Crowne: either detaining (as King Iohns) or deposing and disposing (as Henries to Rodulph) or with the foote striking off, (as Celestine to Henrie the sixt Emperour) or treading also on the Emperours necke, (as Alexander to Fredericke.) All this power is challenged to the Keyes of the Kingdome of heauen, promised to Peter, Math. 16, in the name of the rest of the Apostles, of whom the question had beene asked, which he in their name answered; and that to shut out impenitents, and to admit those which beleue and repent, by Euangelicall ministry into the house of Gods Church and Family. But neither by word nor Sacraments, publicly, nor priuately, by teaching, improving, exhorting, rebuking, doth he either open or shut, or exercise any proper Episcopall Function: so that the key of power which he hath, must needs bee this Key of the bottomlesse pit, whereby Hell is opened, (as here in vision) and Heauen is hidden; both that supercelestiall Heauen of glorie, wherein is the Sunne of righteousness; and this inferiour Ecclesiasticke heauen of Grace, and of the Church, which as the Aire borroweth her light from that Sunne, or else must needs abide in night and darknesse.

And indeed what are Papall Dispensations and Indulgences, (as we shall anone see) but opening of Hell? What his Crusados to kill and destroy, Interdicting of kingdomes, excommunicating and deposing of Kings, raising warres, seditions, treasons, prohibiting vulgar reading of Scriptures, and the like, but shutting of heauen? These, these are the Papall keyes so much gloried of, keyes of the bottomlesse pit; yea, the key singular to open, and not plurally keyes, as hauing no power to shut that Hell which once he hath opened. Hence arose (by this opening of the bottomlesse pit) that Smoake of Ignorance, which bemisted the world (so that in King Alfreds daies not one Priest in England could vnderstand his Latine Seruice, or translate an Epistle out of Latine into English; and if any in the next Ages had his Grammer, he was a wonder to the rest of the Clergie) caused by Barbarians, which filled Italy, France, and other Countries of Christendome before, with a Smoake of Confusion and combustion, whereby the Latine Language was lost in vulgar vse, which continued in their Holies: men in that smooke not able to see what God said to them in his Word, or they to him in their Prayers. Hence a Smoake of blind zeale ascending as from a furnace: but as the fire of Hell is fire without light, burning and not shining, such is eager impetuous zeale without discretion, which crucified Christ, and persecuted Christianitie, & in Papists hath much changed them for Antichrist, and Antichristianitie. A smoake from the bottomlesse pit, is all vnbrideled Concupiscence, alway fuming from and to Hell; Bottomlesse in the originall, without iust cause of beginning; Bottomlesse in fine, without causing Iustice in the ending. Pride, Couetousnesse, Enuy, and other Hellish passions, are a smoake which ascend, but by ascending vanish; which as in the Builders of Babel, seeke a Name, and make as they would build to Heauen, but get no other name but Babel, and after confused cloudie Chymeras (like pillars of smooke in the Aire) vanish to nothing.

Out of this smokie ignorance, and ignorant zeale, and zealous perturbations (the trauels and throwes of the bottomlesse pit) came Locusts vpon the Earth, the carnall and earthy minded Bishops, Priests, Cardinals, Abbots, Monkes, and innumerable religious Orders of inordinate Religion: these being wholly superstitious, degenerating into superstition, and turning their heauenly calling into earthly, ease and pompe, and the spirituall seruice of God, into beggerly, worldly, carnall rites and bodily exercises. Thus haue you the Locusts worse then Egyptian, such to the soule as those in Aluares, and other the former Stories of this Booke mentioned to the bodie, saue that they are limited, and may not (as those) hurt the Grasse and Trees, and greene things, that is, such as haue a liuely Faith in Christ. Neither may they kill bodily, but spiritually torment the Conscience with their Canons, Confessions, Penances, Purgatories, Miracles, Visions, and (which most concernes our present purpose) Pilgrimages, and the like. Their shape is like to Horses, for their courage and wilfulnesse, Kings and Kingdomes being forced to stoop, both to their old Mumpsimus, and to their new Sumpsimus; euen the most refractorie or couragious, as William Rufus, and the two first Henries, conquered in Clergie immunities by Anselme and Becket, men of great worth in other kinds, but for this accounted Worthies, emi-

ment in the sanctitie of those times, for this honored and Canonized Saints. These the Crownes on their heads, or as Dunstan, Eadmund, and if there were any more Canterburie Canonizations: and such Crownes had the heads of Religious Orders, and first Founders and Inuentors of Holies, as Dominicke, Francis, and others, (and now at last Ignatius Loyola) and all the Clergie were crowned with dignitie, in their head ouer-topping Kings, in the meanest Priest exempted from Kings, yea creating his Creator the King of Kings, (that I mention not their shauen crownes, nor the Martyrs crownes which befell Priests or Laitie, dying in this Ierosolymitan Peregrination, or in fight against Christians, against whom the Pope had published his Crusado.)

But these Crownes were like Gold, not of it, the Pope herein the best Alchymist, extracting 10 true Gold out of Leaden Bulls, but distracting and contracting shewes of Gold, seeming Canonizations, and sanctitie in shew and sound of holy Church, rather then true holinesse: yea, the holy name of Church appropriated to these shauen crownes, by Popish Monopoly. Yet were the shewes made faire, and in all their actions they had the faces of men, in resemblance of iust reason and resolution; insomuch, that as when I looke on the Scripture onely, I wonder how there could bee any Papist, so when in Histories and the courses of times, I looke vpon the Church, especially after Hildebrand, I as much wonder that all were not Papists, the smoake had so taken away the light of the Sunne, and the Pope set vp so many Night-lights of humane reasons, and Treasons or Traditions in Canon Law and Schoole Diuinitie. Yea they had also 20 the haire of Women, in insinuating impressions, and melting rauishments of flattering perswasions, promised pleasures of Paradise, dazeling pomps in the present, and for the future, Merits, Supererogations, deliueries from Purgatorie, Relikes of Saints, Reuelations, Miracles, & a world of the like; which this Historie of the Holy Land sheweth sufficiently, and a Map of which you may see in Vrbans elegant Oration, and Boamunds cunning dissimulation. Their teeth were as teeth of Lions, in preying vpon Temporal Lands, Liberties, Iurisdiccions, and Spirituall deuouring of soules. Their Iron Breast-plates, were their defensue immunities and exemptions, whereby they were hardned and heartned against all contrary powers.

The sound of their Wings, was their preaching of Indulgences, thundering Interdictments, and Excommunications, Penances in Confessions, and the like. Their Tails, were the consequences of their Doctrine and Actions, which promising satisfactions to God and Man, yea 30 Merit and Supererogation, the honoring of Saints and Angels, in the fore-part: in the end stung like a Scorpion, filled the soule of their most deuoted with disconsolation, the body with grievous bodily exercises in Fastings, Pilgrimages, (as here) selfe-whippings; Euer learning, neuer coming to the knowledge of the truth; giuing reall possessions, and bequeathing true beggerie to their heires, for deliuerance from a Poeticall Purgatorie; crucifying themselues indeed before a painted Crucifixe, buying repentance at a deare rate, and making more irksome way to Hell (if Gods infinite mercy preuented not) then that by which many haue attained Heauen. Their King is the Angell of the bottomlesse pit, (you see whose Vicar he is indeed) and is named in Hebrew and Greeke, as hardning the Jewes, and corrupting Christians; or as restoring both Jewish rites and Gentile superstitions, in both a Destroyer. The five moneths some interpret of this life, some 40 alluding to the Grasse-hoppers Summer season; some to Noahs floud, so long preuailing ouer the Earth; some to one hundred and fiftie yeares, taking a day prophetically for a yeare, and reckoning from Hildebrand, to Gregorie the Decretalist; some for an indefinite time, some for a short time: as if they should say, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father Acts 1. 7 hath put in his owne power. I haue rather sought to lay open their qualities then their durance: as for the time, Time will deliuer it.

Now for the other Vision of four Angels, bound in the great River Euphrates; some vnderstand Euphrates mystically, for the meanes of vpholding and aduancing the Merchandize of mysticall Babylon, that is of Rome and her Poperie: Indeed foure hath beene a famous number, for the foure Gospels, for those foure first generall Councils, for the Ecclesiasticke Aristocracie
 50 by the foure Patriarchs, (the fift was in manner titular) for the foure Doctors of the Latine Church: also foure hath beene notable in this Papall mysterie and Supremacy; first in the ages thereof, the Child-hood from Boniface to Hildebrand, in a spirituall Monarchy, long growing vp; the Youth from Hildebrand to Boniface the eight, in addition of power, ouer all powers Royall and Imperiall, with youthfull vigour trampling vnder foote the strongest Aduersaries; the Mans age from thence till Luther, losing somewhat of that King-awing strength, by schismes amongst themselues, and by Councils*, Kings and Kingdomes better opportunitie and vigilance; but holding vp to the vpmost their spirituall, till Luther gaue beginning to their old declining age, and thus their almost precarian and obnoxious power, which by leaue of Kings and States they hold, howsoeuer in seeming aboue them. Four Courses haue aduanced and vpheld
 60 them, Excommunications, (to which interdictments of Kingdomes, and deprivations of Kings are annexed) Decretall Lawes and Constitutions to gouerne the Church; Warres by Crusados and Treasons, and Inquisitions against contrary opinions. Four sorts of men haue beene their Creatures and Creators; degenerated Monckery of later ages, which vndermined the ancient sanctitie and discipline, Canonists which wholly corrupted it; Schoole-men which admitted

* As those of Constance, Basel, &c. so in the Statute of Praemunire in Rich. 2. c. 6.

mitted the Philosophers to bee Masters in Diuinitie, and Friers which occupied both Churches and Palaces in new and meerely Papall hypocrisies and priuiledges. And since, the reuenues of Poperie, as we shall by and by see, are foure, Temporalties, Collations of Benefices, Indulgences, and Dispensations.

But I rather like their Interpretation, which apply these foure to the Angels of destruction, which literally haue beene loosed from Euphrates vpon the Christian world, and indeed destroyed the third part of Christian men with bodily death. For presently after Boniface the Pope had obtained his Supremacy of Phocas, Mahomet arose with his new Sect in the East; the one with Locusts, (whereof you haue heard) to corrupt the soules; the other with Horses in his Successors, to destroy the bodies of men. And these Angels of destruction haue beene many 10 waies foure. First, in the foure Doctors, Authours of the foure Sects of that irreligious Religion. For Mahomet hauing taken Mecca, created foure Generals, Ebubezer, Omar, Osmen, and Ali; whom he called, the foure sharpe Swords of God, and commanded them to goe into the foure parts of the world, to kill such as resisted. After Mahomet's death, these foure successiue-ly succeeded. These may be called foure Angels, as the foure Doctors of the Mahumetan Law, (so they are vsually stiled by the Mahumetans) and reckoned Saints in their Kalender; whom they say Mahomet had prophesied should succeed him, who also fained his Law receiued from the Angell Gabriel. These were Authours of foure Sects also, Ali or Hali, of the Sect Imemia; Osmen of the Sect Baanesia, Homar of the Anesia, Ebubezer of the Melchia. These foure in their succeeding Generations, haue bin sent out from neere the parts of Euphrates: where before they may be said to be bound, because that howsoeuer Chosroes or some others at some start, or aduantage 20 passed ouer, and did hurt to the Roman Empire, (then the most flourishing part of the Church) yet did they not continue any long space, or much preuaile on this side Euphrates, that being the boundary, as it were appointed of God, betwixt the Roman and the Parthian, and after, betwixt the Roman and Persian Empires. But after the Mahumetans had once appeared from Arabia, which Euphrates washeth, they in one Age ouer-ranne Egypt, Syria, Palestina, Persia, yea ouerwhelmed Africa, quite thorow to the Streights, and all Spaine, with many other Countries*, neuer after recouered to the Empire. And as they began with foure Angels in foure Sects, and conquering to the foure Winds: so there haue beene of them foure principall Deluges, each from Euphrates, onerwhelming the world. That we reckon the first, in that Saracen- 30 nicall Age: the second, that of the Turkes, which vnder Belphebr tooke Diogenes the Greeke Emperor prisoner, and conquered in manner all the Countrey to Constantinople, the occasion of this Ierosolymitan expedition, and consequently, of killing the third part of men, dwelling in remote Countries which they had not seene, but came to the Holy Land as the publike slaughter place and Shambles of the Christian world: in which it is remarkable, that the two Calypas of Bagdet and Cairo, one on the one side, the other on the other of Euphrates, otherwise dissenting, consented yet like Herod and Pilate, to kill Christ again in his members, and to perpetrate those butcheries, yee haue read of in the former Relations. And let the vnderstanding Reader examine the Roman Stories, and see if in aboue sixe hundred yeares from Romulus forward, there was so much Ethnicke blood spilt on both sides, to purchase the Roman Monarchie, as here in 40 much lesse then the third part of that time, was occasioned to be spilt by the Romish Hierarchie: on both sides shall I say? Or may I make the question, euen of that which was meerely Christian of the Easterne and Westerner beleeuers? And the third ouerflowing, was of the Tartars, at first not Mahumetan, yea destroying Bagdet and the Calypha, and enemies to mankind in generall, but after prouing, and still continuing in greatest part Mohumetan. These did almost roote out the Christianitie of the greater Asia, and erected the greatest Empire (not with best bloodshed) that euer was: yea, they not onely ouer-ranne the Christians, as farre as Poland and Russia, Hungaria and Germany by themselves, but forced the Chorosmines out of Persia, (which as you haue heard gaue the fatall blow to the Christians in the Holy Land) and rooted out the Turkish Kingdome there, and forced them also to inuade the Christians, founding in the Christi- 50 an ruines the Aladine Turkish Kingdome in Natolia, and enforcing ouer Euphrates the Progenitors of Ottoman, from whom beginneth our fourth Epocha, and that fourth Deluge of the Turkish Nation, which hath deuoured such worlds of Christian flesh. The Warres also of these peoples, haue beene principally by Horses, neither doe I thinke the number expressed of two hundred Millions is any whit hyperbolicall, if we consider the innumerable Armies of innumerable Horse-men, which they haue in diuers times burthened the World withall. That of the Tartars alone, if Authors report truly, easily makes credible that incredible number. The later expedition of the Tartars vnder Tamerlane, how monstrous doth it seeme?

Also, Their Horses hauing power in their mouthes and tailes, agrees to the manner of Warre vsed by those Nations, which vsed a conioyned flight and fight, as before yee haue read, that 60 euen then when they seemed to flye, they had Serpent headed tailes, and did flee but in cunning sleight, to returne to greater mischiefe, shooting also as they fled, and wounding their pursuers.

And as the number of foure, so sitteth their foure Doctors, foure Sects, foure Deluges; so also so haue they had foure principall places of residence, neere to Euphrates, Mecca still hallowed in their profane Rites, the seate of Mahomet and his first Successors. After that Damascus (for Ierusalem continued not their Imperiall residence) and after that Bagdet, to which by a contrary faction was opposed Cairo, succeeding herein to Cairoan, as that to Tunis.

Likewise, foure great Nations doe still obserue these Eufreatan Angels, the Turkish (to whom the huge African tracts haue some reference) the Persian, the Tartars (the chiefe of which is now seated in India, the Mogol successor of Tamerlan) and the Indian (in many smaller and specially maritime Kingdomes) depending for their Faith and Scepter of the Arabians, which beginning with Trade proceeded to Conquest. But more then enough of these things. Wherein we see all plainly agreeing to this warring Religion, as in the former to the Romish Locusts; in both perhaps rather intimating the danger to Christians by both Angels (the one corporall, the other chiefly spirituall) then their time: both which wee see haue continued so long a time, and spread so farre, that they thereby, the Moore aswell as Papist, plead Catholike from Vniuersalitie.

Yet if we will weigh the time, when both were likely to doe Christendome most harme, and like Samsons Foxes looking contrarie, held a fierie coniunction in their tails, to set the World on fire; this Angell of the bottomlesse pit, puts vs in minde of another Angell which came downe from heauen, hauing the key of the bottomlesse pit, and a great chaine in his hand, And hee laid hold on the Dragon that old Serpent, and bound him one thousand yeeres. And cast him into the bottomlesse pit, and shut him up and set a seale vpon him, that he should deceiue the Nations no more till the thousand yeeres should be fulfilled, and after that he must be loosed a little season. This is not a falling starre, but an Angell which descends; euen Christ himselfe (which is called the Angell of the Covenant) and hath the keyes of Hell and Death, which entreth into the strong mans house and binds him (as Primasius, Andreas Casariensis, and other interpreters doe agree) that hee should not seduce the Nations or Church of the Gentiles, as before in a generall defection and idolatrie. But after that thousand yeeres expired, he should be loosed, not so long as in the Gentile superstitions, nor all so farre, but exchanging those prophane Idoll names (with greater wrong to Gods holy Angels and Saints) should in holier Names and shewes restore those Heathen Rites, Lights, Images, and other will-worships of Angels and dead men. Now, for a thousand yeeres after Christ, the state of Christs Church, though it were still after the primitiue golden Age somewhat declining, as the Fathers and Ecclesiasticall Histories shew: Yet in substantiall and fundamentall points it continued sound, as Bishop Iewel in the mayne points of Controuersie hath shewed for fixe hundred yeeres, and Bishop Usher for the foure Ages following, although these were much more corrupt then those former. Nemo repente fuit turpissimus: and it is true of mysticall Rome also, that it was not built in one day. But I had rather the Reader should examine this point in Bishop Usher his learned worke, de Christ. Eccles. Success. & Statu. I am more then enough busied in our Holy Land pilgrimage.

Cedrenus mentions diuers starres fallen, one An. 1033. which made a noise in the fall (cum sonitu & fragore) and another the next yeere, which in the night made so great a light, that people thought the Sunne had risen. He mentions also terrible Armies of Locusts, which brought miserable famine ouer those parts: as if God by visible signes would then warne men to obserue these mysticall predictions, when they were to worke their most complete effects. The like is mentioned in the West by Floriacensis and others. An earthquake at Ierusalem destroyed many buildings, and men, continuing fortie dayes. The Temple of the Sepulchre had a little before beene razed by Azims, whose sonne permitted the reedifying thereof, and presently there resorted innumerable numbers; first, of the meanest; after of the meane sort, after of Kings, Prelates, Earles; and lastly, of women both noble and base. And when some questioned what this might signifie, it was answered, the comming of Antichrist. Once; from the thousandth yeere after Christ, till Hildebrands time, Anno 1073. hapned more frequent and prodigious signes in Heauen, Locusts, Famines, &c. on earth, then euer we read of, as Glaber and other Historians haue recorded.

And for those Hierosolymitan Pilgrimages in such numbers, what did they else but make way to these bloudie expeditions, after that Peter the Eremite had receiued a reuelation thereof. Neither is it likely, that this reuelation was from any but the Deuill (so many superstitious reuelations, then more plainly arguing this loosing of Satan) which is a liar and murtherer from the beginning, and can turne himselfe into an Angel of light, as appeareth by his fore-mentioned vanitie, by the monstrous impietie of his followers, in sacrileges and all abuses to God and Men, in almost idolatrie to himselfe. Whose attempts at Ierusalem, whatsoever lustre they sparkle forth, yet wanted not some sparke of Hell, in that they were so died in bloud, corrupted with spoiles, corrupting with superstition, and with neglect of their æconomicall and politicall calling. Christ himselfe had said, the true worshippers would shewship the Father, not at Ierusalem, nor in that Mountayne, but in spirit and truth: for God seekes such to worship him. And although I denie not that a place dignified with holy actions or passions, may bee a Place to the memorie and affection exciting holinesse, yet for Religion of place to leaue or neglect our place and calling in Religion, is superstitious; and to ascribe sanctitie to the place, is Iewish. Gregorie Nyssene hath written a whole Epistle against such Hierosolymitan Pilgrims, alledging, that it is neither commanded, nor is God present, or the holy Ghost any more there then in other places of Christendome; yea lesse, because more iniquitie is there committed, in no place more nor more abominable: that himselfe had beene there, but in the Churches affaires, and made this benefit thereby to know that their owne were more holy; with other like passages against that superstitious passage. Which might better be spoken of these Worlds of men, which trauelled nothing from themselves and their vices in this Pilgrimage, as the stories testifie: yea Vitriacus Bishop of Achon, tells of the Christians which liued at Ierusalem, as if they were the worst in all the world. And what else were the Templers, and other their chiefe Warriours, but such as were, The neerer the Temple, the further from God, verifying that prouerbe, Calum non animum mutant, qui trans mare currunt? The Ancients thought that God suffered Ierusalem before to bee destroyed, for the further propagating of the Catholike Church, which liueth and walketh by Faith and not by sight: id Domino ordinante dispositum, ut legis seruitus à libertate fidei atq, Ecclesia tolleretur. And sure, iust one thousand yeeres after this ruine of the Temple liued Hildebrand, who began the Monarchie of the Church, in the deposing of Kings, which nothing euer so much effected as this disposing them first to serue the Crosse, and after the Crosse to serue to depose them. It saouours somewhat of the Deuills loosing, that they which are called Gods, hereby were so loosed from their charges, and their charges or subiects by Crusados loosed from them, loosed against them. Mirabilis spiritus, (saith Dodechinus Abbas in his Appendix to Marianus Scotus) illius temporis homines impulit ad illud iter aggrendum. A meruailous spirit (the loosed Dragon, it seemeth) moued the men of that time. For women vsed mans habit and went armed. And he saith, that Peter the Eremite carried about a Scroll, which he said, was fallen from Heauen, commanding men hereto. Men, Women, and Children followed him, so as Kingdomes were void of Gouernours, Cities of Pastors, Streets of Inhabitants. They began their bloudie and disordered out-rages vpon the Jewes, and after that vsed like hostilitie against the Christians in Hungarie (which had shewed them kindnesse) and other places as they passed, besides their vncleannesse, fornications, and abominations amongst themselves. Albertus Aquensis addeth; Bishops, Abbots, Monkes, Clergie-men, Nobles, Princes, and all the vulgar, aswell chaste as incestuous, Adulterers, Homicides, Theeues, Perjured, Robbers, and all the kind of Christian profession, and the Woman-kind led with penance (the fruits of which their Expedition declared) runne together at Peters preaching this way. He tells that Christ appeared in vision to Peter, bidding him carrie from the Patriarke, Letters of our Embassage, and thou shalt rayse the hearts of the faithfull to purge the holy Places of Ierusalem, and to restore the seruices of the Saints (officia Sanctorum.) For now by perils and many tentations, the gates of Paradise shall be opened to the Elect and Called. Leonem ex ungue. You may know by his Offices of Saints what Christ this was, and what Paradise is now set open, as also by Peters peoples proper successe, which being fortie thousand, and the first that went, after much villanie, perished by Christian and Turkish swords before the rest could come, not aboue three thousand being left. Godscake Priest, led fiftene thousand with like successe.

But aboue all, they were so superstitiously deuoted to Peter, that whatsoeuer hee said or did, was held subdiuine, and they plucked off his Mules haire for Relikes (his hypocriticall abstinence, Robert the Monke hath before told you.) These are the words of Guibert an eye-witnesse, which neuer saw man so frequented with multitudes, so enriched with gifts (which he bestowed on his followers) so applauded for sanctitie. And which more encreased the wonder (he calls it a miracle) victuals being that yeere very deare, yet men sold their goods cheape to buy provisions deare for that way of God, as it was called. Yea, the men which to day laughed at men for this distracted deuotion, to morrow were suddenly possessed with like instinct, and imitated those whom they had derided. Children, saith he, old Wiues, tender Virgins, trembling old Men, deuoted themselves to warres and Martyrdome: poore men carrying their small substance in Carts with their little ones, which asked at euery Towne if it were Ierusalem. These and much more shall you read of the generall confused raptures of that Age. Fulcherius hath told you of sixtie hundred thousand, which vnder-tooke the way, most of which repented, or dyed, or were forced to stay. God is not a God of confusion: & qua à Deo sunt, ordinata sunt. These confusions preach Babylon, and these raptures, strange instincts, strong, impetuous, mad zeale, reuelations, and all abominations in all places, plainly proclaime that Hell was broken loose indeed: and the crye of bloud, and exaltation of superstition in Reliques, and the like crye out, that Satan was loosed.

When I read that Anselme esteemed the Alpha of his times for learning and sanctitie, gaue so light credit to receiue two haire, brought by a Souldier of Boamunds companie from those parts, with great ioy and reuerence, and to keepe them with great veneration, as two of the haire which the blessed Virgin plucked from her head at the Crosse in the time of the Passion: (two others the Bishop of Roan receiued with a long Procession of Monkes, Canons, Priests, People, with the greatest honor.) What may we thinke of the vnlearned vulgar? Yea, his iudgement of Relikes

- likes Eadmerus describeth, vpon occasion of a Bone, said to be of Prisca the Martyr, giuen him, whom desiring more, Anselme restrayned, saying, that her body cannot bee entire so long as this Bone shall be wanting. Wherefore if thou shalt keepe it worthily, and shalt serue the Lady whose it is with what deuotion thou canst, shee will accept the gift of thy seruice as thankfully as if thou shouldest serue her whole bodie. Of the Crosse you haue alreadie read, vpon what ground it was receiued (a superstitious Surians report, as the former on a Souldiers) how obserued and serued, and consequently how multiplyed. Once, Reuelations caused adoration at Reliques, Crosse, Images, Pilgrimages, and the like; that is, the Deuill was loosed a thousand yeeres after Christ, to seduce the Nations as before, to Ethnike idolatrie and superstition, all things fitted to Heathenish splendor, and himselte with signes and lying wonders, working effectually in the children of disobedience; Ethnisme in Rites and worthips being restored, but Palliated with Christian names and shewes. A thousand yeeres * had passed after Christ, before the Reall Presence was decreed (more before Transubstantion, Eleuation, Adoration, Communion in one kind) before the Cardinals grew Kings fellowes, the Election of the Pope being deuolued to them; before Canonists, and Schoolemen, the issues of Lumbard and Gratian, before exemptions of the Clergie from Kings, before Kings became Subiects to the Pope, before there were any Friars, before religious Orders were so diuided, inbdiuided, multiplyed; before Indulgences, Iubilees, Canonizations, legall power of Decretals, Generall Councils of all Christendome called and ordered by the Pope, before marriages wholly prohibited the Clergie, before Saturday made our Ladies day, before Crusado's, Interdictments, Inquisitions, and other carnall and spirituall Monsters of crueltye. A thousand yeeres had passed before this present face of Poperie had once seene the World, or the World it; which after that time of the Deuils loosing by degrees crept in, euen the moderne Councell of Trent adding many things, and many things still added occasionally by Papall Constitutions to Popish faith. The smoke from the bottomlesse pit darkned the light of the Sunne to humane eyes: and this Papall Moone is euer in change, the Scriptures, as Cardinall Cusanus writes, altering their sense also with the practice & interpretation of the Church. Now indced was the time when Antichrist was ascended his Throne, which had beene closely conceiued in former and better times; for euen in Pauls time the mysterie of iniquitie did atreadie worke, when some preached Christ of enuie and strife, when the Pastors did not naturally care for the state of the Flocke, with a genuine, Fatherly and Pastorly regard; but all sought their owne and not the things of Christ; and that in Rome: so that whereas charitie seeketh not her owne, and God is charitie, and he that dwelleth in charitie dwelleth in God and God in him, the Deuill had no fitter meane to vnder-mine the Faith, then by diuerting charitie, peruerting and subuerting it with selfe-loue and ambition. Which seedes lay hidden (onely now and then some motions and springings, as it were, in the wombe of the Roman Church, by some proud and wicked Popes testified both conception and quicknesse) till by Phocas his Mid-wiferie Antichrist was borne, aboue fixe hundred yeeres after Christ, and grew vp by degrees to further maturitie, till a thousand yeeres were expired, and the Deuill was againe loosed in the Sea of Rome.
- These thousand yeeres, after some were expired in the thousandth yeere, when Syluester the second was Pope, who had attayned the Seate by compact with the Deuill, according to whose equiuocating Oracle he lost it and his life, saying Masse in Ierusalem, a Chappell so called, which he vnderstood of the Holy Citie. The common expectation of those times was of the Deuils loosing and the Worlds end, but seeing no such matter (for this was a mysterie, in which men could not see Wood for Trees) they fell euery where on worke with building of glorious fabrikes of Monasteries and Churches. Of which Hilaries words deserue memorie: Caute Antichristum. Male enim vos parietum amor cepit, male Ecclesiam Dei in tectis adificastis, veneramini: male sub his, pacis nomen ingeritis. Anne ambiguum est in his Antichristum esse sessurum? Wickliffe, White and Luther, with others of later times, haue applyed the loosing of Satan to that time. Otho the Emperour gaue eight Cities to this Syluester in Marca Ancona, for his more Papall Port.
- Others begin these thousand yeeres from Christs Passion, at which time another Coniurer Theophylact, called Benedict the ninth, was Pope, made at ten or twelue yeeres of age: at which time Authors tell strange reports of deuouring Locusts in the East and West, and of a portentuous Dragon, appearing of a mile in length, huge bignesse, dreadfull with horrible scales, hissing, coldnesse, colours, without legs and feet, as Arnolphus an eye-witnesse testifieth, ending in terrible thunders all that day (the Friday seuen-night after Whitsontide) and the next.
- Others referre this loosing of Satan to Hildebrands time, another famous Sorcerer, so stiled (and therefore deposed) not by Benno alone, but by a whole Synode of Bishops, Anno 1080. He brought in the doctrines of Denills, forbidding the Clergie marriage (which caused great tragedies) and appointing Saturday fasts. Once, hee exalted the Papacie and Romish Church to freedome, wealth, temporall Reuenue, to rule ouer all secular Rulers, to be Lady of all Christians, from whom the right of this great, euer-dreadfull and venerable, and almost infinite power (they are the words of Onuphris) hath proceeded. He first deposed the Emperour, and he tooke order for exalting this Urban * the second (the second Turban or Hildebrand) to the Seate. As for the manners of those times how degenerate they were, all the Authors which then writ, yea Tyrius the most famous Writer of these Holy Land warres, haue deliuered them beyond all parallel of all Ages for crueltie, oppression, ignorance, treason, and all abominations of desolation; and like Priests like People. Let the Reader see these things more fully handled in Doctor Vshers learned worke. As for those which begin the Devils binding at Constantines time, and loosing with Boniface, one thousand and three hundred yeeres after Christ, they doe not well consider that from Gregorie to Boniface there was more effusion of Christian blood, then had beene all the times of the ten Primitiue Persecutions; not onely by Turkes, Tartars, and ciuill warres amongst the Christians; but also by occasion of the Warres called Holy, both in the millions which perished in them, and other millions by them through Indulgences against Emperours, Kings, Prin- 10 ces, States, Albigenses and all the Opponents whatsoever. And what are seuentie to a thousand, whethersoever of these three opinions be followed?

Ranciscus Soderinus Cardinall of Volterra, a man versed in the troublesome affaires of 20 the Papacies of Alexander, Julius and Leo, could counsell Adrian that reformation of manners was not the way to extinguish Heresies, rayfed against the authoritie of the Church of Rome; but Crusado's, by exciting Princes and People to roote them out; that thus Innocent the third oppressed the Albigenses, and the succeeding Popes the Waldenses, Picards, Lionists, Arnoldists, Speronists and Patauines: that likewise many German Princes if they might haue leaue to seise on the States of Luthers fauourers, would greedily embrace the condition; and many might bee caused to follow them by Indulgences. Neither could any reformation be made without diminishing the Rents of the Church, which hauing foure Foun- 30 taines, the one Temporall (the Rents of the Ecclesiasticall state) the other three Spirituall, Indulgences, Dispensations, and Collations of Benefices; none of them could be stopped, but that one quarter of the Reuenues would be cut off. You see here the foure Riuer of the Popes Paradise, the foure feete of the Beast, all which had either their beginning of being, or strength at least to support it about these times. For as for the Temporall Reuenues, their originall is deriued from the rebellion rayfed against Leo Iconomachus, whom for abolishing Images, Pope Gregorie the second excommunicated, ac mox Italie populos Sacramenti (they are the words of Sigonius the Popes Histori- 40 an) quo se illi obligauerant religione exoluit, & ne ei aut tributum darent, aut alia ratione obedirent, in dicit. Thus the People rebelled, killed the Emperours Lieutenants and swore subiection to the Pope. Ita Roma, Romanusq; Ducatus ad Rom. Pontificem peruenit. So did Rome and the Roman Dukedome accrue to the Pope by treason (or by leasing, for Onuphrius a Papall Antiquarie esteemes it a tale) and hauing chruied so well by treason at home, he fared much better by like arts 40 elsewhere: the French, by the Popes counsaile enthronizing Pipine, and deposing Chilperike: who with Charles his sonne were not vnthankfull. For to omit Pipines deuotion, his sonne Charles hauing subdued the Lumbards (which still were troublesome to the Popes, not permitting them well to hold what they had so ill gotten) left Apulia and Calabria to the Emperour (which the Normans after turned into another Kingdome) to others other parts, to the Pope he permitted the Exarchate of Ranenna, Pentapolis, the Perusine Dukedome, the Roman, Tus- 50 cane and Campan, iure, principatu & ditione sibi retenta; reliqua ipse sibi nomine regni retinuit. The Right, Souereigntie and Iurisdiction reserued, made the Pope no absolute Prince: and the acknowledging him Patricius Romanus, the making and Inuestiture by Ring and Staffe of Archbishops and Bishops in euery Prouince, yea his choosing the Pope and ordering the Apostolike Sea, made him an absolute subiect. And subiects they were till Hildebrands time, and their au- 60 thoritie, saith Onuphrius, extended not further then matters of Faith. Ceterum Imperatoribus suberant, ad eorum nutum omnia fiebant, de eis iudicare vel quidquam decernere non audebat Papa Romanus. Primus omnium R. Pont. Greg. 7. armis Nortmannorum fretus, opibus Comitissa Mathildis mulieris per Italiam Potentissima confusus, discordiaq; Germanorum Principum bello ciuili laborantium inflammatus, prater maiorum morem contempta Imperatoris authoritate & potestate, cum summum Pontificatum obtinuisset, Casarem ipsum (a quo si non electus, saltem confirmatus fuerat) non dico excommunicare, sed etiam regno Imperioq; priuare ausus est. Res ante ea sacula inaudita. Nam fabulas que de Arcadio, Anastasio, & Leone Iconomacho circumferuntur nihil moror. And thus whereas the Popes and the whole Clergie had beene exalted by Princes, they became Princes 60 of their Princes; and in this Gregorie first imitated Dauid, which cut off Goliaths head with his owne sword, as Otho Frisingensis hath obserued. Henrie the fourth King, the third Emperour of that name, was the subiect of Gregories furie, a man for humilitie, patience, and many vertues much commended; yea, for bountie to the Church, as at Spire, Mentz, &c. and for valour 70 tried tried in sixtie two battels, but so haunted with the euill Genius of the Papacie, ut rem religionis tractare sibi videretur quisquis in illum (you read our Malmesburie) arma produceret. The temporall power of the Pope, was much increased by the great Legacie of Countesse Mathildis, (as a little before by the gift of Osbo to Syluester) and by taking aduantages in the Norman and other occasions: which they held with vneuen fortunes, and not so quiet that Rome it selfe could well brooke it (which caused diuers of them to liue at Auinion for about seuentie yeeres) and was not secure to them till the time of Boniface the ninth, a man composed of the worst vices and best fortunes, as Theodorike à Niem, one of his Courtiers obserueth; who first, in alto & bas-

- 10 Primus populi Romani vim omnem in Pontificem transtulerit, creatis suo nutu Magistratibus omnibus, munitaq; Sancti Angeli arce, &c. Once, how euer they got this Papall Duchie or temporall Kingdome, they had neuer kept it but by their Spirituall Empire and Monarchie, and that branch especially which lookes to Ierusalem. For the generation of the Popes Temporalties in Italie, (now valued by some aboue diuers Kingdomes) arose out of the corruption and ruine of the Empire, the Emperours being Kings aswell of Italie as Germany, crowned * not only at Aquisgrane or Germanie, but at Milan for Italie, and at Rome for the Empire. But the Empire decaying by the Popes stratagems, by bandying factions against the Emperours, by inciting them to Holy Land Expeditions (to their great weakning) by exciting the World against them for neglect, by taking opportunities in their absence at home, by seeking to betray them there, by ap-
- 20 plying and employng the Crusados and Indulgences, (yea, sometimes as before yee haue read of Conrade) greater indulgence against them, or theirs then against Saracens, (most of which Matthew Paris hath deliuered of Fredericke the Second) besides, Monies raised, by Tenths, Lones, Impositions, and specially by releasing Vowes for Holy Land Expeditions, to maintayne Armies against them; hence the Imperiall Rent, Guelph and Gibelline long and bloudie diuision, and the Emperour quite deprived of Italie, and so little left him of Germanie, in Germanie also. Thus hath the Pope turned his Keyes into Pick-locks, into Swords, into Scepters, exercising his Spirituall vnlimited power, Extra anni solisq; vius (saith * one) to all parts of the World: yea, and if there should be found out more Worlds, as Democritus dreamed, this Dreamer addes that they should all be vnder Papall Iurisdiction. This hath no Hills, Seas, or Riuers for boundaries, but is
- 30 without Horizon or limitation. And this power hath two Functions to rule; and to provide against dangers of Wolves, both vicious and hereticall persons, as also Princes either malignant or negligent. For seeing that Princes haue original from Elections of the people, and this power is confirmed by mutuall Oathes of Prince and people, and God hath giuen all power of binding and loosing of Oathes to the Pope: therefore Botero concludes all Temporall Princes subiect to the Popes censure, which Ordine ad Deum, in pretence of defence the Church hath raised such Tragedies in the Christian World.

* Botero 2. part. 1. 4.

- Now for Collations of Benefices, these partly depend of his Temporall Souereigntie, and partly are wrung and extorted from Temporall Souereignes and Patrones, vnder pretence of their Simoniacall bestowing them. This the pretended quarrell of Gregorie to Henrie, and of his
- 40 Successors to the next Henrie, and all other Christian Princes. Eadmerus was present at the Roman Councell of Pope Urbane, and heard his words excommunicating all Lay-men giuing, and all Ecclesiasticals taking Inuestitures at their hands, and all which consecrated such so inuested (a custome which had continued many Ages) and all which for preferments of the Church did homage to Lay-men, Dicens nimis execrabile videri, manus qua is tantam eminentiam excreuerint, ut quod nulli Angelorum concessum est, Deum cuncta creantem suo ministerio creent, & eundem ipsum pro redemptione & salute totius Mundi Summi Dei Patris obtutibus offerant, in hanc ignominiam detru- di, ut ancilla fiant earum manuum qua die ac nocte obscenis contagijs inquinantur, rapinis & iniusta sanguinum effusioni addicta commaculantur. He addes; Hic presentes fuimus, hac conspeximus, hic ab vniuersis fiat, fiat, acclamari audiuimus. Thus you see the Reall and Corporeall Presence (that
- 50 men may know what benefit accrueth to the Pope by that Doctrine) is made an argument of deuesting Princes of Inuestitures, and making of Prelates both first confirmed in that Age, the one by Pope Nicholas against Berengarius, the other by Gregorie and Urban: thus opposing and exalting himselfe aboue all that is called God, or that is worshipped, that is ouer all powers Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall (called Gods) and ouer God himselfe, whom here he professeth to be created by his creature: a three-fold cord of power, all broken by one blast of the Pope.

- How fitly King Henry stood for his Inuestitures, and how Henry the Emperour warred and captiued the next Pope Paschall for them, Eadmerus, Malmesbury, and others then liuing testified, the Pope swearing and starting from his Oath in that case. Neither is it likely that the Popes had thus made all Bishops and Abbots depend vpon themselves, without acknowledging
- 60 homage to their Princes, vsurping so euidently al Ecclesiasticall Supremacy, had not the ciuill combustions on one side (as here vnder King Stephen the first King which discontinued them) and exhaustions into the Holy Land on the other side, made the Pope dreadfull, whose breath could thus lead the Western World into the East. Thus did the Pope vsurpe a Monopoly of the Keyes by Elections, Postulations, Translations, Reservations, Promissions, Vnions, Permutations, Accesses, Regresses, Coadiutories; by Compositions for Palls, Crozier Staves, Meters, Rings; personall

Ground and reason of Diſpenſations.

Viſitations by Biſhops and Abbots of the Apoſtles ſtaires; by making his Cardinals,^a (which in this Age firſt grew to be Giants and men of renowne, and as I ſaid, Kings fellows, being before but Biſhops, Priests, & Deacons,) able to carrie it out in pomp and Maieſtie as beſits the Apoſtles of Christs Vicar; and by enriching his Kindred, Countrymen, Officers, and Fauorites with the beſt Benefices and Prelacies in euery Countrey, (whereof let the Reader informe himſelfe in Matthew Paris, of that Egyptian Babylonian ſeruitude in his time, as alſo of his imposing ſummes of money to bee giuen out of theſe, and if they had it not, to be taken vp of the Cauſines (Out-landiſh Papall Vſurers, at abominable rates) Tenths, Firſt-fruits, Thirds, Fiſthes, and I know not what Annuities and Penſions, yea, the open and ſhameleſſe ſale of theſe at Rome (read Theod. à Niem a Courtier to many Popes, of Arts beyond what Simon, or Magus, or the Deuill himſelfe had euer heard of, if it could be Simonie which the Popes did, who forſooth could not ſinne as their flatterers ſaid) and laſtly, by making Lawes in all theſe and other Eccleſiaſticall affaires to remayne to all Generations, whereby the Clergie was exempt from Kings, not Kings from their Clergie; yea, forced out of their means and Lands, to maintayne the ſubieſts of another Soueraigne; euery Monasterie being a Caſtle, euery Cathedral a ſpirituall exempt Citie, euery Prelate the Popes Captaine, and to whom alſo they were particularly ſworne. Conſider this legge of the beaſt, and conſider Monſtrum horrendum, informe, conceiued long before, in receiuing Appeales from all parts, but borne in that Smoke from the bottomleſſe pit, when Satan was looſed; nor euer could haue growne to full age, if Indulgences had not ſtrengthned the Popes, to tread vnder foote all Aspes and Baſiliskes (ſo they eſteemed gaine-ſaying Kings and Emperours) nor were Indulgences of any force at all in this kinde before this Expedition, when and whence ſprung their vnexpected puiſſance, and thence the Popes, as ſhall anon appeare.

Besides, the Eaſterne Patriarkes which before theſe warres, held of long time in many Ages no communion with the Popes of Rome, by this meanes became ſubieſt to him, Antiochia firſt, then Ieruſalem, and after that Conſtantinople it ſelfe (Romes Corriuall) being ſubieſted and ſubdued by theſe Expeditions from the Weſt; and I know not what Gemue, both in the Eaſt and Weſt, making the Biſhops in ſeeming moſt religious, make this a part of their Religion to quarrell with their Kings, (and one with another for ſuperioritie of their Seas) and goe to the Pope for refuge, as is ſeene in Anſelme of Canterburie, Thurſtan of Yorke, and others; and eſpecially Thomas Becket, whoſe murder in that quarrell, conſtrued to a Martyrdome, and rewarded with a Canonization, did ſuper-exceedingly aduance and aduantage the Popes power ouer Kings; furthered by the emulation of the French King againſt the Engliſh, which inſtigated the Biſhop firſt, after the Pope; laſtly, his owne ſonnes againſt him, honouring the new Saint alſo with perſonall Viſitation, Offering and Pilgrimage. Alſo Daibert the firſt Weſterne Patriarch of Ieruſalem, taught his Succeſſors this Leſſon, who went to Rome to complaine of his King; William an Engliſhman, firſt Latine Archbiſhop of Tyre, and William, the Authour of the Holy Land Hiſtory, with others muſt needs fetch their power from Rome: and the Eaſterne Empire beeing before weakened by the Saracens and Turkes, now engirt on both ſides by the Weſterne Frankes, the heart and bowels being alſo by ciuill diſſentions embroyled, it muſt needs follow that by the fall of her Competitor, Rome muſt riſe, ſit alone and reigne as a Queene; Whoſe ambitious neglects, hath ſince betrayed that whole Empire to the Turke.

Þ. III.

Of Diſpenſations.

BUT Temporalties and Benefices were but the hinder legges, of this Babylonical Beaſt, for ſtabilitie; Diſpenſations and Indulgences were the two fore-legs, more actiue for prey and puiſſance. And theſe alſo now began to bee of vigour and ſtrength in the Church to Papall Monarchicall intents and purpoſes. As for Diſpenſations it is true, that there was ſome vſe of them in the ancient Church: it beeing neceſſary that as in the Temporal, ſo in the Eccleſiaſticall Republique, there ſhould be according to conducent circumſtances, a qualification of rigid (which differing times may eſteeme rigorous) Canons. Euen the Ceremonies of Diuine Law yeelded to the neceſſitie of Charitie, as in Dauids eating the Shewbread, iuſtified by Chriſt himſelfe, who preferres Mercie to Sacrifice. How much more in the milder times of the Goſpell, and in the Canons and Conſtitutions Eccleſiaſticall, not giuen immediately by miniſterie of Angels; nor to a Jewiſh Pinfold, or one compendious people, and that for a ſet time till Shilo came; but to a Sea of peoples, by miniſtery of men, without limitation of time; may the difference of times, manners, and men require a diſpenſing by change, or ſuſpenſion by conniueance, making the beſt harmonie of Mercie and Iudgement. No man puts new wine into old veſſels: nor were later, weaker times fitted to the ſeueritie of the Ancients, which were both more holy, and by neceſſitie were forced for want of the Temporal Sword, to whet the Spirituall ſharper. Neither can men ſee all circumſtances which may ariſe, nor are all men or times times of one constant tenor. Summum ius, summa iniuria: The wringing of the Nose bringeth forth blood; the forcing of wrath bringeth forth strife. Charitie couereth a multitude of offences, is weak with them that are weak, and burneth when others are offended, maketh vs all things to all: yea, casts forth the wheate into the Sea to preuent shipwracke, notwithstanding a promise of deliuerance. Hence new Parliaments, Statutes, Edicts; hence later Councels, Synods, Canons.

But what is this to the Popes Non obstante? a plenitude of power to dispense with Oathes, Vowes, and whatsoeuer Diuine or Humane, standing in the way of his Monarchie? True it is, that aboue foure hundred yeares before this time, Gregorie Bishop of Antioch did dispense with the Oath of the Armie, which said, they had sworne not to admit Philippicus their Commander, alledging the Episcopall power of binding and loosing: but this was to preuent, not to inuent Treason; to reduce to, and not seduce from loyaltie & subiection to their Emperour. In these times first were the Keyes of the kingdom of heauen, pretended by Peters pretended Successor, to exclud the Kings of the earth, with Petra dedit Petro, Petrus Diadema Rodulpho, setting vp one & putting down another Emperour at Papall pleasure. Little did Dispensations before auaille the Papacie (except in enlarging the Phylacteries of his Spirituall power, in admitting Appeales, and making himselfe a Bulie-bodie, and Interloper, Magnus Ecclesia ardelio) but now the Cedars of Libanus quaked with feare of fire from the bramble, when Dispensations with the Oathes of Subiects, had deposed Henry the victorious Emperour, by the Ministerie of his owne Sonne. In vaine did that Sonne seeke afterwards to stop the current in taking the Pope Prisoner: Sero medicina paratur; his Fathers Example might teach him to feare some Absolom, to imitate himselfe.

And especially Dispensations were brought into request, by the quest of the Holy Land: when large Merit and larger Indulgences, Priuiledges, Prouiledges attend the Vow, and taking the Crosse on the one side; and larger summes fill the Popes Coffers on the other side by the Popes dispensing: when some Friars goe before to preach the Crusado and holy Warre, other Friars are sent after with Faculties to dispense for so much money, as the Expedition would cost you, leauing you no lesse merit with a great deale more safetie, ease and pleasure at home: when the Pope can thus prostitute the zeale of Christians, to let and set it to Farmers and Undertakers, as to Richard Earle of Cornwall, (whose summes this way gotten were incredible, able to make way to his Imperiall Election) when the like Dispensations are bestowed as Papall fauours to repaire the broken state of others: when Dispensations raise vp new Locusts from the bottomlesse pit; not only exempting some principall Monasteries from Episcopall Iurisdiction, as the Popes peculiars vnder Saint Peters immediate protection (and hee thus obliged the chiefe Colledges of the chiefe learned men of those times, to maintayne that power which priuiledged them) but Chapters of Cathedrall Churches, whole Orders of Religion, as the Cluniacensian and Cistercian Congregations; and after that the Orders of Friars in their seuerall swarmes, dispensing to them, not only Exemptions from Bishops, but power to build Churches, to receiue Confessions, to preach in all places, to be Bishops in euery Diocesse, and Curates in euery Parish; at once Papall Lords by Dispensations, and Mendicants by Vow and Profession. Yea, euery petty Priest might obtayne by his Purse an exemption from Episcopall power. And lastly, new Dispensations, and new Priuiledges haue hatched a new Ignatian Societie of parti-coloured Leopards, Regular-Secular-Clergie-Lay-Fathers-Friars-all-things-nothing.

Thus Dispensations made way to get monies by Sales; Friends by Gifts, Patrons by patronizing (Forts and Armies of Learned men in Abbies, Couents, Colledges, Congregations, Orders) yea, they robbed the Church of her Officers and Labourers; it being now a glorious vertue for Bishops and Priests to forsake their flockes, and in stead of Spirituall warfare against the Deuill, (by preaching to cast downe, with weapons not carnall, imaginations and euery high thing exalted against the knowledge of God) to imbrace this carnall against the Turks, walking in and warring after the flesh: yea, they were dispensed with for non residence, mean-while, and to receiue or lay to pawne the fruits of their Benefices for that three yeares, no lesse then if they were resident. So Baldwin Archbishop of Cant. rbury, made a Pilgrimage thorow England and Wales, to winne Pilgrimes for this warre. Pope Gregorie had excommunicated Fredericke the Emperour, for not going to the holy warres, as he had vowed: hee went and did gloriously, as you haue read already: but the Hospitulars and Templars pursuing the Popes quarrell sought to betray him to the Soldan, (a perfidie odious to that Infidell) and in his absence the Pope sets Iohn de Brenes, to conquer and subiect his Sicilian Dominions. For quarrels of those Templars, and others, he is againe excommunicated; and the third time by Innocent in the Councell of Lions: Omnesq; (saith the Pope therein) qui ei iuramento fidelitatis aliquo modo astricti vel obligati, a iuramento huiusmodi perpetuo absoluiamus & liberamus, autoritate Apostolica firmiter & strictim inhibendo ne quisquam de cetero sibi tanquam Imperatori vel Regi pareat, vel quomodo libet parere intendat. Decernendo quoslibet qui deinceps ei, velut Imperatori vel Regi, consilium vel auxilium presterint (could the Deuill haue roared lowder against Charitie?) seu fautorem, ipso facto excommunicationis vinculo subiaccere, &c.

neffe was also a goodly couert, where besides the Dispensations to beneficed Priests (after this Expedition, giuen to all such as could pay the price, insomuch, that John Mansell had foure thousand Markes of Ecclesiasticall Reuenue in those dayes of Henry the Third, and others incredible purchases in that kind of pluralities) he authorizeth Bishops to excommunicate and interdict the Lands of such as hauing receiued the Crosse did not performe their vow. All Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and such as haue cure of soules, are enioyned to preach this word of the Crosse to their Cures, to goe or send Souldiers thither for remission of their sinnes. Crossed Detters are freed from paying Vsuries, although bound thereto by Oath, &c.

And thus treasonable Dispensations beganne by Hildebrand, grew vp to strength and maturity by this Holy Land businessse, and both Laitie and Clergie at once were exempt from oaths, 10
vowes, and bonds to God and Men. Hence grew that Non obstante, * so often mentioned by Matthew Paris, for the grieuances whereof the whole Parliament sent Anno 1246. Messengers or Legats, to Lions to treat with the Pope, and for which that Lincolne Bishop Robert Grosted (whom the Westerne Church admired for Learning and Sanctitie) both writ to the Pope, and on his death-bed proued him to be Antichrist. He affirmeth also that the King vnder-tooke to sweare with most solemne Ceremonies of Candle curse, that which hee obserued not, in confidence of the Popes Dispensation: yea, falsified his owne, and frustrated his Progenitors Acts and Grants in professed imitation of the Popes Non obstante: vowed this Holy Land Expedition, and sware where hee had no meaning to doe any thing, but get money of his people; part whereof might procure Papall Dispensation. Yea, hereby the Popes haue obliged Kings, 20 States, and Kingdomes to them, by dispensing with oaths, with Marriages in degrees forbidden, or hauing other wiues liuing, so that their Posterities stand obnoxious to the Pope for feare of illegitimation.

See abundant testimonies hereof in Conc. Lat. sub Iul. 2. Leon. 10.

In the first of these the Pope by Temporalities became a temporall Prince by Treason to his Prince; in the second by Collation of Benefices, hee became vniuersall Bishop, swallowing the power of all Bishops and Church-men, and of Princes ouer them, into a Papall Whirle-poele, which he confirmed by Lawes, sitting in Ecclesiam (as it was prophesied of the Man of Sinne) as representing the whole Church, inuested in her whole power, which vnder him as vnder couert Barnes was no person in Law, but hee answeres all in Law, and is himselfe in his written Decretals, and in his present Consistorie, the speaking Law of the Church: In this third, he is more 30 then Law, cutting asunder the Gordian knot, by Dispensations, if he cannot by Glosses, and qualifying Interpretations vntye it; aboue Law, aboue the Church, aboue God, aboue himselfe by his Non Obstante, in fulnesse of power disanulling all their acts hindering his acts and present purposes. And whatsoeuer hath beene by former Popes, by Councils, by themselves ordained for reformation, vna falsa lachrymala quam vix vi extorserit, one goodly pretence forced to some shew of equitie, shall with a Dispensing Non Obstante, turne to serue his turne, and bring money to his Coffers, though purposely deuised against it.

Thus dealt he with Commenda's (deuised for the good of the Church, which was commended for a time to some other fit Rector, till a proper Rector and worthy might be procured) to a longer time, yea, to terme of life, for the goods, not the good of the Church. Euen after Luthers 40

Yea, this Cardinall de Medicis (which plucked out the eyes of his brother Iulius whom his Mistris loued more then him for his eyes sake) continued to hold the Archbishopricks of Milan in Lumbar die, Capua in the Kingdome of Naples, Strigonium in Hungarie, besides the Bishopricks of Agria in Hungarie, Mutina, and Ferrara in Italie, places so far distant. Vnions deuised for the Churches prouision in the insufficiency of one liuing, by adding some neere one, were stretched to thirtie or fortie whersoever lying, as if the good not of the Church, but of the person 50

Matthew Paris in his time tels that the Pope sent to the Bishops of Canterbury, Lincolne, and Salisbury, to prouide three hundred Romanes in the Benefices next vacant, giuing none other till these were prouided, which neuer meant to come at any cure but of the money. Yea, when they dyed other Italians succeeded, so that their receipts in this kind, far surmounted the Crowne Lands: and after complaints to the Pope, and the fore-mentioned Councell so zealous of the Holy Land, the case was worse, as it hapned to the Israelites by Pharoes Taxe-masters, swelling from sixtie to seuentie thousand Markes. Clement the sixt reserued for two Cardinals, which hee had lately made, the Benefices void and to be next void, besides Bishopricks, and Abbeyes, to the summe of two thousand Markes, which in the valuations of those times, might one with 60 another be two hundred, forsooth, for these Princeps mundi, consiliarij nostri (so saith Pope Pius of his Cardinals) & coniudices orbis terrarum, successores Apostolorum circa thronum sedentes, Senatores urbis & Regum similes, veri mundi Cardines, super quos militantis ostium Ecclesie voluendum ac regendum est. Thus Cardinall * Wolsey is said to haue had more Reuenues, then all the Bishops and Deanes in England now.

*T. Walsingham in Ed. 3. Sac. Cer. Ec. Rom. lib. 1. f. 8. c. 3. * Heroologia Anglica.*

In the Councell of Trent (which pretended to reforme, intended to palliate, if not further to pollute with abuses, at least in the greater and Papall part) the Pope could not indure the question of Residence due in re diuino, which the Spanish Bishops vrged, and in the question of Dispensations had Adrian a Dominican Friar, to defend his absolute and vnlimited power; and though he dispensed without cause, the dispensation was to be held for good, alledging that of Saint Paul, that Ministers are dispensers of the mysteries of God, and to them is the dispensation * committed (his paterne was the Dispenser or Steward, Luc. 16. which is said to deale wisely, as the Pope did in the Master piece of their skill, this whole Councell) and though the Popes dispensation in diuine Law be not of force, yet every one ought to captinate his understanding, and beleene that he hath granted it for a lawfull cause, and that it is temeritie to call it in question. Laynez, the General of the last Locust-brood (the * Iesuites) said, that to say the Pope cannot by dispensation disoblige him who is obliged before God, is to teach men to preferre their owne conscience before the authoritie of the Church; that it cannot be denyed that Christ had power to dispense in every Law, nor that the Pope is his Vicar, nor that there is the same Tribunall and Consistorie of the Principall and the Vicegerent; so it must be confessed that the Pope hath the same authoritie: that this is the priuiledge of the Church of Rome, which it is heresie to take away, &c. that it belonged not to the Councell to reforme the Court, because the Scholar is not aboue his Master, nor the Seruant aboue his Lord. And thus must all men dispense with Romish Dispensations: and thus it comes to passe that the Popes Exchequer is like vnto the Sea, into which all Riuer runne, and yet it runnes not ouer, as one obserued which serued long, and well obserued the reserued courtes in the Popes Court.

Neither is it amisse to heare Sansouino tell the manner of dispensing Dispensations at Rome, in his eleuenth Booke, written wholly del Gouerno della Corte Romana. The authoritie of the Pope (saith he) as the Head, disperfeth it selfe into so many members, that the Courtiers vse to grow old before they vnderstand that gouernment. There is first, the Colledge of Cardinals, the Head whereof is the Pope (therefore called Maximus) and the Cardinals members; of which the number is not certayne in our times, howsoeuer it is found that in former times there were but twelue. These Illustrious Fathers assemble once a weeke, which Assembly is called the Consistorie; in which Senate are appointed Bishops, Archbishops, Metropolitans and Patriarks when the Seas are void, whose election doth not belong * to a Chapter, Citie, Prouince, King, or other person: in which case they are chosen by the Pope and this Senate. Here they treat of all things which belong to Worship, to Faith, to Religion, to the peace of Christendome, to the temporall estate of the Church of Rome. In this sacred Senate (as the greatest in the World) all Prouinces, all Regulars, and all Kings, haue their Fathers Defenders, which they call Protectors, who propound the causes of their Prouinces, &c.

For the Penitentiare, he addes, that all the World seekes to the Pope for many graces in that matter, which our Lord Iesus Christ left vnto Peter, to wit, of loosing and binding in earth whatsoeuer he will. Now this part being by the Pope reserued to himselfe; that other is accustomed to be granted of him, that is, that of loosing, to one of the Cardinals, who is called the chiefe Penitentiare, who for so much as appertaynes to that which is common in the diuine Law, and to his Absolution, exerciseth the Iurisdiction committed to him by the Pope by many Vicars, and Substitutes, called Penitentiaries (or Penitentiars) diuided thorowout all the greatest Churches of Rome, as Saint Peters in the Vatican, Saint Iohn de Lateran, Saint Marie Major. But the Dispensations which are made touching obseruation of humane Lawes, he granteth not but in some cases, and by himselfe. And by a generall commission from the Pope he heares Sutors in such affaires, and hauing scene their Demands, if there be any cause * for which the Sutor meriteth to be heard, and that which he requireth hath bene accustomed to be granted by the Pope; he writes by authoritie Apostolicall and of his Office, and not by the Popes mouth but by that generall commission in his Letters of commission from the Popes mouth, hee affirms, and his Assertion is beleeued as in a thing belonging to his Office, and rescribes alway to the Supplication on that side directed to the Pope in one of these formes, fiat in forma, fiat de speciali, fiat de espresso, with which varietie of wordes he lets the Taxers vnderstand the importance of the Suit: and as the Rescript of the Penitentiare differs in forme, so the taxes of the payments are altered by the Officers. And in these times the multitude of humane Lawes is so increased, both by the Pope, and by Councells, and by Monasteries, that men being in some sort bound, desiring their ancient libertie, haue recourse by way of Supplication to the Penitentiare, who hauing signed the Supplicants Bill with his hand, they dispatch the Bulls under his Name and Scale. And for that many times hee doth not write backe precisely, requiring some attestation of the Suppliant, hee appoints Iudges by his writing, which taking knowledge of the Cause, perfect the Act; and herein he appoints others in his place. And this holy Office of the Penitentiare, for the greater commoditie of them which come for Expeditions hath foure and twentie Defenders of Supplicants, which are called the Protectors of the holy Penitentiare. These as Advocates declare the Contents of his Suite, and as it were plead the Cause before the Penitentiare, of whom they procure to obtayne their Suite, and to get their Bulls dispatched. He vseth also to rescribe in many Causes appertayning to Iustice, and as it were alway to grant in the one kinde and in the other, here vnder noted, Dispensations matrimoniall in degrees forbidden by the Law * of Man; legitimations of Children; Dispensations in respect of them, or for want of members due to such as are to receiue Orders or Benefices; also for incompatibilitie of more Benefices. Absolutions from homicide in Foro Conscientie; for Clerkes in both Courts, with retention of Benefices and Dispensations for more. The like for Simonie, for Exile, moreouer from an Oath for the effect of the operation, from false Oathes, commutation of Vowes, and Licences from obseruation of any humane Law, and especially of Regulars from any Chapter (or Article) of the Lawes of their Rules. He giues Indulgences to places and persons; and moreouer, infinite Commissions in forme of Law, as namely, the Declaration of the Nullitie or Invaliditie of Marriage, which are called Declaratorie: and in many other things which are knowne to them that practise in the Ecclesiasticke Courts.

They doe euery day demand the Subscriptions from the Pope of such things as come from his voluntarie and proper liberalitie, as the grants of Benefices and other things, which are also generally committed to the Great Penitentiarie, and all matters which pertayne to Iustice in things Ecclesiasticall throughout all parts of the World, as also in things profane of the temporall patrimonie of the holy Church of Rome, and of any other place of the World which haue recourse to the Court of Rome, by reason of the person being Ecclesiasticall, or by Princes sending it, or by consent of the parties. The Pope for the more easie dispatch of Sutors in all these things, hath ordayned two Audiences, in one of which they demand matters of Grace, in the other those of Iustice.

But for these and the like Officers, the Vice-chancellor, the Audience of the Chamber (as it were his priuie Counsel) the priuate dispatches by the Secretarie, the Chamberlan (which hath power in the Temporall State) Treasurer, Aduocate, Proctor, Commissaries, Marshalls (to one of which the Whores of the Citie pay a yeerly Taxation, which they call Tribute) I omit and referre the Reader to the Author. The last he mentions is the Vicar of Rome, who hath the same authoritie which the Pope hath ouer the Priests in all things, in Rome and in the Diocese, hearing all Clergie cases as Ordinarie; imposeth Penance, conferreth Sacraments, calleth Congregations, visits Churches and Monasteries, makes Inquisition, correcteth, punisheth, remooueth and giueth Benefices: his authoritie extends fortie miles out of Rome, in some cases. The Pope hath also giuen him all those Pontificalia, which euery Ordinarie exerciseth in his Diocese, as to consecrate places profane, to reconcile such as are profaned, to promote to holy Orders, to punish Blasphemies, Vsuries, Periuries, Incests: and in case of corporall punishments to send them to the Secular Iudges. He hath foure Notaries or publike Scribes, and two Vicars substitute. So farre is the Pope degenerated from a Bishop in any thing but Title, and vsing that onely, that through conetousnesse with fayned words he might make merchandise of men, as turpilucricupidus, a lo-uer of filthy gayne (euen that of Curtezans filchinesse) yea, of the soules of men, which are reckoned among the Babylonian wares of these Merchants of the earth. And what else are these dispensations thus abused, but soule-sale, which is made more euident (is any thing more impudent then a Whore?) by their Taxa Camerae, a Booke published in print, whereby men may know the prices of their Absolutions for Simonie, Sodomie, Incest, Homicide, and other the Master and Monster sinnes and degenerations of mankind. In which marke also, that being breaches of the Law of God, an inferior Penitentiarie by his Booke of Taxation can absolue, but those crimes against humane Lawes require the chiefe Penitentiarie to turne the Law into a Net, and become a good Sponge-man to exenterate his purse more thorowly.

And as Rome by Dispensations is made a Merchants shop, Litium officina capturarumq; improbarum, where are kept perpetuall Marts of Sacriledge, which make sinnes not onely Veniall but Venall; and Golden Canons become Lesbian Rules by Papall Leaden Bulls, flexible and pliant according to the price and banke of the Romish money changers: so by Indulgences hath she beene indulgent to all her Chapmen (except they wanted money) and hath made them the foundation of the Tower of Babylon; in this, Indulgences and Dispensations agreeing that nothing hath more rayfed, nothing more razed her gorgeous and glorious Fabriques; Henrie the eight, vpon the one occasion forsaking wonted commerce with Rome, and Luther by the other prouoked to open his mouth so wide and loud, that he awakned all Europe to behold her filthy whoredomes. And if any thinke the later times either more Castia, or more Cauta, let him obserue what Nonus Homo, an vnknowne Suppliant of Rome, hath reuealed touching the mysteries of the Datarie (the Office where matters of Benefices are dispatched) where the bestowing of Benefices is deferred, that inquirie may be made of the richest Competitors; each Liuing is charged with a pension of halfe, or a third, or two thirds of the worth, and then by another Ordination by present payment of five yeeres purchase extinguished. As if the Benefice bee worth three hundred crownes a yeere, a pension is imposed of two hundred, leauing one hundred for the Incumbent; who paying one thousand crownes and a hundred more for Seales and Expedition, buyes repentance at a deare rate. The Regressus and Expectatuna forbidden by the Councell of Trent, are deluded with Coadiutorships, sold for a yeeres profit in colour of expediting Bulls, with assurance of future succession: by which and like meanes (you may not call that Simonie which the Pope doth; and it is disputable amongst them, whether the Pope can commit that sinne, although the very name comes from Simon Magus his seeking to contract with Simon Peter) Paul the fifth is reported to haue extracted out of his Lead twentie hundred thousand Scutes, to buy Lands for his Nephew (or sonne) Borghesius. The truth of which, by the Registers §. IIII.

Of Indulgences.

- Hus haue we seene the Popes Temporalities, arising from Conspiracies against Emperours, his Collations from the spoile of all Kings and Princes of their Inuestitures, in pretence of Simonie, to further intensions and extensions of Simonie; his Dispensations, Factors and Bawds for Compensations, by this Man of Sinne, which thus sinned and kept a Trade, Shop, Mart, Sale, and gaine of Sinne: but that which had least shew of reason, and yet was the right fore-legge of the beast, whereon he had surest standing, whereby he had securest holding his prey, wherewith he made strongest fights against his Adversaries, was Indulgences. And whereas the Riuer of the Popes Eden, is parted into foure heads, Gen. 2. 10. 12. Hist. C. T. I. 16 this first compasseth the whole Land of Hauila, where there is Gold, and the Gold of that Land is good. Of which the Author of the Historie of the Councell of Trent, relateth that this manner of gaining Money was put in practise, after Pope Urban the second had giuen a plenarie Indulgence to all that should make war in the Holy Land; imitated by his Successors, some of which granted it to those that maintained a Souldiour, if they went not in person. And after, the same Indulgences or Pardons were giuen, for taking Armes against those that obeyed not the Church of Rome, although they were Christians: and for the most part, infinite exactions were made under those pretences; all which, or the greater part were applied to other uses. Thus Pope Leo the tenth, 1517. sent an Indulgence thorow all Christendome, granting it to any which would giue Money and extending it to the dead; for whom his will was, that when the disbursement was made, they should be deliuered from the paines of Purgatorie: giuing also power to eate Egges and Whitmeats on fasting daies, to chuse themselues a Confessor, and other such like abilities. And although the execution of this enterprize of Leo had some particular neither pious nor honest, notwithstanding many of the Grants made by the preceding Popes, had causes more vniust, and were exercised with more Auarice and Extortion. He distributed part of the Harvest before it was reaped or well sowne, giuing to diuers persons the Reuenues of diuers Prouinces, and reseruing some also for his owne Exchequer. The Indulgences of Saxonie, and from thence to the Sea, he gaue to Magdalene his Sister, Wife vnto Franceschetto Cibo, Bastard Sonne of Innocent the eighth; by reason of which marriage, this Leo was created Cardinall at the age of foureteene yeares. She to make the best of it, committed the care of preaching the Indulgences, and exacting the Money vnto Aremboldus, a Genoa Merchant, (now a Bishop and Merchant too) who found Ministers like vnto himselfe, who aymed at nothing but gaine: which would not vse the Hermite Friers (as had bene the custome of Saxonie in this case) but Dominicans, which to amplifie the value, spake many strange things; and in Tauernes, games, and other things not fit to bee named, spent that which the people spared from their necessarie expences, to purchase the Indulgences.
- By this meanes Martin Luther an Hermite Frier, first began to speake, first against these new abuses; and after being pronoked by the Pardoners, he set himselfe to studie this matter, being desirous to see the rootes and foundations of the Doctrine of Indulgences. He published ninetie fine Conclusions herein, to be disputed on in Wittenberg, which none accepted: but Iohn Thecel proposed others contrarie in Frankfort of Brandeburg. Luther proceeded to write in defence of his, and Iohn Ecchius to oppose; and these Writings being gone to Rome, Syluester Prierias, a Dominican Frier, wrote against Luther: which contestation inforced both the one and the other partie to passe to other things of greater importance. For the Doctrine of Indulgences hauing not bene well examined in former Ages, the essence and causes of them were not well vnderstood. Some thought they were nothing but an absolution made by Authoritie of the Prelate from Penance, which the Church in most ancient times imposed by way of Discipline vpon the penitent, (which Imposition was assumed in succeeding Ages by the Bishop onely, after delegated to the Penitentiarie Priest, and in conclusion left wholly to the will of the Confessor) and that they deliuered vs not from paying the debt due to the Iustice of God. Others thought, that they freed from both. But these were diuided: some thinking that they freed vs, though nothing were giuen in recompence; others said, that by reason of mutuall participation in charitie of the members of holy Church, the Penance of one might bee communicated to another, and free him by this Compensation. But because it seemed that this was more proper to men of holy and austere life then to the authoritie of Prelates, there arose a third opinion, which made them in part an absolution, (because authoritie was necessary for them) and in part a Compensation. But because the Prelats liued not in such sort as they could spare much of their Merits to others, there was made a treasure in the Church, full of the Merits of all those who had more then would serue their owne turne: the dispensation whereof is committed to the Pope, who when he giueth Indulgences, recompenseth the debt of the Sinner, by assigning so much in value out of the Treasure. It being opposed that the Merits of Saints being finite, this treasure might be diminished; they added the Merits of Christ which are infinite: which caused another another doubt, what needed those drops to this Ocean; which gave cause to some to make the Treasure to be onely of the Merits of Christ.

These things then so uncertaine, and had no other foundation then the Bull of Clement the sixth, made for the Iubilee, 1350. Wherefore Thecel, Echiuz, and Prierius, laid for their ground-woke the Popes Authoritie, and Consent of the Schoolemen, concluding that the Pope not being able to erre in matters of Faith, and himselfe publishing the Indulgence, it was necessarie to beleue them as an Article of Faith. This made Martin to passe from Indulgences to the Popes Authoritie, &c.

After Leos death, Adrian ſucceeded, who being a Devine, had written in that matter, and thought to eſtabliſh his Doctrine by Apoſtolicall Decree, that is, that an Indulgence being granted to one which ſhall doe ſuch a Worke, the Worker obtaineth ſo much of it as is proportionable to his Worke; thinking Luthers objection thus answered, (How a peny could gaine ſo great Treasure) and yet Indulgences remaining in request, ſeeing he that hath not all, hath his proportionable part. But Cardinall Caietan told him it was better to keepe this ſecret, leſt the Popes grant might ſeeme to profit nothing, that Indulgences are but abſolutions from Penance impoſed in confeſſion onely; and if he would reſtore the diſuſed penitentiarie Canons, men would gladly ſeeke Indulgences. This being propoſed in the Penitentiary Court, Cardinall Puccio, Datarie to Pope Leo, a diligent Miniſter to finde out Money, (which had counſailed Leo to thoſe Indulgences, and was now cheefe Penitentiarie) related to the Pope with a generall aſſent the impoſſibilitie; that thoſe Canonick Penances were gone into diſuſe, becauſe they could be no longer ſupported for want of the ancient zeale, whereas now every one would be a Iudge and examine the reaſons; and in ſtead of curing they would kill. At length the Cardinall of Volterra propoſed the way to extinguiſh Heresies, to bee not by Reſormations, but by Cuiſados, (as is ſaid before.) And in the Conncell of Trent, when Indulgences came to bee examined, the Biſhop of Modena told them they would finde it difficult, and to require a long time, it being impoſſible to make that matter plaine, but by determining firſt whether they be Abſolutions, or compensations onely and ſuffrages; or whether they remit the penalties impoſed by the Confessors onely, or all that are due; whether the treasure be of the Merits of Chriſt onely, or of the Saints alſo; whether they extend to the dead, or though the receiver performe nothing; with other difficulties. But to determine that the Church may grant them, and that they are profitable to thoſe which worthily receive them, needed no great diſputation, and a Decree might be compoſed without difficultie: and hee with other Frier Biſhops was deputed to make a Decree in this ſenſe, adding a prouiſion againſt the abuſes.

Thus farre haue we gleaned out of that fertile Corne-field. As for that of Clements Iubilee Indulgence, it is not amiſſe to recite ſome part, in which every Pilgrime to Rome hath power granted, to chuſe his Confessor or Confessors, to whom hee giues full power to abſolve all Papall caſes, as if the Pope himſelfe were perſonally preſent: and if he dies in the way being truly confeſſed, that he be quite free, and abſolved from all his finnes: and moreover, wee command the Angels of Paradife that they carrie the ſoule into the glory of Paradife, being fully abſolved from Purgatorie. Theodorike a Niem ſpeaking of Boniface the ninth his Indulgences, ſaith that his pardoners got in ſome one Prouince by ſale of them, one hundred thouſand Florens, releaſing all finnes to ſuch as were confeſſed, euen without Penance, Diſpenſing for Money with irregularities, &c. Yea, ſome Pardoners deſcended ſometime (ſaith Gaſcoigne) to take for them a ſupper, a nights-lodging, a draught of Wine or Beere, a game at Tennis, and ſometime a venereall Act. Pope Alexander the ſixt gaue thirtie thouſand yeares Indulgence, for the ſaying of a certaine Prayer to Saint Anne. And Iulius his warring Succeſſor gaue large Indulgences to every man which ſhould kill a French-man, with whom he had Warres. Others to Stations, Roſaries, Croſſes, Churches, Images, Graines, Pilgrimages, Prayers, throwing Wood into the Fire to burne Heretickes, and other like parts of Faith and Charitie. But let vs come to the Originall of this ſinke.

Some aſcribe their beginning to Pope Iohn, about the yeare 880. which yet is but giuing his opinion of them that die in Warre againſt Infidels, not an Indulgence to any. Petrus Damianus tels of Monks, redeeming Penances with Pſalmodes, and ſelfe-whippings, redeeming a yeares penance with a thouſand ſtripes, and five thouſand ſtripes with once ſinging the whole Pſalter, with other voluntarily impoſed taskes. Sigonius tels of Pope Alexander, about the ſame time, Anno 1071. conſecrating the Church of Caſſinum, and giuing great Indulgences to all preſent; which brought thither moſt Italian Princes and Biſhops, and Agnes the Empreſſe. Some tell of Gregorie the firſt, in the time of publike Peſtilence, enioyning a publike kind of Penance, the Letanies, and Stations or viſiting on ſet daies certaine Churches, with prayers for deliuerance, and remiſſion to be giuen by the Priests, to ſuch as penitently confeſſed their finnes. Theſe Stations gaue occaſion to Boniface the eighth, of proclaiming his Iubilee every ſecular yeare in imitation of the Secular games, which Clement reduced to fiftie, and Sixtus Quartus to five and twentie. Theſe Iubilees begunne in Anno 1300. haue Indulgence generation, Jewiſh and Ethnick imitation, which the other haue little Commerce with, as being void of Commerce. Biſhop Fiſher of Rocheſter writing againſt Luther, doth more ſilly make Indulgence, a Daughter of Purgatorie Family: Quamdiu enim (ſaith he) nulla fuerat de Purgatorio cura, nemo quaſiuit Indulgentias. Nam ex illo pendet omnis Indulgentiam exiſtimatio. Si tollas Purgatorium, quorſum Indulgentijs opus erit? Caperunt igitur Indulgentia poſtquam ad Purgatorii cruciatus cruciatu aliquandin trepidatum est. And indeed Purgatorie hath beene the gainefullest fire to the Pope, and as a painefull-gaine-foole Mother, might well procreate this Daughter: both issuing from conceit, that temporall punishment remaineth to be satisfied, after the fault of sinne remitted. Therefore haue they inuented that Treasurie of the Merits of Christ and the Saints to bee this way employed, a name fitting the nature, being the best Treasurie, (for externall Treasures) which euer the Pope had; in warre to pay Souldiers, warring in his cause, at their owne costs, in peace to fill his Coffers. But let vs looke to a purer generation, whereof this is the corruption and degeneration.

When as in the first times of the Church, onely feare of God and Ecclesiasticall Discipline held men in awe, the Magistrates being Ethnicke; seuerer Canons, and sincere Zeale held things in order. And if men transgressed, yet either for intension of their superabundant sorrow, or for encouragement and prouocation to Martyrdome, or in danger of death relaxation was made and Indulgence; the Church receiuing some satisfaction for the externall scandall, and beleeuing that God for the merit of his Sonne, and propense mercy was satisfied also in that sacrifice of a contrite heart and broken spirit; God graciously accepting that Care, feare, clearing of ones selfe, zeale, indignation, desire, and reuenge, (the affects and effects of true repentance) and the Church imitating the mercy of the heauenly Father; as wee see in the incestuous Corinthian. This satisfaction did not by merit redeeme, but in Faith and Penance appeale him, being reconciled in his Sonne; for he sheweth Mercy (not Merit) to thousands in them that loue him and keepe his Commandements: he turning to them when they turne to him. Indulgences and Dispensations were adulterously commixed to destruction of this both publike and priuate Penance, when men were taught in stead of a Contrite heart, to giue a contrite purse; and in stead of satisfying God, (to vse that word) that is, appealing and meeting him by repentance, doing what he exacts and expects; or satisfying the Church in her Sanctions, by externall humiliation, testifying internall humilitie and conuersation; to put ouer all to a Iubilee and Plenarie Indulgence. Which if they bee good, why doth not the Popes Charitie freely giue what he freely receiued? What greater Simonie then sale of Merits, the chiefe graces of the holy Ghost; yea, of Christs owne Merits? And what shall become of this Treasurie after the last day?

Let Bellarmine and Valentianus alledge the communion of Saints, and other Scriptures of seeming supererogation, as Col. 1. 24. and the power of the Keyes, yet doth Valentia confesse their nouitie, whence followes their inuolencie and vanitie. Once, their Money-valencie and Man-valency, was not begun before by Gregorie the seuenth against the Emperour, as is said, and by Urban heere applied to the Holy Land Warre. Yea, these of Urban did but giue occasion to the after Popes, to make them so strong pillars of the Babylonicall Tower, the Indulgences being then but Calues, which after grew to be Bulls, as appeareth by the various reports of this his Speech, and Act in the Councell of Claremont. I haue read seuen or eight seuerall Orations, written most of them by men of that time, and some professing themselves present, which yet haue made it the triall of their wits, what they could, or else haue added what Urban at diuers times, did say or write, or other Popes after him: the later composing themselves to their own times, when Indulgences were common and current. You haue heard Robertus and Fulcherius already. Baldricus the Arch-bishop being present, deliuered that part of his speech, which looks this way in these words: Confessis peccatorum suorum ignorantiam, securi de Christo celestem pasciscimini veniam. Guibertus, perorauerat uero excellentiss. omnes qui se ipsos uouerant, (in his long Oration I find nothing to this purpose) Beati Petri potestate absoluit, eadem ipsa autoritate Apostolica firmavit, &c. Malmesbury had it of those which heard it in this sense, Sturi habentes per Dei concessum & beati Petri priuilegium omnium absolutionem criminum, & hac interim latitia laborem itineris alleuiant, habuisti post obitum felicitis martyris commercium. Vitricus Bishop of Acon, Omnibus in remissionem omnium peccatorum peregrinationem iniungens. William Archbishop of Tyre thus, Nos autem de misericordia Domini & Beatorum Petri & Pauli autoritate confisi, fidelibus Christianis qui contra eos arma susceperint, & onus sibi huius peregrinationis assumerint, iniunctis sibi pro suis delictis poenitentias relaxamus. Qui autem ibi in vera poenitentia decesserint, & peccatorum indulgentiam & fructum aeterna mercedis se non dubitent habituros. M. Paris after them, & more fitted to Indulgences, Nos autem de Omnipotentis Dei maxime & BB. App. eius Petri & Pauli autoritate confisi, ex illa quam nobis (licet indignis) Deus ligandi atq; soluendi contulit potestatem, omnibus qui laborem istum in proprijs personis subierint & expensis, plenam suorum peccatorum, si veraciter fuerint corde contriti & ore confessi, veniam indulgentiam, & in retributione iustorum salutis aeterna pollicemur augmentum. Thus the later, perhaps from some later Popes, * which after Urban had broken the Ice, gaue further Indulgence to the spirit of Indulgences, til (like the Frog in the fable) they cracked themselves in sunder with swelling. Some you see mention only the merit of the worke, some adde the power of the Keyes in loosing, or absolving from sinne in the Conscience, others absolution from enioyned penances (by the Confessor) the last to a plenarie Indulgence, yet at most but an absolution and that from penall Canons, as it were by commutation of penance, in stead of that imposed by the Ghostly Father, or Canonically sentence of the Prelate, vndertaking in person, or by purse in maintenance of another this peregrination. Vpon this timber they soone after built hay and stubble, which hath by Luthers kindling set Rome on fire.

In following times, this Expedition and Indulgences thereof, were followed by the opinions of satisfying God for former sinnes or imputations (as in Henry the Second for Becket's murder) to be expiated by this Warre. Secondly, of freeing of others soules hereby out of Purgatory. Thirdly, of freedome from Oathes, as is before mentioned out of the Councell of Lions. Fourthly, of Immunity of persons and goods, as of Priests to be absent, and yet taking the profits of their Livings for three yeares present, and to be free from payments; Laymen freed from Collections, Taxations and other publike grievances. Fifthly, against priuate Sutes, their persons and goods after the Crosse receiued, to be vnder Saint Peters and the Popes protection, and the defence of the Church, by speciall Protectors appointed, that till their returne or death certainly knowne, none might meddle with them vnder paine of Excommunication (a good proviso for Bank-rupts.) Sixtly, the proportion of this Indulgence to the proportion of ayde or counsell (concilium vel auxilium) or money that way employed. Seuenthly, the Suffrage and Prayers of the Synod, that this Iourney might profit worthily to their saluation. Eightly, power for all whomsoever but Regulars to goe, though vnfit; redeeming, changing, or deferring it by the Popes grant. Likewise, they increased sinne by this meanes, Murtherers, Theeues, Adulterers, Bank-rupts, and others hauing the Holy Land for refuge against Law, and for safety of them and theirs, yea, for Merit and Indulgence; that becomming hereby the very sinke of sinne, confluence of all villaine, the heart and centre of abomination: as appeares in Vitriacus and others.

And as morally, so also doctrinally, Purgatorie, Merit, Supererogation, Superstitious Pilgrimages, and the like, tooke further rooting by these Holy Land Expeditions; but especially the Popes power hereby increased in and ouer Kings and Kingdomes, thus intermeddling, peruertering and preuenting courses of Iustice by his Indulgence-Bulls horned with Excommunication: by imposing this Expedition on Kings as Penance: by exhausting their Treasures, Souldiers and Forces; by busying them farre off, whiles he and his might take and make oportunitie to adulterate all at home: by pushing with these hornes of Indulgences against Kings themselues; without other force, employing the forces of one Prince against another, and of their owne subiects against their Soueraignes. So was King John forced to surrender his Crowne, and take it of the Pope in farme, the French and his owne being armed against him: so Conrade, Memfred, Ladislaus, and other Kings of Sicily; George, King of Bohemia, &c. By this was the Imperiall Eagle plucked and stripped, greater Indulgences being giuen, that more money might bee gathered to maintayne with Holy Land money, his warre against Fredericke the Emperour; sending simple Messengers with Legatine power, which by Commanding, Minacing, Excommunicating, Preaching, Praying, besides, his white Bull, which might moue stony hearts (melting out their metall) as to succour the Holy Land, indeed, to ruinate the Emperour. For which cause he had procured a Tenth, of Clergy and Laity in many Kingdomes; and that with strict Inquisition of the value to the Popes best commodite, euen of the fruits before the Haruest, present pay to bee made vnder paine of Interdicting and Excommunicating: which made the Prelates sell their Chalice and Church goods, that I mention not the vsurers his Chaplen, and Agent Stephen had to byte, flay and deuoure the flocke with further exactions. This was Gregorie the Compiler of the Decretals. These moneyes the Pope gaue to John de Bresnes, to warre against the Emperour then in the Holy Land, and forced thither by the Popes Excommunication. He extorted also a fifth of beneficed Forreiners for that purpose, & absolved his Subiects from their Allegiance. And when some expostulated with the King of England, for suffering his Kingdome to be made a prey, He answered, I neyther will nor dare contradict the Lord Pope in any thing: so that hee obtayned a fifth in England: and after that, sent Peter Rubens to new vn-heard of execrable exactions by lyes and cauations. What shall I tell * of Rustandu, which was sent to gather new Tenths, and to exchange the Kings Vow for the Holy Land, into a Sicilian Expedition against Memfred, with equall Indulgences? Yea, greater Indulgences are granted to such as would warre against Christians, if the Popes Enemies, as before you haue read, then in the Holy Land against the Turkes.

Contrary to Indulgences are Interdictments, as Samsons Foxes hauing a fierie coniunction in their tayles: of which Hildebrand is noted first Author; by which, if a Prince offended, his Subiects and whole Dominions were Interdicted, that is in Papall Interpretation, a publike Excommunication was denounced against him and his, and all externall publike Holies suspended. You shall haue it in Mat. Paris his words of King John, who being offended that the Pope had reiected from the Archbishopricke of Canterburie, the Bishop of Norwich, whom the greater and sounder part of the Monkes in due solemnity, by the Kings consent had chosen, obtruding one of his Cardinals Stephen Langton vpon him, whom he refused: the Pope caused the Bishop of Ely and Worcester, to denounce his Interdict, which was also contrary to Papall Priuiledges obserued. There ceased therefore in England all Ecclesiasticall Sacraments (except confession, and housell in danger of death, and Baptisme of children.) The bodies of the dead were carried out of Cities and Villages, and buried likes Dogges in by-ways, and Ditches without Prayers and Ministerie of the Priests: whereupon diuers Bishops forsooke his Land and such combustions followed, that the

the Pope excommunicated him (which was denounced by the former Bishops) after which hee absolved his Subiects from their Alleageance, and prohibited them in paine of Excommunication to auoyd his table, counsell, conference. All which yet were of no great force till the small sentence of deposition, nor that but by Indulgences and Crusados.

For the Pope writ to the French King Philip to vndertake the execution, for the remission of all his sinnes; and expelling the King of England, to hold the Kingdome of England to him and his Successors for ever. He wrote also to all great men, Knights and Warriors in diuers Nations, that they should signe themselves with the Crosse for the deiection of the King of England, following the French King in this Expedition, labouring to reuenge the quarrell of the vniuersall Church. Hee ordained also 10 that whosoener should bestow his goods, or helpe to expugnate that obstinate King, they should remayne secure in the peace of the Church (euen as they which visit the Sepulchre of our Lord) in their goods and persons and suffrages of soules, (or deliuerance of soules out of Purgatory.)

The issue whereof was, that great prouisions were made on both sides, King Iohn hauing at Barhamdowne, threescore thousand armed men, besides, a strong Navy at Sea: the French on the other side was come to the Sea with his owne and the English, an innumerable Army, when Pandulfus the Popes Legate craftily sent to him to satisfie the Pope, which he could no way doe but by resigning his Crowne and Kingdome, to receiue it againe in fee farme of the Pope, doing him homage, and paying him rent: which when the King had granted, Pandulfus sought to periwade the French party to peace, and the English to returne. The French hereupon stormed, inuaded 20 the Earle of Flanders, King Iohns Confederate, who now with his forces succored him with five hundred ships, which tooke three hundred French shippes richly prouided, and burned one hundred others: the French being crossed in a double sense, not without great effusion of Christian blood: the Pope ayming at his owne designed greatnesse, to vse the French against the English, and the Subiects against their Prince; as afterward taking the Kings part against his Subiects, and excommunicating the French, that as in the Fable, he might play with both, and pray on both; spending themselves in mutuall emulations.

Miserable warres and bloudshed of Christians by Papall procurement,

Yet would not his Subiects obey him, prouiding great forces to inuade France, till the Sentence were released: whereupon he entertayned Stephen, and the other Bishops falling at their feet with teares, desiring them to haue mercy on him, and the Kingdome of England, who 30 thereupon absolved him, swearing to the conditions propounded: his Designes against France, through that delay prooued frustrate notwithstanding. In the Pope and his Bishops, he found so little certainty that he sent Embassadors to the King of Morocco, offering vassallage to him, if he would protect him; which being refused, knowing (saith the Author) that the Pope was above all mortall men ambitious and proud, and an insatiable thirster after money, and waxen, and prone to all villanies, for bribes or promises, he sent him Treasure, and promises of more, and alway to bee his Subiect, if hee would confound the Archbishop, and excommunicate the Barons whose parts he had before taken; that he might so imprison, disherit and slay them. Innocent was contented to be thus nocent, and released the Interdict, which had continued sixe yeares, three monethes and fourteene dayes, to the irreparable losse of the Church in Temporals and Spiritu-
 40 als. The Pope taking part now with the King, hee had opportunitie to reuenge himselfe of his Peeres, who hereupon raysed Ciuill Warres, and sware themselves to the French Kings Sonne, England remayning thus on fire, till the death of King Iohn, (which hapned amidst these flames) to the terrour of his Successors in so daring attempts against the Pope.

King abased to his subiects.

Interdict of six yeares and three moneths

And thus you see what Crusadoes and Indulgences could doe in those dayes, in and ouer this Kingdome: Interdicts can intend and pretend nothing, but raysing Discontents and Rebellions, as if God should impiously be depriued of his worship, and men vncharitably of the meanes of their saluation, for one mans fault, if a fault, if not the Popes only fault as well as tyrannicall punishment. For Gods Law forbids the fathers eating sower Grapes to set the childrens teeth on edge, and the sonne to beare the fathers fault, but the soule that sinneth shall dye: which the Venetian lately
 50 vnderstood, and nobly vindicated against the Pope, as King Iohn would haue done, if the times had beene answerable. But Indulgences you see heere, were the Executors and Executioners of the Popes fury, euen to the subiection of the most vnwilling Kings and Kingdomes, which is the Master-piece of Popery in the getting. And for the keeping and mayntayning this Monarchie, Crusadoes and Indulgences stayd not heere, but by the same Innocent (the first Decreeer also of Transubstantiation) was extended against the Albigenses, or Waldenses, then reputed Heretikes, (as wee now are by the Papists) and condemned for those Doctrines, which they had learned out of the Scriptures against the Papall Pride and Superstition. Other things are ascribed to them, as now to vs by the Iesuits, with like Truth and Charity, as out of their owne Authors which best knew, is euident. As Vrbans intent had beene 60 against the Antipope, which his Successors after followed, so Innocent and other Popes disposed the Crosse and Indulgence against those which mayntayned the Truth of the Gospell, and in all likelihood had but for this opposition, ruined the Papacie. He sent Preachers (sayth Matthew Paris in whose steps we still insist) vnto all the Regions of the West, and enioyned Princes, and other Christian people for remission of their sinnes, that they should signe themselves with the Crosse to root out

this pestilence, and opposing themselves to such mischiefs, by force and armes should defend the Christian people. He added also by authoritie of the Sea Apostolike, that whosoever to expugnate them, shall undertake the enioyned labour, should remayne secure aswell in their goods as persons from all incursions of enemies. At this preaching, so great a multitude of men which tooke the Crosse assembled, as is not beleaved at any time to haue met together in our Climate. But wee will learne this businesse of others which better knew it.

Poplimerius saith, the Waldenses against the will of all Christian Princes (so did the Apostles against the will of Ethnike Princes, (and Princes called Christians, were now made drunke with the Whores cup) sowed their Doctrine, little differing from that which the Protestants now embrace, not only thorow all France, but almost all the Coasts of Europe. For the French, Spaniards, English, Scots, Italians, Germanes, Bohemians, Saxons, Polonians, Lithunians, and other Nations, haue stiffely defended it to this day. One of Innocents Decrees in the Councell of Lateran, which also decreed Transubstantion, is, that if a Temporall Lord being required and warned by the Church, shall neglect to purge his Countrey from hereticall filthinesse, the Bishops shall excommunicate him: if he continue so a yeare, let it be signified to the Pope, that he may free his vassals from their alleageance, and expose his Land to bee occupied of Catholikes, which may possesse it without contradiction, the Heretikes being rooted out, &c.

Indulgences were preached in this sort, the Text, Psal. 94. 16. Who will rise up for mee against the euill doers, &c. or the like applyed to the people: You see beloued, how great the malice of Heretikes is, &c. Therefore the holy Mother Church, though unwilling, calleth against them a Christian Armie. Whosoever therefore hath the zeale of the faith, whosoever is touched with the honour of God; whosoever will haue this great Indulgence, let him come and take the signe of the Crosse, and ioyne himselfe to the Christian Souldierie. Some thinke that the Crouched Order of Crucigeri, was then confirmed by this Innocent; many Crossed, and going to or returning from Syria, winning the Popes fauour by their Exploits against the Albigenses. I might adde the Orders of Militarie Knights, as Templars, Hospitulars, and others which hence had their originall, and were so potent in wealth and numbers, that they could beard Kings, and had their dependance and priuiledges of the Pope.

Inn. Ep. dec. l. 1.

Dominicke Author of the Dominicans, preached to conuert with the word, and had helpers with the Sword, to expugnate those which his word could not. These were called, Fratres de militia B. Dominici, and they and their wiues were a certaine guild, called the Brethren and Sisters of Penance of Saint Dominicke. Likewise, the Office of the Inquisition was instituted by this Innocent, charging the Bishops in remission of their sinnes, to receiue his Commissaries, and to assist them against Heretikes, drawing forth the Spirituall Sword against those which were by the Inquisitors named; and let the Laymen confiscate their goods, and cast them out of their possessions. And whosoever should deuoutly assist them, we grant that Indulgence of their sinnes which we grant to those which visit the staires of Saint Peter, or Saint Iames. This he wrote in behalfe of Rainer and Guido. But after this Inquisition was delegated to Dominicke, for the Countries of Prouence, who raysed this Dominican Order, (ordure) whose chiefe care should be against Heretikes: he somewhat verified the Popes Dreame, seeming to stay the Church of Laterane, beeing readie to fall, which the Franciscans apply to Saint Francis. And indeed, had not these in this Age vpheld the Lateran Babylon, together with the Schoolemen, * the best of which were Friars, and the Canonists; it is likely the Albigenses, Waldenses, Pooremen of Lions, Inzabbatati, (other names they giue them) had then ruined it, they then with like Arts, Dispensations, and Reputation doing that, which since Luther and Caluine the Iesuites haue laboured.

a Most of the chiefe Schoolemen were Dominicans or Franciscans.
* Pet. de vin. l. 1. Ep. 27.

The new Locusts * supplanted the former Clergie, exercised Penances, Functions, Baptismes, and began two Fraternities, wherein they receiued men and women so generally, that scarcely any were free: the people being unwilling to heare others preach; that the Priests were defrauded of their Tithes, and had not to liue; the Churches now retayning nothing but a Bell, and old dustie Image. The Friars began at Cottages, and now haue Kings Houses and Palaces erected, and hauing no riches are richer then all rich men, whiles we begge, &c. These became acute Schoolemen, Sententaries, Questionists, Summists, Quodlibetists, and I know not what irrefragable, subtle, Angelical Doctors and Disputants, bringing in Oppositions of Science falsly called, languishing about Questions and strifes of words: these made Diuinitie a Linsey wolsey garment; not as their Master of Sentences, of Fathers and Scriptures; but admitted Aristotle free of the Diuinitie Schooles, and ploughed with an Oxe and an Asse, their Miscelan fields.

1. Tim. 6.

Sabel. En. 9. l. 6.

These Dominicans and Franciscans were appointed also, Inquisitores heretice prauitatie, and made many bloody Sacrifices, for their vnbloudy Sacrifice, and other Popish Heresies in pretence of Heretical prauitie: growing into such numbers, that Sabellicus numbred of Dominicans, one and twenty Prouinces; twentie foure thousand, one hundred forty three Couents, and in them Fryars entred, fiftene hundred Masters or Doctors of Diuinitie, in all twenty sixe thousand, foure hundred and sixtie. Of Franciscans, forty Prouinces deuided into Warden-ships, Couents, and Places; the persons innumerable, coniectured threescore thousand. Yea, the Generall promised to Pope Pius of bodies able to serue in his intended war against the Turke, thirty thousand and Franciscans, thirtie thousand Augustine Friars, the Carmelites more, and other Orders I mention not, nor can I number these Locusts.

Matth. Paris inveigheth often against the insolencie of these Friars and their Papall priuiledges, odious to the Monkes and Secular Clergie. They were (saith he) Counsellors and Messengers of great men, Secretaries of our Lord the Pope, getting hereby Secular fauour: quarrelling about priuiledges of Order, that in three or foure hundred yeeres the Monkes had not so degenerated, as these within foure and twentie yeeres after their first Mansions in England, whose buildings now grow Royall Palaces. They wait on rich men dying, extort Confessions and secret Testaments, commending themselves and their owne Order alone, sollicitous to get Priuiledges; in the Courts of Kings and great men, Counsellors, Chamberlans, Treasurers, makers of Marriages, Executors of Papall exactions; in their Preachings buter or flattering, Reuealers of Confessions, Contemners of other Orders, accounting the Cistercians Semi-laikes and Rustikes, the blacke Monkes proud and Epicures, seeking to be enter-
 10 tained as Legats or Angels of God in their preaching. And if a man were confessed of his owne Priest, what say they, of that Idiot, ignorant of Theologie, the Decrees, Questions? they are blind Leaders of the blind: come to Vs, we know to distinguish leproie from leproie, know hard, difficult things and the secrets of God: whereupon Noble men and Ladies entertayned them, contemning their owne Priests and Prelates. And to returne to Indulgences, These were the Popes Publicans, preaching the receiuing of the Crosse
 20 (gining notice of such preaching before-hand, and entertayned by the Clergie in Vestments with Banners and Proceession) to all Ages, Sexes, Conditions, to the Sicke and Aged, the next day for money absolving them from their vowed Pilgrimage. But I am wearie of this stinking linke of hypocrisie, which for the World denyed the World, the Flesh for the Flesh, and obeyed to such enormous rebellions.

Yet let vs examine the Indulgences against the Waldenses, in the yeere 1208. innumerable multitudes receiued the Crosse in their breasts; the Pope writ to King Philip and all his Princes, to inuade Narbonne, Tholouse, and other parts. The next yeere, from all parts of France, Flan- ders, Normandie, Aquitane, Burgundie, the Bishops, Earles, and Barons, with an infinite number, met at Lions and came to Byterra, where they slue sixtie thousand, promiscuously Papists 30 and Waldenses, by aduise of the Popes Legat, who said, The Lord knoweth who are his: some say an hundred thousand, not sparing Sexe or Age, burning the dead bodies. Thence they went to Carcasson, where they spared onely the mens liues, not leauing them their apparell. Simon Mont- fort, Earle of Leicester, was made Generall, who tooke Roger the Lord of the Countrey, and all the Countrey with an hundred Castles, and many others rendred themselves. In the yeer 1210, was a new Expedition of these crossed Votaries out of France, England, and Lorraine, which tooke Minerbia, where an hundred and fourescore chose rather to burne then turne: entred To- 40 louse, wasting all, taking Cities and Castles, burning such as would not turne. They tooke Raimund and his Castle of Therma, his Wife and Daughter; he dyed in prison, they with other Ladies in the fire. Leopold Duke of Austria, Adolph Earle of Monte, William Earle of Iuliers went thither out of Almaine. An. 1211. a new Armie from many parts, tooke many Cities and Castles, burning and hanging many, committing the conquered Countrey to Simon Montfort. Lan-
 50 uallis was taken, and choise giuen to turne or burne, three hundred and fiftie choosing this. The Ladie was cast in a Well and stones throwne on her.

Raimund * Earle of Tholouse had aide of the King of Arragon, and was an hundred thousand strong (Armoricanus hath two hundred thousand) but was ouer-throwne by the Crosses and Montfort, and the King of Arragon slaine, and the certayne number, saith Paris, of the slaine, could not be certainly numbred: some say two and thirtie thousand. Hence new crossed Knights which serued for Indulgence and spoile, in the yeeres 1214. and 1215. Simon possessing himselfe of the great Countries of Earle Raimund, by the Popes procurement, and King Philips grant. The Warres continued 1216. 1217. 1218. in which Simon was slaine. The Warres were prosecuted by Amalricus his sonne, and Lewis sonne to King Philip. These tooke Miramon- 60 da and slue Man, Woman and Child.

Anno 1219. Tolouse was besieged in vaine, Famine and Mortalitie plaguing the Armie. The Warre continued 1220. 1221. In the yeere 1223. the Pope sent his Legat, a Cardinall, with twentie Bishops. King Philip died and appointed twentie thousand pounds to helpe Amalricus against the Albigenses, which grew now strong in Dalmatia, Bulgaria, Croatia. Anno 1225. King Lewis made an Expedition to besiege Auinion, seuen yeeres excommunicate by the Pope, with an Armie of Crusado's. But Earle Raimund had plowed the grounds and preuented all prouision, that Sword, Famine and Pestilence dismayed that huge Armie, wherein the King himselfe died, and aboue two and twentie thousand of the Assailants. Loth to wearie you with such bloudie spectacles, effects of Antiphrasticall Indulgences, this Warre is said to continue about 70 seuentie yeeres. The Waldenses encreased notwithstanding daily, and the Warre, saith Thuanus, was of no lesse weight then that against the Saracens (which occasioned this whole discourse) and they were rather in the end spoiled then conuerted or conuicted, some remayning close in Prouence, some in the Alpes, some in Calabria to our times, and some in Brisaine.

The Bohemians also were their issue, against whom the Pope vsed like courses of Indulgences, one hundred and fiftie thousand at one time crossed vnder Sigismund to the war, being out of diuers Kingdomes, not to mention the Crusado's by the Cardinals of Winchester and Iulian, with innumerable bloudshed. But I am loth to lothe and wearie you with such cruell Indulgentiall morsells, the Popes feast of mans flesh to the blinded World. Those Bohemian warres had first originall from Hus his preaching, and that also against Indulgences preached against the King of Naples: they were long and bloudie, but more long and bloudie haue those of this last and worst Age beene from like originall, which I leaue to other Authors, to reckon the many many hundreds of thousands of Christians, which one neighbour Countrey, yea one little piece of her neighbour Countrey (not to mention others still bleeding, crying, dying) haue lost in quarrels, died in the blood of Religion. Money is the life of merchandise, Sinowes of warre, and vpholder of Greatnesse, without which, Peters succession, patce Oues, I haue prayed for thy Faith, Constantines supposed donation, and the keyes of the Kingdome of Heauen, had not preuailed to a Papall earthly Monarchie. And Indulgences and Crusado's haue heene his best both Mine and Mint for Money: first, in sharing with Kings which tooke the Crosse, and by Papall power imposed Tenths that he might haue a Twentieth, as he did to Saint Lewis of France. Secondly, in letting out his Indulgences to Kings at a Rent, whereby at this day some get more then by some Kingdomes. Thirdly, by redeeming the Vowes by such meanes as you haue now heard of the Friars, one binding to the Vow, another for money loosing, like a blacke and white Deuill witching and vnwitching the superstitious vulgar. Fourthly, Kings taking the Crosse to oppresse their Subiects for the charge, with part of the purchase purchasing a Papall Absolution. Fifthly, agreeing with Kings to fleece the Church for the Holy Land, that he might doe as much against the Emperour. Sixtly, letting out these Crusado's to ferme, by which Richard Earle of Cornwall, in Matt. Paris, daily so enriched himselfe, how much more the Pope? the Popes preacher (playing the haruest man, to bring into his Barnes or Treasurie) that the same of his money made him to be chosen Emperour. He of one Archdeaconrie reaped six hundred pounds. William Longspat got by the like gift of the Pope, aboue a thousand marks. Seuenthly, giuing Indulgences, that is, the money which might be made of them in recompense of friendship, labours, expenses. Eightly, selling Indulgences to Churches, Images, Altars, Graines, Prayers, &c. thorow the Christian world. Ninthly, by Iubilees, whereof Crusado's were Fore-runners and Apparitors. Tenthly, by dispensations the Iuno, sister and wife of this Indulgent Ioue, or Pluto rather. Eleuenthly, by instituting Offices; Penitentiaries, Notaries, and I know not what rabble for these purposes and his Exchequer Receits, and then selling those multiplied Offices for the greatest summe. But who can summe vp these Accounts? especially being workes of Darknesse, mystie mysteries, which yet are thus farre reuealed, enough to proue the Author the Man of sinne, which by his owne verie sinne, and supposed pardon of others, hath let the raines of the World loose to Sinne, and hereby ruled the World holding the raines in his owne hand. Once; his temporall Monarchie, Collations of Benefices, Dispensations had neuer vnder-propped this mysticall Monarchie, had not Crusado's and Indulgences awed Kings, excited and incited furious Armies, armed furies; depopulated and ruined Kingdomes, and by mayne force bett downe all Opponents abroad, and filled his Coffers at home.

But for this of money, Sixtus or Xistus the fourth, was wont to say, that hee should neuer want money so long as he wanted not a Hand and a Pen. And Xistus the fifth, in five yeeres and a halfe had gathered five millions of treasure, notwithstanding his magnificent and admirable expenses, in Palaces, Churches, Obeliskes, Conduits, and the like. So much could Friars Minors skill of getting both Papacie and Money. And that you may know of what vse prohibited marriages to Priests and religious Orders are, you may consider how the Pope may make Armies of their numbers in extremitie; and of their purses at pleasure make sponges. Pius the fourth leuied at one time of the Religions foure hundred thousand Ducats; and if he would haue admitted Resignations of Benefices with Regresses, as he was aduised, he might that way haue made a million. Paul the third maintayned twelue thousand foot and five hundred horse at his pay, vnder Charles the fift against the Lutherans, and yet raysed his house as you see: Clement the seuenth hath notwithstanding his captiuitie done more for his House. Pius the fift sent foure thousand foot and one thousand horse, to aide Charles the ninth against the Protestants. But I haue wearied the Reader in obseruing the effects of this Pope holy Expedition to Ierusalem, and the Papall aduancement thereby. I will adde the vertues of those Holy Land Inhabitants, and then you shall see it the Holy Land indeed, so termed by Antiphrasis, Dignum patella operculum, Lettice sutable to the lips of His Holinesse, who may also haue that Title for the selfe same cause.

Superstition aduanced in and by the Holy Land Expeditions, and the Christians Christianitie in those parts worse then in other. Diuers Sects of Christians in the East.

10 First for superstition, this voyage proued a Mart for Reliques, as is before in part obserued of the multiplyed Crosse, of the Speare, of the Bloud of Christ, solemnely carried by King Henrie to Westminster, of our Ladies haire, &c. Of the Crowne of Thornes, Matth. Paris tells, that Baldwin, Emperour of Constantinople before mentioned, sold it to the French King for money, to pay his Armie. Peter the pilgrime Bishop of Winchester, bequeathed inestimable summes of money to Religious Houses by him founded at Hales, Tikeford, Seleburne, Portsmouth: and whereas two Churches had beene dedicated to Saint Th. Becket at Acon, he remoued one of them to a more conuenient place, and changed their Order into a more competent, subiect to the Templars, and gaue besides by Will fise hundred marks to it. But Vitriacus, the Bishop of Acon, will best acquaint vs with their conditions, who hauing reckoned the Peeres of that Kingdome, the Earle of Tripolis, Lords of Berith, Sidon, Cas- phas or Porphyria, Casarea, Mount Royall, of Assur, of Ibelim, with some others; the Prince of 20 Galilee, Lord of Tiberias; Earle of Ioppe and Ascalon, &c. tells vs of the flourishing state of Religion by the odor of holy and venerable places there, sorted and fitting to mens deuouter humours; some choosing to liue in the Desart called Quarantena, where our Lord was tempted, liuing Heremiticall liues in petie Cells; others, in imitation of Elias in Mount Carmell neere Caiphas, in Hives of small Cells, foure miles from Acon: others, in the Desarts of Iordan; others liuing solitarie in the Desart of Galilee, where Christ preached. In Thabor was a Monaste-rie builded, and in diuers other places. Others chose rather to liue in Cities, especially Ierusa- lem, Nazareth, and Betleem.

Ierusalem was the Mother of the Faith, as Rome is of the faithfull; it stands on a high Hill, is on both sides Mountaynous, abounding with Wheat, Wine, and Oile, and all temporall good 30 things: yet hath but one Fountayne, called Saloe, flowing out of Sion, sometimes hauing little or no Waters. And as it is more holy then any place, so it hath drawne to it more religious Persons. In it is a Temple of huge quantitie, whence the Templars haue their name, called Sal- mons Temple. Whatioeuer places (in all that Countrey) our Lord trod on, are esteemed holy and consecrated, and for precious Reliques by the faithfull; whence Religious both Clerks and Laymen, as well militarie as of other condition, haue beene drawne thither: namely, the Brethren of the Hospitall of Saint Iohn, the Templars, and the Brethren of the Hospitall of Saint Marie of the Dutch. The Hospitalars were from the time of the Surians, hauing a Latine Church of Saint Marie, the Abbot whereof built an Hospitall in honor of Saint Iohn Eleemon. After the Franks Expedition, Gerard the Master, adioyning some others to him tooke a religious habit and white 40 Crosse, whom Agnes the Abbess followed. These buried their dead in Acheldama, and whiles they were poore obeyed the Abbot, and payed their Tithes, and called the poore to whom they ministred, their Masters and Lords, but after became as Princes of the Earth. The Templars also were at first Lions in battell, Lambs at home, Eremites and Monkes in the Church, hauing Banners blacke and white (as mild to Christians, terrible to the Infidels) seuer in their owne socie-tie, obsequious to the Patriarke, beloued for their Religion and humilitie, as the former, insomuch that Dukes and Princes denied the World and followed them.

And because a threefold Cord is not easily broken, that of the Dutch Knights was added, from a small beginning increasing into a swelling streame. For one Dutch man with his family dwelling at Ierusalem, many of his Countrey Pilgrimes, which knew not the language, were glad of his 50 entertainment in a small Hospitall by him therefore builded, to which also he added a Chappel in honour of our Lady, and partly procured of his owne goods, partly by almes, to the poore and sicke Pilgrimes. Some Dutchmen liking the intent, gaue all they had thereto, binding themselues by vow; and when some of Gentle and Noble blood had adioyned themselves, they became both followers of the Hospitalars in their care of the poore, and of the Templars in Military Deuotion.

The Holy Land also flourished with Regulars, Religious, Anchorites, Monkes, Canons, Nuns, Inclosed persons, Virgins, Widowes. It was also full of peoples, Genuois, Pisans, Venetians, men fit for the Sea, and sage Counsels; Frankes, Almans, Britons, Englishmen, lesse ordered or circum-spect, more impetuous, more superfluous in Dyet, prodigall in Expenses, deuout in the Church, 6 feruent in Charity, more couragious in Battell, and formidable to the Saracens: which yet for the vanitie of some, are by the Pollans, called the Sonnes of Hemaudius. They which descended of the Conquerors are called Pollans, eyther because they were Pulli, in respect of the Surians, or because their Mothers were most of them Apulians; the Army wanting women enough, and procuring from Apulia, the neereſt place of the Westerne Church. There are besides in the Holy Land,

The Authour doth heape more sentenminations, then here are mentioned, to shew them deperate: espe-

out of measure sinfull, and their Holies so leauened with manifold superstitions.

But when the Deuill (I still follow our Author) had found no rest in the first poore Pilgrims; hee found the house empty, swept and garnished (men idle and dwelling securely, abounding with temporall goods) and taking seven spirits worse then himselfe (the seven deadly sinnes, for their ingratitude worse) hee entred againe, and the last state was worse then the former. They were proud, high-minded, contumelious, seditious, malicious, sorcerers, sacrilegious, couetous, slouthfull, drunkards, gluttons, adulterous, thaeues, robbers, homicides, traitors, men of bloud, disobedient to Parents and Elders, without affection, truce breakers, mercileffe: Reproach and lying man-slaughter, and theft, and adulterie over-flowed, and bloud touched bloud. So was the imagination of wicked mens intent to euill at all times, so farre was all vertue and religious honestie decayed, that there was scarcely any found which made difference betwixt the holy and profane; or separated the precious from the vile. All were gone head-long to confusion; from the sole of the foot to the crowne of the head there was no soundnesse: and as was the People, such was the Priest.

For when all the World in manner had made it selfe tributarie in Almes, Gifts, Oblations, the Pastors fed themselves, minding the Wooll and Milke, not the Soules of the Flocke; yea, became examples of Treason, rich by Christs pouertie, proud by his humilitie, glorious by his ignominie, fattened and grosse by the patrimonie of him Crucified; howsoeuer Christ had said, Feede my Sheepe, not, Sheare my Sheepe. They sought their owne, not the things of Christ, became blinde guides of the blinde, dumbe Dogs not able to barke; entring the Lords House pompously, wanting the Key of knowledge, polluted with Gehezis leprosie, erecting the Chayres of Done-sellers and Money-changers, which our Lord ouer-threw, in the Churches euery-where, saying with Iudas, What will you giue mee? and I will betray him to you. All of them loued Gifts and followed Rewards, taking the Keyes from Simon Peter, and deliuering them to Simon Magus: manifold wayes luxurious, idle; feeding not with crummes from the Lords Table, but with whole Loaves and delicate Meates, their Whelps which of filthy Concubines they themselves more filthy had procreated.

Regular Orders, Masters of misse-rule and disorder.

The Regulars also infected with the poyson of Riches, and increased with possessions beyond measure, contemned their Superiours, and not onely became irksome to the Ecclesiasticks, but enuied and detracted each other to the grievous scandall of Christendome, to contumelies, open hatreds, conflicts, violences, battells. For hauing begunne to build the Tower of Babel, with diuided Tongues, they not onely disagreed amongst themselves, but bandying factions procured discords amongst others. And howsoeuer many of them as graines of Corne amongst Chaffe, and Lillies amongst Thornes, as the times gaue leaue, obserued their rules, and sate not downe in the Chayre of pestilence; yet the impietie of the worse preuailed, and their iniquitie superabounded, that in contempt of Ecclesiasticall Discipline, they receiued to their Holies those which by name had beene excommunicated: Abbots, Priors, Monkes, their miserable and mercenarie Chaplens, thrust their Sickles into others Haruests, made vnlawfull marriages, visited and houselled the sicke for gayne, not for godlinesse; binding and loosing against God and holy Canons, the Soules which belonged not to their charge; admitted the dead to burials (their Pastors contradicting, and vsurped Parochiall right. Nannes also leaped out of their Cloysters, frequenting publike Baths with secular persons. And as any were greater amongst the Lay-men, so much more perniciously corrupted they their wayes: a corrupt Generation, as Lees of the Wine, Cockle of Wheat, and Rust of Siluer.

Pullani, wicked and abominable.

These Pullani, delicate, wanton, effeminate, more accustomed to Baths then Battells, giuen to vncleanness and leacherie, curiously dressed after womens wont, were contemned of the Saracens, and (if they had none of the Western people with them) more vilipended then Women. They made league with the Saracens, and quarrelled with themselves, for light matters raising ciuill warres, and often borrowing aide of the Infidells, spending the Treasure and Stocke of Christians against Christians. They were deepe Dissemblers, not easie to be perceived in their fallacies till they had deceived; iealous mewers vp of their wiues, that their owne Brethren and neere Kindred might scarcely haue access; and keeping them from the Churches, and Sermons, and other things necessarie to their soules, hardly once in the yeere admitting them the Church. The richer sort erected Altars neere their wiues beds, and by some wretched Chaplens and vnlearned Sir Iohns, procured Masses to be said, that they might seeme Christians. And how much closer their wiues are kept, so much more they whet their wits with a thousand deuises and infinite plots to finde starting holes; furnished by the Surians and Saracen women, with sorceries, mischiefs, and innumerable abominations. They are ingratefull, and many wayes irksome to those Pilgrims, which come from remote parts to their aide, with great labours and intolerable expenses, liking better their ease and carnall pleasures, then warres with the Saracens. These Pilgrims they entertayne at immoderate charge, defrauding and impouering them in buying, and bartering to their owne exceeding enriching; afflicting them with reproaches and wrongs, and calling them Sonnes a Before filios of Hernaud, as it were Fooles and Ideots. Hernaud, one is false printed

There are others, continuing from ancient times vnder diuers Lords, Romanes, Greekes, Saracens and Christians, called Surians, vnfit for Warre, men for the most part Vnfaithfull, Double-dealing, Lyers, Inconstant, Fortune-fawners, Traytors, Gift-takers, esteeming Theft and Robbery for nothing, Spyes to the Saracens, imitating their Language and Condition. These shau not, but nourish their beards, as doe the Greekes with great care, attributing thereto much virilitie, grauitie, authoritie and glorie. Whereupon, when Baldwin Earle of Edeffa, hauing married the Daughter of a rich Armenian, suffered his Beard to grow; to extort money from his Father in law, he said, he had impawned his Beard for a great summe to certaine Creditors; who gaue him thirtie thousand Bizantines, to prevent that disgrace to his Family, and on condition neuer to engage his Beard againe. These Syrians vse the Tongue and manner of writing of the Saracens in contracts, and all sauing their Diuinitie and Holies, for which they haue the Greeke Letter; so that their Laity vnderstand not their seruice, as the Greekes doe, whose Rites they wholly obserue. They obey the Latine Prelates, for feare of the Princes, otherwise not hauing Greeke Bishops of their owne, nor would regard their censures, but that our Lay-men in contracts and other businesse, would not haue to doe with them being excommunicated. For they say amongst themselves, that the Latines are all excommunicated, and therefore cannot excommunicate. The Surians and Greekes admit not fourth Marriages. Their Priests marry not after their Orders, but vse their wiues which before they married. They account not Sub-deaconship in holy Orders. Their simple Priests confirme with Chrisme, which with the Latines is not lawfull but to Bishops. They keepe Saturday holy, nor esteeme Saturday Fast lawfull but on Easter Euen. They haue solemne Seruice on Saturdayes, eate flesh, and feast it brauely like the Iewes.

The Westerne Church for many Ages vsed much shauing, as in old pictures is seen Beards of price.

Force of Excommunication against contracts.

There are also in the Holy Land and the East parts Iacobites, so called of one Iames a Disciple of the Patriarke of Alexandria. These of long time haue inhabited the greater part of Asia, some amongst the Saracens, and some, as in Nubia, and great part of Ethiopia, possessing whole Countries. They Baptise and circumcise their children, and obserue not Auricular Confession: some make Crosses with fire in their cheekes or temples; and they mayntaine but one nature in Christ. Some of them vse the Chaldee Letter, others the Arabike, that is, the Saracenicall. There are in the Holy Land, and by themselves in India, Nestorians, especially, in the Countrey of Presbyter John. These, with the Iacobines, are said to be more then the Latines and Greekes: and besides those which dwell by themselves entyre, there are said to be more of these Christians subiect to the Infidels, then are of Saracens themselves. They diuide the person of Christ, making the Virgin Mary Mother of the humane Person, & the Son of God another diuine Person. Nestorius and this his Heresie were condemned in the Ephesine Councell. They vse the Chaldee Letter, and leauened Hosts as the Greekes doe.

Iacobites.

See of this our former Abassine Relations.

Nestorians.
b Not the Abassine, but in Asian India, where the Portugals found Bishops and other Christians, called S. Thomas Christians.

The Tartars caused much alteration in these parts.

Maronites.

About Libanus are some called Maronites, many in number which acknowledged (Maro was their Master) but one nature in Christ. These Monothelites were condemned in the sixth generall Councell at Constantinople. They vsed Sacraments by themselves fve hundred yeares, and after by Aimerike, Patriarke of Antiochia, were reduced to the Roman Faith, whose Traditions they follow; insomuch, that when all the Easterne Prelates except the Latines, vse no Rings, Miters, nor Pastorall Stauas, nor Bels, (but Boords on which they knocke with a Sticke or Hammer to call the Assembly) the Maronites vse all; and their Patriarke was present at the Councell of Laterane, vnder Innocent the Third. They vse the Chaldee Letter and Saracen Language.

Armenians.

The Armenians are diuided from all other Christians in Rites; hauing a Primate of their owne, whom they call Catholicon, obserued by all of them as another Pope. They haue Letters and Language proper, and Lyturgies in the vulgar. At Christmasse they fast, and at Twelveday they solemnize our Lords Baptisme, and his Spirituall Natiuitie, as they improperly speake.

Lent they fast so strictly, that they not only abstayne from Flesh, Egges, Whit-meates, but also from Filh, Oyle, and Wine, yet fast not but eate frutes, and as often as they please. On some Fridayes they eate flesh. They mixe no water with Wine in the Sacrament. The Armenians promised obedience to the Pope, when their King receiued of Henry the Emperor his Land, and the Crown of the Archbishop of Mentz: but retayne their old Rites notwithstanding. There is also a warlike people dreadfull to the Saracens, called Georgians, of Saint George; whom they haue for their Patrone, and worship as their Ensigne bearer aboue other Saints, vling the Greeke Holies. Their Priests haue round crownes, the Lay-men square: and when they come to Ierusalem on Pilgrimage, they enter with Banners displayed and without Tribute: the Saracens forbearing them, lest they should after their returne bee reuenged on other Saracens. Their noble women vse Armes in Battels, as Amazons.

Georgians.

The Mosarabes are Latine Christians, and obserue the Romish Rites, dwelling amongst the African and Spanish Saracens. Yet some of them diuide the Sacrament into seuen parts, others into nime, whereas the Romane Church doth it into three. There are other miserable Easterne people, as Esses of Iewish descent, and Assasines, and Saducees, and Samaritans.

Mosarabes, or Moxarabes.

They

The Holy Land and the receptacle of all Impietie and Impuritie from other parts of Christendome.

* The Temples, &c.

They which haue best knowne the Holy Land Affaires and Changes, affirme, that no greater plague hath hapned then flagitious and pestiferous men, Sacrilegious Theeues, Robbers, Murderers, Parricides, Periured, Adulterers, Traytors, Pirates, Drunkards, Iesters, Dicers, Players, Runnagate Monkes, and Nunnes become common Whores, and such women as leauing their Husbands haue followed Bawdes, or such as haue forsaken their Wiues and marryed others. These Monsters haue runne away, and flying to the Holy Land, haue so much more boldly perpetrated there their former euils without shame, as they haue beene further from those which knew them; neither fearing God nor respecting men. The easinesse of escaping, and impunitie of sinning haue loosed the reines to their Impietie: because that after villanies committed, they runne to the Saracens, and deny Christ, or else by ship flye to some Ilands, or getting to the houses of Regulars, * which euery where they found, by their pernicious libertie of Priuiledges, defending the wicked, they escaped without punishment. Some Murderers also condemned to mutilation or death in their owne Countries, by praying or paying obtayned often to bee condemned to perpetuall Exile in the Holy Land; and neuer altering their manners, haue there preyed on Pilgrimes and Strangers, kept Bawdie-houses and Gaming-houses, and Receptacles for Theeues and Murthers, paying a yeerely Pension to the potent and rich, to patronize them in these exorbitancies; extorting the same with greater summes from Whores and Gamesters. Many also came to the Holy Land, not for Deuotion, but Curiositie and Noueltie.

Thus you haue had a view of the Inhabitants, both Clergie and Laitie, Natiue and accessorie: all flesh corrupting their way, and making it the most vnholly Sinke in the World, not the nauill of the Earth, as some call it, but the Knaue-ill, Slaue-uile, and base confluence of villanies; not the foundation of Religion, but the fundament of the Deuill and of Irreligion, as formerly in other Ages, so worse then all worsts in this, that it was inhabited by these Pullans and Pilgrimes. Neither haue I in this Relation augmented or exaggerated, but for breuitie haue fallen farre short of the Authors blacke pitchie colours, wherein hee describeth their Hellish darknesse. And howsoeuer he much commends the first Pilgrimes (as comparatiuely they deserued) yet euen that their righteoufnesse was but pannus menstruata, dyed in a deepe graine of Superstition, besides their other pollutions which the former Storie hath related. The best was a Popish pietie, the worst was farre farre worse then Heathenish Impietie (Corruptio optimi pessima) so little good did Religion & Christianity hereby receiue euen here. And as for the hurt it receiued in the West, we haue declared and proued at large; Religion comming to the West and worst, and that bright Sunne almost set in a darke misty mysticall Cloud, and darknesse from the bottomlesse Pit, principally by this meane and occasion.

Let none traduce me, as if I held it wholly vnlawfull to visit holy places, or to warre against Infidels, or that I enuy the Pope himselfe, his Temporalities: (howsoeuer gotten at first, as you haue heard) or absolutely deny Absolutions, Dispensations, Indulgences: the abuses I taxe, and historically haue shewed how by corruptions, confusions, combustions, the face and body of the Church hath beene empayred, weakned, and sicke (so neere to death in so many many members and limmes) of the Antichristian or Romish Disease. As Christ is the name not of the Head alone, but of the whole mysticall body, which is one Seed, one City, one Temple, one Vine, one New man, one CHRIST: * So is Antichrist both the head & mysticall body; the name howsoeuer it be most properly due to the Popes in their successions, as the head, yet competible also to the whole body of the Popish Church, which together makes vp that mysticall Babylon, which thus by the carnall Ierusalem, and Iewish Opinions and Rites, hath so impouerished the new, spirituall and heauenly Ierusalem, and her Celestiall Priuiledges, whereof we are children by Regeneration, and enfranchised citizens in manifold Priuiledges. Neyther perhaps, did any one stratageme so farre reduce Iudaisme, or induce Poperie, or seduce the Christian world, as this Holy Land vnholly degeneration. Christianity, is to liue by faith and not by sight, and to haue a conuersation heauenly, and the exercise of a spirituall warfare against the World, the flesh, the Deuill, by the panoply of God, hope of Saluation for a Helmet, Brest-plate of Righteoufnesse, Girdle of Sincerity, Greaves of the Gospell, Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, and Shield of Faith (the euidence of things not seene, the ground of things hoped for) with perseuerant Watching and Prayer. But these Expeditions first hapned in a tumultuary warring and spoyling Age; were begun for temporall respects in the first moouers; in many if not most of the followers apprehended to like purpose of spoyle (all being as you haue seene, the Souldiers owne, hee could get) which blanchd ouer with Honour, Religion, Merit; Once; being the seruice of two Masters at once, God and Mammon, (which in true Religion is incompetent) easily wonne entertaynment. And if men now will aduenture voluntarily to fight any quarrels of any Region or Religion, for foure shillings a week, (eight dayes to the weeke) in an Age more composed generally to words then workes: is it any maruell, if so many inducements, in such a mist and smoke could whet so many Swords and courages in those Martiall times, where earthly purchases were the guerdon of the liuing, with Fame, Nouelties, and many many sensuall Holies; and Martyrdome was the Crowne of the dead with God, Heauen and Eternitie.

To conclude, Hypocrisie was the beginning, Bloud was the proceeding, Superstitious Pietie that

* 1. Cor. 12. 12. Antichrist signifieth, in the head of Christ, against Christ, or emulous of Christ.

that is impietie or impious pietie, with impuritie and desolation were the end. This whole businesse was (as the Serpents seducing Eue, and was prophesied of Antichrist) not an open professed enmitie against Christ, but in coloured loue of Christ and his patrimonie, a more subtle deceitfull working, the Deuill transformed into an Angell, that hee might proue the worſe Deuill: this Expedition being after the working of Satan with all power, and signes, and lying wonders, and with all deceiuablenesse of vnrightheousnesse, as was foretold of that Sonne of perdition (which hereby and herein he hath proued, if euer by any one course, as is shewed, to the perdition of thousands and thousands of thousands, both bodies and soules) a strange Chymera, headed like a Lion, and in shew presenting a Lionlike fortitude, for the honor of that Lion of the Tribe of Iuda; yet after the Goats belly of various lusts, tayled like a Dragon, and enuenoming to manifold deaths with the poyson of the old Serpent: in shew kissing, indeed betraying, with Indas; in shew lifting Christ higher, indeed crucifying him; the Pope in shew crowning these Pilgrims, but with a crowne of Thornes, with manifold externall miseries, void of all internall consolation, his Indulgences notwithstanding; in shew presenting the faces of men, and haire of women, indeed the tayles of Scorpions, which those Locusts had in their tayles. Once; herein was Christ many wayes crucified betwixt two theeues, in Vrban and Boamund the first Founders; in superstition and hypocrisie, the principall Mouers; in Reuelations of Peter the Heremite and others, and Papall Indulgences, the chiefe Confirmers: in the Greekes and Infidels, the one by Treacherie, the other by open Violence, the mayne Confounders, (like two Mill-stones, grinding the Westerne Christians and this whole exploit, to poulder) in exposing Christian bodies to blondie crueltie, and their soules to crueller impietie; in confusions and manifold disorders in Families and Commonwealths, by absence of Ouer-seers at home, and buying vanitie, nothing, and lesse then nothing (for that was the end) with Seas of blood and heapes of carcases abroad; in abasing the lawfull power of Kings, and exalting (in manner as yee haue heard) the vsurped Papall Monarchie; that is, by Excommunications, Interdicts, Treasons, Crusado's, Votifrages, Perjuries, abolishing them which are called Gods; and Him by whom Kings reigne, both in this his Ordinance, and in the whole face of his Religion; that the Man of sinne might exalt himselfe above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that now, and principally hereby, He as God sitteth in the Temple of God, shewing himselfe that he is God. This was then a mysterie hidden from the wise and prudent: but now, and hereby, that Wicked is reuealed.

TO THE READER.

Like that Scribe which brings out of his Treasurie new and old; so haue I here done, and so our Author following. To those elder Stories and Records I haue added this later Voyage to Ierusalem and Constantinople: and He, besides his Travels, hath added his Studies, the Voyage of his Minds Industrie, as well as of his bodie's Peregrination; as a Learned Argus, seeing with the Eyes of many Authors, and comparing things old and new. Pardon me, that I haue here much pruned his sweet Poetrie, his farre-fet Antiquitie, and other fruits of his Learning: I would not haue his owne Worke out of request. I present men rather as Travellers, then as Scholers; and in this Historicall Stage produce them, telling what they haue seene; not what they can say, or what other Authors haue written: not that I disproue this (for what else is my whole Pilgrimage?) but that I hold on here another course; where if euery man should say all, no man could haue his part; and where euen breuitie it selfe is almost tedious (as you see) by Multitudes. The other parts of Master Sandys are not simply superfluous, yet are these to our present purpose sufficient.

§. I.

His iourney from Venice to Constantinople, and Obseruations by the way.

Marriage of the Sea.

From Venice wee departed on the twentieth of August, 1610. in the Little Defence of London. The Venetians are Lords of this Sea, but not without contention with the Papacie. On Ascension day, the Duke accompanied with the Clarissimos of that Signiory, is rowed thither in the Bucentoro, a triumphall Galley, richly, and exquisitely gilded: aboue a roome (beneath which they row) comprehending the whole length and breadth of the Galley; neere the poope a throne, the rest accomodated with seates, where he solemnly espouseth the Sea: confirmed by a Ring throwne therein, the Nuptiall Pledge and Symbol of subiection. This Ceremonie receiued a beginning from that Sea-battell fought and wonne by the Venetians, vnder the conduct of Sebastiano Zani, against the forces of Fredericke Barbarossa in the quarrell of Pope Alexander the Third. Who flying his furie in the habit of a Cooke repayred to Venice, and there long liued disguised in the Monastery of Charitie. Zani returning in triumph with the Emperours Sonne, was met by the Pope, and saluted in this manner: Here take, O Zani, this Ring of Gold, and by giuing it to the Sea, oblige it vnto thee. A ceremonie that shall on this day bee yearly obserued, both by thee and thy Successors, that Posteritie may know how you haue purchast the Dominion thereof by your valours, and made it subiect vnto you, as a Wife to her Husband.

Sclauonia.

We sayled all along in the sight of Dalmatia, at this day Sclauonia, of the Sclani, a people of Sarmatia. They dissent not from the Greeke Church in their Religion. Throughout the North part of the World their Language is vnderstood and spoken, euen from thence almost to the Confines of Tartarie. The men weare halfe-sleeued Gownes of Violet cloth, with Bonnets of the same. They nourish onely a locke of haire on the crowne of their heads; the rest all shauen. The women weare theirs not long; and dye them blacke for the most part. Their chiefe Citie is Ragusa (heretofore Epidaurus) a Common-wealth of it selfe, famous for Merchandize, and plentie of shipping. Many small Ilands belong therunto, but little of the Continent. They pay Tribute to the Turke, fourteene thousand Zecchins yearly: and spend as much more vpon them in gifts and entertainment, sending the Grand Signior euery yeare a ship loden with Pitch for for the vse of his Gallies. Whereby they purchase their peace; and a discharge of duties throughout the Ottoman Empire.

Corfu, the first Iland of note that we past by, lyeth in the Ionian Sea; stretching East and West in forme of a Bow: foure and fiftie miles long, foure and twentie broad, distant about twelue from the mayne of Epirus, called formerly Corcyra, adorned with Groues of Oranges, Limons, Pomegranates, Fig-trees, Oliues and the like: enriched with excellent Wines and abundance of Honey. Vpon the North-side stands a Citie that takes the name of the Iland, with a Castle strongly seated on a high Rocke, which ioyneth by an Isthmos to the Land, and impreguably fortified. The Turkes haue testified as much in their many repulses. It is the Chaire of an Arch-10 bishop, inhabited for the most by Grecians, as is the whole Iland, and subiect to the Venetians.

Saint Maura lyeth next vnto this, once adioyning to the Continent, and separated by the labour of the Inhabitants: yet no further remoued then by a bridge to bee past into. Called it was formerly Lencadia, of a white Rocke which lyeth before it, toward Cephalonia. On which stood the Temple of Apollo. In this Iland they haue a Citie inhabited for the most part by Iewes: receiued by Baiazet the Second; at such time as they were expelled Spaine by King Ferdinand.

Val de Compare, a little beyond presenteth her rockie Mountaines, contayning in circuit about fiftie miles, now inhabited by Exiles and Pirates. Once called Ithaca, so celebrated for the birth of Vlysses: Betweene this and the mouth of the Gulph of Lepanto, (once named the 20 Gulph of Corinth) lye certaine little Ilands, or rather great Rockes, now called Curzolari, heretofore Echinades, made famous by that memorable Sea-battell there obtayned against the Turke by Don Iohn of Austria, in the yeare 1571. and sung by a crowned Muse.

Curzolari.

We sayled close by Cephalonia, triangular in forme, one hundred and sixtie miles in circumference: the Mountaynes intermixed with profitable Valleys, and the Woods with Champian. Vnwatered with Rivers, and poore in Fountaines, but abounding with Wheate, Honey, Corrents, Manna, Cheese, Wooll, Turkeyes, excellent Oyle, incomparable (though not long lasting) Muscadines, and Powder for the dying of Scarlet: This growes like a blister on the leafe of the holy Oke, a little shrub, yet producing Acornes: being gathered, they rub out of it a certaine red 30 dust, that conuerteth after a while into wormes, which they kill with Wine when they begin to quicken. Amongst her many harbours, Argostoli is the principall, capacious enough for a Nauie. The Inhabitants of this Iland are Grecians, the Venetians their Souereignes. Hauing past through the Streights, that diuide this Iland from the next, (vulgarly called Canale del Zant,) on the second of September we entred the Hauen of Zacynthus, and saluted the Castle with our Ordnance.

Muscadines.

Danger of rocks.

Zacynthus, or Zant.

This Iland (nine hundred miles distant from Venice) so called of Zacynthus the Sonne of Dardanus, and at this day Zant; contayneth in circuit not past threescore miles. On the South and South-east sides rockie and mountaynous, but plaine in the midst, and vnspeakably fruitfull, producing the best Oyle of the World, and excellent strong Wines, both white and red, which they call Ribolla. But the chiefe riches thereof consisteth in Corrents, which draweth hither much 40 trafficke (especially from England and Holland, for here they know not what to doe with them:) insomuch that wheras before they were scarce able to free themselves from importunate famine, they now (besides their priuate gettings, amounting to one hundred and fiftie thousand Zechins) doe yearely pay vnto Saint Marke fortie eight thousand Dollars for Customes and other Duties. It is impossible that so little a portion of Earth, so employed, should be more beneficiall, the mountaynous part being barren, and the rest comprized within two or three not very ample Valleys, but those all ouer husbanded like an entyre Garden. They sow little Corne, as employing their grounds to better aduantage: for which they sometimes suffer, beeing ready to starue, when the weather continueth for any season tempestuous: and they cannot fetch their prouision, which they haue as well of Flesh as of Corne, from Morea, being ten leagues distant. They haue Salt-pits of their owne, and store of fresh water, but little or no wood, though cele-
50 brated for the abundance thereof, by Homer and Virgil.

Store of Corrents.

Pratticke of health.

It is here a custome strictly obserued (as also else-where within the Streights belonging to the Christians) not to suffer any to trafficke or come ashore before they haue a Pratticke from the Signiors of Health, which will not be granted vntill fortie dayes after their arriual, especially if the ship come from Turkie, and bring not a Certificate, that the place from whence they came is free from the infection: if so, perchance their restraint may be shortned, during which time they haue a Guardian set ouer them. They will not suffer a Letter to be deliuered, if sealed with thred, before it be opened and ayred. If such as come to speake with them doe but touch one of the ship, or sometimes but a rope, they shall be forced to ascend, and remayne there for the time 60 limited; it being death to him that shall come ashore without licence. Notwithstanding, they vpon request will carrie you to the Lazaretto (which is the nature of a Pest-house) there to abide vntill the date be expired. But if any fall sicke amongst them in the meane-season, their Pratticke is accordingly prolonged. A great inconuenience to the Merchants, but at Venice intolerable, where when they haue Pratticke, they are enforced to vnlade at the Lazaretto. So vnder pretence of ayring their goods are opened; their quantitie, qualitie and condition known; redounding much to their detriments. But for that we came from Venice, wee were freed from this mischiefe, and presently suffered to land.

The Towne, taking or giuing a name to the Iland, stretcheth along betweene the West side of the Hauen and the foote of the Mountayne: perhaps a mile in length, in breadth but narrow. The streets vnpaired, the building low, by reason of the often Earth-quakes whereunto this Iland is miserably subiect. Two hapned during my short abode heere, though of small importance. Although the seate of the Towne be excessive hot, yet is it happily qualified by a North-east gale that bloweth from Sea most constantly about the midst of the day.

The Great Turke hath yearly a present of Falcons from the Gouvernor (accompanied, as some say, with twelue hundred Zecchins) which he calleth a Tribute: it beeing in his power to distresse them at his pleasure, by restrayning the reliefe of victuals which they haue from Morea, and his adioyning Dominions. Whilest wee were here, the Captaine Bassa past by with sixtie Gallies; who yearly about this time sayleth in circuit, to receiue Tribute, suppress Pirates, and to doe some exploit vpon the Malteses, Spaniards, and Florentines, with whom they are one-ly in hostilitie. Diuers of their Gallies putting into the Hauen, were courteously entertaynd for the Venetians endeaour, as much as in them lyes to keepe good quarters with the Turke; not onely for the reason aforesaid, (which perhaps might extend as farre as their Citie: their Territories though large and fruitfull, too narrow to sustayne so populous a State, if vnrelieued from Turkie, and that their passage into the mid-land Sea were interrupted) not for the losse they should sustayne by the cessation of Trafficke with the Mahometans: but knowing him by deare experience too powerfull an Aduersary for them by Land, and though they are perhaps strong enough by Sea, yet should they lose a Nauie, their losse were vnrecoverable, whereas the Turke within the space of a year is able to set forth another.

Murtherers.

Danger of remissie Lawes.

The Inhabitants of this Iland are in generall Grecians (of whom wee will speake no more then concerns the particular customes of the place, reseruing the rest to our relation of that people: in habit they imitate the Italians, but transcend them in their reuenges, and infinitely lesse ciuill. They will threaten to kill a Merchant that will not buy their Commodities, and make more conscience to breake a Fast, then to commit a Murther. One of them at our beeing heere, pursued a poore Sailer (an Englishman) for offering but to carrie a little bagge of Corents aboard vncustomed, and killed him, running vp a paire of staires for succour. He is weary of his life that hath a difference with any of them, and will walke abroad after day-light. But cowardize is ioyned with their crueltie, who dare doe nothing but sodainly, vpon aduantages; and are euer priuately armed. Encouraged to Villanies by the remissnesse of their Lawes: for none will lay hands vpon an offender, vntill fourteene dayes after that hee bee called to the Scale, (an eminent place where one doth stand and publiely cite the offenders:) who in the meane-time hath leisure to make his owne peace, or else to absent himselfe: if then he appeare not, they banish him; and propound a reward according to the greatnesse of the offence, to him that shall either kill or take him aliue: and if it be done by one that is banished, his owne banishment (the least reward) is released. The Labourers doe goe into the fields with Swords and Partizans, as if in an Enemies Country, bringing home their Wines and Oyles in Hogs-skins, the in-sides turned outward. It is a custome amongst them to inuite certaine men vnto their Marriages, whom they call Compeeres. Euery one of these doe bestow a Ring, which the Priest doth put vpon the Bride and Bridegroomes fingers, interchangeably shifting them; and so hee doth the Garlands on their heads. Of these they are neuer ialous (an abuse in that kind reputed as detestable a crime, as if committed by a naturall Brother;) so that they lightly chuse those for their Compeeres that haue beene formerly suspected too familiar. The Bridegroome entring the Church, stickes his Dagger in the doore; held available against Inchantments. For heere it is a common practice to bewitch them: made thereby impotent with their Wiues, vntill the Charme be burnt, or otherwise consumed: insomuch that sometimes (as they say) the Mothers of the betrothed, by way of preuention doe bewitch them themselues, and againe vnloose them as soone as the Marriage is consummated. The Nuptiall sheets (as in some cases commanded by the Mosaicall Law) are publiely showne: and preserued by their Parents as a Testimonie of their vncorrupted Virginities.

There be here two Bishops, one of the Greekes, and another of the Latines. The Greekes haue diuers Churches, the principall that of S. Nicolas, (which giueth to the Hauen a name, and not far remoued) with a Monastery of Caloieros; for so are their Monkes called. On the other side of the Harbor, vpon the top of the Promontory, they haue another far lesse; with a Chappell dedicated to the Virgin Mary, called Madonna del Scopo, reputed effectresse of Miracles, and much inuocated by Sea-faring men. As the Duke of Venice doth marrie the Sea, so yearly doth this Bishop vpon the Twelue day baptize it: although with lesse state, yet with no lesse Ceremonie. The Venetians heere (as in Candy) doe ioyntly celebrate the Grecian Festiuals: either to gratifie, or else to auoid occasions of tumult. As for the Romane Catholike Bishop, hee hath his Cathedrall Church and residence within the Castle: where there is a Couent of of Franciscans. A mile and halfe off, in the sight of the Towne, on the side of a Mountaine, they haue another Monasterie, called the Annuntiata, where the Latins haue their burials, built in the yeere 1550. when vnder the ground there were found two Vrnes; one full of ashes, and the other of water, in an ancient Sepulchre. Vpon a square stone that couered the Tombe, was engrauen M. TVL. CICERO LAVE ET TV IEP TIA ANTONIA, and vnder the Vrne which containeth the ashes, AVE MAR. TVL. It being supposed that Cicero was there buried: peremptorily affirmed by a Traueller then present; reporting withall, that he saw this Epitaph:

Sepulchre of Cicero.

Adamus Tefellenius in suo lita.

The Iewes haue here a Synagogue, (of whom there are not many) one hauing married an English woman, and conuerted her to his Religion. They weare a blue riband about their hats for a distinction. The forraigne Merchants here resident, are for the most part English, who by their frequent deaths doe disproue the aire to be so salubrious as is reported; who haue their purchased interments in gardens: neither suffered by Greekes nor Latines to be buried in Churches. If a Stranger here take a fraught of a Venetian, and a Venetian ship be in Port, the Master thereof vpon a protestation, will enforce the Stranger to vnlode, and serue his owne turne therewith, if it be for his benefit. In this Iland there are fortie Villages.

On the fourteenth of September I embarked in another English ship, called the Great Exchange; first bound for Chios, and then for Tripolis. With a prosperous wind wee compassed a part of Morea: more famous by the name of Peloponnesus: shaped like a Plantan leafe, and embraced almost by the Corinthian and Saronian armes of the Mediterraneum: on the North adioyning by a narrow Isthmos to the rest of Greece; where stood that renowned Citie of Corinth. But I rather thinke, for their wholsome aduice, and expedite execution, in freeing the State of those monsters, called the Dogs of Iupiter, that is, internall Furies, and ministers of his vengeance. Alphonfus King of Naples, was wont to say merrily, that the Harpyes had left the Strophades to inhabite at Rome: intimating thereby the auarice of that Clergie. Wee left on the left hand two Rockes, at this day called the Strinaily: where onely liue a few Greeke Coloieros, that receiue their sustenance of almes from the neighbouring Ilands. There is in one a Spring of fresh water, supposed to haue his originall in Peloponnesus, and so to passe vnder the Sea, in regard of a certaine tree ouer-shadowing a little Lake, the leaues thereof (or like vnto those) being often found in this Fountaine, there growing none of that kind in the Iland. Wee thrust betweene Cape Malio and Cerigo, about fise miles distant; once Porphyrus, of his excellent Porphyr; but better knowne by the name of Cythera. An Iland consecrated vnto Venus. In the Towne rising two furlongs vp from the Hauen, stood her celebrated Temple (the most ancient that the Grecians had of that Goddesse,) and therein her Statue in complete armour. Out of this it is said, that Paris made a rape of Helena, or rather here first enioyed her in his returne from Sparta. The ruines are now to be seene, together with that of Uranias. The Iland is sixtie miles in compasse; it hath diuers Harbours, but those small and vn safe. A delightfull soyle, inhabited by Grecians, and subiect to the Venetians.

Strophades.

Mare Aegæum.

This is the first of the Aegean Sea: the largest arme of the Mediterraneum, extending to the Hellefont, and diuiding Greece from the lesser Asia. A Sea dangerous and troublesome to sayle through, in regard of the multitude of Rockes, and Ilands, euery where dispersed. Inso-much, that a man is prouerbi ally said to sayle in the Aegean Sea, that is, encumbred with difficulties. The Ilands of this Sea were anciently diuided into the Sporades, and Cyclades. The Sporades are those that lie scattered before Crete, and along the coast of Asia: The Cyclades, so called in that they lie in a circle.

Amongst the rest of the last named wee sayled by Delos, (now Diles) hemd with sharpe Rockes. The ruines of Apollus Temple are here yet to be seene, affoording faire Pillars of marble to such as will fetch them, and other stones of price, both in their nature, and for their workmanship; the whole Iland being now vninhabited.

Delos.

Three dayes after our embarkment (as quicke a passage as euer was heard of) we arriued at Sio, a famous Iland, called formerly Chios. Sixscore and fise miles it containeth in circuit, extending from South vnto North: the North and West quarters extraordinarie hilly. In the midst of the Iland is the Mountaine Aruis (now Amista) producing the best Greeke Wines. But the Lenticke tree, which is well-nigh onely proper to Sio, doth giue it the greatest renowne and endowment. These grow at the South end of the Iland, and on the leasurely ascending hills that neighbour the shoare. In heighth not much exceeding a man, leaued like a Seruire, and bearing a red berrie, but changing into blacke as it ripeneth.

In the beginning of August lanch they the rine, from whence the Masticke distilleth vntill

Masticke,

the end of September, at which time they gather it. None suffered to come amongst them during the interim, it being death to haue but a pound of new Masticke found in their houses. The wood thereof is excellent for tooth-picks. By reason of these trees they haue the best Honie of the world, which intermingled with water, is not much inferiour in relish to the costly Shurbets of Constantenople. The Iland produceth Corne and Oyle indifferent plentie. Some Silke they make, and some Cottons here grow, but short in worth vnto those of Smyrna. It hath also quarries of excellent Marble, and a certaine Greene earth, like the rust of Brasse, which the Turkes call, Terra Chia: but not that so reputed of by the ancient Physicians. The coast, especially towards the South, is set with small Watch-towers, which with smoake by day, and fire by night, doe giue knowledge vnto one another (and so to the vp-land) of suspected enemies. 10
The enuironing Sea being free from concealed Rockes, and consequently from perill. On the East side of the Iland, foure leagues distant from the Maine of Asia, from that part which was formerly called Ionia, stands the Citie of Sio, hauing a secure Hauen (though daily decaying, yet with a something dangerous entrance, streightned on the North side by the sea-ruined wall of the Mould, incroching neerer the Diamond, which stands on the other side of the Mouth, so called of the shape, rising out of the Sea, and supporting a Lanterne, erected by the Genoeses,) insomuch that ships of the greatest size doe anchor in the channell: but ours thrust in, when going ashore, I was friendly entertayned of the English Consull. The Towne stretcheth along the bottome of the Hauen, backt on the West with a rockie Mountaine, the building meane, the Streets no larger then Allies. Vpon the Castle hill there is a Bannia, which little declines 20 from the state of a Temple; paved with faire tables of marble, and supported with Columnes, containyng seuerall roomes, one hotter then another, with Conduits of hot water, and naturall Fountaines. On the North side of the Citie stands the Castle, ample, double walled, and enuironed with a deepe ditch: manned and inhabited by Turkes, and well stored with munition. This not many yeeres since was sodainely scaled in a night by the Florentines, who choaking the Artillerie, and driuing the Turkes into a corner, were now almost masters thereof: when a violent storme of wind, or rather of feare, enforced their companions to Sea, and them to a composition; which was, to depart with ensignes displayed. But the Gouvernour hauing gotten them into his power, caused their heads to be stricke off, and to be piled in mortar on the Castle wall; where as they yet remayne, but not vnreuenged. For the Captaine Bassa vpon his coming, strangled the perfidious Gouvernour, either for dishonouring the Turke in his breach of promise, or for his negligence in being so surprised. Since when, a watch-word euery minute of the night goeth about the walls, to testifie their vigilancie. Their Orchards are here enriched with excellent fruits; amongst the rest, with Oranges, Limons, Citrons, Pomgranats, and Figs. Vpon these Fig-trees they hang a kind of vsauoury Figge: out of whose corruption certaine small wormes are ingendred, which by biting the other (as they say) procure them to ripen. Partridges here are an ordinarie food; whereof they haue an incredible number, greater then ours, and differing in hue, the beake and feete red, the plume ash-colour. Many of them are kept tame; these feeding abroad all day, at night vpon a call returne to their seuerall owners. 30 Solyman the Magnificent, picking a quarrell with the Gouvernour for the Genoas, for a suspected correspondencie with the great Master of Malta, during those warres, and discouery of his designs; hauing besides neglected accustomed presents, with the payment of two yeeres tribute, sent Pial the Captaine Bassa to seize on the Iland; who on Easter day in the yeere 1566. presenting himselfe before Sio, with fourescore Gallies, so terrified the Inhabitants, that before they were summoned, they quietly surrendered both it and themselves to his disposal. The Gouvernour, together with the principall families, intending to depart for Italie, hee sent vnto Constantinople; and suffered the common people to stay or remoue at their liking: So that the whole Iland is now gouerned by Turkes, and defiled with their superstitions: yet haue the Christians their Churches, and vnreproued exercise of Religion. Besides impositions vpon 50 the land, and vpon commodities arising from thence, the Great Turke receiues yeerely for euery Christian about the age of sixteene, two hundred Aspers: but the husbandmen are exempted vntill marriage. The Inhabitants for the most part, are Turkes and Grecians; those liuing in command, and loosely: the other husbanding the earth, and exceeding them infinitely in number. They are in a manner releast of their thraldome, in that vsensible of it: well meriting the name of Merrie Greekes, when their leasure will tolerate. Neuer Sunday or holiday passes ouer without some publike meeting or other: where intermixed with women, they dance out the day, and with full crownd Cups enlengthen their iollitie. Frequented by foraine Merchants, Natolia affording great store of Chamolets and Grogerams, made about Angora; and a part brought hither, before such time as the Goats (whose haire they pull, white, long, 60 and soft) were destroyed by the late Rebels, consistyng for the most part of the expelled Inhabitants of burned Townes; who hauing lost all that they had, knew not better how to recouer their losses, then by preying vpon others; and so ioyned with their vndoers, led by Calender Ogly and Zid Arab: and growne to so fearefull a head, that the Great Turke (some say) had once a thought to haue forsaken the Imperiall Citie, they being fiftie thousand, but destitute of Artillerie.

Artillerie. After foyled by Morat Bassa the great Vizer, who for that service (but chiefly for the ouer-throw of Ianballat the Bassa of Aleppo, and naturall Lord of the rich Valley of Achille) was called by him his Father and Deliuerer. They besieged this Citie, and were by certayne English ships that lay in the Roade, vnfriendly saluted. In the end, burnt a part thereof, and tooke a rancome for sparing the rest. But their principall commoditie is Cotton wooll, which here groweth in great quantitie. With the seeds thereof they doe sow their Fields, as wee ours with Corne. The stalke no bigger than that of Wheate, but tough as a Beanes: the head round and bearded, in size and shape of a Medler: hard as a stone; which ripening breaks, and is deliuered of a white soft Bombast intermixed with seeds, which they separate with an instrument. You would thinke it strange, that so small a shell should contayne such a quantitie, but admire if you saw them stie it in their ships: enforcing a Sacke as bigge as a Wooll-packe into a roome, at the first too narrow for your arme, when extended by their instruments: so that oft they make the very decks to stretch therewith.

Taking with me a Greeke that could speake a little broken English, for my Interpreter: on the twentieth of Nouember, I did put my selfe into a Barke, Armado of Simo, a little Iland hard by the Rhodes (the Patron a Greeke, as the rest) being laden with Spunges. That night we came to an anchor, vnder the South-west side of Mitylen. This Iland, not past seuen miles distant from the Continent of Phrygia, containeth eight score and eight miles in circuit. The South and West parts Mountaynous and barren, the rest leuell and fruitfull, producing excellent Corne.

Mitylen or Lesbos.

On the one and twentieth of September, the Windes grew contrarie: and the Seas (though not rough) too rough to be brooked by so small a vessell, no bigger, and like in proportion to a Grauel-end Tilt-boate, yet rowing vnder the shelter of the Land, we entred the Gulfe of Calonius, they hoping to haue found some purchase about a ship cast there away but a little before; diuers of them leapt into the Sea, and diuing vnto the bottome, stayed there so long as if it had beene their habitable element. And without question, they exceed all others in that facultie, trayned thereunto from their child-hood, and hee the excellentest amongst them that can best performe it. Infomuch, that although worth nothing, he shall be proffered in marriage the best endowed, and most beautifull Virgin of their Iland. For they generally get their liuing by these Spunges, gathered from the sides of Rocks about the bottome of the Streights; sometimes fifteene fathome vnder water. A happie people, that liue according to nature, and want not much, in that they couet but little. Their apparell no other then linnen breeches, ouer that a smocke close girt vnto them with a Towell; putting on sometimes when they goe ashore, long sleeuelesse Coates of home-spun Cotton. Yet their Backs need not enuie their Bellies: Biscot, Oliues, Garlick and Onions being their principall sustenance.

Spunges.

Vpon the two and twentieth of September, the winds continuing contrarie, we but a little shortned our iourney. Descrying a small Saile that made towards vs, and thinking them to bee Pirats, we rowed backe by the shoare with all possible speed. In the euening we returned to the place that we fled from. When going ashore, one attyred like a woman, lay groueling on the Sand, whilst the rest skipt about him in a ring, muttering certayne words, which they would make me beleue were preualent Charmes to alter the weather to their purpose. On the three and twentieth wee continued weather-bound, remoouing after it grew darke vnto another anchorage; a custome they held, lest obserued by day from Sea or Shoare, they might by night be surprised. We lay in a little Bay, and vnder a Cliffe, where not one of vs but had his sleepe interrupted by fearfull dreames, he that watched affirming, that he had seene the Deuill, so that in a great dismay we put from shoare about mid-night. But whether it proceeded from the nature of the vaporious place, or that infested by some spirit, I leaue to decide. It is reported of a little Rockie Iland hard by, named formerly Aex, and sacred vnto Neptune (whereof we haue spoken something already) that none could sleepe vpon it for being disturbed with apparitions.

Charmes.

On the foure and twentieth the Sea grew calme, and wee proceeded on our voyage. Towards euening we went ashore on the firme of Asia for fresh water, and came that night vnto Tenedos. With the morning they renewed their labour, rowing along the chalkie shoare of the lesser Phrygia. Now against Cape Ianizari (desirous to see those celebrated fields, where once stood Ilium the glorie of Asia, that hath afforded to rarest wits so plentifull an argument) with much importunitie and promise of reward (it being a matter of danger) I got them to set mee ashore. When accompanied with two or three of them, we ascended the not high Promontorie, leuell aboue, and crowned with a ruined Citie, whose imperfect walls doe shew to the Sea their antiquitie. Wherein are many spacious Vaults and ample Cisternes for the receipt of water. The foundation hereof should seeme to haue beene laid by Constantine the Great, who intending to remoue the seate of his Empire, began here to build; which vpon a new resolution he erected at Byzantium. This is that famous Promontorie of Sigeum, honoured with the Sepulchre of Achilles, which Alexander (visiting it in his Asian expedition) couered with flowers, and ranne naked about it, as then the custome was in Funerals: sacrificing to the ghost of his Kinsman, whom he reputed most happy, that had such a Trumpet as Homer, to resound his virtues.

tues. In the Playne beyond vs (for wee durst not straggle farther from the shoare) wee beheld where once stood Ilium by him founded, called Troy promiscuously of Tros. Afterward feigned to haue beene walled about by Neptune and Phæbus, in the dayes of Laomedon. Who hath not heard of this glorious Citie, the former taking, the ten yeeres warre; and later, finall subuersion? which befell according to Eusebius, in the yeere of the World 2784. and second of Abdons gouernment of Israel. The ruines at this day not more then coniecturally extant.

Troy.

These Riuers, though now poore in Streames, are not yet so contemptible, as made by Bellonius, who perhaps mistaketh others for them, (there being sundrie Riuelets that descend from the Mountaynes) as by all likelihood he hath done the site of the ancient Troy. For the ruines that are now so perspicuous, and by him related, doe stand foure miles South-west from the a- 10 foresaid place, described by the Poets, and determined of by Geographers: seated on a hanging Hill, and too neere the nauall station to afford a Field for such dispersed Encounters, such long Pursuites, interception of Scouts, (then when the Troians had pitched neerer the Nauie) and executed stratagems, as is declared to haue hapned betweene the Sea and the Citie. These reliques doe sufficiently declare the greatnesse of the later, and not a little the excellencie. The walls (as Bellonius, but more largely, describeth it) consisting of great square stone, hard, blacke, and spongie, in diuers places yet standing supported on the inside with Pillars, about two yards distant one from another, and garnished once with many now ruined Turrets, contayning a confusion of throwne-downe buildings, with ample Cisternes for the receipt of Raine, it being seated on a sandie soile, and altogether destitute of Fountaynes. Foundations here are of a Christian 20 Temple, and two Towers of Marble, that haue better resisted the furie of Time; the one on the top of the Hill, and the other neerer the Sea in the Valley. From the wall of the Citie, another extendeth (supported with Buttresses, partly standing, and partly throwne downe) well-nigh vnto Ida, and then turning, is said to reach to the Gulfs of Satelia, about twentie miles distant. Halfe a mile off, and West off these Ruines, opposing Tenedos, are the hot water Baths, heretofore adorned, and neighboured with magnificent buildings; the way thither inclosed, as it were, with Sepulchres of Marble (many of the like being about the Citie, both of Greeks and Latins, as appeareth by the seuerall Characters. Two Baths there be; the one choked with rubbidge, the other yet in vse, though vnder a simple couerture. But now the ruines beare not altogether that forme, lessened daily by the Turkes, who carried the Pillars and stones vnto Constantinople, to 30 adorne the buildings of the Great Bassas, as they now doe from Cyzicus. This notable remainder of so noble a Citie was once a small Village of the Ilians. For the Ilians, after the destruction of that famous Ilium, often shifting the seate of the new, here fixt it at last, as is said, by the aduice of an Oracle, contayning one onely contemptible Temple, dedicated to Minerua, at such time as Alexander came thither, who then offered vp his shield, and tooke downe another (that which he after vsed in his fights) enriching the Temple with gifts, and honouring the Towne with his Name, exempting it from tribute, and determining vpon his returne to erect in it a sumptuous Temple, to institute sacred Games, and to make it a great Citie. But Alexander dying, Lysimachus tooke vpon him that care, who immured it with a wall, contayning fortie furlongs in circuit, yet suffered it to retayne the name of Alexandria. After it became a Colonie, 40 and an Vniuersitie of the Romanes, of no meane reputation. Fimbria the Questor, hauing in a sedition slaine the Consul Valerius Flaccus in Bithynia, and making himselfe Captaine of the Roman Armie, the Citizens refusing to receiue him, as a Robber and a Rebell, besieged this Citie, and in eleuen dayes tooke it; who boasted, that he in eleuen dayes had done that, which Agamemnon with five hundred saile of ships and the whole Greeke Nation, could hardly accomplish in ten yeeres. To whom an Ilian answered, That they wanted a Hector to defend them. Pieces of ruines, throughout these Playnes, lye euery where scattered.

Lemnos.

Terra Sigillata.

Returning againe to our Barke, hard by on the left hand left we Imbrius, now called Lembro, once sacred to Mercurie; and not farre beyond Lemnos, famous for the fabulous fall of Vulcan. Whereupon, and no maruell, he euer after halted. The Grecians there now inhabiting, doe relate, that he brake his Thigh with a fall from a Horse on the side of a Hill, which at this day beareth his name: the Earth in that place thereupon receiuing those excellent vertues of curing of wounds, stopping of fluxes, expulsi- 50 ng poysons, &c. now called Terra Sigillata, in that sealed, and there onely gathered. This Hill lyeth South of the ruines of that ancient Hephestia, which gaue a name vnto Vulcan, and about three sight-shots remoued. Betweene which standeth Sotira, a little Chappell, frequented by the Greeke Coloieros vpon the sixt of August; where they begin their Orisons, and from thence ascend the Mountayne to open the veine from whence they produce it: which they doe with great preparations and solemnities, accompanied with the principall Turkes of the Iland. That which couereth it, being remoued by the labour of well-nigh fiftie Pioners, the Priests take out as much as the Cadee doth thinke for that yeere sufficient 60 (lest the price should abate by reason of the abundance) to whom they deliuer it; and then close it vp in such sort, as the place where they digged it, is not to bee discerned; the veine discovered, this precious Earth, as they say, doth arise like the casting vp of Wormes, and that only during a part of that day: so that it is to be supposed, that they gather as much as the same will afford

foord them. Certayne bags thereof are sent to the Great Turke, the rest they sell (of which I haue seene many Cups at Constantinople:) but that which is sold to the Merchants, is made into little Pellers, and sealed with the Turkish Character: the ceremonies in the gathering hereof were first inducted by the Venetians.

And now we entred the Hellepont, so called of Helle, the Daughter of Athamas King of Thebes, and Sister of Phryxus; who, flying the stratagems of their step-mother Ino, was drowned therein. Bounded on the left hand with the Thracian Chersonesus (vulgarly called Saint Georges Arme) a Peninsula pointing to the South-west, whereon stood the Sepulchre of Hecuba, called Cynossoma, slaine by them, and buried in the aforesaid Promontorie. On the right hand, the 10 Hellepont is confined with the lesser Phrygia, diuiding Europe from Asia, in sundrie places not about a mile broad, and in length about fortie, (now called the Channell of Constantinople) and hauing a Current that setteth into the Egeum: a trade-wind blowing either vp or downe, which when contrarie to the streame, doth exceedingly incense it. The Mountaynes on each side are clothed with Pines, from whence much Pitch is extracted. Three leagues about the entrance, and at the narrowest of this Streight, stand Sestos and Abydos; opposite to each other, formerly famous for the vnfortunate loues of Hero and Leander, drowned in the vncomp. sio- nate Surges, and sung by Musaeus. Here Xerxes, whose populous Armie drunke Rivers drie, and made Mountaynes circumnauigable, is said to haue past ouer into Greece, vpon a Bridge of Boats; which when broken by Tempests, he caused the Sea to be beaten (as if sensible) with three hun- dred stripes, and Fetters to be throwne therein; forbidding any to sacrifice vnto Neptune.

20 Abydos stands in Asia, which the Milesians first founded, by the permission of Gyges King of Lydia, vnto whom all the Countrey was subiect. Taken by the Turke in the reigne of Orchamus. Sestos stands in Europe, though neuer great, yet strongly built, and once the principall Citie of Chersonesus: afterward defaced, a Castle was built in the roome thereof. Abydos is seated vpon a low leuell; and Sestos on the side of a Mountayne, yet descending to the Sea: both bordering the same with their Castles; whereof the former is foure square, the other triangular. These at this day are vulgarly called the Castles. All ships are suffered to enter, that by their multitude and appointment doe threaten no inuasion; but not to returne without search and permission, of which we shall speake in the processe of our Iournall. A little beyond wee past by the ruines of a Castle, which the Turkish Carmasals and Gallies still sayling by, salute with their Ordnance; 30 it being the first Fort by them taken in Europe, who call it Zembenic. That night wee came to Callipoly, some twentie miles distant, and thrust into a little Hauen North of the Towne, but only capable of small Vessels.

40 Callipoly is a Citie of Chersonesus, seated at the bottome of a Bay; so shallow, that ships doe there vsually anchor, as throughout the whole Hellepont. Callipolis maketh a faire shew a-farre off; but entred, is nothing lesse then it promised: a part thereof possessing the shoare, and the rest the rising of the Mountayne: vnwalled, and without either Citadell or Fortresse. Along the shoare, there are diuers drie stations for Gallies. On the South side of the Citie in a little Playne, are sundrie round Hills; the Sepulchres, as they say, of certayne Thracian Kings: for such was the ancient custome of buriall. The Countrey about is Champan, and not barren, but rarely inhabited. Here is a Ferrie for transportation into Asia. Greekes and Iewes, together with the Turkes, doe inhabit the Towne, and are admitted their Churches and Synagogues. Here also is a Monasterie of Romish Friars, of the Order of Saint Augustine; one of them being at this time (but not dwelling in the Couent) the Franke Consul; whose office is to dispatch, and discharge the dues of all Christians ships, not subiect to the Grand Signior, and admitted free trading below at the Castles. To his house I repayed, with hope of some refreshment after my wearisome voyage: but hee then from home, I was forced to returne to my water-bed; there being no Innes for entertainment throughout inhospitall Turkie: yet is this Towne well fur- nished with all sorts of prouision. What is here sold by the Greeks, you may agree for on a 50 price: but the Turks will receiue your money, and giue you a quantitie for it, according to their owne arbitrement; but truly enough, and rather exceeding, then short of your expectation. For two or three Aspers (whereof twentie are neere vpon a shilling) a Butcher will cut off as much Mutton (for they diuide it not into ioynts) as will well satisfie three, though hungrie; which they carrie to the Cookes, who make no more adoe, but slicing it into little Gobbets, pricke it on a Prog of Iron, and hang it in a Fornace. Derided and flurled at by diuers of the baser people, at night we returned to our Barke. And departing the next morning, were forthwith met with a contrarie winde, which droue vs to the shelter of a Rocke not farre from the Towne: where we abode all that day, and the night ensuing: they opening and washing part of their Sponges, which laid on the shoare, by the bulke you would haue thought to haue beene a freight for a Pin- nace; which stued into Sackes, when wet, were bestowed vnder the side Benches and crosse 60 Bankes of this little Vessell.

On the seuen and twentieth of September, before day wee left the shoare, and after a while entred the Proponticke Sea: confined with Thrace on the one side, and with Bithynia on the o- ther. Hauing climbed the Mountayne steepe towards the Sea, wee got to the Towne, and bought bought vs some victuals, at night we returned to our Boate, which lay in an obscure Bay; where they spent the next day in washing the residue of their Sponges, whilst I and my Interpreter spent our times on the top of the Mountayne in the Vineyards, not well pleased with this their delay, now more affecting their ease then when without the Hellepont: being rid of that feare (for no Pirat dare venter to come within the Castles) which had quickned their expedition. In the euening we descended, where we found the Patron lying on his backe vpon a Rocke, all dropping wet: speechlesse, and struggling with death to our seeming. The Greekes together by the eares, euery one with his fellow; some in the Boate, and some vpon the Shoare. Amongst the rest there was a blinde man, who had married a yong wife, that would not let him lie with her; and thereupon had vnder-taken this iourney to complaine vnto the Patriarch: hee hearing 10 his brother crie out at the receipt of a blow; guided to the place by the noise, and thinking with his staffe to haue stricke the striker; laid it on with such a force, that meeting with nothing but Ayre, and not able to recouer himselfe, he fell into the Sea: and with much difficultie was preserued from drowning. The clamour increased with their contentions, and anon the Patrone starting vp, as if of a sodaine restored to life; like a mad man skips into the Boate, and drawing a Turkish Cymiter, beginneth to lay about him (thinking that his Vessell had beene surprized by Pirats,) when they all leapt into the Sea; and diuing vnder water like so many Diue-dappers, ascended without the reach of his furie. Leaping ashore, hee pursues my Greeke, whom feare had made too nimble for him; mounting a steepe Cliffe, which at another time hee could haue hardly ascended. Then turning vpon me onely armed with stones, as God would haue it, hee 20 stumbled by the way, and there laid like a stone for two houres together; that which had made them so quarrellsome being now the Peace-maker, hauing cast the fetters of sleepe vpon their distemperatures. For it beeing proclaimed death to bring Wine vnto Constantinople, and they loth to powre such good Liquor into the Sea, had made their bellies the ouer-charged Vessels. When the Patron awaked, and was informed by my Greeke how he had vsed me, and withall of my resolution (which was rather to retyre vnto the Towne, and there expect a passage, than to commit my safetie vnto such people) he came vnto me, and kissed me, as did the rest of his companions, (a testimonie amongst them of good-will and fidelitie) and so enforced mee aboard. The winds the next day blew fresh and fauourable. That night wee came to anchor a little below the seuen Towers: and betimes in the morning arriued at the Custome-house. Then cros- 30 sing the Hauen I landed at Galata, and so ascended the Vines of Pena; where by Sir Thomas Glouer, Lord Embassador for the King, I was freely entertayned: abiding in his house almost for the space of foure monethes. Of whom without Ingratitude and Detraction I cannot but make an honourable mention.

§. II.

Constantinople described, the Turkes Seraglio, Pera; the Turkish Empire and Government: Some Obseruations of the Turkish Religion.

His Citie by destinie appointed, and by nature seated for Soueraigntie, was first the seat of the Romane Emperors, then of the Greeke, as now it is of the Turkish: built by Constantine the Sonne of Helena, and lost by Constantine the Sonne of another Helena (a Gregorie then Bishop, whose first Bishop was a Gregorie) to Mahomet the second, in the yeare 1453. with the slaughter of her people, and destruction of her magnificent structures. The like may bee obserued of the Romane Emperours, whose first was Augustus, and whose last was Augustulus.

It stands on a Cape of Land neere the entrance of the Bosphorus. In forme triangular, on the East-side washed with the same, and on the North-side with the Hauen, adioyning on the West to the Continent. Walled with bricke and stone, intermixed orderly, hauing foure and twentie gates and posternes; whereof fise doe regard the Land, and nineteene the water, being about thirteene miles in circumference. Than this there is hardly in nature a more delicate Obiect, if beheld from the Sea or adioyning Mountaines; the loftie and beautifull Cypresse Trees so intermixed with the buildings, that it seemeth to present a Citie in a Wood to the pleased beholders. Whose seuen aspiring heads (for on so many hils and no more, they say it is seated) are most of them crowned with magnificent Mosques, all of white Marble, round in forme, and coupled aboue; being finished on the top with gilded Spires, that reflect the beames they re- 60 ceive with a maruellous splendor; some hauing two, some foure, some sixe adioyning Turrets, exceeding high, and exceeding slender; Tarraft aloft on the out-side like the mayne top of a ship, and that in seuerall places equally distant, from whence the Tasilmanni with elated voices (for they vse no Bels) doe congregate the people, pronouncing this Arabicke Sentence, La Illah Il-

lella Muhemet re sul Allah: viz. There is but one God, and Mahomet his Prophet. No Mosque can haue more then one of these Turrets, if not built by an Emperour. But that of Sancta Sophia, once a Christian Temple, (twise burnt, and happily, in that so sumptuously re-edified by the Emperour Iustinian) exceedeth not onely the rest, by whose patterne they were framed, but all other Fabrickes whatsoeuer throughout the whole Vniuerse. A long labour it were to describe it exactly, and hauing done, my eies haue seene it, would but condemne my defectiue Relation. The 10 principall part thereof riseth in an Ouall, surrounded with Pillars, admirable for their proportion, matter and workmanship. Ouer those others, through which ample Galleries, curiously paved, and arched aboue, haue their prospect into the Temple, dignified with the presence of Christian Emperours at the time of Diuine Seruice, ascended by them on Horse-backe. The rooffe compact, and adorned with Mosaike Painting: an Antique kind of worke, composed of little square pieces of Marble; gilded and coloured according to the place that they are to assume in the figure or ground, which set together, as if embossed, present an vnexpressible stateliness, and are of a maruellous durance: numbred by Pancirollus amongst things that are lost, but diuers in Italie at this day excell in that kind, yet make the particles of Clay, gilt, and coloured before they be neiled by the fire. The rest of the Church, though of another proportion, doth ioyn to this with a certaine harmonie. The sides and floore all flagged with excellent Marble, vaulted vnderneath, and contayning large Cisternes, replenished with water from an Aquæduct. Before the entrance, there is a goodly Portico; where the Christians that visit it vpon curiositie, as well as the Turkes, doe leaue their shooes before they doe enter. Within on the left hand, there is a Pillar couered with Copper, euer sweating, (I know not why, vnlesse in beeing past through by some Conduit) which the Turkes wipe off with their Handkerchers, through a vaine Superstition perswaded, that it is of sacred and soueraigne vertue. The doores are curiously cut through, and plated; the wood of one of them fained to be of the Arke of Noe, and therefore left bare in some places to be killed by the deuouter people. Enagrius that liued a thousand yeares since, affirmeth this Temple to haue bene from East vnto West, two hundred and threescore feet long, and in height one hundred and fourescore: and Antonius Menauinus, that in the dayes of Baiazet, it contayned at once sixe and thirtie thousand Turkes. Perhaps the ancient Fabricke then standing entire, whereof this now remayning, was little more then the Chancell. Better to be beleued then Bellonius a moderne eye-witnesse, who reports that the doores thereof are in number equall to the dayes of the yeare: whereas if it hath five, it hath more by one, then by me was discerned. Mahomet the Great, vpon the taking of the Citie, threw downe the Altars, defaced the Images, (of admirable workmanship, and infinite in number) conuerting it into a Mosque. To euery one of these principal Mosques belong publike Bagnios, Hospitals, with lodgings for Santons, and Ecclesiasticall persons, beeing endowed with competent Reuenues. The interior are built for the most part square, many penthouse with open Galleries where they accustomed to pray at times extraordinarie: there being in all (comprehending Pera, Scutari, and the Buildings that border the Bosphorus) about the number of eight thousand.

40 But of this Sophia, is almost euery other Friday frequented by the Sultan, beeing neere vnto the fore-front of his Seraglio, which possesseth the extremest point of the North-east Angle, where formerly stood the ancient Byzantium; diuided from the rest of the Citie by a loftie wall, contayning three miles in circuit; and comprehending goodly Groues of Cypresses intermixed with Plaines, delicate Gardens, artificiall Fountaines, all varietie of fruit-trees, and what not rare: Luxurie being the Steward, and the Treasure vnexhaustable. The proud Palace of the Tyrant doth open to the South, hauing a loftie Gate-house without lights on the out-side, and ingrauen with Arabicke Characters, set forth with Gold and Azure all of white Marble. This leadeth into a spacious Court three hundred yards long, and about halfe as wide, on the left side whereof stands the round of an ancient Chappell, contayning the Armes that were taken from the Grecians, in the subuersion of this Citie; and at the far end of this Court a second Gate, hung with Shields and Cymiters, doth leade into another full of tall Cypresse Trees, lesse large yet not by much then the former. The Cloysters about it, leade aboue, and paved with stone, the Rooffe supported with Columnes of Marble hauing Copper Chapters, and Bases. On the left hand the Diuano is kept; where the Bassas of the Port doe administer Iustice, on that side confined with humble buildings, beyond which Court on the right hand there is a street of Kitchens: and on the left is the Stable, large enough for five hundred Horse; where there is now to be seene a Mule so admirably streakt, and dappled with white and blacke, and in such due proportion, as if a Painter had done it, not to imitate Nature, but to please the Eye, and expresse li- Curiositie. Out of this second Court there is a passage into a third, not by Christians ordinarily to be entred, surrounded with the Royall Buildings, which though perhaps they come short of the Italian, for contriement and finenesse of workmanship; yet not in costely curiousnesse, matter, and amplitude. Betweene the East wall (which also serueth for a Wall to the Citie) and the water, a sort of terrible Ordnance are planted, which threat destruction to such as by Sea shall attempt a violent entrie or prohibited passage: and without on the North-side stands the Sultans Cabinet, in forme of a sumptuous Sommer House, hauing a priuate passage made for the time, time, of waxed Linnen, from his Serraglio: where he often solaceth himselfe, with the various Obiects of the Hauē, and from thence takes Barge to passe vnto the delightfull places of the adioyning Asia. This Palace howsoever enlarged by the Ottomans, was first erected by Iustinus, who named it Sophia of the Emperesse.

Now next to these the Ottoman Mausoleas doe require their regard, built all of white Marble round in forme, and coupled on the top; hauing stately Porches, within each is the Tombe of a seuerall Sultan, with the Tombes of his Children, that either haue dyed before him, or haue after beene strangled by their tyrannicall Brethren, according to the Turkish pietie. The Tombes nor longer, nor larger then fitting the included bodies, each of one stone; higher at the head then feet, and compact aboue: without other ornament then couers of Greene, and Tur- 10 bants laid vpon the vpper ends, at the foure corners of those of the Sultans, there stand foure Tapers of Waxe as bigge as a thigh, but not lighted. The floores of the Monuments are spread with Carpets: and some there are that doe continually liue therein, performing such duties of Prayers and Lamentations, as agreeth to their customes; at certaine times besprinkled also with the teares of their Off-spring.

The Tower.
Other Seraglios.

The South-east Angle of this Citie is taken vp by the seuen Towers, called anciently Ianicula: employed, as the Tower of London, for a Store-house of the Sultans Treasure, and Munition, being also a Prison for capitall Offenders. We omit to speake of the great mens Serraglios; that of the women belonging to the deceased Emperours; and that of the Virgins: the Alberges of Ianizaries; the seuerall Seminaries of Spachies and Giamoglans: the Besestans (where finer sorts of Commodities are sold,) Hospitals; Markets of men and women, &c. since hereafter we are to treat of most of their Orders; the buildings themselues not meriting a particular description: conuerting our Discourse to those few remainders of many Antiquities, whereof the Aquæduct made by the Emperour Valentinian, and retayning his name, doth principally challenge remembrance. This hath his heads neere to the Blacke Sea, not farre from a Village called Domuz-dere, of the abundance of wilde Hogges thereabout, the place being woodie and mountaynous, where many Springs are gathered together, and at sundry places doe ioyntly fall into great round Cisternes, from thence conueyed to conioyne with others (amongst which, as supposed, is the Brooke Cydarius) led sometimes vnder the Earth, now along the leuell, then vpon mightie Arches ouer profound Valleyes, from Hill to Hill, for the space wel-nigh of thirtie miles, vntill arriuing at the Citie, and surmounting the same, it falleth at length as from a head-long Cataract into an ample Cisterne, supported with neere two hundred Pillars of Marble; and is from thence by Conduits conducted vnto their publike vses. This was repayed by Solyman the Great, great-grand-father of this now reigning Achmet: whose wishes and endeauours are said to haue aymed at three things; which were, the re-edifying of Ponte Piccolo, and Ponte Grande, (which crosse two armes of the Sea, and the restoring of this Aquæduct; these he accomplished: but the third, which was the expugnation of Vienna, he could neuer accomplish. Not farre from the Temple of Sancta Sophia, there is a spacious place surrounded with buildings, like to that of Smith-field; and anciently called the Hippodrom, for that there they exhibited their Horse-races, as now Atmidan by the Turkes, a word of like signification, where the Spachies 40 of the Court play euery Friday at Giocho di Canni; which is no other then Prison Bace vpon Horse-backe, hitting one another with Darts, as the other doe with their hands; which they neuer throw Counter but at the backe of the Flyer. Nor is it the least contentment to the Christian to behold the terrible falls that they often get (not rarely costing them their liues) whilst by the wreathing of their bodies, or a too hastie turne, they seeke to auoide the Pursuer; and sometimes the Darts not lighting in iest on their naked neckes, and reuered faces. In this place there standeth a stately Hieroglyphicall Obeliske of Theban Marble.

A Brazen Columnne and an Obelisk are omitted.

And in Aurathasar (that is, the Market of Women) there is an Historiall Columnne to bee ascended within, farre surpassing both Tartars, and that of Antoninus, which I haue seene in Rome, the Workman hauing so proportioned the Figures, that the highest and lowest appeare of owne bignesse. 50

And right against the Mansion of the Germane Emperours Embassador (who onely is suffered to lodge within the Citie) stands the Columnne of Constantine, about the top whereof, you may reade this Distichon, ΤΟ ΘΕΙΟΝ ΕΡΤΟΝ ΕΝΘΑΛΕ ΦΘΑΡΕΝ ΧΡΝΟΝ ΝΕΟΙ ΜΑΝΟΥΗΛ ΕΥΣΕΒΗΣ ΑΥΤΟΚΡΑΤΩΡ. These are all the Remaines that are left (or all that are by the Christians to be seene, besides the Relikes of the Palace of Constantine, now made a Stable for wilde beasts) of so many goodly buildings, and from all parts congested Antiquities, wherewith this Soueraigne Citie was in times past so adorned: and with them are their memories perished. For not a Greeke can satisfie the Inquirer in the History of their owne Calamities. So supine negligent are they, or perhaps so wise as of passed euils to endeauour a forgetfulness. 60
But to say something of Constantinople in generall: I thinke there is not in the World an Obiect that promiseth so much a farre off to the beholders, and entred, so deceiueth the expectation. The best of their priuate buildings, inferiour to the more contemptible sort of ours. For the Turkes are nothing curious of their houses, not onely for that their Possessions are not hereditary; but but esteeming it an egregious folly to erect such sumptuous Habitations, as if hee were to live for euer. None being about two stories high, some of rough stone, some of timber, some of Sunne-dryed bricke: their Roofes but rising a little, covered with such Tiles as are layd on the Ridges of ours, one contrary to another; yet some part of some of them flat, (those belonging to men of principall degree) planted with flowers and trees of the rarest colours, and productions. Many vacant places there are in the Citie, and many rowes of buildings, consisting of shops onely, all belonging to the Grand Signior, who lets them out vnto Tradesmen; into which their wiues come not: prohibited by Mahomet that women should buy or sell (though now not seldome they doe) or shew themselves publikely. The streets for the most part are exceeding narrow; some raised on the sides for more cleanliness: many having steep ascents, in many places bounded with long dead walls, belonging to great mens Serraglios; so negligent are they of exterior garnishings. All the suburbs that this Citie hath, lie without the gate of Adrinople, adioyning to the North-west angle thereof, and stretching along the vppermost of the Hauen; where within a stately Monument, there standeth a Tombe of principall repute in the Mahometan deuotion: the Sepulchre of Inpe Sultan a Santon of theirs, called vulgarly and ridiculously, the Sepulchre of Iob. To which the Captaine Bassa doth repaire before he set forth, and at his returne, there performing appointed orations and ceremonies: and vpon a victorie obtayned, is obliged to visite the same euery morning and euening for the space of three weekes. Before this, in a Cypresse groue, there standeth a Scaffold, where the new Sultans are girt with a sword, by the hands of the Mufti their principall Prelate, with diuers solemnities.

Now speake wee of the Hauen, rather deuouring then encreased by a little Riuer, called formerly Barbyzes, now by the Greekes, Chartaricon, and Chay by the Turkes: much frequented by fowle, and rigorously preferred for the Grand Signiors pleasure, who ordinarily hawkes thereon; insomuch that a seruant of my Lord Embassadors was so beaten, for presuming to shoote there, that shortly after he died (as it is thought) of the blowes. This falleth into the West extent of the Hauen; throughout the world the fairest, the safest, the most profitable. So conueniently profound, that the greatest ships may lay their sides to the sides thereof, for the more easie receipt, or discharge of their burthen. The mouth of it is land-lockt by the opposite Asia, opening Eastward into the Thracian Bosphorus, which by a long narrow channell stretching North and South, ioynes the blacke and white Seas: so call they the Seas North and South of the Bosphorus. So that no wind bloweth, which brings not in some shipping or other, to the furnishing of this Citie; hauing (as hath beene said before) on the left hand the Euxine Sea, with the Lake of Meotis, inhabited about by multitudes of Nations, and entred into by many navigable Riuers; whereby whatsoever groweth, or is nourished in those farre distant Countries, is easily transported vnto it: on the right hand Propontis, and the Mid-land Sea, (bordered with Natolia, Syria, Egypt, Africa, Spaine, France, Italie, Greece, and Dalmatia, with their fruitfull Islands) and without, the great Ocean. Insomuch as it seemeth by the opportunitie of navigation to participate with their seuerall commodities, daily brought hither by forrainers; seated of it selfe in a Countrey, though not altogether barren, yet not sufficient to sustaine the Inhabitants. Moldania and Valachia doe serue them with Beeues and Muttons; and as for Fish, the adioyning Seas yeeld store and variety, as the concaues of the Rockes doe salt, white, pure, and solid, made onely by the labour of the surges. Subiect it hath beene to sundrie horrible combustions: vnto that which befell in the dayes of Leo, and not long after in the reigne of Basilicus, (when amongst other infinite losses that famous Librarie perished, contayning an hundred and twentie thousand volumes; wherein the inward skin of a Dragon the Odysses and Iliads of Homer were written:) and to diuers others, this last, though lesse, may be added, which hapned on the fourteenth of October, in the yeere 1607. in which three thousand houses were burnt to their foundations. Nor is it to be maruelled at: the Citizens themselues not daring to quench the fire that burneth their owne houses, or by pulling some downe to preserve the remaynder: an office that belongeth to the Aga, and his Janizaries; who nothing quicke in their assistance, doe often for spite or pillage, beate downe such buildings as are farthest remoound from danger. So that the mischiete is not onely wished for the bootie, but prolonged; and not seldome they themselues set the Iewes houses on fire: who made warie by the example, are now furnished of arched vaults, for the safeguard of their goods, which are not to bee violated by the flame. The fall of houses heretofore by terrible and long-lasting earthquakes, now by negligence in repaying, tempests, and the matter that they consist of, is heere also most frequent, many (as hath beene said) being built of Sun-dried bricke. And although it enioyes a delicate aire, and serene skies, euen during the Winter, when the East, the West, or South wind bloweth; yet the boysterous Tramontana, that from the blacke Sea doth sweepe his blacke substance, heere most violently rages, bringing often with it such stormes of snow, that in September I haue seene the then flourishing trees so ouercharged therewith, that their branches haue broken, accompanied with bitter frosts, which dissoluing, resolute therewith the vnfirm matter that sustaynes them. Lastly, the plague (either hapning through the vice of the Clime, or of those misbeleeuers, or hither brought by the many frequenting Nations) for the most part miserably infesteth this Citie, encreased by the superstition of the Mahometans.

On the other side of the Hauen (continually crossed by multitudes of little Boats, called Permagies, and rowed for the most part by Egyptians) stands the Citie of Galata, so called, as some write of the Gauls, once the masters thereof, or as others will haue it, of Galac, which signifieth Milke, for that there the Greekes kept their cattell; as Pera (another name thereof,) which signifieth Beyond, in that on the other side of the Hauen; but more anciently Cornu Byzantium. Infirmely walled, yet great, if you comprehend the suburbs therewith, extending from along the shoare to the vpper tops of the Mountaines, surpassing Constantinople in her loftie buildings built by the Genoas; who bought it of the Greeke Emperours (in their declining estate, posselt of little little more then the regal Citie, and title; for the most part sustayned by forraigne contributions) and by them surrendred vnto Mahomet the Great, the day after the sacking of Constantinople. At the West end thereof the Grand Signiors Gallies haue a drie station: and at the East end right against the point of his Serraglio, called Tophana and Fundacle, lies a number of great Ordnance vnplanted; most of them the spoyle of Christian Cities and Fortresses, as may appeare by their inscriptions, and Impreses; and many of them of an incredible greatnesse.

Now, right against the mouth of the Hauens, on the other side of the Bosphorus, stands Scutari, a Towne of Bythinia. Scutari sometimes belonged to Chalcedon, once a free Citie, and lea-10 ted a little below it: so called of a Brooke, now without a name, that runs into Propontis; called also, The Citie of the Blind; because of the foolish Megarians that built it. Famous for the fourth generall Councell there holden; and now onely shewing a part of her ruines.

The blacke Sea is distant some fiftene miles from Constantinople, so named of his blacke ef-20 fects, or for the thicke mists that vsually hang ouer it.

Here the Turke prohibiteth forrainers to trafficke, there being no other passage there into but by Riuers: neither this passage of Bosphorus, as some coniecture; hath beene alwayes: but forced by the violence of streames that fell into the ouer-charged Euxine. Where it rusheth into the Bosphorus there are two Rockes, that formerly bare the names of Cyanea and Sympligades: which for that so neere, as many times appearing but as one, they were fayned by the Poets vnstable, and at sundry times to iustle each other. Here vpon the top of a Rocke, supposed by 30 some to be one of these, yet too farre remoued from a fellow to be so, stands a Pillar of white marble, called vulgarly, The Pillar of Pompey. Vpon the shoare there is an high Lanterne, large enough at the top, to contayne about threescore persons, which by night directeth the Saylor into the entrance of the Bosphorus.

The Bosphorus setteth with a strong current into Propontis, and is in length, about twentie 40 miles; where broadest, a mile; and in two places, but halfe a mile ouer. So called, for that Oxen accustomed to swim from the one side to the other. One of those two fore-mentioned Streights lies before Constantinople; the other, fife miles aboue and a halfe, where on Europe side there standeth a Castle, called formerly Damalis, and now, The Blacke Tower.

The Turkish Empire is the greatest that is, or perhaps that euer was from the beginning. For 50 first, the European part thereof extendeth westward vnto the Archdukes of Austria, Dominions, stretching to the Adriatick Sea by the confines of Ragusa, bounded on the South with the Mediterraneum; on the East, with Aegeum, Propontis, and Pontus, euen to Theodosia, a Citie of the Scythian Chersonesus; and on the North almost to Russia and Polonia; contayning Romania, Bulgaria, Serua, Rascia, the tributarie principalities of Valachia and Moldania; the greater part of Hungary, Bosna, Albania, Macedon, Epirus, all Grecia and Peleponnesus; all the fruitfull Ilands of the Aegean Sea: Ragusa payes for her libertie; nor is Candie, Zant, or Cephalania held without Presents. But what is this, compared to her Asian Territories: within which, all Natolia is comprised; on three sides embraced with the Aegean, Euxine, and Cilician Seas; contayning the Prouinces of Pontus, Galatia, Bythinia, Phrygia, Lycia, Pamphilia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and the les-60 ser Armenia; beyond which, Colchis stretching Northward to Cataie, and bounded on the East with the Countrey of the Georgians, whereof the Turkes possesse not a little. A great part it also contayneth of the greater Armenia: all Syria (in which Celosyria, Phoenicia, and Palestine;) Babylonia and Mesopotamia: Arabia felix, which stretcheth out into the South Sea, interposing the Persian and Arabian Gulfes, doe bow to that Soueraigntie: so doe the Inhabitants of Petrea, and Deserta; such I meane, as haue knowne habitations. In Africa it extendeth all along the coasts of the Mediterraneum, euen from the red Sea to Acrath, a Citie of Mauritania (except some few places posselt by the Spaniard) wherein is the Countrey of the Troglodites, the miraculously fertile Kingdome of Egypt, Tripoly in Barbarie, the Kingdome of Tunis, and Citie of the Argers with her Territories, with the tributarie Kingdomes of Fesse and Morocco.
 70 To this adde Cyprus, Rhodes, and all the fertile Ilands of the mid-land Sea, that lie East of Candie. Thus great at this day is the Ottoman Empire: but too great for it are their assumed Titles: as God on earth, Shadow of God, Sole Monarch of the World, King of Kings, Commander of all that can be commanded, Soueraigne of the most noble Families of Persia and Armenia, Possessor of the holy Cities of Meccha and Ierusalem, Lord of the blacke and white Seas, Sultan of Babylon, and so proceeding with a repetition of their seuerall Kingdomes. Like swelling attributes gaue this now reigning Sultan to our Soueraigne, in a Letter writ lately, which I will insert for the strangenesse: Vnto the most glorious and most mightie King Iames, one of the great Lords of the creation of Iesus, and most laudable amongst all the Princes of the Nation of Messia, a Iudge of all debates and differences of the people of Nazarets, Possessor of great Maiestie, riches, and of glorie, 80 a Iudge of the most great Kings of England. &c. farcing his Letter with like fustian, calling his owne Court, Our most happie and shining Port, a Port of refuge for the World: and subscribing, From our Imperiall residence of Constantinople, most strongly and mightily guarded: Yet in his owne stile more modest, contayning no more then Sultan Achmet Chan, Sonne to Mahomet Chan most innincible.

HONDIVS his Map of the Turkish Empire.

But the barbarous policie whereby this tyrannie is sustayned, doth differ from all other : guided by the heads, and strengthened by the hands of his slaves, who thinke it as great an honour to be so, as they doe with vs that serue in the Courts of Princes : the Naturall Turke (to be so called a reproach) being rarely employed in command or seruice : amongst whom there is no Nobilitie of blood, no knowne parentage, kindred, nor hereditary possessions, but are as it were of the Sultans creation, depending vpon him onely for their sustenance and preferments. Who disposeth, as well of their liues as their fortunes, by no other rule then that of his will ; although sometime for forme he vseth the assent of the neuer gain-saying Musli. These are the sonnes of Christians (and those the most compleatly furnished by nature) taken in their childhood from their miserable Parents, by a leuie made euery fve yeeres (or oftner, or seldomer, as occasion requireth) throughout the whole Empire, (excepting certaine priuiledged places, amongst which are Sio and Constantinople,) who are bestowed in seuerall Seminaries, instructed in the Mahometan Religion (changing their names vpon their circumcision) taught the vse of their seuerall weapons, and made patient of hunger and labour, with inured abstinence, and continuall exercise. These they call Iemoglans, who haue their faces shauen (the token of seruitude,) wearing long Coats and copped Caps, not vnlike to our Idiots. The choicest of them for spirit and feature, are after a while receiued into the Grand Signiors Serraglio ; distinguished by chambers like to those in Hospitals, according to their seniorities ; where all are brought vp in the discipline of warre ; and not a few, acquainted with the secrets of State : such as by the excellency of their gifts doe assure the expectation of a future eminency. Those of the first chamber, are the first preferred : yet not in order, but according to the worth of the place, and worthinesse of the person. Of these come the Beglerbeks, (the name signifying, a Lord of Lords) of whom there be onely two, the one of Greece, and the other of Natolia : who command all the horse-men in those Countries vnder the Generall) the Great Bassas, (whereof some are Generals of Armies, some Vizers of the Port, the rest Vice-royes of Prouinces) the Sanziaks Gouvernours

nours of Cities, for so the name signifieth, with their Territories and Forces, and other Officers both of Warre and Peace; with those of the Court, of principall place and attendance. Of the other Iemoglans some come to bee Chaufes, who goe of Embassies, execute Commandements, and are Pursuants, and vnder-Sheriffs; attending the imployment of the Emperour, who mounted on horse-backe, carrie Dabuzes (a weapon like a Mace) before him, and on the Courts of Iustice: soliciting also the causes of their Clients. But the Spachies and Ianizaries which are made of these Iemoglans (the principall cause of their institution) are the nerves and supporters of the Turkish Monarchy. The Spachies are Horse-men, weaponed for the most part at once, with Bow, Mase, Lance, Harquebuss, & Cymiter: whereof they haue the seuerall 10 vses, agreeing with their fights, their flights or pursuements. For defence, some weare Bucklers, and shirts of Male. The skirts of their coats, when they ride, are gathered within long Stammell broges, that reach to their ankles, and there doe ioyne to their Buskins; shod with Iron, and supplying the want of Spurres, with their large and sharpe Stirrops. Their Saddles are placed behind & before, the seate deep and hard: and for Caparison, vse for the most part the skins of Leopards, Lions, Tygres, Panthers, and the like. In Cities when on foot, they weare Gownes of Stammell with long hanging sleeues, and are distinguished from others by the folding vp of their Shashes. Of these there be two sorts; the Vleffigi, which is to say, stipendarie, who are almost altogether made of these Iemoglans; and the Timariots, who consist of all sorts of people. The first as yet vnpreferred, vnder the command of seuerall Captaines, do attend vpon the 20 immediate imployment of the Emperour: who alloweth vnto each the daily pension of ten Aspers, paid them euery quarter. Of these there be 32000. the one halfe of them are called Spacheioglans, who weare red Pendants on their speares, & when in the field, march on the right hand the Sultan: as the other on the left, who are called Siliktarspacheis, bearing yellow & white Pendants. The other dispersed throughout the whole Empire, do liue vpon their particular Tenements for terme of life assigned them, and thereupon so called. It being the policy of this State, to erect in the conquered Countries a number of Timariots, answerable to the greatnesse thereof: whereby the principall part of the souldiery is provided for, and the Empire strengthened, both against foraine
30 inuasions, and reuolts of the subdued. Of these, as they say, there are vpward of seauen hundred thousand: euery one being to find as many Horse, as his Farme doth double the yearly value of fixtie Sultanies, ready to be commanded by their seuerall Sanziacks, as they by their Bassas: these beare on their Lances white and red Pendants. But the Ianizaries (a name that signifieth New Souldiery) are those that beare such great sway in Constantinople: insomuch, that the Sultans themselves haue beene sometimes subiect to their insolencies. They are diuided into seuerall Companies vnder seuerall Captaines, but all commanded by their Aga, a place of high trust; and the third in repute through the Empire: howbeit, their too much loue is to him an assured destruction. These are the Flower of the Turkish Infantry, by whom such wonderfull victories haue beene atchieued. They call the Emperour Father, (for none other is there for them to depend on) to whose valour and faith in the time of warre hee committeth his person, they hauing their stations about the Royall Pauillion. They serue with Harquebusses, armed 40 besides with Cymiter, and Hatchets. They weare on their heads a Bonnet of white Felt, with a flap hanging downe behind to their shoulders; adorned about the browes with a wreath of Metall gilt, and set with stones of small value, hauing a kind of sheathe or socket of the same erected before, wherein such are suffered to sticke Plumes of Feathers as haue behaued themselves extraordinary brauely. They tucke vp the skirts of their coats when they fight or march, and carry certaine daies prouision of victuals about with them, nor is it a cumber, it being no more then a small portion of Rice, and a little Sugar and Hony. When the Emperour is not in the field, the most of them reside with him in the Citie: euery at hand vpon any occasion to secure his person, and are as it were the Pretorian cohorts with the Romanes. They are in number about fortie thousand, whereof the greater part (I meane of those that attend on the Court)
50 haue their being in three large Serraglios, where the Iuniors doe reuerence their Seniors, and all obey their seuerall Commanders (as they their Aga) with much silence and humilitie. Many of them that are married (a breach of their first institution) haue their priuate dwellings: and those that are busied in foraine imployments, are for the most part placed in such Garrison Townes as doe greatly concerne the safetie of the Empire; some are appointed to attend on Embassadours; others, to guard such particular Christians as will be at the charge, both about the Citie, and in their Trauels, from inciuities and violences, to whom they are in themselves most faithfull: wary and cruell, in preuenting and reuenging their dangers and iniuries, and so patient in bearing abuses, that one of them of late being stricken by an English-man, (whose humorous swaggering would permit him neuer to reuiew his Countrey) as they trauelled along 6 through Morea, did not onely not reuenge it, nor abandon him to the pillage and outrages of others, in so vnknowne and sauage a Countrey; but conducting him vnto Zant in safetie, saying, God forbid that the villany of another should make him betray the charge that was committed to his trust. They are of one Trade or other: The pay that they haue from the Grand Signior, is but fixe Aspers a day; yet their eldest Sons as soone as borne, are inrolled, and receiued into pension, but but his bountie extendeth no further vnto his Progeny, (the rest reputed as naturall Turkes) nor is a Janizarie capable of other preferments then the command, of ten, of twentie, or of an hundred. They haue yearly giuen them two Gownes apeece; the one of Violet cloath, and the other of Stammell, which they weare in the Citie, carrying in their hands a great tough Reede, some seuen foote long, tipped with Siluer, the weight whereof is not seldome felt by such as displease them. Who are indeed so awfull, that Iustice dare not proceed publikely against them (they being onely to be iudged by their Aga) but being priuately attached, are as priuately throwne into the Sea in the night time. But then are they most tumultuous (whereto they doe giue the name of affection) vpon the dangerous sicknesses of their Emperours, and vpon their deaths commit many out-rages. Which is the cause that the great Bassas as well as they can, do 10 conceale it from them, vntill all things be provided for the presentment of the next for them to salute. Whereupon (besides the present larges) they haue an Asper a day increase of pension: so that the longer they liue, and the more Emperours they out-liue, the greater is their allowance.

But it is to be considered, that all these before named, are not onely of that tribute of children. For not a few of them are captiues taken in their child-hood, with diuers Renegados, that haue most wickedly quitted their Religion and Countrey, to fight against both, who are to the Christians the most terrible Aduersaries. And withall they haue of late infringed their ancient customes, by the admitting of those into these orders that are neither the Sonnes nor Grand-sonnes of Christians; a naturall Turke borne in Constantinople, before neuer knowne, being now 20 a Bassa of the Port.

Tartars.

Achingi.

Azapi.

Ouer and aboue these, and besides the auxiliary Tartars, whereof there are lightly threescore thousand (who liue on spoile, and serue without pay) that are euer assistant; the Grand Signior hath other Forces, whom they call Achingi, who haue nothing but what they can get by foraging, being Hindes of the Countrey, and tyed to serue on Horse-backe, for certaine priuiledges that they hold, in number about thirtie or fortie thousand: but small in value, as are the Azapi, who serue on foote (yet properly belonging to the Gallies) better acquainted with the Spade then Sword; thrust forward with purpose rather to weary, then to vanquish the enemy, whose dead bodies doe serue the Janizaries to fill vp ditches, and to mount the walls of assaulted Fortresses; besides many voluntaries, who follow the Army in hope to succede the slaine Spahis 30 and Janizaries, now nothing curious at such a time to receiue those that bee not the Sonnes of Christians into the Order. Such are the Turkish Forces, both in qualitie and proportion, and hee that shall see three hundred thousand of these in an Armie (as he might haue done this last Sommer in Bithynia) so disciplined, so appointed, and so daringly resolute: whose onely repute consists in their valours; and whose deteats are punished in their Commanders as offences, furnished with such abundance of great Ordnance (much whereof they cast according to their occasions, carrying with them the Metall vpon the backes of Camels) will not onely not wonder at their victories, but rather how the rest of the yet vnuanquished world hath withstood them. I haue heard a Prince (and he of no small experience) impute the sundry ouerthrowes giuen them, by a small number of Christians, to the paucitie of Commanders, and their want of experience, 40 some one Sanziack hauing vnder his conduct five thousand Timariots; and he perhaps but newly crept out of the Sultans Serraglio, exercised onely in speculatiue conflicts. So that their numbers proue often but cumbers, and the aduantage losse, encountred by the many expert Directors of few, who are also farre better defensiuely armed. But he that hath bounded the Sea, hath also limited their furies. And surely it is to bee hoped, that their greatnesse is not onely at the height, but neere an extreame precipitation: the body being growne too monstrous for the head, the Sultans vnwarlike, and neuer accompanying their Armies in person; the Souldier corrupted with ease and libertie, drowned in prohibited Wine, enfeebled with the continuall conuerse of Women, and generally lapsed from their former austeritie of life, and simplicitie of manners. Their valours now meeting on all sides with opposition, hauing of late giuen no in- 50 crease to their Dominions, and Empire so got, when it ceaseth to increase, doth begin to diminish. Lastly, in that it hath exceeded the obserued period of a Tyrannie, for such is their Empire. Now when they march, the Tartars doe scoure the Countrey two daies iourney before, then follow the Achingi, after them the Timariots, next those few Iemoglans that be, next them the Janizaries, the Chauses follow on horse-backe, (who carrie Bowes and Arrowes, besides their Mases and Cymiters) then comes the Sultan with the Officers of his Court, and Archers of his Guard, who are foot-men: the stipendarie Spahis marching on either side of him. An hundred Coaches couered with red, with foure Horses apeece, are drawne after, which carrie the Hichoglans (his Pages) and Eunuchs; about these the Iemoglans, called Baltagies, are placed. The 60 carriages of the Army ensue, followed by voluntaries, who goe in hope (as before said) to bee entertained in the roomes of the slaine, with the Seruants of the Spahis of the Court, and certaine Janizaries Att-oglans Lepzlers and Denigilers. The Janizaries haue the models of Elephants, Boots, Swords of Wood, and the like, borne before them for their Ensignes; and the Royall Standard is no other then a Horse taile tied to the end of a staffe.

Colours.
Royall Standard.

As for their forces at Sea, they are but small in comparison of what they haue beene, and compared to those of particular Christian Princes, but contemptible. Approued by the Florentine, who with fixe ships onely hath kept the bottome of the Streights for these three yeeres past in despite of them: insomuch as they haue not dared to hazard the reuenue of Egypt by Sea, but haue sent it ouer Land with a Guard of Souldiers, to their no small trouble and expences: the whole Armado comming often in view, yet not so hardie as to aduenture the onset. The Admirall hauing thought it a safer course to employ the Pirats of Tunis and Algiers in that seruice, who haue many tall ships (the spoile of Christian Merchants) and warlikely appointed: now growne expert in Nauigation, and all kind of Sea-fights, by the wicked instruction of our fugitive Pirats, and other Renegados. But those Pirats haue no heart to such an enterprife, where the victorie would proue so bloudie, and the bootie so worthlesse. The Nauie that is yearly set forth in the beginning of May, to annoy the Enemie, suppress Pirats, collect Tribute, and reforme disorders in the Maritime Townes that belong to the Admiraltie, consists of not aboue threescore Gallies, which are all that can be spared from their other places of imployment. During the Winter the Armado is dispersed, and the Gallies are drawne into their drie stations. In which time the Pirats, both Christian and Mahometan, doe rob on the Aegean and Mediterranean Seas vncontrolled, but by the defensive strength of the Assailed. So much the continuance of honors in Families are auoided, that when a Bassa is giuen (for so I may terme it) to the Sister or Daughter of a Sultan for an husband, the children begotten on them, doe most rarely rise about the degree of a priuate Captaine. But more seuerer are these Tyrants to their owne, who lop all the Branches from the Bole; the vnnaturall Brother solemnizing his Fathers funerals, with the slaughter of his Brothers. So fearfull are they of riuallitie, and so damnably politike; making all things lawfull that may secure the perpetuities of their Empire. Yet they mourne for those being dead, whom they murdered; honoring them with all dues of buriall, and customarie lamentations. Now if the Ottoman Line should faile, the Crim Tartar is to succeed (both being of one Familie, and of one Religion) as the Turke the Tartar; who hath at this day the election of the Tartarian Emperours: but with this limitation, that hee is to bee one of the sonnes of the decessed.

They are commanded seuen times a day to resort vnto publike Prayers: the first assembling is called Timgil-namas, which is two houres before day: the second Sabah-namas, at day breakes: the third Vyle-namas, at noone: the fourth Kyndy-namas, at three of the clocke: the fift Aksham-namas, after Sunne-set: the sixth Ghagic-namas, two houres within night: and the seuenth Giuma-namas, at ten of the clocke in the morning: the last also on Fridayes obserued by all, at other times but by the more religious. Congregated (as aforesaid) by the chanting of the Priests from the tops of steeples: at which times lightly, though they be in the fields, they will spread their vpper garments on the earth, and fall to their deuotions. Moreover, I haue seene them conioyntly pray in the corners of the streets, before the opening of their shops in the morning. Friday is their Sabbath; and yet they spend but a part thereof in deuotion, and the rest in recreations: but for that time they obserue it so rigorously, that a Turke here lately had his eares nayled to his shop-boord for opening it too timely. Before they pray, they wash all the Organs of their senses; their legs to their knees, and their armes to their elbowes: their priuities after the purgings of nature; and sometimes all ouer from top to toe: for which there are houses of office with conduits belonging to euery principall Mosque. Where water is wanting, they doe it with dust. At the doore of the Mosque they put off their shooes; and entring, sit crosse legged vpon rewes of Mats, one behind another, the poore and the rich promiscuously. The Priest in a Pulpit before them, not otherwise distinguished in habite but by the folding vp of his Turbant. When they pray, they turne their faces towards Meccha: first standing vpright, without any motion of their bodies, holding the palmes of their hands vppward; sometimes they stop their eyes and eares, and oft pull the haire on the sides of their faces: then thrice they bow, as in their salutations; and as often prostrating themselues on the earth, doe kisse it. Doing this sundrie times, they will looke backe vpon no occasion, vntill they come vnto the salutation of Mahomet: at which time they reuerse their faces, first ouer the right shoulder, and then ouer the left; beleeuing that his comming will be behind them when they are at their deuotions. The Priest doth sometimes reade vnto them some part of the Alcoran (holding it, in reuerence to the booke, as high as his chin) sometimes some of their fabulous Legend, intermixing Expositions and Instructions, which they hearken vnto with heedie attention, and such steadie positures of body, as if they were intranced. Their Seruice is mixed with Songs and Responses: and when all is done, they stroke downe their faces and beards with lookes of deuout grauitie. If they finde a Paper in the streets, they will thrust it in some Crevice of the adioyning wall; imagining that the name of God may be contayned therein, and then prophane to be trod vnder foot, or otherwise defiled. They number their often repetition of the Names of God and his Attributes (with other short ejaculations of Prayer and Praise) vpon Beades: some shaking their heads incessantly, vntill they turne giddie: perhaps in imitation of the supposed trances (but naturally infirmitie) of their Prophet. And they haue an Order of Monkes, who are called Dervises, Monkes,

Their Sabbath

Their Prayers.

Lyturgie.

whom

whom I haue often seene to dance in their Mosques, on Tuesdayes and Fridayes, many together, to the sound of barbarous musicke; dances that consist of continuall turnings, vntill at a certayne stroke they fall vpon the earth, and lying along like beasts, are thought to be rapt in spirit vnto celestiaall conuersations. Now the Women are not permitted to come into their Temples (yet haue they secret places to looke in through Grates) partly for troubling their deuotions, but especially for that they are not circumcised, as are the women of Persia and Ethiopia. Nor circumcise they the Males vntill they be able to answere the Priest, and promise for themselves, which is for the most part at the age of eight. They are circumcised in the houses of their Parents, at a festiuall meeting, and in the midst of the Assembly, the Child holding vp his fore-finger, in token that he is a Mahometan. As soone as cut, the Priest washeth the wound in water and salt, and bindeth it in linnen. Who changeth not his name, but is from thenceforth called a Musselman, which is, a true Beleuer. This done, he is carryed vnto the Bannia, where his haire (before that time worne at full length) is shauen, and so kept euer after, all sauing a locke on the top of his crowne; by which they dreame that they shall be assumed by Mahomet into Paradise: then put they on him a white Turbant; and so returning with Drums and Hoboys, is with great solemnitie conducted to the Mosque, and presented with gifts according to his qualitie.

Lent.

The Turkes doe fast one moneth in the yeere, which they call Ramazán: which changeth yeerly (so that in thirteene yeeres they fast one) wherein, they say, that the Alcoran was deliuered vnto Mahomet by the Angell. Obserued by all but the Infirmes and Trauellers: who are to fast for as long a time, when so they recouer, or come to the end of their iourney. But they fast but during the day, in the night they feast, and then are all their steeples sticke round with Lamps, which burne till the morning, affording an obiect of great solemnitie. Such as in stead of abstayning from meates, doe abstayne at that time from their Mosques, they carrie about in scorne, and seuerely chastise; but such as then drinke wine, they punish with death. Vpon the discouerie of the new Moone (which they superstitiously gratulate, esteeming him happy that discouereth it first, and by the course thereof doe reckon their yeere) falling out this yeere on the seuenth of December, the feast of the great Byram did begin, which doth continue for three dayes together, obserued by them as Easter is with vs. On the first day the Grand Signior riding to Sancta Sophia, in all the pompe and glorie of Empire (of which we shall speake hereafter) vp-on his returne we saw a sort of Christians, some of them halfe earth alreadie, crooked with age, and trembling with palsies; who by the throwing away of their Bonnets, and lifting vp of their fore-fingers, did proffer themselves to become Mahometans. A sight full of horror and trouble, to see those desperate wretches that had professed Christ all their life, and had suffered no doubt for his sake much contumely and oppression; now almost dying, to forsake their Redeemer, euen then when they were to receiue the reward of their patience. To these the Tyrant a little inclined his body, who before not so much as cast his eye aside, but sate like the adored statue of an Idoll. For they hold it a great grace, and an act of singular pietie, to draw many to their Religion, presenting them with money, change of rayments, and freeing them from all Tribute and Taxes. Infomuch, that if a Christian haue deserued death by their Law, if hee will conuert, they will many times remit his punishment. But they compell no man. During this festiuall they exercise themselves with various pastimes, but none more in vse, and more barbarous, then their swinging vp and downe, as Boyes doe in Bell-ropes: for which there bee Gallowses (for they beare that forme) of an exceeding height, erected in sundrie places of the Citie; when by two ioyning Ropes that are fastned aboue, they will swing themselves as high as the transome: perhaps affected in that it stupifies the senses for a season: the cause that Opium is so much in request, and of their fore said shaking of their heads, and continued turnings. In regard whereof, they haue such as haue lost their wits, and naturall Idiots, in high veneration, as men rauished in spirit, and taken from themselves, as it were to the fellowship of Angels. These they honour with the Title of Saints, lodge them in their Temples, some of them going almost starke naked; others clothed in shreds of seuerall colours, whose necessities are supplied by the peoples deuotions, who kisse their Garments as they passe through the streets, and bow to their benedictions; yea, many by counterfeiting the Idiot haue auoided punishment for offences which they haue vnwittingly fallen into. Whilst the Byram lasteth, you cannot stirre abroad but you shall be presented by the Dervises and Ianizaries, with tulips and trifles, besprinkling you with sweet water; nor cease so to doe, till they haue drawne Rewards from you.

Whether are the most Fooles and Mad?

The Turkes are encouraged to almes by their Alcoran, as acceptable to God, and meritorious in it selfe, if giuen without vaine-glorie, and of goods well gotten, alledging it to be a temptation of the Deuils, to abstayne from Almes, for feare of impouerishment. Their more publike Almes consist in sacrifices (if not so wrongfully termed) vpon their festiualls, or performance of vows: when Sheepe and Oxen are slaine by the Priest, and diuided amongst the Poore, the Owner not so much as retayning a part thereof. They say, they giue much in priuate: and in truth, I haue seene but few Beggars amongst them. Yet sometimes shall you meet in the streets with couples chained together by the necke, who beg to satisfie their Creditors in part, and are at the yeeres end released of their Bonds, provided that they make satisfaction if they proue afterward able. At their deaths they vsually giue Legacies for the releafe of Prisoners, the freeing of Bond-slaves, repaying of Bridges, building of Canes for the reliefe of Passengers; and the great men, to the erecting of Mosques and Hospitals, which they build not seldome in their life time. But Mahomet the Great, and Solyman the Magnificent, haue in that kind exceeded all others: whose stately and sumptuous structures doe giue a principall ornament to the Citie; where the sicke and impotent are provided for, and the stranger entertayned (for here bee no Innes) the reuenue of that of Mahomet's, amounting to an hundred and fiftie thousand Sultantes. To these therebelong Physicians, Chyrurgions, Apothecaries, the charge thereof committed vnto their Priests, who bring vp a certayne number of youths in the Mahometan Law, and frequently pray for the departed soules of the Founders in the Chappels of their Sepulchres. They extend their charitie to Christians and Jewes, as well as to them of their owne Religion; nay, Birds and Beasts haue a taste thereof. For many onely to let them loose, will buy Birds in Cages, and bread to giue vnto Dogges; for most haue in this Citie no particular owners, being reputed an vncleane Creature, and therefore not suffered to come into their houses, thinking it neuerthelesse a deed of pietie, to feede and provide them kennels to litter in, most of them repairing to the Sea side nightly, where they keep such a howling, that if the wind sit South-ward, they may be easily heard to the vpper side of the Citie of Pera.

With the Steicks they attribute all accidents to destinie, and constellations at birth. Since death can be neither hastned nor auoided, being withall perswaded, that they die brauely that die fighting: and that they shall be rewarded with Paradise that doe spend their blood vpon the enemies of their Religion, called Shahids, which is Martyrs, by them. For although they repute murder to be an execrable crime, that cries to Heaven for vengeance, and is neuer forgiven: yet are they commanded by their law, to extend their profession by violence, and without compassion to slaughter their Opposers. But they liue with themselves in such exemplary concord, that during the time that I remained amongst them (it being about three quarters of a yeare) I neuer saw Mahometan offer violence to a Mahometan, nor breake into ill language; but if they to chance to do, a third will reprove him, with, Fie, Mussel-men, fall out! and all is appeased. He that giues a blow hath many gashes made in his flesh, and is led about for a terror, but the man-slayer is deliuered to the kindred or friends of the slaine, to bee by them put to death with all exquisite torture.

Mahometans may in this be examples to Christians.

§. III.

The Mustie, Cadileschiers, Diuans: Manners and attire of the Turkes. The Sultan described, and his Customes and Court. The Customes of the Greekes. SIR THO: GLOVER.

THE dignitie of the Chaliph amongst the Turkes, with much abatement, doth now remaine in the Musties (which name doth signifie An Oracle, or Answerer of doubts) as Successors to Ebbubecher, Omar and Ozman; the other being both High-Priests and Princes; these Patriarchs, as it were, and Soueraignes of their Religion. Throughout the whole Turkish Territories, there is but one, who euer resideth in the Royall Citie, or followes the person of the Emperour. He is equall to the ancient Popes, or rather greater both in repute and authoritie. The Grand Signior doth rise at his approach to salute him, and sets him by him, and giues him much reuerence. His life is onely free from the Sword, and his fortunes most rarely subiect to subuersion. The Emperour vndertaketh no high designe without his approuement. He hath power to reuerse both his sentence, and the sentence of the Diuan, if they be not adiudged by him conformable to the Alcoran, but his owne is irrenocable. In matters of difficultie they repaire to him, and his exposition standeth for a Law. To conclude, he is the supreme Iudge, and rectifier of all actions, as well Ciuill as Ecclesiasticall, and an approuer of the Iustice of the Militarie. The place is giuen by the Grand Signiors, to men profoundly learned in their Law, and of knowne integritie. He seldome stirres abroad, and neuer admits of impertinent conuersation. Graue is his looke, graue is his behaviour; Highly affecting silence, and most spare of speech. For when any come to him for iudgement, they deliuer him in writing the state of the question, who in writing briefly returnes his oraculous answer. He commonly weareth a vest of greene, and the greatest Turbant in the Empire: I should not speake much out of compasse, should I say as large in compasse as a bushell. I oft haue beene in this mans Serraglio, which is neither great in receipt nor beautie, yet answerable to his small dependancie, and infrequencie of Sutors. He keepeth in his house a Seminarie of Boyes, who are instructed in the mysteries of their Law. He is not restrained, nor restraineth himselfe from pluralitie of Women. His incomes are great, his disburseings little, and consequently his wealth infinite; yet he is a bad pay-master master of his debts, though they be but trifles. He much delighteth in Clockes and Watches, whereof, as some say, he hath not so few as a thousand.

Cadilechiers.

Next in place to the Mustie, are the Cadilechiers, that are Iudges of the Armies, (but not to meddle with the Ianifarie) and accompany the Beglerbegs when they goe into the field. Of these there are onely two; one of the European part of the Empire, and another of the Asian. These are also elected by the Grand Signior, as the Cadies by them, (yet to bee allowed by the other, and to kisse his Vest:) of whom there is one in euery Towne, who besides their spirituall Functions, doe adminster Iustice betweene partie and partie, and punish offenders. Of inferior Priests, there be some particularly appointed to sing at the tops of their steeples, and to congregate the people; some to looke to the Ceremonies, and some to reade and interpret the Alcoran.¹⁰ There are also other religious Orders, which I omit to speak of, being of their owne taking vp, neither commanded nor commended, and rather to be esteemed Vagabonds then religious persons, consider we either their life or their habits.

Testimonie.

Among the Turkish Commandements, one is that drawne originally from our Sauours, Thou shalt not doe what thou wouldst not haue done to thee: whereupon for the most part their Ciuill Iustice is grounded, not disagreeing greatly from the Lawes of Moses. All euictions there, as elsewhere depend vpon Witnesses: yet will not the oath of a Christian or a Iew be receiued against a Turke, as will a Turkes against them, and theirs one against another. But the kindred of Mahomet haue their single testimonies in equall value with the testimonies of two others: notwithstanding the oath of a Mahometan will not be taken, if impeached for a drinker of Wine, or ea-²⁰

ter of Swines flesh. Euery Bassa keepes a Diuan (so they call the Court of Iustice) within his Prouince: but the highest of all, and to which they may appeale from all other, is that, which is kept foure daies of the weeke in the Grand Signiors Serraglio, from whence no appeale is admitted but to the person of the Mustie. Here the Vizier Bassas of the Port, who are nine in number (or as many as then are not otherwise employed) doe sit in Iustice (where also they consult of matters of State, and that publikely, not excepting against Embassadors Drogermen, lightly alwaies present: so presume they of strong hand) assisted by the * Admirall, and

They were formerly but foure, to whom Mahomet the third added five.

* Testedar.

* Chancellor, (the * Treasurer in the same roome keeping his Court) where all causes whatsoever that are heard, within the space of three daies are determined, the Great Viziers Bassa being President of the rest. But Briberie, not knowne vntill lately amongst them, hath so corrupted³⁰ their integritie, that whose causes (if they beare but a colour of right) doe seldome miscarrie where gifts are the Aduocates: yet this is the best of the worst, that they quickly know their successes. But many times when the oppressed subiects can haue no Iustice, they will in troupes attend the coming forth of the Emperour, and by burning Straw on their heads, or holding vp Torches, prouoke his regard: who brought vnto him by his Mutes, doth receiue their petition, which oftentimes turnes to the ruine of some of those great ones. For assurances of Purchases, they haue no Indentures, no fines and recoueries. The omitting of a word cannot frustrate their estates; nor Quirks of Law preuaile against Conscience. All that they haue to shew, is a little Scedule, called a Hodget or Sigil, onely manifesting the possession of the Seller, as his of whom he bought it, or from whom it descended vnto him, which vnder-written by the *Cadie*⁴⁰ of the place, doth frustrate all after-claimes whatsoever.

Assurances and writings.

Punishments.

Now the punishments for offenders, be either Pecuniarie or Corporall. To imple the former, they will forge all the slanders that they can, to eate vpon the lesse circumspect Christians, but the other are seldome vniustly inflicted. Their formes of putring to death, (besides such as are common elsewhere) are impaling vpon stakes, ganching (which is to be let fall from on high vpon hookes, and there to hang vntill they die by the anguish of their wounds, or more miserable famine,) and another inuented (but now not here vied) to the terror of mankind, by some deuillish Perillus, who deserued to haue first tasted of his owne inuention, viz: they twitch the offender about the waste with a Towell, enforcing him to draw vp his breath by often pricking him in the body, vntill they haue drawne him within the compasse of a spanne; then tying it hard, they cut him off in the middle, and setting the body on a hot plate of Copper, which seareth the veines, they so vp-propping him during their cruell pleasure: who not onely retaineth his sense, but the faculties of Discourse, vntill hee be taken downe, and then departeth in an instant. But little faults are chastised by blowes, receiued on the soles of the feet with a bastinado, by hundred at a time, according to the qualitie of the misdemeanor. A terrible paine that extendeth to all the part of the body, yet haue I seene them taken for money. The Master also in this sort doth correct his Slaue; but Parents their Children with stripes on the belly. The Subashie is as the Constable of a Citie, both to search out, and punish offences.⁵⁰

Their persons and Manners.

It remayneth now that we speake of the persons of the Turkes, their dispositions, manners and fashions. They be generally well complexioned, of good statures, and full bodies, proportionably compacted. They nourish no haire about them, but a Locke on the crowne, and on their faces onely; esteeming it more cleanly, and to bee the better prepared for their superstitious washings. But their Beards they weare at full length, the marke of their affected grauitie, and

- and token of freedome, (for slaues haue theirs shauen) insomuch that they will scoffe at such Christians as cut, or naturally want them, as if suffering themselves to be abused against nature. All of them weare on their heads white Shashes and Turbants, the badge of their Religion, as is the folding of the one, and size of the other, of their vocations and qualitie. Shashes are long Towels of Callico woound about their heads: Turbants are made like great Globes of Callico too, and thwarted with Rols of the same; hauing little copped Caps on the top, of Greene or Red Veluet, being onely worne by persons of ranke, and he the greatest that weareth the greatest, the Muslies excepted, which ouer-sizes the Emperours. And though many Orders haue particular Ornaments appointed for their heads, yet weare they these promiscuously. It is an especiall fauour in the Turke to suffer the Christian Tributarie Princes and their chiefe Nobles to weare white heads in the Citie: but in them, what better then an Apostaticall Insinuation? But to beginne from the skinne, the next that they weare is a Smock of Callico, with ample sleeues, much longer then their Armes: vnder this a paire of Calfsouns of the same, which reach to their ancles, the rest naked; and going in Yellow or Red Slip-shoes, picked at the toe, and plated on the sole: ouer all they weare a halfe-sleeued Coate girt vnto them with a Towell: their necke all bare, and this within doores is their Sommer accoutrement. Ouer all when they goe abroad they weare Gownes, some with wide halfe sleeues, (which more particularly belong to the Grecians,) others with long hanging sleeues, and the Gownes buttoned before, and a third sort worne by the meaner sort, reaching but a little below the knee, with hanging sleeues not much longer then the arme, and open before; but all of them yngathered in the shoulders. In the Winter they adde to the former, Calfsouns of Cloth, which about the small of the legge are sewed to short smooth Buskins of Leather without soles, fit for the foote as a Gloue for the hand, lining their Gownes with Furre, as they doe their Coats; hauing then the sleeues (or quilted Waist-coats vnder them) reaching close to their wrists. They weare no Gloues. At their Girdles they weare long Handkerchers, some of them admirable for value and workmanship. They neuer alter their fashions, not greatly differing in the great and vulgar, more then in the richnesse. Cloth of Tissue, of Gold and Siluer, Veluet, Scarlet, Sartin, Damaske, Chamolets, lined with Sables, and other costly Furies, and with Martins, Squerrils, Foxes and Cony-skins; worne according to their seuerall qualities. But the common weare is Violet Cloth. They retainne the old Worlds custome in giuing change of Garments, which they may aptly doe, when one Vest fitteth all men, and is of euery mans fashion.
- The Clergie goe much in Greene, it being Mahomets colour; and his Kinsmen in greene Shashes, who are called Emers, which is Lords: the women also weare something of Greene on their heads, to be knowne. There liues not a Race of ill-fauoured people; branded perhaps by God for the sinne of their seducing Ancestor, and their owne wicked assuming of hereditary holinesse. But if a Christian out of ignorance weare Greene, hee shall haue his clothes torne off from his backe, and perhaps be well beaten. They carrie no Weapons about them in the Citie; onely they thrust vnder their Girdles great crooked Knives of a Dagger-like size, in sheathes of Metall; the Hatts and Sheathes of many beeing set with stones, and some of them worth fye hundred Sultanies. They beare their bodies vpright, of a stately gate, and elated countenance. In their familiar salutations they lay their hands on their bosomes, and a little decline their bodies: but when they salute a person of great ranke, they bow almost to the ground, and kisse the hemme of his Garment. The ornaments of their heads they neuer put off vpon any occasion. Some of them perfume their Beards with Amber, and the in-sides of their Turbants: and all of them affect cleanness so religiously, that besides their customarie Lotions, and daily frequenting of the Bannias, they neuer so much as make water, but they wash both their hands and priuities: at which businesse they sequester themselves, and couch to the Earth; reuiling the Christian whom they see pissing against a wall, and sometimes striking him. This they doe to preuent that any part of either excrement should touch their Garments, esteeming it a pollution, and hindering the acceptation of Prayer, who then are to bee most pure in heart and habite.
- So slothfull they be, that they neuer walke vp and downe for recreation, nor vse any other exercise but shooting, wherein they take as little paines as may bee, sitting on Carpets in the shadow, and sending their Slaues for their Arrowes. They also shoote against Earthen wals, euer kept moyst in shops and priuate houses for that purpose, standing not aboue sixe paces from the marke, and that with such violence, that the Arrow passes not seldome through: nay, I haue seene their Arrowes shot by our Embassadour through Targets of Steele, pieces of Brasse two inches thicke; and through wood, with an Arrow headed with wood, of eight inches. Their Bowes are for forme and length, not vnlike the Lath of a large Crosse-bow, made of the hornes of Buffoloes, intermixed with sinewes, of admirable workmanship, and some of them exquisitely gilded. Although there bee Wraistlers amongst them, yet they bee such as doe it to delight the people, and do make it their profession; as do those that walke vpon Ropes, wherein the Turkes are most expert; going about when they haue done, to euery particular Spectator for his voluntary beneuolence. Of Cards and Dice they are happily ignorant; but at Chesse they will play all the

the day long : a sport that agreeth well with their sedentarie vacancie ; wherein notwithstanding they auoyde the dishonest hazard of money.

Horses. The better sort take great delight in their Horses, which are beautifull to the eye, and well ridden for seruice, but quickly iaded if held to a good round trot (for amble they doe not) in an indifferent Iourney. But the Turkes doe not lightly ride so fast as to put them vnto eyther. Their Saddles be hard and deepe, though not great, plated behind and before; and some of them with Silver, as are their massie Stirrops, and the Reines of their Bridles, suted vnto their costly Caparisons. When they stand in the Stable they feed them for the most part, if not altogether, with Barley; being heere of small value, and onely seruing for that purpose. They litter them in their owne dung, first dried in the Sunne and puluerated, which keepe their skinnes cleane, 10 smoth, and shining.

Reuerence to Superiors. Left hand before right. The Turkes doe greatly reuerence their Parents, (so commanded to doe by their Law) as the Inferiour his Superiour, and the young aged, readily giuing the prioritie to whom it belongeth, (the left hand as they goe in the streets preferd before the right, in that made Masters thereby of the Sword of the other, and the chiefeft place the farthest from the wall) liuing together as if all of a Brother-hood. Yet giue they no entertaynment vnto one another, nor come there any into their houses but vpon speciall occasion, and those but into the publike parts thereof; their women being neuer seene but by the Nurses and Eunuches which attend on them. Yea, so iealous they are, that their Sonnes when they come to growth are separated from them. As their houses are meane, so are their furnitures: hauing nothing on the in-side but bare white walls, vnlesse it 20 be some especiall roome, in the house of some of high qualitie. But the Roofes of many of them are curiously seeled with in-laid wood, adorned with Gold and Azure of an excessiue costlinesse; the greater part of the floore, and that a little aduanced, beeing couered with Turkie Carpets, whereon when they tread they doe put off their slip-shooes. Many of their roomes haue great out windowes, where they sit on Cushions in the heate of the day. They lye vpon Mattresses, some of Silke, some of stayned Linnen, with Bolsters of the same, and Quilts that are sutable, but much in their clothes, the cause perhaps that they are so lousie. Nor shame they thereat, many shall you see sit publikely a lousing themselues in the Sunne; and those no meane persons.

Sit crosse-legged. They haue neither Tables nor stooles in their houses, but sit crosse-leg'd on the floore at their 30 victuals, all in a Ring. In stead of a cloth, they haue a Skinne spread before them; but the better sort sit about a round boord, standing on a foot not past halfe a foot high, and brimd like a Charger. Their Dishes haue feet like standing Bolls, and are so set one vpon another, that you may eat of each without the remoouing of any. Their most ordinarie food is Pillaw, that is, Rice which hath beene sod with the fat of Mutton. Pottage they vse of sundry kinds, Egges fryed in Honey, Tansies, (or something like them) Pasties of sundry Ingredients: the little flesh which they eate is cut into gobbets, and either sod, or tosted in a Furnace. But I thinke there is more in London spent in one day then is in this Citie in twentie. Fish they haue in indifferent quan- titie. But the Commons doe commonly feed on Herbes, Fruits, Rootes, Onions, Garlicke, a Dyce. beastly kind of ynpressed Cheese that lyeth in a lumpe; hodge-podges made of Flower, Milke, 40 and Honey, &c. so that they liue for little or nothing, considering their fare, and the plentie of all things. They are wayted vpon by their slaues giuen them, or purchased with their Swords, or Money: of these to haue many it is accounted for great Riches. When one hath fed suffici- ently he riseth, and another taketh his roome, and so continue to doe vntill all be satisfied. They eate three times a day, but when they feast they sit all the day long, vnlesse they rise to exone- rate Nature, and forth with returne againe. They abstaine from Hogs-flesh, from bloud, and from what hath dyed of it selfe, vnlesse in cases of necessitie. Their vsuall drinke is pure water, yet haue they sundry Sherbets, (so call they the Confections which they infuse into it) some made of Sugar and Limons, some of Violets, and the like, (whereof some are mixed with Am- ber) which the Richer sort dissolue thereinto. The Honey of Sio is excellent for that purpose, 50 and they make another of the iuyce of Raisins, of little cost, and most vsuall drunke of. Wine is prohibited them by their Alcoran, they plant none, they buy none: but now to that libertie they are growne (the naturall Turke excepted) that they will quaffe freely when they come to the house of a Christian: insomuch, as I haue seene but few goe away vnled from the Embassa- dors Table. Yet the feared disorders that might ensue thereof, haue beene an occasion that di- uers times all the Wine in the Citie hath beene staued (except in Embassadors houses) and death hath beene made the penaltie vnto such as presumed to bring any in. They preferre our Beere aboue all other drinkes. And considering that Wine is forbidden, that water is with the rawest (especially in this Clime) the dearenesse of Sherbets, and plentie of Barley (being here sold not for aboue nine pence a bushell) no doubt but it would proue infinitely profitable to such as should 60 bring in the vse thereof amongst them.

Coffa-houses. Although they be destitute of Tauernes, yet haue they their Coffa-houses, which something relemble them. There sit they chatting most of the day; and sippe of a drinke called Coffa (of the Berrie that it is made of) in little China dishes, as hot as they can suffer it: blacke as foote, and and tasting not much vnlike it (why not that blacke broth which was in vse amongst the Lacedaemonians?) which helpeth, as they say, digestion, and procureth alacritie: many of the Cosfamen keeping beautifull boyes, who serue as stales to procure them customers. The Turkes are also incredible takers of Opium, whereof the lesser Asia affoordeth them plentie: carrying it about them both in peace and in warre; which they say expelleth all feare, and makes them courageous: but I rather thinke giddy headed, and turbulent dreamers; by them, as should seeme by what hath beene said, religiously affected. And perhaps for the selfe-same cause they also delight in Tobacco; they take it through reeds that haue ioyned vnto them great heads of wood to contayne it, I doubt not but lately taught them, as brought them by the Englisb: and 10 were it not sometimes lookt into (for Morat Bassa not long since commanded a Pipe to bee thrust through the nose of a Turke, and so to be led in derision through the Citie,) no question but it would proue a principall commoditie. Neuerthelesse, they will take it in corners, and are so ignorant therein, that that which in England is not saleable, doth passe here amongst them for most excellent.

They are by their law in generall exhorted to marrie, for the propagation of their Religion: and hee ill reputed of, that forbeareth so to doe vntill the age of fve and twentie. Euery man is allowed foure wiues, who are to be of his owne Religion, and as many Concubine slaues as hee is able to keepe, of what Religion soeuer. For God (sayth the Alcoran) that is good and gracious, exacteth not of vs what is harsh and burdensome; but permits vs the nightly companie of women, well knowing that abstineney in that kind is both grieuous, and impossible.
 20 Yet are they to meddle with none but their owne peculiars: the offending woman they drowne, and the man they gash. They buy their wiues of their parents, and record the contract before the Cadi, which they after solemnize in this manner. Many women are inuited by the mother of the Bride, to accompanie her the night before the marriage day, whereof they spend a great part in feasting; then leade they her into a Bath, where they anoint and bathe her: so breaking companie they depart vnto their feuerall rests, and in the morning returne to her chamber, where they tricke her in her richest ornaments, tying on her silken Buskins with knots easily not vnknit. The Bridegroom hauing feasted a number in like manner, in the morning they also repaire to his house, in their best apparell, and gallantly mounted, from whence they 30 set forward by two and by two, to fetch home the Bride, accompanied with Musike, and conducted by Sagdich, who is the neereft of his kindred; vnto whom the Bride is deliuered, with her face close couered. Who set astride on horse backe, hath a Canopie carried ouer her, in such sort as no part of her is to bee discerned. So the troope returning in order as they came, after them are carried in Serpets (a kind of baskets) their presents and apparell; then followeth she, and lastly her slaues, if any haue beene giuen her. The Bride-groome standeth at his doore to receiue her, who is honoured by his guests (yet goe they not in) with sundrie presents before their departure. If shee be of qualitie, shee is led to the Bride chamber by an Eunuch, where women stand prepared to vndresse her. But the Bride-groome himselte must vntye her Buskins (as amongst the Romanes they did their Girdles) to which hee is fayne to applie his 40 teeth. Now, he is to entertaine his wiues with an equall respect, alike is their diet, alike is their apparell, alike his beneuolence (for such sweet stufte is contayned in the precepts of their Doctors) vnlesse they consent to giue or change turnes; or else they may complaine to the Cadi, and procure a diuorcement. But the husband may put away his wife at his pleasure: who may marrie vnto another within foure moneths after, provided shee proue not with child, and then not vntill so long after her deliury. But if he will haue her againe, hee must buy her: and if after the third diuorce, another is first to lie with her, as a punishment inflicted for his leuitie: They giue him the reuerence of a master; they are at no time to denie him their embracements, whom he toucheth not againe vntill they haue beene at the Bannias. They receiue chastisement from him, and that they hold to be an argument of his affection. They feed apart, and intermeddle not with household affaires. All that is required at their hands, is, to content their husbands, to nurse their owne children, and to liue peaceably together: which they doe (and which is strange) with no great ieaousie, or enuie. No male accompanies them aboue twelue yeeres old, except they be Eunuchs: and so strictly are they guarded, as seldome seene to looke out at their doores. They be women of elegant beauties, for the most part ruddie, cleere, and smooth as the polished Iuorie; being neuer ruffled by the weather, and daily frequenting the Bannias, but withall by the selfe-same meanes they sodainly wither. Great eyes they haue in principall repute: affected both by the Turks and the Grecians, as it should seeme, from the beginning. For Mahomet doth promise women with such, (nay as big as Egges) in his imaginarie Paradise. And of those the blacker they be, the more amiable: insomuch that they put betweene the eye-lids and the eye a certaine blacke powder with a fine long pensill, made of a minerall brought from the Kingdome of Fez, and called Alcohole; which by the not disgracefully stayning of the lids doth better set forth the whitenesse of the eye; and though it trouble for a time, yet it comforteth the sight, and repelleth ill humours. Into the same hue (but likely they naturally are so) doe they die their eye-breies, and eye-browes (the later by Arte made high, halfe circular, and to meet, if naturally they doe not) so doe they the haire of their heads, as a foyle that maketh the white seeme whiter, and more becomming their other perfections. They part it before the midft, and plaite it behind, yet sometimes wearing it disheueled. They paint their nayles with a yellowish red. They weare on the top of their heads a Cap not vnlike a Sugar-loafe, yet a little flat, of paist-board, and couered with Cloth of siluer or Tissue. Their vnder-garments (which within doores are their vppermost) doe little differ from those that bee worne by the men, which wee will present to the eye to auoide repetition.

The better sort about the vpper part of their armes, and smalls of their legs weare bracelets, and are elsewhere adorned with Iewels. When they goe abroad they weare ouer all long Gowns of violet cloth, or scarlet, tyed close before, the large sleeues hanging ouer their hands; hauing Buskins on their legs, and their heads and faces so mabbed in fine linnen, that no more is to be seene of them then their eyes: nor that of some, who looke as through the sight of a Beuer. For they are forbidden by the Alcoran to disclose their beauties vnto any, but vnto their fathers and husbands. They neuer stirre forth, but (and then alwayes in troupes) to pray at the graues, 50 and to the publike Bannias: which for excellency of buildings are next to their Mosques. But hauing in part already described some of their formes, I will a little treat of their vse; which haue beene in times past, and are at this present, in such request with these Nations (as once with the Romanes, as may appeare by their regardable ruines) that few but frequent them twice in the weeke, as well for their health, as for delight and cleanness. For the stomackes crudities, proceeding from their vsuall eating of fruits, and drinking of water, is thereby concocted: which also after exercise and trauell restoreth to the wearied bodie a wonderfull alacritie. The men take them vp in the morning, and in the afternoone the women. But both amongst the Romanes did ordinarily frequent them together: a custome, as they say, continu'd in Switzerland at this day, and that amongst the most modest. The men are attended vpon by men, and the women by women; in the outermost roome they put off their clothes, and hauing Aporns of stayned linnen tyed about their waistes, then entring the Baths to what degree of heate that they please, (for seuerall roomes, and seuerall parts of them are of seuerall temperatures, as is the water let in by cocks to wash the sweat and filth of the bodie) the seruitors wash them, rub them, 60 them, stretch out their ioynts, and cleanse their skins with a piece of rough Grogeram; which done, they shauē the heads and bodies of men, or take away the haire with a composition of Rusma (a minerall of Cyprus) and vnslak't Lime; who returning to the place where they left their clothes, are dried with fresh linnen; and for all this they pay not aboue three or foure Aspers: so little, in that endued with reuenues by their Founders. But the women, doe anoint their bodies with an oyntment made of the earth of Chios, which maketh the skin soft, white, and shining; extending that on the face, and freeing it from wrinkles. Much vnnaturall and filthie lust is said to bee committed daily in the remote closets of the darke some Bannias: yea, women with women; a thing vncredible, if former times had not giuen thereunto both dete-

10 ction and punishment. They haue generally the sweetest children that euer I saw; partly proceeding from their frequent bathings, and affected cleanness. As wee beare ours in our armes, so they doe theirs astride on their shoulders.

Children.

Now, next to their wiues wee may speake of their slaues: for little difference is there made betweene them: who are Christians taken in the Warres, or purchased with their Money. Of these there are weekly Markets in the Citie, where they are to be sold as Horses in Faires: the men being rated according to their faculties, or personall abilities; as the Women for their youths and beauties, who are set out in best becoming attires, and with their aspects of pitie and affection, endeouour to allure the Christians to buy them, as expecting from them a more easie seruitude, and continuance of Religion: when being thrall to the Turke, they are often 20 inforced to renounce it for their better entertainment. Of them there bee many of excellent outward perfection; and when the buyer hath agreed of the price (but yet conditionally) they are carried aside into a roome, euen to the search of her month, and assurance (if so she be said to be) of her virginity. Their Masters may lye with them, chastise them, exchange, and sell them at their pleasure. But a Christian will not lightly sell her whom he hath layne with, but giue her her libertie. If any of their Slaues will become Mahometans, they are discharged of their bondage: but if a Slaue to a Turke, he onely is the better intreated. The Turkes doe vse their Bond-women with little lesse respect then their Wiues, and make no difference betweene the Children begotten both of the one and the other: who liue together without ielousie, it being allowed by their irreligious Religion. Notwithstanding, their Wiues doe onely receiue, 30 as propertie vnto them, their Sabbaths beneuolence. The old and most deformed, are put to most drudgerie.

Slaues.

Sale of them in Markets.

Their condition.

The Men-slaues may compell their Masters before the Cadie, to limit the time of their bondage, or set a price of their redemption, or else to sell them vnto another: but whether of the two, they lightly referre to the Slaues election. If they bee onely fit for labour, they will accept of the time; but if skilfull in any craft, of the price: which expired or payed, they may returne into their Countries. But Gally-slaues are seldome released, in regard of their small number, and much employment which they haue for them; nor those that are Slaues vnto great ones, to whom the Cadies auctoritie extends not. Many of the Children that the Turkes 40 doe buy (for these Markets doe afford of all Ages) they castrate, making all smooth as the backe of the hand, (whereof diuers doe dye in the cutting) who supply the vses of Nature with a Siluer Quill, which they weare in their Turbants. In times past, they did but onely geld them, but being admitted to the free conuerse of their women, it was obserued by some, that they more then befittingly delighted in their societies.

Gelded Eunuchs.

But others say, that Selymus the second, hauing seene a Gelding couer a Mare, brought in amongst them that inhumane custome. The first that euer made Eunuch, was Semiramis. They are heere in great repute with their Masters, trusted with their States, the Government of their Women and Houses in their absence; hauing for the most part beene approoued faithful, wise, and couragious; insomuch as not a few of them haue come to sit at the sterne of State, (the second Vizer of the Port being now an Eunuch,) and others to the Government of Armies.

50 But now speake we of their Funerals. After their death, the Men by the Men, and the Women by the Women, are laid out in the midst of the roome. When diuers of their Priests do assemble, and hauing performed certaine idle ceremonies, as in wrapping their beades about it, and in the often turning it, inuoking God to haue mercy on the depatted: which done, they wash it, shauē it, and shroud it in Linnen, which they leaue vnried both at the head and feet. Then lay they the Corse on a Beere, placing a Turbant at the vpper end, and carrying it to the Graue with the head forward: some of the Deruies going before with Tapers, the Priests after singing, and lastly, his friends and acquaintance. But persons of principall qualitie haue their Horses led before them, with Ensignes trailed on the earth, and other rites of that nature; diuers of the San- 60 tons going before, naming of God, and shaking of their heads, and turning about vntill they fall downe giddy. The sides and bottome of the graue are boorded, and a boord laid ouer the Corse, to keepe the earth from it, leauing a sufficient compasse to kneele in. For they are of opinion, that two terrible Angels, called Mongir and Guanequir, doe presently repaire vnto the graue, and put the soule againe into the body, as if (saith the Alcoran) a man should put on a shirt, and raising him on his knees, with his head vncovered, (the winding-sheete being left vnknit for that purpose) demand of him in particular, how he hath behaued himselfe in this life: which if not well, the one strikes him on the head with a hammer nine fathoms into the earth, the other tearing him with an Iron hooke; and so continue to torment him vntill the day of Iudgement. A Purgatory so feared, that in their Mattins they petition God to deliuer them from the examinations of the blacke Angels, the tortures of the Graue, and their euill iourney. But if he haue satisfied them in his reply, they vanish away, and two white Angels come in their places; the one laying his arme vnder his head; the other sitting at his feet, and so protect him vntill doomes day. The Emperors, and some of the great Bassas (whereof we haue spoken sufficiently before) 10 haue their particular Mausoleums. Those of a second condition are buried in their Gardens, in Sepulchers without couers, filled within with earth, and set with varietie of Flowers: But the common sort are buried by the high-way sides, and fields of most frequency, adioyning to the Citie, hauing a stone of white Marble more then a foote broad, and foure foote high, ingrauen with Turkish Characters, erected at the head, and another at the feete, the graue betweene lying low like a trough. To these the women flocke euery Thursday in multitudes, weeping ouer their Children, Husbands, Kinsfolkes, and dead Progenitors, often kissing the stones, and praying for their deliuey from the aforesaid blacke Torturers: many times leauing bread and meate on their graues, (a custome also of the Pagans) for Dogges and Birds to deuoure, as well as to relieue the poore, being held an auailable almes for the deceased. The better sort doe mourne 20 in white (as for blacke, I neuer saw it worne by a Turke) and but for a little season. And the Women are not to marry by their law, vntill foure moneths and ten daies after the death of their Husbands.

Euery man hath a Trade.

To speake a word or two of their Sciences and Trades: some of them haue some little knowledge in Philosophie. Necessitie hath taught them Phyicke, rather had from experience then the grounds of Art. In Astronomy they haue some in-sight; and many there are that vndertake to tell fortunes. These frequently sit in the streetes of the Citie, resorted vnto by such as are to take a iourney, or goe about any businesse of importance. They haue a good gift in Poetry; wherein they chant their Armour in the Persian tongue to vile Musicke; yet are they forbidden so to doe by their Law: Citternes, Harpes and Recorders, being their principall In- 30 struments. But their lowd Instruments doe rather affright, then delight the hearing. On a time the Grand Signior was perswaded to heare some choise Italian Musicke; but the foolish Musicians (whose wit lay onely in the ends of their fingers) spent so much time in vnseasonable tuning, that he commanded them to auoid, belike esteeming the the rest to be answerable. They studie not Rhetorick, as sufficiently therein instructed by Nature; nor Logick, since it serues as well to delude as informe, and that wisdome (according to the opinion of the Epicures) may be comprehended in plaine and direct expressions. Some there be amongst them that write Histories, but few reade them, thinking that none can write of times past truly, since none dare write the truth of the present. Printing they reiect, perhaps for feare lest the vniuersalitie of learning, should subuert their false grounded religion and policie, which is better preserved by an ignorant 40 obedience: Moreouer, a number that liue by writing would bee vndone, who are for the most part of the Priest-hood. The Turkish tongue is loftie in sound, but poore of it selfe in substance. For being originally the Tartarian, who were needie ignorant Pastors, they were constrained to borrow their Termes of State and Office from the Persians, (vpon whose ruines they erected their Greatnesse) of Religion (being formerly Pagans) from the Arabians; as they did of Maritime Names (together with the skill) from the Greekes and Italians. In Natolia it is most generally spoken. They vse (as the Persians) the Arabique Character. In writing they leaue out the vowels, vnlesse it be in the end of a word, so that much is contriued in a little roome. They curiously sleeke their Paper, which is thicke, much of it being coloured and daped like Chamolets, done by a tricke they haue in dipping it in the water. They haue 50 Painters amongst them, exquisite in their kind, (for they are not to draw by their Law, nor to haue the figure of any thing liuing) yet now many priuately begin to infringe that precept, and the Grand Signior himselfe hath a fanne, whereon the battels of Hungarie are painted. Colours also they haue, nor lesse faire then durable.

Euery one hath some Trade or other, not so much as the Grand Signior excepted. Their Trades are lightly such as serue for their owne vses, neither much supplying foraine Marts, nor frequenting them. A lazy people, that worke but by fits, and more esteeme of their ease then their profit, yet are they excessiue couetous. And although they haue not the wit to deceiue (for they be grosse-headed) yet haue they the will, breaking all compacts with the Christians that they find discommodious, so that they seldome will deale with them. But with one another they 60 buy and sell onely for ready Money, wherein the most of their substance consisteth: the occasion that few suites doe happen amongst them. I haue spoken sufficiently, at least what I can of this Nation in generall, now conuert we to the Person and Court of this Sultan.

He

He is, in this yeare 1610. about the age of three and twentie, strongly limmed, and of a iust stature, yet greatly inclining to be fat: insomuch as sometimes he is ready to choake as he feeds, and some doe purposely attend to free him from that danger. His face is full and duly proportioned, onely his eyes are extraordinary great, by them esteemed (as is said before) an excellency in beauty. Fleame hath the predominancy in his complexion. He hath a little haire on his vpper lip, but lesse on his chin, of a darksome colour. His aspect is as haughty as his Empire is large, he beginneth already to abstaine from exercise; yet are there pillars with inscriptions in his Serraglio, betweene which he threw a great Iron Mace, that memorize both his strength and actiuitie. Being on a time rebuked by his Father Mahomet, that he neglected so much his exercises and studies, he made his reply: That now he was too old to beginne to learne, intimating thereby, that his life was to determine with his Fathers, whereat the Sultan wept bitterly. For he then had two elder Brothers, of whom the eldest was strangled in the presence of his Father vpon a false suspicion of treason, and the other by a naturall death did open his way to the Empire. Perhaps the consideration thereof hath made him keepe his younger Brother aliue, contrary to their cruell custome; yet strongly guarded, and kept within his Serraglio. For hee is of no bloody disposition, nor otherwise notoriously vicious, considering the aulteritie of that gouernment, and immunities of their Religion. Yet is he an vnrelenting punisher of offences, euen in his owne Houshold: hauing caused eight of his Pages, at my being there, to be throwne into the Sea for Sodomy (an ordinary crime, if esteemed a crime in that Nation) in the night time, being let to know by the report of a Canon, that his will was fulfilled. Amongst whom, it was giuen out that the Vice-royes naturall Sonne of Sicilia was one, (a youth lately taken Prisoner, and presented vnto him) yet but so said to be, to dishearten such as should practise his escape. His valour rests yet vntried, hauing made no war but by disputation, nor is it thought that he greatly affects it, despairing of long life in regard of his corpulency. Whereupon he is now building a magnificent Mosque, for the health of his soule, all of white Marble; at the East end, and South-side of the Hippodrom, where he first broke the Earth, and wrought three houres in person. The like did the Bassas, bringing with them presents of Money, and Slaues to further the building. His occupation (for they are all tyed to haue one) is the making of Iuory Rings, which they weare on their Thumbs when they shoote, whereupon he workes daily. His Turbant is like in shape to a Pumpion, but thrice as great. His vnder and vpper garments, are lightly of white Sattin, or cloath of Siluer Tissued with an eye of Greene, and wrought in great branches. Hee hath not so few as foure thousand persons that feede and liue within his Serraglio, besides Capagies, of whom there are five hundred attired like Janizaries, but onely that they want the socket in the front of their Bonnets, who waite by fifties at euery gate. The chiefe Officers of his Court are the Master (as we may terme him) of the Requests, the Treasurer, and Steward of his Houshold, his Cup-bearer, the Aga of the Women, the Controller of the Iemoglans: who also steereth his Barge, and is the principall Gardiner. Diuers of these Iemoglans marching before the Grand Signior at solemne shewes, in a vaine ostentation of what they would vndergoe for their Lord, gathering vp the skinned of their Temples to thrust Quills through, and sticke therein Feathers for a greater brauery, so wearing them to their no small trouble, vntill the place putrifie; some when the old breakes out, cutting new holes close to the broken. Yea the Standard-bearers of this Crue, thrust the staues sometimes of their Sandards through the skinned and fat of their bellies, resting the lower end on a stirrop of Leather, and so beare them through the Citie. Fiftly, Mutes he hath borne deafe and dumbe, whereof some few be his daily companions; the rest are his Pages. It is a wonderfull thing to see how readily they can apprehend, and relate by signes, euen matters of great difficultie. Not to speake of the multitude of Eunuchs, the Foot-men of his Guard, Cookes, Sherbet-men, (who make the foresaid beurance) Gardiners and Horse-keepers. Relate we now of his Women, wherein we will include those as well without as within his Serraglio.

And first begin we with his Virgins, of whom there seldome are so few as five hundred, kept in a Serraglio by themselves, and attended on onely by Women, and Eunuches. They all of them are his Slaues, either taken in the warres, or from their Christian Parents, and are indeed the choicest beauties of the Empire. They are not to be presented to the Emperour, vntill certaine moneths be expired after their entrance, in which time they are purged and dieted, according to the custome of the ancient Persians. When it is his pleasure to haue one, they stand ranckt in a Gallery, and she prepareth for his bed to whom he giueth his Handkerchiefe, who is deliuered to the aforefaid Aga of the Women, (a Negro Eunuch) and conducted by him into the Sultans Serraglio. She that beareth him the first Sonne, is honoured with the Title of Sultana. But for all his multitude of Women, he hath yet begotten but two Sonnes and three Daughters, though he be that way vn satiably giuen, (perhaps the cause that he hath so few) and vseth all sorts of foods that may inable performance. He cannot make a free Woman his Concubine, nor haue to doe with her whom he hath freed, vnlesse hee doe marry her, it being well knowne to the wickedly witty Roxolana: who pretending deuotion, and desirous for the health, forsooth, of her soule to erect a Temple, with an Hospitall, imparting her mind to the Musis, was told by him that it would not be acceptable to God, if built by a Bond-woman. Whereupon she put on a habite of a counterfeit sorrow, which possessed the doting Solyman with such a compassion, that he forth-with gaue her her freedome, that she might pursue her intention. But hauing after a while sent for her by an Eunuch, shee cunningly excused her not comming, as touched in Conscience with the vnlawfulnessse of the fact; now being free, and therefore not to consent vnto his pleasure. So he whose soule did abide in her, and not able to liue without her, was constrained to marrie her. The onely marke that shee ayimed at, and whereon she grounded her succeeding Tragedies. This also hath married his Concubine, the mother of his younger Sonne, (she being dead by whom hee had the eldest) who with all the practises of a politicke Stepdame, endeouours to settle the succession on her owne, adding, as it is thought, the power of Witch-craft to that of her beautie, she being passionately beloued of the Sultan. Yet is she called Casck Cadoun, which is, the Lady without haire: by Nature her selfe, both graced and shamed. Now when one Sultan dieth, all his women are carried into another Serraglio, where those remaine that were his predecessors, being there both strictly lookt vnto, and liberally prouided for. The Grand Signior not seldome bestowing some of them (as of his Virgins, and the women of his owne Serraglio) vpon his great Bassas and others, which is accounted a principall honour. But for his Daughters, Sisters, and Aunts, they haue the Bassas giuen them for their Husbands: the Sultan saying thus, Here Sister, I giue thee this man to thy Slaue, together with this dagger, that if he please thee not, thou maist kill him. Their husbands come not vnto them vntill they be called: if but for speech onely, their shooes which they put off at the doore, are there suffered to remaine: but if to lye with them, they are laid ouer the bed by an Eunuch, a signe for them to approach, who creep in vnto them at the beds feete. Mustapha and Hadir, (two of the Viziers of the Port) haue married this Sultans Sister, and Neece; and Mahomet Bassa of Cairo, his daughter, a child of sixe yeares old, and he about fiftie, hauing had presents sent according to the Turkish solemnities, who giueth two hundred thousand Sultanies in dowry. Not much in habite doe the Women of the Serraglio differ from other, but that the Fauourite weares the ornament of her head more high, and of a particular fashion, of beaten Gold, and inchaced with Gems; from the top whereof there hangeth a veile that reacheth to her anckles, the rest haue their Bonets more depressed, yet rich; with their haire disheueled.

When the Sultan entertayneth Embassadors, hee sitteth in a roome of white Marble, glistering with Gold and Stones, vpon a low Throne, spred with curious Carpets, and accommodated with Cushions of admirable workmanship; the Bassas of the Bench being by, who stand like so many Statues without speech or motion. It is now a custome that none doe come into his presence without presents, first fastned vpon his Bassas, as they say, by a Persian Embassador; who thereupon sent word to the Sophy his master that hee had conquered Turkie. The stranger that approacheth him is led betweene two: a custome obserued euer since the first Amurath was slaine by the Seruan Cobelitz, a common Souldier, who in the ouerthrow of Cossana, rising from among the dead bodies, and reeling with his wounds, made towards the Sultan then taking a view of the slaine, as if hee had something to say; by whom admitted to speech, hee forthwith stabd him with a Dagger, hid vnder his Cassocke for that purpose. They goe backward from him, and neuer put off their Hats; the shewing of the head being held by the Turke to bee an opprobrious indecency. Now, when hee goeth abroad, which is lightly euery other Friday. (besides at other times vpon other occasions) vnto the Mosque: and when in state, there is not in the world to be seene a greater spectacle of humane glorie, and (if so I may speake) of sublimated manhood. For although (as hath beene said) the Temple of Sancta Sophia, which he most vsually frequenteth, is not aboue a stones cast from the out-most gate of the Serraglio, yet hath he not so few as a thousand Horse (besides the Archers of his Guard, and other Footmen) in that short procession; the way on each side inclosed, as well within as without, Capagies and Ianizaries, in their scarlet Gownes, and particular head-ornaments. The Chausers ride formost with their gilded Maces; then the Captaines of the Ianizaries with their Aga, next the Chieftaines of the Spachies, after them their Sanziaks; those of the soulderie wearing in the fronts of their Bonnets the Feathers of the Birds of Paradise, brought out of Arabia, and by some esteemed the Phoenix. Then follow the Bassas and Beglerbegs: after them the Pretorian foot-men, called the Solacchi, whereof there be in number three hundred; these are attired in Calfouns and Smockes of Callico, wearing no more ouer them then halfe-sleeued Coates of Crimson Damaske, the skirts tuckt vnder their girdles: hauing Plumes of Feathers in the top of their copped Bonnets; bearing Quiuers at their backes, with Bowes ready bent in their left hands, and Arrowes in their right, gliding along with a marvellous celeritie. After them seuen or nine goodly Horses are led, hauing Caparisons and Trappings of inestimable value, followed by the idolized Sultan gallantly mounted. About whom there runne fortie Peichi (so called in that they are naturally Persians) in high-crowned brimlesse Caps of beaten Gold, with Coats of Cloath of Gold girt to them, with a girdle called Chochiach: the Pages following in the reare, and other Officers of the Household. But what most deserueth admiration amongst so great a concourse of people, is their generall silence: insomuch, as had you but onely eares, you might suppose suppose (except when they salute him with a soft and short murmur) that men were then folded in sleepe, and the World in mid-night. He that brings him good newes (as vnto others of inferiour condition) receiueth his reward, which they call Mustolooke. But this Sultan to auoid abules in that kind, doth forth-with commit them to Prison, vntill their reports bee found true or false; and then rewards or punisheth accordingly. Although he spends most of his time with his women, yet sometimes he recreates himselfe in hawking, who for that purpose hath (I dare not name) how many thousand Faulkners in pension, dispersed throughout his Dominions: and many of them euer attendant. Their long-winged Hawkes they whittle not off as wee doe, but putting a bridle about their neckes, they make them couch to their fists, and so galloping to the Brooke, sling them off at the fowle, being reared sodainly by the noyse of a Drumme that hangs at their Pummels, by vse made cunning in that kind of preying. They carrie them on the right hand. A hardie Hawke is highly esteemed; and they haue a kind of them called Shahans, much lesse then a Falcon: yet so strangely couragious, that nothing flyeth in the Ayre that they will not bind with. They also hawke at the field, for I haue seene them carrie Spaniels with them: yet those in beautie not like vnto ours, but of a bastard Generation. They feed their Hawkes with hard Egges when flesh is wanting, and seldome bestow of them the mewing. Although he affects not hunting, yet entertaynes he a number of Huntsmen. Their Dogs they let goe out of slips in pursuit of the Wolfe, the Stagge, the Bore, the Leopard, &c. Those that serue for that purpose are stickle haired, and not vnlike to the Irish Grey-hounds.

Huntsmen.

Now the yearely Reuenue which he hath to defray his excessiue disbursements, such a World of people depending vpon him, amounts not aboue fifteene Millions of Sultanies, (besides the entertaynement for his Timariots) which is no great matter, considering the amplitude of his Dominions: being possessed of two Empires, aboue twentie Kingdomes, beside diuers rich and populous Cities; together with the Red, most of the Mid-land, the Aegean Euxine, and Proponticke Seas. But it may be imputed to the barbarous wastes of the Turkish Conquests, who depopulate whole Countries, and neuer re-edifie what they ruine. So that a great part of his Empire is but thinly inhabited, (I except the Cities) and that for the most part by Christians, whose pouertie is their onely safetie and protectresse. But his casuall in-comes doe giue a mayne accession to his Treasurie: as Taxes, Customes, Spoiles, and Extortions. For as in the Sea the greater fishes doe feed on the lesse, so doe the Great ones here on their Inferiours, and hee on them all: being, as afore-said, the Commander of their liues, and generall Heire of their substances. He hath diuers Mines of Gold and Siluer within his Dominion, that of Siderocapsa in Macedon, hauing beene as beneficiall vnto him as the largest Citie of his Empire, called anciently Chrysites: and not vnknowne to Philip the Father of Alexander; who had the Gold from thence wherewith he coyned his Philips, as also from those of Cranider, from whence he yearely extracted a thousand Talents. He hath onely two sorts of Coine, the Sultanie and the Asper. The Sultanie is equall in value to the Venice Zecceene, and sixe score Aspers amount to a Sultanie, called rather Aspro, of the whitenesse thereof, in that consisting of siluer.

Constantinople is said to contayne seuen hundred thousand persons: halfe of them Turkes, and the other halfe Iewes and Christians, and those for the generall Grecians. But Pera hath three Christians for one Mahometan: for no Iew dwels in Pera, though they haue their shops there. We omit to speake of the Iewes vntill we come into Iewrie; and now will bend our discourse to the Grecians: a Nation no lesse scattered then they, but infinitely more populous. For not onely three parts of the Inhabitants of all Greece and Romania are Grecians, but almost all that dwell in the Ilands of the Mid-land Sea, Propontis and Aegeum. Infinite numbers there are of them both in the Lesse, and the Greater Asia, and in Africa not a few. For (besides diuers Colonies by them formerly planted) when Antipater, Perdiccas, Seleucus, Lysimachus, Antigonus, Ptolomie, and the rest of the Successors of Alexander had shared his Empire among them, they endeououred as much as they could to plant their new-got Kingdomes with their Countrey men: whose Posteritie in part remayneth to this day, though vassalled to the often changes of forraine Governours: supplied by the extension of the latter Greece Empire, who yet retayne wheresoeuer they liue, their Name, their Religion, and particular Language. A Nation once so excellent, that their Precepts and Examples doe still remayne as approoued Canons to direct the mind that endeauoureth vertue. Admirable in Arts, and glorious in Armes; famous for gouernment, affectors of freedome, euery way noble: and to whom the rest of the World were reputed Barbarians. But now their knowledge is conuerted, as I may say, into affected ignorance, (for they haue no Schooles of Learning amongst them) their libertie into contented slauery, hauing lost their minds with their Empire. Now they delight in ease, in shades, in dancing and drinking: and no further for the most part endeauour their profit, then their bellies compell them. They are generally taxed by the stranger Christians of perfidioufnesse, insomuch, as it is growne into a Prouerbe, Chi side in Grego, sara intrigo, in them more anciently noted. There be diuers rich men of them in Pera, but those I thinke were descended of the Genoes; who were as hath beene said, the owners of that Citie. Many of them exercise Merchandize in Vessels called Carmasals, and haue of late gotten the vse of the Compasse, yet dare they not aduenture into the Ocean. They are

are of diuers Trades in Cities, and in the Countrey doe till the Earth (for the European Turkes doe little meddle with Husbandry) and dresse their Vines, by them onely planted. They haue a Ceremonie of baptizing of their Wines, which is the reason that the Jewes will not drinke thereof: performed in the memorie, and on that day wherein Christ conuerted water into wine: the Priest in the midst of his Oraisons powring thereinto a small quantitie of water.

Drinkings.

And although the Greekes doe now for the most part imitate the Turkes, (I meane heere in Turkie) in sitting at their meate, yet retaine they still that vice of immoderate drinking. They pledge one another in order; and he that cals for wine out of his turne, is reputed vnciuill. Their Glasses are little, but at euery draught emptied; and when they haue once drunke hard, they obserue no Rule, but prouoke one another to excesse. Neuer silent; and euer and anon kisse those that sit next them on the cheek and fore-head: and so likewise they doe in their salutations after a long absence, and to those to whom they would giue an assurance of their good will. Vsed of long, as appeareth by the Scriptures, amongst these Easterne Nations. But to kisse their women is an vnluiferable wrong; vnlesse it be betweene the Resurrection and Ascension; vsing also this greeting, that, Our Sauour is risen. The women for the most part are browne of complexion, but exceedingly wel-fauoured, and excessiuely amorous. Their Garments differ little from theirs amongst whom they liue. They couer not their faces (the Virgins excepted) vnlesse it bee with Painting; vsing all the suppliment of a sophisticate beautie. And not without cause, for when they grow old, they most grow contemptible, beeing put to doe the drudgeries of the house, and many times to waite on their children. They are costly in their attyre, and will complaine to the Patriarke, if their Husbands maintayne them not according to their substances. The Greekes, as the Turkes doe vse little household stufte; and lye vpon Mattresses.

Women.

Their language.

Now the Grecians themselves, (except some few) are ignorant in the ancient Greeke, it being called the Latine Greeke, and is a Language peculiar to the Learned. Yet the vulgar Greeke doth not differ so farre from the same, as the Italian from the Latine, corrupted not so much by the mixture of other Tongues, as through a supine wretchednesse. In some places they speake it more purely than in others. For the Boyes of Pera will laugh, when they heare the more barbarous Dialect of other maritime Grecians. And there be yet of the Laconians that speake so good Greeke, (though not Grammatically) that they vnderstand the Learned; and vnderstand not the vulgar. Their Liturgie is read in the ancient Greeke, with not much more profit perhaps to the rude people, then the Latine Seruice of the Romish Church to the illiterate Papists.

The foure Patriarkes.

They haue foure Patriarchs: One of Constantinople, another of Alexandria, the third of Ierusalem, and the fourth of Antioch. He of Constantinople hath vnder his Iurisdiction all Peloponnesus, Grecia, Thracia, Dacia, Moesia, Macedonia, Epirus, Albania, Dalmatia, Illyria, a great part of Polonia, Russia, the Ilands of the Adriaticke Sea, and of the Archipelagus, with Candie, Rhodes, Coos, almost all the lesser Asia, Colchis, not a few that inhabit about the Fennes of Mæotis, and Northerne shoare of Euxinus: as Sicilia and Calabria were, vntill they returned vnto the Sea of Rome. Vnder the Patriarch of Alexandria, are those of Egypt and Arabia. The Greekes of Palestine, and of the Countries thereabout, doe obey the Patriarch of Ierusalem. And he of Antioch, who hath his seate in Damascus, (for Antiochia is now desolate) hath subiect vnto him the Grecians of the lesser Armenia, Celicia, Beritus, Tripoly, Aleppo, and other places of the greater Asia. In all these parts they haue the free exercise of their Religion: with publike Temples, and numbers of strong Monasteries. If a Patriarch dye, another is elected by a Synod of Bishops. But the Patriarch of Constantinople hath the Supremacie of the rest assigned him by the Councell of Chalcedon, as Metropolitan of the Imperiall Citie: whose Diocesse exceedeth the other so much, in that most of those Northerne Nations were wonne to Christianitie by the Industry of his Predecessors, and reduced to their Gouvernement. So if we doe consider it, the Grecian Religion both in extent and number exceedeth the Romane. And as the Papists attribute an extraordinarie holinesse to Rome, so doe the Greekes vnto Athos, a Mountaine of Macedonia; so named of Athon the Sonne of Neptune, deckt with still-flourishing Trees, and abounding with Fountaines: called also the Holy Mountayne by the Christians. A place from the beginning dedicated to Religion; lying directly West from Lemnos: and so high, that though it be seuen hundred furlongs distant; yet is it said a little before the setting of the Sunne, to cast a shadow on that Iland.

This stretcheth out into the Sea, and ioynes vnto the Continent by an Isthmos, about a mile and halfe broad: which was cut through by Xerxes, (as hath beene intimated before) and made circumnauigable. But time hath left now no impressions of his barbarous labour. It is well nigh three dayes iourney in length, considering the difficultie of the way; and halfe a dayes ouer. The top thereof resembleth the forme of a man, stretched on his backe from West vnto East; and formed (according to Strabo) to the similitude of Alexander. This Mountayne is onely inhabited by Grecian Monkes, whom they call Caloieros, vn-intermixed with the Laitie: of whom there are there residing not so few as fixe thousand, that liue in Monasteries strongly munit against the Incurious of Robbers and Pirates. Of these there be in number twentie foure. The Caloieros.

Caloieros

Coloieros weare Gownes of blacke, of a homely stufte, with Hoods of the same; and their haire at full length. They neuer marrie, abstaine from flesh, and often (especially during their Lents) from fish that hath blood in it. They liue hardly, feeding on Biscot, Onions, Oliues, Herbs, and such fish as they take in the adioyning Seas. For they all of them labour for their sustenance, leauing their Monasteries betimes in the mornings; and imploying the day, some in tillage, some in the Vineyards, some in making of Boats, some in fishing, others at home spinne, weaue, sew, and doe all the Offices that belong vnto women: so that none but are busied about one thing or another, to the behoofe of their particular Couents: and men they bee that are onely meete for such Drudgeries. For amongst so many, not past three or foure can write or reade, throughout a 10 whole Monasterie: insomuch, that at their Lyturgies, that is read to them first, which they are to sing after. In these Monasteries many excellent Manuscripts haue benee preserved, but those that now are, be onely of Diuinitie, all other Learning (as amongst the Turkes) at this day detested by the Religious. The Coloieros of this place haue a repute aboue all others: and for their strictnesse of life, and obseruance of Ceremonies, are in their seuerall Monasteries relieved from seuerall Nations. The Patriarch of Constantinople is said to pay yearly for the Priests and Coloieros, that are vnder his Iurisdiction within the Turkish Dominions, twelue thousand Sultanies.

The Patriarchs of Constantinople were heretofore men of singular grauitie and learning; but now nothing lesse: rather chosen for temporall respects, then either for their knowledge or deuotion; admitted not seldome to the place at the age of fortie, though prohibited, if vnder threescore, by an ancient Canon. Although elected by their owne Bishops, yet often appointed, and euer to be allowed by the Grand Signior: frequently displanted, and banished vnto the Rhodes, by the briberie of their Successors. Some few of their Priests are learned. For them it is lawful to marrie, but Bigamie is forbidden them, and Trigamie detested in the Laitie. There are no other Orders amongst them besides the foresaid Coloieros, and certaine Nunnes whom they call Coloieras. Yet of the last but a few, who are for the most part poore old Widdowes, that exercise themselves in sweeping of the Churches, attending on the sicke, and actions of like nature. Their Churches are many of them well set forth and painted, with the represents of Saints, but they haue no carued nor imbossed Images. Lampes they haue continually burning. Their ordinarie

30 Lyturgie is Saint Chrysostomes; but on Festiuall Dayes they doe reade Saint Basils, and then attired in their Pontificals. Their behauiour therein expresseth there, to my vnderstanding, no great either decencie or deuotion. They administer the Eucharist in both kinds: if the bread bee not leauened, they thinke it not auailable; and they drinke of the cup very liberally. One Article they hold against the Catholicke Creed; which is, that the Holy Ghost proceedeth onely from the Father.

Four Lents they haue in the yeare, and then a damnable sinne it is to eate flesh, or fish that hath blood in it (except in the Lent before Easter, when all sorts of fish may bee eaten by the Laitie:) but shel-fish they eate, and the Cuttle: whose blood, if I may so tearme it, is like Inke; a delicate food, and in great request. They fast on Wednesdaies, Fridaies, and on holy Eeues: but on Saturdaies they feast, in regard that it was the old Sabbath. They compute the yeare as we doe. They yeeld no Supremacie to the Romane Papacie, but hold that Church for Schismaticall. And although many times out of the necessitie of their Affaires, and to purchase reliefe, they haue treated of a Conciliation; and sometimes it hath benee by their Agents concluded: yet what they haue done hath benee generally reiected vpon their returne, both by the Greekes and those other Nations that professe their Religion. Of their Marriages I haue else-where spoken, and now conclude wee will with their Funerals: wherein they retayne not a few of their ancient and Heathen Ceremonies. Their lamentaions are the same that they were, and beyond all ciuitilie.

50 The women betimes in the morning doe meete at appointed places, and then cry out mainely; beating of their breasts, tearing their haire, their faces and garments. And that the clamour may be the greater, they hire certaine Jewish women, that haue lowdest voyces, ioyning therewith the prayses of the dead, from the houre of his Natiuitie vnto the houre of his dissolution: and keeping time with the melancholicke Musicke. Nor want they store of Spectators, partly drawne thither to delight their eyes, and partly by ielousie. For then the choice, and prime women of the Citie (if the deceased were of note) doe assist their Obsequies; with bosomes displayed, and their haire dis-sheueled: glad that they haue the occasion to manifest their beauties, which at other times is secluded from Admirers.

60 The reason why the Grecians did burne their dead, was, because that part which was diuine in them, should as it were in a fierie Chariot againe re-ascend to the Celestiall Habitations, as vnto Earth the Earthly returned. They vsed to quench the fire with Red Wine, and gathering the bones together to include them in Vrnes as the Vrnes in Sepulchres, (which had no tittle, vnlesse they were slaine in fighting for their Countrey) exhibiting games, and prizes for the Victors in honour of the deceased. Notwithstanding all were not burnt, but some buried in their apparell, as now being Christians they are: who vse Extreme-vnction, as inducted by S. James;

yet not onely denie the Romane opinion of Purgatorie, but furthermore erroneously maintayne, that neither the soules of the blessed nor damned doe suffer either ioy or torment, or shall till the generall Iudgement. But enough of the Grecians.

The Germane Emperour, the Kings of England and of France, haue heere their Liedger Embassadors: as the Venetians their Bailly, and diuers tributarie Princes their Agents. Some meertly employed about State Affaires; others together therewith, about the trafficke of their Nations. But the English onely negotiates for the Merchants, hauing two in the hundred vpon euerie ship, besides a large Pension: with the name of a great proportion of prouision from the Grand Signior. The English Consulship of Chios is in his disposing, and accountable to him; and out of that of Alexandria hee hath no small share, though serued by a French man. There hath bin some contention between him and the French, about the protection of the Dutch Merchants: but now they doe diuide the profits. The English Consul of Aleppo is absolute of himselfe, yet hath from hence his redresses of iniuries: whole chiefe employment is to protect the persons and goods of our Nation, to labour a reuenge of wrongs, and a restitution of losses. And to giue this no more then his due, for this place none can be more sufficient; expert in their Language, and by a long experience in their natures and practises: being moreover of such a spirit, as not to be danted. And surely, his chiefe fault hath beene his misfortune; in the too violent, chargeable, and successelesse solliciting of the restitution of the Prince of Moldavia, (whom aduerlitie hath rather made crafty then honest;) whose house doth harbour both him and his dependents; beeing open also to all of our Nation: a Sanctuary for poore Christian slaues, that secretly flye hither, whom hee causeth to bee conueyed into their Countries, and redeemeth not a few with his money.

NOW are we in the Holy Land, confined on the North with the Mountaynes of Libanus, and a part of Phoenicia: on the East it hath Cælosyria and Arabia Petrea: on the South the same together with Idumea, the West is bounded a part with Phoenicia, and the rest with the Mid-land Sea. Distant from the Line one and thirtie degrees, extending vnto thirtie three, and something vpwrd. So that in length from Dan (the same with Cæsarea Philippi;) vnto Bersheba, (now Gabelin;) it containeth not more then an hundred and fortie miles; where broadest not fifty. A Land that flowed with Milke and Honey: in the midst as it were of the habitable World, and vnder a temperate Climate. Adorned with beautifull Mountaynes, and luxurious Valleyes; the Rockes producing excellent Waters: and no part empty of delight or profit.

It is for the most part now inhabited by Moores and Arabians: those possessing the Valleyes, and these the Mountaynes. Turkes there be few, but many Greekes, with other Christians, of all Sects and Nations, such as impute to the place an adherent holinesse. Here be also some Iewes, yet inherit they no part of the Land, but in their owne Countrey doe liue as Aliens; a people scattered throughout the whole World, and hated by those amongst whom they liue; yet suffered as a necessary mischiefe: subiect to all wrongs and contumelies, which they support with an inuincible patience. Many of them haue I seene abused; some of them beaten: yet neuer saw I Iew with an angry countenance. They can subiect themselues vnto times, and to whatsoever may aduance their profit. In generall they are worldly wise, and thrive wheresoeuer they set footing. The Turke employes them in Receit of Customes, which they by their policies haue inhaunced, and in buying and selling with the Christian: beeing himselfe in that kind a Foole and easily coozened. They are men of indifferent stature, and the best complexions. Throughout the Turkes Dominions they are allowed their Synagogues: so are they at Rome, and elsewhere in Italie; whose Receit they iustifie as a retayned testimonie of the verity of Scriptures; and as being a meanes of their more speedie conuerions: whereas the offence that they receiue from Images, and the losse of goods vpon their conuerions, oppugne all perswasions whatsoever. Their Synagogues (for as many as I haue seene) are neither faire without, nor adorned within more then with a Curtayne at the vpper end, and certaine Lampes (so farre as I could perceiue) not lightned by day-light. In the midst stands a Scaffold, like those belonging to Queresters, in some of our Cathedrall Churches: wherein he stands that reades their Law and sings their Lyturgie: an Office not belonging vnto any in particular, but vnto him (so hee bee free from deformities) that shall at that time purchase it with most money; which redounds to their publike Treasurie. They reade in sauage Tones, and sing in Tunes that haue no affinitie with Musicke: ioyning voyces at the seuerall closes. But their fantastickall gestures exceed all Barbarisme, risme, continually weauing with their bodies, and often iumping vp-right (as is the manner in Dances) by them esteemed an action of zeale, and figure of spirituall eleuation. They pray silently, with ridiculous and continuall noddings of their heads, not to bee seene and not laught at. During the time of Seruice their heads are veyled in linnen, fringed with knots; in number answerable to the number of their Lawes: which they carrie about with them in procession; and rather boast of then obserue. They haue it stucke in the iambes of their doores, and couered with glasse: written by their Cacams, and signed with the names of God, which they kisse next their hearts in their goings forth, and in their returnes. They may not print it, but it is to bee written on Parchment, prepared of purpose (the Inke of a prescribed composition) not with a Quill, but a Cane. They doe great reuerence to all the names of God, but especially to Iehoua; insomuch that they neuer vse it in their speech. And whereas they handle with great respect the other Bookes of the old Testament, the Booke of Hester (that part that is Canonically, for the other they allow not of) writ in a long Scroll they let fall on the ground as they reade it, because the name of God is not once mentioned therein; which they attribute to the wildome of the Writer, in that to be perused by the Heathen. Their other books are in the Spanish Tongue and Hebrew Character. Although they agree with the Turke in Circumcision, detestation of Images, abstinency from Swines-flesh, and diuers other Ceremonies: neuertheless, the Turkes will not suffer a Jew to turne Mahometan, vnlesse hee first turne a kind of Christian. As in Religion they differ from others, so doe they in Habite, in Christendome enforcedly, here in Turkie voluntarily. Their vnder-garments differing little from the Turkes in fashion, are of purple cloth; ouer that they weare Gownes of the same colour, with large wide sleeues, and clasped beneath the chin, without band or collar: on their heads high brimlesse Caps of purple, which they moue at no time in their salutations. They shauie their heads all ouer; not in imitation of the Turke: it being their ancient fashion. Their familiar Speech is Spanish: yet few of them are ignorant in the Hebrew, Turkish, Morisco, vulgar Greeke, and Italian Languages. Their onely studies are Diuinitie and Physicke: their occupations Brocage and Vsurie; yet take they no interest of one another, nor lend but vpon pawnes; which once forfeited, are vnredeemable.

Their attire

They marrie their daughters at the age of twelue, not affecting the single life, as repugnant to societie, and the law of creation. The Sabbath (their deuotions ended) they chiefly employ in nuptiall beneuolencies, as an act of charitie, befitting well the sanctitie of that day. Although no Citie is without them throughout the Grand Signiors Dominions, yet liue they with the greatest libertie in Salonica, which is almost altogether inhabited by them. Eaery male aboue a certaine age, doth pay for his head an annuall tribute. Although they be gouerned by the Turkish Iustice; neuertheless, if a Jew deserue to die by their law, they will either privately make away, or falsly accuse him of a crime that is answerable to the other in qualitie, and deseruing like punishment. It is no ill turne for the Franks that they will not feed at their Tables. For they eate no flesh, but of their owne killing; in regard of the intrals, which being dislocated or corrupted, is an abomination vnto them. When so it falls out, though exceeding good (for they kill of the best) they will sell it for a trifle. And as for their Wines, being for the most part planted and gathered by Grecians, they dare not drinke of them, for feare they be baptized: a ceremonie whereof we haue spoken already. They sit at their meate, as the Turks doe. They burie in the fields by themselves, hauing onely a stone set vpright on their Graues, which once a yeere they frequent, burning of incense, and tearing of their garments. For certaine dayes they fast and mourne for the dead, yea euen for such as haue bene executed for offences. As did the whole Nation at our being at Constantinople for two of good account that were impaled vpon stakes; being taken with a Turkish woman, and that on their Sabbath. It was credibly reported, that a Jew, not long before, did poyson his sonne, whom he knew to be vnrestrainably lasciuious, to preuent the ignominie of a publike punishment, or losse by a chargeable redemption. The flesh consumed, they dig vp the bones of those that are of their families; whereof whole bark-fuls not seldome doe arriue at Ioppa, to be conueyed, and againe interred at Ierusalem: imagining that it doth adde delight vnto the soules that did owe them, and that they shall haue a quicker dispatch in the generall iudgement. To speake a word or two of their women. The elder mabble their heads in linnen, with the knots hanging downe behind. Others doe weare high Caps of plate, whereof some I haue seene of beaten Gold. They weare long quilted Waistcoats, with Breeches vnderneath; in Winter of cloth, in Summer of linnen; and ouer all when they stirre abroad, loose Gownes of purple flowing from the shoulders. They are generally fat, and ranke of the fauours which attend vpon sluttish corpulency. For the most part, they are goggle-eyed. They neither shun conuersation, nor are too watchfully guarded by their husbands. They are good work-women, and can and will doe any thing for profit, that is to be done by the Art of a woman, and which suites with the fashion of these Countries. Vpon iniuries receiued, or violence done to any of their Nation, they will crie out mainly at their windowes, beating their cheekes, and tearing of their garments. Of late they haue bene blest with another Hester, who by her fauour with the Sultan, prevented their intended massacre, massacre, and turned his furie vpon their accusers. They are so well skilled in lamentations, that the Greekes doe hire them to crie at their funerals.

Gaza.

But now returne we vnto Gaza. It stands vpon a hill surrounded with valleyes; and those againe wel-nigh enuironed with hills, most of them planted with all sorts of delicate fruits. The building meane, both for forme and matter: the best but low, of rough stone, arched within, and flat on the top including a quadrangle: the walls surmounting their roofes, wrought through with pot-sheards to catch and strike downe the refreshing winds, hauing spouts of the same, in colour, shape and sight, resembling great Ordnance. Others couered with mats and hurdles; some built of mud; amongst all, not any comely or conuenient. Yet there are some reliques left, and some impressions, that testifie a better condition: for diuers simple roofes are supported with goodly Pillars of Parian marble, some plaine, some curiously carued. A number broken in pieces doe serue for thresholds, iambs of doores, and sides of windowes, almost vnto euery beggarly Cottage. On the North-east corner, and summitie of the hill, are the ruines of huge arches sunke low in the earth, and other foundations of a stately building. From whence the last Sanziack conueyed marble Pillars of an incredible bignesse; enforced to saw them asunder ere they could be remoued: which hee employed in adorning a certaine Mosque below in the valley. The Castle now being, not worthie that name, is of no importance: wherein lieth the Sanziack (by some termed, a Bassa) a sickly young man, and of no experience, who gouernes his Prouince by the aduice of a Moore. His Territories begin at Arisa. On the West side of the Citie, out of sight, and yet within hearing, is the Sea, seuen furlongs off; where they haue a decayed and vn safe Port, of small auaille at this day to the inhabitants. In the valley on the East side of the Citie, are many stragling buildings; beyond which, a hill more eminent then the rest, on the North side of the way that leadeth to Babylon; said to be that (and no question the same described in Scriptures) to which Samson carried the gates of the Citie; vpon whose top there standeth a Mosque, enuironed with the Graues and Sepulchres of Mahometans. In the Plaine betweene that and the Towne, there stand two high Pillars of marble, their tops much worne by the weather: the cause of their erecting vnknowne, but of great antiquitie. South of this, and by the way of Egypt, there is a mightie Cisterne, filled onely by the fall of raine, and descended into by large staires of stone: where they wash their clothes, and water their Cartell.

Reason of low doores.

Slavery of the Inhabitants.

Saturday sorrow.

The same day that wee came, wee left the Carauan, and lodged in the Citie, vnder an Arch in a little Court, together with our Asses. The doore exceeding low, as are all that belong vnto Christians, to withstand the sodaine entrance of the insolent Turkes. For they heere doe liue in a subiection to be pitied; not so much as daring to haue handsome houses, or to employ their grounds to the most benefit: so dangerous is it to be esteemed wealthy. During our abode here, there came a Captaine with two hundred Spahes, sent by Morat Bassa to raise thirtie thousand Dollars of the poore and few Inhabitants of this Citie. The Grecians haue certaine small Vineyards: but that they haue Wine, they dare not be acknowne, which they secretly presse in their houses. They burie their Corne vnder ground, and keepe what they are to spend in long vessels of clay; in that it is subiect to bee eaten with wormes (as throughout Egypt) and will not last if not so preserued. In the principall part of the Citie they haue an ancient Church, frequented also by the Copties. The Greekish women (a thing elsewhere vnseene) here couer their faces, dying their hands blacke; and are apparelled like the *Moore*s of Cairo. Euery Saturday in this Church-yard vpon the Graues of the dead, they keepe a miserable howling; crying of custome, without teares or sorrow. The Subassee would haue extorted from vs wel-nigh as much money as wee were masters of: which wee had hardly auoyded, had not the sicke Sanziack (in that administred vnto by our Physician) quitted vs of all payments. So that there is no travelling this way for a *Frank*e, without speciall fauour.

Hebron.

Thrust out of our lodging (as we were about to leaue it) by the vnciuill Spahes, who seized on diuers of our necessities: on the eighteenth of March wee returned to the Carauan. Wee payed halfe a Dollar apiece to the place for our Camels: and for their hire from Cairo, for those of burthen, fixe Sultanies; for such as carried passengers, eight. Wee gaue them more, two Sultanies apiece to proceed vnto Ierusalem. Here the Carauan diuided: not a small part thereof taking the way that leadeth vnto Babylon. The next day wee also dislodged: leauing the Jewes behind vs, who were there to celebrate their festiuall. The Captaine of the Carauan departed the night before, taking his way through the mountainous Countrey by Hebron: out of his deuotion to visite the graues of the Patriarchs; a place of high esteeme amongst them, and much frequented in their pilgrimages. The ancient Citie (the seat of Dauid before he tooke Sion from the Iebusites) is vtterly ruinated. Hard by there is a little Village, seated in the field of Mechapelah, where standeth a goodly Temple, erected ouer the Caue of their buriall, by Helena the mother of Constantine; conuerted now into a Mosque. Wee past this day through the most pregnant and pleasant valley that euer eye beheld. On the right hand a ridge of high Mountaines, (whereon stands Hebron;) on the left hand the Mediterranean Sea, bordered with continued hills, beset with varietie of fruits: as they are for the most part of this dayes journey. The Cham-

Champaine betweene about twentie miles ouer full of flowry hills ascending leasutely, and not much surmounting their ranker valleys, with groues of Oliues, and other fruits disperfedly adorned. Yet is this wealthy bottome (as are all the rest) for the most part vninhabited, but only for a few small and contemptible Villages, possessed by barbarous Moores; who till no more then will serue to feed them: the Grasse waite-high, vnmowed, vneaten, and vselessly withering. Perhaps so desolate in that infested by the often recourse of Armies, or masterfull Spahes: who before they goe into the field (which is seldome vntill the latter end of haruest, lest they should starue themselves by destroying of the Corne) are billeted in these rich pastures, for the benefit of their Horses, lying in Tents besides them; committing many outrages on the adioyning Townes and distressed passengers.

10 Ten miles from Gaza, and neere vnto the Sea, stands Ascalon, now a place of no note; more then that the Turke doth keepe there a Garrison. Ten miles North of Ascalon along the shoare stands Azotus: and eight miles beyond that Acharen, now places of no reckoning. About two of the Clocke wee pitched by Cane Sedee; a ruinous thing, hard by a small Village, and not a quarter of a mile from the Sea: the Carauan lying in deepe pastures without controlment of the Villagers. The next day we departed two houres before Sun-rise: descending into an ample valley, and from that into another; hauing diuers Orchards towards the Sea. The Countrey such (but that without trees) as wee past through before. No part so barren, but would proue most profitable, if planted with Vines, and fruits; made more then probable, by those that grow about Gaza. Passing through a spacious field of Oliues, about noone wee pitched on a little hill, lying East, and within a furlong of Rama, called Ramula by the Moores; which signifieth sandy. It is seated in a plaine, on a little rising of the earth, stretching North and South, built of free-stone, the streets narrow, the houses contemptible. Yet are there many goodly ruines, which testifie farre better building, especially those of the Christian Churches. Here is a Monasterie, much of it standing; founded by Philip the good Duke of Burgundie, in that place where sometimes stood the house of Nicodemus; built for the reliefe and safety of Pilgrims in their passage to Ierusalem: and although quitted by the Friers, yet at this day seruing to that purpose, called Sion-houise, and belonging to the Monasterie of Mount Sion.

Ascalon.

Ioppe.

30 Ioppe was called the Port of Iury; the only one that it had. Then more conuenient then now: much of it choked with sand, and much of it worne with the continual assaults of the waters. Of the City there is no part standing, more then two litle Towers, wherein are certain harquebuses acrosse, for the safe-guard of the harbour. Vnder the cliffe, and opening to the Hauen are certaine spacious Caues, hewen into the rock: some vsed for Ware-houses, and others for shelter. The merchandizes here embarked for Christendome are only Cottens, gathered by certaine Frenchmen, who reside at Rama in the house of Sion. The Western Pilgrims doe for the most part arriue at this place, and are from hence conducted to Ierusalem by Attala, a Greeke of Rama; and Druggaman to the Pater-guardian, paying seuen Sultanies a piece for his Mules, his labour, and discharge of Caphar. The like rate he hath for bringing them backe againe: a great expence to poore Pilgrims for so small a iourney; which must be payed although they accept not of his conduct. Yet by this meanes they doe passe securely: hee being in fee with the Arabians that possesse the Mountaines. Now the Carauan did againe diuide, the Moores keeping on the way that leadeth to Damascus. Here wee should haue payed two Dollars a piece for our heads to a Sheck of the Arabs. But the Sanziack of Gaza had sent vnto him that it should be remitted.

Charges of Pilgrims.

40 He came vnto our Tent, and greedily fed on such viands as we had set before him. A man of a tall stature, clothed he was in a Gambalocke of scarlet, buttoned vnder the chin with a bosse of gold. He had not the patience to expect a present, but demanded one; wee gaue him a piece of Sugar, and a paire of Shooes, which he earnestly enquired for, and cheerfully accepted. On the twentieth of March with the rising Sunne wee departed. A small remainder of that great Carauan; the Nostraines (so name they the Christians of the East *) that rode vpon Mules and Asses, being gone before. Amongst whom were two Armenian Bishops: who footed it most of the way, but when (alighting themselves) they were mounted by some of their Nation. Before wee had gone farre we were stayed by the Arabs, vntill they had taken Caphar of the rest. The Subassee of Rama besides had two Mednes vpon euery Camell. The day thus wasted did make vs misdoubt that we should not get that night vnto Ierusalem: but the misfing of our way (for the Arabs had left vs contrarie to their custome) turned our feare to despaire. Some fixe miles beyond Rama the hills grew bigger and bigger, mixed with fruitfull valleyes. About two miles further wee ascended the higher Mountaines: paying by the way two Mednes a head; but at seuerall places. The passage exceeding difficult; streightned with wood, and as it were pauered with broken rockes: which by reason of the raine then falling, became no lesse dangerous to our Camels. At length wee came to a small Village, where we first discovered our erring. Some counselled to stay, others to proceed; both dangerous alike, the way vnkowne, vn safe, the inhabitants theues, as are all the Arabians. Whilest we thus debated, the night stole vpon vs, and bereft vs of the election. The much raine enforced vs to flee for shelter vnto a ruinous Chappell, where distrust set the watch, which we carefully kept till the morning. Betimes wee forooke the Village, descending the way wee had ascended, guided by the chiefe of the Towne, who for a summe of money had vndertaken our conduct to the top of the Mountaines, hauing hired Asses for our more expedition: yet others crossing vs as wee returned along the Valley, with shewes of violence, would haue extorted more money. Our passage for five houres together lay through a narrow streight of the Mountaines; much of our way no other then such as seemed to haue beene worne by the winters torrent. We past by a ruinous Fort, seated neere a Fountaine, sufficient when it stood, to haue made good that passage. In the way wee sprang a number of Partridges; others on each side running on the Rocks; like in colour vnto those of Chios. Ascending by little and little, at length wee attained to the top, which ouertopt and surueyed all the Mountaynes that wee had left behinde vs. From hence to Ierusalem the way is indifferent euen. On each side round Hills, with ruines on their tops, and Valleyes, such as are figured in the most beautifull Land-skips. The soyle, though stonie, not altogether barren, producing both Corne and Oliues about inhabited places. Approaching the North Gate of the Citie, called in times past the Gate of Ephraim, and now of Damascus; we onely of all the rest were not permitted to enter. When compassing the wall vnto that of the West, commanded by the Castle, we were met by two Franciscan Friers, who saluted and conueyed vs to their Couent. Wee entred, as afore-said, at the west Gate, called the Gate of Ioppa. On the right hand, and adioyning to the Wall, there standeth a small ill-fortified Castle: yet the onely Fort that belongeth to the Citie; weakly guarded, and not ouer-well stored with Munition; built by the Pisans at such time as the Christians inhabited this Citie. Turning on the left hand, and ascending a part of Mount Gihon, we came to the Monasterie of the Franciscans (being now in number betweene thirtie and fortie) who in the yeere 1561. thrust out of that which they had on Mount Sion, had this place assigned them. But of the Founders name I am ignorant: nor is hee much wronged by being forgotten: since so meane a building can giue no fame to the builder.

So call they their Leaders for the most part Santons. A kind of riding Gowne: * Perhaps because most of them are Nestorians.

The Pater-guardian with due complement entertained vs: a reuerent old man, of a voluble tongue, and winning behauiour. His name Gaudentius: his Nation, Italy. Euery third yeere they are remoued; and a Successor elected by the Pope, from whom they haue a part of their exhibition: the rest from the Spaniard and Florentine. Nor is it a little that they get by the resort of the Pilgrims of Christendome. For all that come must repaire to their Couent; otherwise they shall be accused for Spies, and suffer much trouble: the Romane Catholikes rewarding them out of deuotion, and the rest out of curtesie: which, if short of their expectations, they will repine at as losers. Wee foure, for eight dayes entertainment bestowed little lesse amongst them then an hundred Dollers; and yet they told vs wee had hardly payed for what wee had eaten. A costly rate for a monasticall diet. But the Turke is much more fierce vpon them: awayting all aduantages that may giue a colour to extortion. A little before our comming, a Turke being denied by a Friar of some trifle that hee requested, gaue himselfe such a blow vpon the Nose that the bloud gushed forth: and presently exclayming as if beaten by the other, complained to the Sanziacke; for which Anania they were compelled to part with eight hundred Dollers. Brought much behind hand, as they alledge, with such losses, they vse oft to rehearse them as motiues vnto charitie.

The Couent hath also another in-come by the Knights of the Sepulchre; who pay thirtie Sultanies apiece to the Pater-guardian: who by vertue of his Patent doth giue them that dignitie. The Kings of France were Soueraignes of that Order, by whom it was instituted in the yeere 1099. who granted them diuers Immunities. They bare five Crosses Gules, in forme of that which is at this day called the Ierusalem Crosse; representing thereby the five wounds that violated the Bodie of our Sauour. None were to bee admitted if of a defamed life, or not of the Catholike Religion. They are to bee Gentlemen of Bloud, and of sufficient meanes to maintayne a port agreeable to that calling, without the exercise of Mechanicall Sciences. But now they will except against none that bring money, insomuch that at our being there they admitted of a Romane, by Trade an Apothecarie, late dwelling in Aleppo. They take the Sacrament to heare euery day a Masse, if they may conueniently. If warres bee commenced against the Infidels, to serue here in person, or to send other in their steads no lesse seruiceable: To oppugne the Persecutors of the Church, to shunne vniust Warres, dishonest Gain, and priuate Duells: Lastly, to bee Reconcilers of dissentions, to aduance the common good, to defend the Widdow and Orphane, to refrayne from Swearing, Periurie, Blasphemie, Rapine, Vsurie, Sacriledge, Murder, and Drunkennesse: to auoide suspected Places, the companie of infamous Persons; to liue chastly, irreproueably, and in Word and Deed to shew themselues worthy of such a Dignitie. This Oath taken, the Pater-guardian layeth his hand vpon his head, as hee kneeleth before the entrance of the Tombe: bidding him to bee Loyall, Valiant, Vertuous, and an vndaunted Souldier of Christ and that holy Sepulchre. Then giues hee him the Spurs, which hee puts on his heeles; and after that a Sword (the same, as they say, which was Godfroyes of Bullein) and bids him vse it in defence of the Church, and himselfe; and to the confusion of Infidels: sheathing it againe, again, he girts himselfe therewith. Who then arising, and forth-with kneeling close to the Sepulcher, enclining his head vpon the same; he is created by receiuing three strokes on the shoulder, and by saying thrice, I ordaine thee a Knight of the holy Sepulcher of our Lord Iesus Christ, in the Name of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost; then kisses he him, and puts about his necke a chaine of Gold, whereat hangeth a Ierusalem Crosse: who arising, kisses the Sepulcher, and restoring the afore said Ornaments, departeth.

From the top of this Monasterie, suruey you may the most part of this Citie: whereof much lies waste; the old buildings (except some few) all ruined, the new contemptible. None exceed two stories: the vnder no better then Vaults; the vpper arched aboue, and standing vpon Arches, being well confirmed against fire, as hauing through out no combustible matter: the Roofes flat, and couered with Plaister. Inhabited it is by Christians out of their deuotion; and by Turks, for the benefite receiued by Christians, otherwise perhaps it would be generally abandoned.

After a little refreshment, the same day we came (which was vpon Maundie-Thursday) we went vnto the Temple of the Sepulcher, euery one carrying with him his Pillow and Carpet. The way from the Monasterie continues in a long descent, (the East side of Gihon) and then a little ascendeth to Mount Caluary. Mount Caluary a rocky hill, neither high nor ample, was once a place of publicke execution: then without, but now wel-nigh within the heart of the Citie, whereupon the Emperour Adrian erected a Fane vnto Venus; but the vertuous Helena (of whom our Countrey may iustly glorie) ouerthrew that receptacle of Paganisme, and built in the roome thereof this magnificent Temple, which not onely possesseth the Mount, but the Garden below, together with a part of the Valley of Carcaffes, (so called, in that they threw there into the bodies of the executed) which lay betweene Mount Caluary, and the Wall of the old Citie. The Frontispice opposing the South, of an excellent structure; hauing two ioyning doores; the one now walled vp, supported with Columnes of Marble, ouer which a transome ingrauen with Historicall figures; the Walls and Arches crested, and garnished with Floritry. On the left hand there standeth a Tower, now something ruined, (once, as some say, a Steeple, and depriued by Saladine, of Bels vn sufferable to the Mahometans:) on the right hand, by certaine steps a little Chappell is ascended, coupled aboue, and sustained at the corners with pillars of Marble: below through a Wall, which bounds the East side of the Court, a paire of staires doe mount to the top of the Rocke, (yet no Rocke eident) where is a little Chappell built (as they say) in the place where Abraham would haue sacrificed Isaac; of much deuotion, and kept by the Priest of the Abissines. This ioyneth to the top of the Temple, leuell, and (if I forgot not) floored with plaister. Out of the Temple there arise two ample coupulos: that next the East (couering the East end and Iles of the Chancell) to bee ascended by steps on the out-side: the other, ouer the Church of the Sepulcher, being open in the middle. O who can without sorrow, without indignation behold the enemies of Christ to be the Lords of his Sepulcher! Who at feastiuall times sit mounted vnder a Canopie, to gather Money of such as doe enter: the profits arising thereof, being farmed at eight thousand Sultanies. Each Franke payes foureteene, (except he be of some religious Order, who then of what Sect soeuer, is exempted from payments) wherein is included the Impost due at the gate of the Citie; but the Christians that be subiect to the Turke, doe pay but a trifle in respect thereof. At other times the doore is sealed with the Seale of the Sanziacke, and not opened without his direction: whereat there hangs seuen Cords, which by the Bels that they ring, giue notice to the seuen seuerall Sects of Christians (who liue within the Temple continually) of such as would speake with them, which they doe through a little Wicket, and thereat receiue the prouision that is brought them. Now to make the foundation euen in a place so vneuen, much of the Rocke hath bene hewne away, and parts too low, supplied with mightie Arches: so that those naturall formes are vtterly deformed, which would haue better satisfied the beholder, and too much regard hath made them lesse regardable.

The rooffe of the Temple is of a high pitch, curiously arched, and supported with great pillars of Marble: the out Iles gallered aboue; the vniuersall Fabricke stately and sumptuous. After we had disposed of our luggage in a part of the North-gallery, belonging to the Latines, the Confessor offered to shew vs the holy and obseruable places of the Temple: which wee gladly accepted of; he demanding first if deuotion or curiositie had posselt vs with that desire. So that for omitting Pater Nosters, and Aue Maries, wee lost many yeeres Indulgences, which euery place doth plentifully afford to such as affect them, and contented our selues with an Historicall Relation. Which I will not declare in order as shewne, but take them as they lye from the first entrance of the Temple. Right against the doore, in the midst of the South Ile, and leuell cher, where by vertue of his death, our Old Man mortified, & of his Resurrection, whereby we liue not, but he liues in vs. Yet is this complaint iust, because In iustice and superstitions of Christians haue made Infidels, Lords of that holy place. Pilgrimages are good, when we are thereby made Pilgrimes from the world and our selues. Thy selfe is the holiest place thou canst visit, if with faith and repentance made the Lords Temple, which the Iewish signified; and to which the Fathers did, and wise men still doe visite these places, by folly peruered to superstition (as in the former Discourse is obserued) when Place hath more place then Grace, or religious imitation of those whose holinesse had made the places esteemed holy.

with the pauement, there lyeth a white Marble in forme of a Graues-stone, enuironed with a raile of Brasse, about a foote high: the place (as they say) where Ioseph of Aramathia, and Nicodemus, anointed the body of our Sauour with sweete ointments. This they kisse, and kneele to, rubbing thereupon their Crucifixes, Beades, and Handkerchiefes; yea, whole webs of Linnen, which they carrie into farre Countries, and preserue the same for their shrouding sheetes. Ouer this there hang seuen Lamps, which burne continually. Against the East end of the stone, there is a little Chappell. Neere the entrance on the right hand, stands the Sepulcher of Godfrey of Bulleins: with a Latine Epitaph, thus Englished.

Hic iacet inclitus Godefridus de Buglion qui totam istam terram acquisiuit cultui Christiano, cuius anima requiescat in Here lieth the renowned Godfrey of Bulleins, who won all this Land to

On the left hand stands his Brother Baldwins, with this inscription.

The first and second Kings of Ierusalem. The farre end of this Chappell, called the Chappell of Saint John, (and of the Anointing, by reason of the stone which it neighbourereth) is confined with the foote of Caluarie, where on the left side of the Altar there is a cleft in the Rocke: in which, they say, that the head of Adam was found, as they will haue it, there buried, (others say in Hebron) that his bones might bee sprinkled with the reall and precious blood of our Sauour Iesus Christ; which he knew should bee shed in that holy place, by a propheticall fore-knowledge. Ouer this are the Chappels of Mount Caluarie: Ascended on the North side thereof by twentie steppes; the highest hewne out of the Rocke, as is a part of the passage, obscure, and extraordinarily narrow. The floore of the first Chappell, is checkered with diuers coloured Marbles, not to bee trod vpon by feete that are shod. At the East end vnder a large arched concave of the Wall, is the place whereon our Sauour did suffer, and may assuredly be thought the same: and if one place bee more holy then another reputed of, in the world the most venerable. Hee is void of fence that sees, beleues, and is not then confounded with his Passions. The Rocke there ariseth halfe a yard higher then the pauement, leuell aboue in forme of an Altar, ten foote long, and sixe foote broad, flagged with white Marble, as is the Arch and Wall that adioyneth. In the midst is the place wherein the Crosse did stand, lined with Siluer, Gilt, and Imbossed. This they creepe to, prostrate themselues thereon, kisse, salute, and such as vse them, sanctifie therein their Beades and Crucifixes. On either side there standeth a Crosse; that on the right side, in the place where the good Theefe was crucified; and that on the left, where the bad, diuided from Christ by the rent of the Rocke, (a figure of his spirituall separation) which cloue asunder in the houre of the Passion. The in-sides doe testifie that Art had no hand therein: each side to other being answerably rugged, and there where vnaccessable to the Worke-man. That before spoken of, in the Chappell below is a part of this, which reacherth (as they say) to the Centre. This place belongeth to the Georgians, whose Priests are poore, and accept of Almes. No other Nation say Masse on that Altar: ouer which there hang fortie sixe Lamps, which burne continually. On the selfe-same floore, of the selfe-same forme is that other Chappell, belonging to the Latines, diuided onely by a Curtaine, and entered through the former. In the midst of the pauement is a square, inchaced with stones of different colours, where Christ, as they say, was nailed vpon the Crosse. This place is too holy to be trod vpon. They weare the hard stones with their soft knees, and heate them with their feruent kisses; prostrating themselues, and tumbling vp and downe with such an ouer-actiue zeale, that a faire Greeke Virgine, ere aware, one morning shewed more then intended, whom the Frier that helpt the Priest to say Masse so tooke at the bound, that it ecchoed againe, and disturbed the mournfull sacrifice with a mirthfull clamor; the poore Maid departed with great indignation. Ouer the Altar which is finely set forth, three and thirtie Lampes are maintined. These two Chappels looking into the Temple, are all that possesse the summit of the Rocke, excepting that of the Immolation of Isaac without, and spoken of before, and where they keepe the Altar of Melchisedech. Opposite to the doore of the Temple, adioyning to the side of the Channell, are certaine Marble Sepulchers, without Titles or Epitaphs. Some twentie paces directly West from Mount Caluarie, and on that side that adioyneth to the Tower, a round white Marble, leuell with the pauement, retaineth the memorie (as they say) of that place, where the blessed Virgine stood, and the Disciple whom Christ loued, when from the Crosse hee commended each to other, ouer which there burneth a Lampe. A little on the right hand of this, and towards the West, you passe betweene certaine pillars into that part of the Church, which is called, the Temple of the Resurrection, and of the holy Sepulcher. A stately round, cloystered below, and above: and supported with great square pillars, flagged heretofore with white Marble; but now in many places deprived thereof by the sacrilegious Infidels. Much of the neather Cloyster is divided into sundry Chappels belonging vnto severall Nations and Sects, where they exercise the rites of their severall Religions. The first, on the left hand to the Abissines; the next to the Iacobites; the third, to the Copties, (close to which, on the left side of another, there is a Cave hewne out of the Rocke, with a narrow entrance, the Sepulcher of Ioseph of Aramathia;) the fourth, to the Georgians; and the fifth, to the Maronites. The Chappell of the Armenians possesseth a great part of the Gallery above, and the rest lying towards the North, belongeth to the

- 10 Latines, though not employed to religious vses. Now betweene the top of the vpper Gallerie, and extreme of the vpright Wall, in severall concaues, are Pictures of diuers of the Saints in Mosaicke work, full faced, and vnheightned with shaddowes according to the Grecian painting, but much defaced by malice, or continuance. In the midst on the South side, is the Emperour Constantines, opposite to his Mothers, the memorable Foundresse. This Round is couered with a Cupolo, sustained with Rafteres of Cedar, all of one piece, open in the midst like the Pantheon at Rome, whereat it receiueth the light that it hath, and that as much as sufficeth. Just in the midst, and in the view of heauen, stands the glorified Sepulcher, a hundred and eight feet distant from Mount Caluarie; the naturall Rocke surmounting the sole of the Temple, abated by Art, and hewne into the forme of a Chappell, more long then broad, and ending in a Semi-circle, all
- 20 flagged ouer with white Marble. The hinder part being something more eminent then the other, is surrounded with ten small pillars adioyning to the Wall, and sustaining the Cornish. On the top (which is flat) and in the midst thereof a little Cupolo couered with Lead, is erected vpon sixe double, but small Corinthian Columnes of polished Porphyre. The other part being lower then this by the height of the Cornish, smooth above, and not so garnished on the sides, seruing as a Lobby or Portico to the former, is entred at the East end, (hauing before the doore a long pauement, erected something above the floore of the Church included betweene two white Marble walls, not past two foot high) consisting of the selfe-same Rocke, doth containe within a Concaue about three yards square, the rooffe hewne compasse, all flagged throughout with white Marble. In the midst of the floore there is a stone about a foot high, and a foot and a halfe
- 30 square; whereon, they say, that the Angell sate, who told the two Maries that our Sauior was risen. But Saint Matthew saith, he sate vpon the great stone, which he had rolled from the mouth of the Sepulcher; and which, it is said, the Empreffe caused to bee conueyed to the Church of Saint Sauior, standing where once stood the Palace of Caiphas. Out of this a passage through the midst of the Rocke, exceeding not three feet in height, and two in breadth, hauing a doore of gray stone, with hinges of the same, vndiuided from the naturall, affoordeth a way to creepe through into a second Concaue, about eight foote square, and as much in height, with a compact rooffe of the solid Rocke, but lined for the most part with white Marble. On the North-side a Tombe of the same, which possesseth one halfe of the roome, a yard in height, and made in the forme of an Altar: insomuch, as not aboue three can abide there at once; the place no larger then
- 40 affoordeth a libertie for kneeling. It is said, that long after the Resurrection, the Tombe remained in that forme, wherein it was when our Sauior lay there; when at length, by reason of the deuouter Pilgrimes, who continually bore away little peeces thereof, (Relikes whereunto they attributed miraculous effects) it was inclosed within a Grate of Iron. But a second inconueniency which proceeded from the tapers, haire, & other offerings throwne in by Votaries, which defiled the Monument, procured the pious Helena to inclose the same within this Marble Altar, which now belongeth to the Latines: whereon they onely say Masse, yet free for other Christians to exercise their priuate deuotions; being well set forth, and hauing on the farre side an Anticke and excellent Picture, demonstrating the Resurrection. Ouer it, perpetually burneth a number of Lamps, which haue filled the rooffe like the in-side of a Chimney, and yeelds vnto the roome an immoderate feruour. Thousands of Christians performe their vowes, and offer their teares here
- 50 yearly, with all the expressions of sorrow, humilitie, affection, and penitence. It is a frozen zeale that will not bee warmed with the sight thereof. And, o that I could retaine the effects that it wrought with an vnfaunting perseuerance! who then did dictate this Hymne to my Redeemer:

Sauior of Mankind, Man, Emmanuel:
Who sin-lesse dyed for sinne, who vanquishd Hell,
The first fruits of the graue. Whose life did giue Light to our darknesse: in whose death we liue.
O strengthen thou my Faith; correct my will,
That mine may thine obey: protect me still.

So that the latter Death may not deuoure
My Soule seal'd with thy Seale. So in the houre
When thou whose Bodie sanctified this Tombe, Vniustly indg'd, a glorious Iudge shalt come
To indge the World with Iustice; by that signe
I may be knowne, and entertaind for thine.

- 60 Without, and to the West end of this Chappell, another very small one adioyneth, vsed in common by the Egyptians and Ethiopians. Now on the left hand as you passe vnto the Chappell of the Apparition, there are two round stones of white Marble in the floore: that next the Sepulcher couering the place where our Sauior, and the other where Mary Magdalen stood (as they say) when he appeared vnto her. On the North-side, and without the limits of the Temple, stands the Chappell of the Apparition: so called (as they say) for that Christ in that place did shew himselfe to his sorrowfull Mother, and comforted her, pierced with anguish for his cruell death, and ignominious sufferings. This belongeth to the Latines, which serueth them also for a Vesterie; from whence they proceed vnto their pompous Processions. On the East-side there stands three Altars, that in the midst in a Closet by it selfe, dedicated to God and our Lady. That on the right hand is called the Altar of the holy Crosse, whereof a great part was there (as they say) reserved.

But when Sultan Solymán imprisoned the Friars of Mount Sion, (whom hee kept in durance for the space of foure yeares) the Armenians stole it from thence, and carryed it to Sabastia, 10 their principall Citie. That on the left hand in the corner, and neere vnto the entrance, is called the Altar of the Scourging; behind which there is a piece of a Pillar, of that (as they say) whereunto our Sauour was bound when they scourged him. This stood on Mount Sion, and there supported the Portico to a Church in the dayes of Saint Ierome; when broken by the Saracens, the pieces were recollected, and this part here placed by the Christians. The rest was distributed by Paul the Fourth, vnto the Emperour Ferdinand, Philip King of Spaine, and the Signorie of Venice; in honour whereof they celebrate the sixt of Aprill. It is (as I remember) about three foot high, of a duskie black-veind Marble, spotted here and there with Red; which they affirme to be the markes of his bloud wherewith it was besprinkled. Before it there is a grate of Iron, insomuch as not to be toucht but by the mediation of a sticke prepared for the purpose; be- 20 ing buttend at the end with Leather, in manner of a Foyle, by which they conuey their kisses, and blesse their lips with the touch of that which hath touched the Rlike. Through the aforelaid Vesterie, a passage leades into certaine Roomes, heretofore a part of the Colledge of the Knight-Templers: by a generall Councell held in Vienna, in the yeare 1312. this Order was extinguishd, and their Lands for the most part conferred vpon the Knight-Hospitallers of Saint Iohns of Ierusalem, of whom wee shall speake when wee come vnto Malta. The Temples in London belonged vnto them, wherein the Church (built round in imitation of this) diuers of their Statues are to be seene, and the posture vsed in their Burials. Here the Franciscans entertayned vs during our abode in the Temple. Returning againe through the Chappell of the Apparition, a little on the left hand there is a concaue in the wall, no bigger then to con- 03 tayne two persons besides the Altar; which is called the Chappell of the Angels: belonging also to the Latines, but lent by them to the despised Nestorians, during the celebration of Easter. Winding with the wall along the outward North-alley of the Chancell, at the farre end thereof there is a Grot hewne out of the Rocke, where they say, that the Iewes imprisoned our Sauour, during the time that they were a prouiding things necessary for his crucifying. This is kept by the Georgians; without other ornament then an vngarnished Altar: ouer which hangeth one onely Lampe, which rendreth a dimme light to the Prison. Vntreading a good part of the fore-said Alley, we entred the Ile (there but distinguished by Pillars) which bordes on the North of the Chancell: and turning on the left hand, where it beginnes to compasse with the East end thereof, wee passed by a Chappell contayning an Altar, but of no regard: wherein they 40 say, the Title was preserved, which was hung ouer the head of our Sauour: now shewne at Rome in the Church of the holy Crosse of Ierusalem. Next to this in the same wall, and midst of the Semi-circle, there is another, the place where they say, the Souldiers cast lots for his garments, of which the Armenians haue the custodie. A little beyond you are to descend a paire of large staires of thirtie steps, part of the passage hewne out of the Rocke of Caluary, which leadeth into a Lobby, the rooffe supported with foure massie pillars of white Marble, which are euer moist through the darknesse of the place (being vnder ground) and sometimes dropping, are said to weepe for the sorrowfull passion and death of Christ. At the farre end, containing more then halfe of the roome, is the Chappell of Saint Helena: hauing two great Altars erected by Chri- 50 stian Princes in her honour. On the South thereof standeth a seate of stone, ouer-looking a paire of staires which descend into the place of the Inuention of the Crosse: where, they say, that she fate whilst the Souldiers remoued the rubbidge that had couered it. These staires (eleuen in number) conduct into an obscure vault, a part of the Valley of Carcasses. There threw they our Sauours Crosse, and couered it with the filth of the Citie, when after three hundred yeares, the Empreffe Helena traouelling vnto Ierusalem, in the extremitie of her age, to behold those places which Christ had sanctified with his corporall presence, threatned torture and death to certaine of the principall Iewes, if they would not reueale where their Ancestours had hid it. At last, forsooth, they wrested the truth from an old old Iew, one Indas, first almost famished, who brought them to this place. Where after he had petitioned Heauen for the disco- 60 uery; the earth trembled, and breathed from her Cranies Aromaticke odours. By which miracle confirmed, the Empreffe caused the rubbidge to be remoued, where they found three crosses, and hard by, the superscription. But when not able to distinguish the right from the other, they say that Macarius, then Bishop of Ierusalem, repairing together with the Empreffe vnto the house of a noble woman of this Citie, vncurably diseased, did with the touch of the true Crosse

Crosse restore her to health. At sight whereof the Jew became a Christian, and was called there-vpon Quiriacus. Being after Bishop of Ierusalem, in the Reigne of Julian the Apostata, hee was crowned with Martyrdome. At which times it was decreed, that no Malefactor should thenceforth suffer on the Crosse; and that the third of May, should be for euer celebrated in memoriall of that Inuention. In this Vault are two Altars, the one where the Crosse of Christ was found, and the other where the other. Ascending againe by the aforesaid staire into the Temple, on the left hand betweene the entrance, and Mount Caluarie, there is a little Roome which is called the Chappell of the Derision. Where vnder the Altar is reserued a part (as they say) of that Pillar to which Christ was bound, when Pilates Seruants crowned him with Thornes, clothed 10 in an old Purple Robe, placing a Reed in his hand, in stead of a Scepter, and crying, Haile King of the Iewes: with other opprobrious Taunts, and Reuilings. This is kept by Abissens. Now nothing remayneth to speak of but the Quire, not differing from those in our Cathedrall Churches. The West end openeth vpon the Sepulcher: the East ending in a semicircle, together with the Iles, is couered with a high Cupolo: on each side stand opposite doores which open into the North & South Alleyes; all ioyntly called the Temple of Golgotha. A partition at the vpper end excludeth the halfe round (behind which their high Altar) which riseth in the manner of a loftie Screene, all richly gilded (as most of the sides of the Chancel) and adorned with the Pictures of the Saints in Antike habits: flat and full faced, according to the manner of the Grecians, to whom this place is assigned. Towards the West end from each side equally distant there is a little Pit in the Pavement, which (they say) is the Nauell of the World, and endeauour to confirme it with that saying 20 of the Scripture, God wrought his Saluation in the midst of the Earth: which they fill with holy Water. The vniuersall Fabricke, maintayned by the Greeke Emperors during their Soueraigntie, and then by the Christian Kings of Ierusalem, hath since bene repayred in the seuerall parts by their particular Owners. The whole of so strong a constitution, as rather decayed in beautie then substance.

Having visited these places (which bestow their seuerall Indulgences, and are honoured with particular Oraisons) after Euen-song, and Procession, the Pater-guardian putting off his Pontificall Habit, clothed in a long Vest of Linnen girt close vnto him, first washed the feet of his fellow Friers, and then of the Pilgrimes: which dried by others hee kissed, with all outward shew of humilitie. The next day, being Good-friday, amongst other Solemnities, they carried 30 the Image of Christ on a sheete supported by the foure corners, in Procession, with Banners of the Passion: first, to the place where he was imprisoned, then in order to the other, performing at each, their appointed Deuotions. Laying it where they say he was fixed on the Crosse, the Friar Preacher made ouer it a short and passionate Oration: who acted his part so well, that hee begot teares in others with his owne; and taught them how to be sorrowfull. At length they brought it to the place where they say, he was embalmed: where the Pater-guardian anoint-ed the Image with sweet Oyles, and strewed it with Aromaticke Powders, and from thence conueyed it to the Sepulcher. At night the Lights put out, and company remoued, they whipped themselues in their Chappell of Mount Caluarie. On Saturday their other Solemnities per-40 formed, they carryed the Crosse in Procession, with the Banners of the Buriall, to the afore-said Chappell: creeping to it, kissing, and lying groueling ouer it. On Easter day they said solempne seruice before the doore of the Sepulcher. The whole Chappel couered on the out side with cloth of Tissue, the gift (as appeareth by the Armes embroydered thereon) of the Florentine. In this they shewed the varietie of their Wardrobe, and concluded with a Triumphant Procession, bearing about the Banners of the Resurrection. Those Ceremonies that are not locall, I willingly omit. At noone wee departed to the Monasterie, hauing laine on the hard stones for three nights together, and fared as hardly.

The Abissens on the Passion weeke forbore to say Masse, putting on mournfull Garments, and countenances sutable. They vse no Extreme vnction, but carrie the dead to the Graue, with the Crosse, the Censer, and holy Water, and say Seruice ouer them. To conclude, they ioyne with the Copties for the most part in substance of Religion, and in Ceremony; one Priest here seruing both: an Ethiopian, poore, and accompanied with few of his Nation; who fantastically clad, doth dance in their Processions with a skipping motion, and distortion of his bodie, not vnlike to our Antickes. To which their Musicke is answerable; the Instruments no other then Snappers, Gingles, and round-bottomed Drummes, borne vpon the backe of one, and beaten vpon by the followers.

60 The Iacobites had two Patriarkes; one resident in the Mountaine Tur, the other in the Mo-nasterie of Gifran, neere vnto the Citie of Mordin, seated (they say) on so high a Mountayne that no Bird flyeth ouer it. But now they haue but one Patriarke, and that hee of Gifran; alwayes a Monke of the Order of Saint Anthony, and named Ignatius; stiling himselfe the Patriarke of Antioch; who for the more conueniencie is remoued to Carmis. They haue a Bishop still residing in Ierusalem, of which the Patriarke is also a Iacobite. The

The Georgians differ not much from the Grecians in their opinions: not called (as some write) of Saint George their selected Patrone, but of their Countrey, so named long before the time wherein hee is supposed to haue liued; lying betweene Colchos, Caucasus, the Caspian Sea, and Armedia; heretofore Iberia, and Albania. A warlike people, infested on both sides with the Turkish and Persian Insolencies. They haue a Metropolitan of their owne; some say, the same that is resident in Mount Sina. They say, that they marrie within prohibited degrees, they are diuided into eighteene Bishopricks; and are not here to be distinguished from the Sorians, nor they from them, being almost of one Religion: and called Melchites, heretofore of their Adversaries, which signifieth a King in the Syrian Tongue; for that they would not embrace the Heresies of Eutyches and Dioscorus, but obeyed the Edict of the Emperour, and Councell of Chalcedon. Their Patriarke is the true Patriarke of Antioch, who abides in Damasco, for that Antioch lyes now wel-nigh desolate. Their Bishop is here poore, so are his ornaments; in their Processions, for State, or in regard of his age, supported on both sides. Their Musicklese Instruments are Fannes of Brasse, hung about with Rings, which they gingle in stops according to their marchings.

The Maronites are Christians inhabiting Mount Lybanus, so called of Marona, a Village adioyning, or of Maro their Abbot. They vse the Chaldean Tongue, and Syrian Character in holy matters. A limme they weare of the Iacobites, and once subiect to the Patriarke of Antioch: but wonne to the Papacie * by Iob. Baptista a Iesuite, in the dayes of Gregorie the Thirteenth, who sent them a Catechisme printed at Rome in the Arabian Language: so that now they doe ioyne with the Latines. An ignorant people, easily drawne to any Religion, that could not giue a reason for their owne: poore in substance, and few in number.

But the Greekes doe here surpasse all the rest in multitude; and the Armenians in brauerie, who in stead of Musicall Instruments, haue Sawcers of Brasse (which they strike against one another) set about with gingles. All differ in habit, and most in Rites; yet all conioyne (the Latines excepted) in celebration of that Impostury of fetching fire from the Sepulcher vpon Easter Eue. The Turkes deride, yet throng to behold it: the Galleries of the round Temple beeing pestered with Spectators. All the Lampes within the Church are at that time extinguished; when they often compassing the Sepulcher in a ioynt Procession, are fore-runne and followed by the people with Saunge clamours (the women whistling) and frantiecke behauiours, besitting better the solemnities of Bacchus; extending their bare armes with vnlighted Tapers. At length the chiefe Bishops approach the doore of the Sepulcher; but the Ethiopian Priest first enters (without whom, they say, the Miracle will not fadge) who after a long stay (meane-while the people hurrying about like mad-men) returnes with the sacred flame, supposed at his Prayers to burst out of the Sepulcher; whereat confusedly they fire their Lights: and snatching them one from another, strue who should first conuey it to their particular Chappels; thrusting the flame amongst their clothes, and into their bosomes, (but swiftly with-drawing it) perswading strangers that it will not burne them: kindling therewith all their Lampes, vnlighted with other fire vntill that day twelue-moneth.

Nestorians.

But I had almost forgot the Nestorians, so called of Nestorius, by birth a Germane, who lived in the dayes of Theodosius, and by him made Bishop of Constantinople. Theie hated of the rest, in an obscure corner, without Ceremonies or Pontificall habit, full of seeming Zeale and Humility, doe reade the Scriptures, and in both kinds administer the Sacrament, denying the Reall Presence: the Priest (not distinguished from the rest in habit) breaking the bread, and laying it in the palme of the Communicants hand; they sipping of the Cup, which is held betweene his. They kisse the Crosse, but pray not before it, nor reuerence they Images. They will not haue Marie to be called the Mother of God. Their chiefe Heresie is, that they diuide the Diuinitie of Christ from his Humanitie. Their Doctrin dispersed throughout all the East, by meanes of Cosro the Persian King, who enforced all the Christians within his Dominion (out of a mortall hatred that he bare to the Emperour Heraclius) eyther to forsake his Empire, or to become Nestorians; as through a great part of Cataia. It is now embraced, but by few; most of that Sect inhabiting about Babylon. Their Patriarkall seate is Muzal in Mesopotamia, seated on the banks of Tygris: their Patriarke not elected, but the dignitie descending from the Father to the Sonne. For Marriage is generally allowed in their Clergie; and when Widdowers, to marry againe at their pleasure. They haue the Scriptures, and execute the Ministerie in the Chaldean Tongue. They allow not of the Councell of Ephesus, nor any that succeeded it. All this while there were no lesse then a thousand Christians, men, women and children, who fed and lodged vpon the pauement of the Temple. On Easter day about one of the clocke in the morning, the Nations and Sects aboue mentioned, with ioyfull clamours, according to their seuerall customes, circled the Church, and visited the holy places in a solemne Procession; and so for that time concluding their Ceremonies, departed.

Easter Solemnitie.

§. V.

Visiting of Emaus and Bethlehem, and other places: Also other obseruations of the Hierosolymitan Holies.

Pon Easter Munday wee hired certaine Asses to ride to Emaus, accompanied with a Guard, and certaine of the Friers. About the mid-way, at the foot of a hill, there are the ruines of a Monasterie, built by Saint Helena: they say, in that place where Iesus appeared to the two Disciples. Here the Latines performed certaine deuotions, and tooke of the stones (as generally they did from all such like places) preserued as precious. Emaus stands seuen miles off, and West of Ierusalem. The way thither mountainous, and in many places as if paved with a continuall rocke; yet where there is earth, sufficiently fruitfull. It was seated (for now it is not) vpon the South side of a hill, ouer-looking a little valley, fruitfull in Fountaines. Honoured with the presence of our Sauour, who there was knowne by the breaking of bread in the house of Cleophas his Cousin-german, and afterward the second Bishop of Ierusalem. In the selfe-same place a Temple was erected by Paula (a Roman Ladie, of whom we shall speake hereafter) whose ruines are yet extant, neere the top of the Mountaine; vnto which the Arabians would not suffer vs to ascend, who inhabite below in a few poore Cottages, vntill we had payed Caphar they demanded. This Citie was burnt in the Iewish warres, by the commandement of Varus; and vpon the destruction of Ierusalem, re-edified by the Romanes; who in regard of their victorie, called it Nicopolis. In the yeere 131. throwne downe by an earth-quake, it was fourescore and twelue yeeres after restored by the Emperour Marcus Aurelius; and afterward dignified during the gouernment of the Christians with an Episcopall Sea, being vnder the Metropolitan of Casarea. Nicephorus, and the Tripartite historie report of a miraculous Fountaine by the high-way side, where Christ would haue departed from the two Disciples: who when he was conuersant vpon earth, and wearied with a longer iourney, there washed his feet; from thenceforth retayning a curable vertue against all diseases. But relations of that kind, haue credite onely in places farre distant. In our returne, wee inclined a little to the left hand, and after a while ascended the top of a Mountaine, (whose Westerne valley was the field, they say, of that battell, when the Sunne and Moone stood still at the commandement of Iosua.) Out of the ruines of an ancient building, a small Mosque is aduanced; where they hold that the Prophet Samuel was buried, who had his Sepulchre in Rama on Mount Ephraim; though diuers other Townes so seated, are so called, which signifieth High in their Language. But our guides were well practised in that precept:

Of Streames, Kings, Fashions, Kingdomes askt, there shewne;

Answer to all: th'unknowne relate as knowne.

Atque aliqua ex illis dum regum nomina quærun
Quæ loca, qui mores, quæue feruntur aquæ:

Et quæ nesciris, vt bene nota refer. Ouid.

who endeauour to bring all remarkable places within the compasse of their processions. The Mahometans either deceived with this tradition, or maintayning the report of their profite, would not suffer vs to enter but at an excessiue rate; which wee refused to part with. The next Mountaine vnto this, doth weare on his Crowne, the ruines of a Castle that belonged to the Machabees. Another more humble, and neerer the Citie, presenteth a pile of stones, square, flat, and solid: the Sepulchre, they say, of the seuen brethren who were tortured to death by Antiochus, whom I rather iudge to haue beene buried at Moden, the ancient seat of that Familie; which stands on the vttermost confines of the Mountaines of Iudea, where were to be seene seuen Sepulchres of white marble, each bearing a Pyramis on his square; said by Iosephus to haue serued in his time for Sea-markes. From hence we approached the North-west side of the Citie, where in the Vineyards are sundry places of buriall hewen out of the maine rocke; amongst the rest, one called the Sepulchre of the Prophets. The first entrance large, and like the mantle-tree of a chimney, cut curiously on the out-side: through which we crept into a little square roome, (euery one carrying a light in his hand) the sides cut full of holes (in manner of a Dove-house;) two yards deepe, and three quarters square. Out of that roome wee descended by two streight passages into two other roomes, likewise vnder ground: yet more spacious, and of better workmanship, but so rounded with the Sepulchres as the former; neighboured with a Vault, which serues for a Cisterne, and filled with a liuing Fountaine. A little beyond, vpon the West side of a large square Court, hewen into the rocke some three fathoms deepe, and entered vnder an arch of the same, there is another mansion for the dead, hauing a porch like to that of the Prophets: and garnisht without (amongst other figures) with two great clusters of Grapes, in memoriall of those, as they say, which were brought by the spies into the host of the Hebrewes. On the left hand you creepe through a difficult descent, which leadeth into faire roomes vnder the ground, and one within another, benched about with coffins of stone bereaft of their couers, there being some bones yet remayning in some of them. This is famed to bee the the household Monument of certaine of the Kings of Juda. In which there is nothing more admirable, then is the artificiall contriuing of the doores, the hinges and all, of the selfe-same stone, vnseperated from the rocke without other suppliment. Hitherto (if not further) by all likelihood the old Citie extended. From hence we returned to the Couent.

The day following wee rode towards Bethlehem, which stands about fixe miles South from Ierusalem. Going out from the gate of Ioppa, and turning on the left hand by the foot of Mount Sion. Aloft on whose vttermost angle stood the Tower of David, (whose ruines are yet extant) of a wonderfull strength, and admirable beautie, adorned with shields, and the armes of the mightie. Below on the right hand of the way in our passage, they shewed vs a Fountaine at the Southside of a square Serraglio; deliuered to be that wherein Bethsheba bathed. North of 10 which, the valley is crossed with a ruinous Aquaduct, which conueyed water vnto the Temple of Salomon. Ascending the opposite Mountaine, we passed through a Countrey, hilly and stony: yet not vtterly forsaken of the Vine, though onely planted by Christians, in many places producing Corne, here shadowed with the fig-tree, and there with the Oliue. Sundry small Turrets disperfed about, which serue for solace as well as for safe-guard. Some two miles from the Citie, on the left hand, and by the high-way side, there groweth a Turpentine-tree yet flourishing, which is said to haue afforded a shelter to the Virgin Marie, as shee passed betweene Bethlehem and Ierusalem. This tradition how euer absurd, is generally beleeued by those Christians: a place of high repute in their deuotions. Towards the West about two miles off, on a little hill stands an ancient Tower: which is said, to haue beene the habitation of Simeon. A mile 20 beyond the foresaid Tree, in the midst of the way there is a Cisterne, vast within, and square at the mouth; which is called the Cisterne of the Starre. For that (as they say) the wise-men of the East, there first againe did see that conducting Starre, which went before them to the place of our Sauours natiuitie. A little on the right hand there are the small remaynes of an ancient Monasterie, built, they affirme, in that place where the Angell tooke vp Abacuck, by the haire of the head, and conueyed him to Babylon. Halfe a mile further, on the left side of the way, there is another Religious house, but in good repaire, in forme of a Fortresse, and enuironed with high walls, to withstand the insolencies of the Infidels; possessed by the Greeke Coloieros, and dedicated to Elias. Hard by there is a flat rocke, whereon they told vs that the Prophet accustomed to sleepe; and that it beares as yet the impressiō of his bodie. Indeed there are certaine 30 hollowes in the same, but not by my eyes apprehended to retayne any manly proportion. As farre beyond are the decayes of a Church, which stood (as they say) in the place where the Patriarch Jacob inhabited. About a mile further West of the way, and a little off, stands the Sepulchre of Rachel, (by the Scripture affirmed to haue beene buried here about) if the entirenesse thereof doe not confute the imputed antiquitie: yet kept perhaps in repaire by her offspring, as a Monument of venerable memorie. The Tombe it selfe resembleth a great Trunke, couered with a Cupolo mounted on a square, which hath on each side an ample arch sustayned onely by the corners. This is enuironed with a foure-square wall; within which stand two other, little, but of the same proportion; kept, and vsed for a place of prayer by the Mahometans. Below it on the side of a Mountaine stands the ruines of that Rama, whereof the 40 Prophet: A voyce was heard in Rama, Rachel weeping for her children, &c. From this ridge of the hills, the Dead Sea doth appeare as if neere at hand: but not so found by the traeller, for that those high declining Mountaines are not to be directly descended. Within halfe a mile of Bethlehem, separated from the same by a valley, and a little on the left hand of the way, are the Cisternes of David, whereof he so much desired to drinke, and when they brought him of the water, refused it: a large deepe Vault, now out of vse, hauing onely two small tunnels at the top, by which they draw vp the water.

And now wee are come to Bethlehem, where in a Grot at the East side of the Citie, employed for a Stable (the Inne being pestred with strangers) the Virgin fell in trauell, and produced vnto the world a Sauour. In this Caue from the time of Adrian, vnto the raigne of Constantine, 50 they celebrated the impious lamentation of Adonis (much honoured by the Syrians) who aboue had his Statue shadowed with a groue of Myrtles: which the vertuous Helena subuerted, and erected thereupon this goodly Temple yet entire, and possesed by the Franciscans of Ierusalem, of whom some few are here continually resident; called Saint Maries of Bethlehem: in forme representing a Crosse, the stalke whereof compriseth the bodie; entred at the lower end through a Portico sustayned with sixteene Pillars. The rooffe, in the midst, is lofty, flat, and (if I forget not) of Cedar: the Sides, of the same fabricke, but much more humble, are vpheld with foure rankes of Pillars (ten in a row) each of one entire marble, white, and in many places beautifully speckled; the largest, and fairest that euer I saw, whose vpper ends doe declare that they haue in part beene exquisitely gilded: The walls are flagged with large tables of white 60 marble, wel-nigh to the top; the rest adorned with Mosaique painting, although now greatly defaced. It is both here reported, and recorded by historie, that a Sultan of Egypt allured with their beautie, set certaine Masons aworke, to take downe those Tables, with intent to haue transported them vnto his Castle of Cairo; when a dreadfull serpent issued out of the wall, and brake brake in pieces such as were removed : so that terried therewith, he desisted from his enterprife. The three vpper ends of the Crosse, doe end in three Semi-circles, hauing in each an Altar. In the midst the Chancell, roofed with a stately Cupolo, couered without with Lead, and garnished within with Mosaique figures.

This Church is left for the most part desolate, the Altars naked, no Lamps maintained, no Monasterie of Service celebrated, except at times extraordinary : yet are there a few poore Greekes and Armenians, who inhabite within on the right hand of the entrance, and in the opposite corners. Adioyning on the left hand, stands the Monastery of the Franciscans, entred through the Church, sufficiently spacious, but of no commendable building ; accommodated with diuers Gardens, and enuironed with defencible walls ; at whose North-west corner a tottered Tower doth challenge regard for the waste receiued in that places protection. They brought vs into their Chappell, not slightly set forth, and dedicated to Saint Katherine, hauing Indulgences conferred thereupon from Mount Sina. From which wee descended with Lights in our hands, and then were led by a narrow long entry into a little square Caue, supported in the midst with a Pillar of the Rocke. On the left hand, an Altar, and vnder that a passage into a Vault ; wherein, they say, that the Infants slaine, by the bloody Edict of Herod, were buried. Out of this Caue or Chappell, there are two other entries : in that on the right hand, stands the Sepulcher of Eusebius the Confessor, and Disciple vnto Saint Ierome : this directeth into another Grot, wherein are two Tombes, in forme not vnlike vnto Altars : the farther contained the body of Paula a Romane Ladie, descended of the ancient families of the Gracchi and Cornelij. She built foure Monasteries neare adioyning to this Temple, (whose ruines do yet giue testimony of her pietie,) one she planted with men ; the three other with Virgins, who neuer past the bounds of their Couents but on Sundayes onely, (and then attending on their seuerall Gouverneses) to performe the Orasons in the Church, and Caue of the Natiuitie : her selfe the Abbesse of one of them, and so for the space of twentie yeares did continue. She likewise built an adioyning Hospitall for Pilgrims, whose ruines declare it to haue beene no meane Fabricke. The other Tombe did couer the body of Saint Ierome, who lived in her time, and in the Monasterie which shee had founded : his bones, together with the bones of Eusebius, were translated to Rome, and shrined in the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore ; ouer which, Pope Sixtus Quintus hath erected a sumptuous Chappell. Out of this we past into another Grot, which they call his Cell ; wherein hee lay (as they say) full fiftie yeares and sixe moneths, and there twice translated the Bible. Returning into the aforeseid Chappell of the Innocents, by the other entry we passed into a Vault or Chappell, twelue foote wide, fortie long, and fiftene in height : the sides and floore all lined with faire white Marble : the compassed rooffe adorned with Mosse-worke, and Mosaique Gilding, though now much perished. At the vpper end, in an arched Concaue, stands an Altar garnished with a Table of the Natiuitie. Vnder this a Semi-circle ; the sole set forth with stones of seuerall colours, in the forme of a Starre : and in the midst a Serpentine, there set to vphold the memory of that place where our Sauour was borne : the credite whereof I will neither impeach, nor inforce. In this Citie it was, and in a stable ; nor is the report by the site refuted, though vnder ground, hewne out of the liuing Rocke, as is the rest before spoken of. For he that trauels through these Countries, will not wonder to see such Caues employed to like vses. Neither is it likely, that they that succeeded those times so neerely, should erre in the place so celebrated in their deuotions, and beautified with such cost. On either side of this Altar in the Corners, there are two equall ascents, which Land on the opposite out-sides of the Chancell, closed with doores of Brasse cut through, through which they passe in their solemne Procession. Now on the South side, and neere vnto the foote of the staires, you descend by three steps into a lesser Grot : separated onely from the former, by three fine Columnnes of discoloured Marble, which seeme to support the ouer-hanging Rocke. On the West side there is a Manger hewne out in a Concaue, about two foote high from the floore, and a little way hallowed within : wherein, they say, that our New-borne Sauour was laid by the Virgine ; now flagged about with white Marble, as the Rocke that roofes it ; at the left end sustained with a short Serpentine. In the bottome of this Manger, and iust in the middle, a round Serpentine is set, to denote the place where he lay, which retaineth, as they would make vs beleue, the effigies of Saint Ierome, miraculous framed by the naturall veines of the stone, in reward of his often and affectionate kisses. But surely, they bee the eyes of Faith that must apprehend it : yet present they it in Picture. On the opposite side of this Grot, there is a Bench in the Rocke, not vnlike to an Altar : where the Magi of the East, that were conducted hither by the Starre, disposed, (as they say) of their Presents.

These places be in the keeping of the Franciscans, and not lesse reuerenced then Caluarie, or the Sepulcher, visited also by the Mahometan Pilgrimes. Where Lamps still burning do expell the naturall darknesse ; and giue a greater State thereunto ; then the light of the day could afford it. Baldwine the second did honor this place with an Episcopall See (being before but a Priorie) adioyning thereunto, together with the Church of Ascalon, many Townes and Villages. In the place where this Citie stood, there are now but a few poore Cottages standing. Most of Angels apparition to the Shepheards.

Our Ladies Well.

After dinner we descended a foote into the Valley which lyeth East of the Citie, fruitfull in pasturage; where Iacob fed his flocke (at this day called his field) neere the Tower of Adar; but more famous for the Apparition of the Angels, who there brought to the Shepheards the glad-tidings of our Saluation. In the midst of the field, on the selfe-same place, as is supposed, and two miles distant from Bethlehem, Saint Helena erected a Church, and dedicated it to the Angels; now nothing but ruines. Returning from thence, and turning a little on the left hand, we came to the Village where those Shepheards dwelt, as yet so called: in the midst whereof there standeth a Well; the same, as the rumor goeth, that the blessed Virgine desired to drinke of, when the churlish Villagers refusing to draw her vp water, it forth-with miraculously flowed to the brim; greedy to passe through her blessed lips, and satisfie her longing. Of this the Arabs would not suffer vs to drinke before we had giuen them Money. Neerer to Bethlehem, and at the foote of the hill, are the ruines of a Chappell, where Ioseph (as they say) had his dwelling, at such time as the Angell commanded him to flie into Egypt. Neere the top, and not farre from the backe of the Monasterie, there is a Caue containing two roomes, one within, another descended into by a narrow entrance, and in some places supported by Pillars. In this it is said, that Ioseph hid our Saviour and his Mother, whilst he prepared things necessarie for his iourney. The stone thereof puluerated, and often washed, of much a little will remaine, and not vnlike to refined Chalke; which taken in drinke, is said to haue a Soueraigne vertue, in restoring Milke both to Women and Cattell, much vsed by the Moores, themselves for that purpose. Ouer which stood one of the Nunneries built by Paula, now onely shewing the foundation, and wherein she dyed. These places seene, we re-entred the Monasterie, and there reposed our selues the night following.

Each of vs bestowing a piece of Gold on the Vicar, betimes in the morning we departed, bending our course to the Mountaines of Judea, lying West from Bethlehem: neere to which, on the side of the opposite hill, we past by a little Village, called (as I take it) Bexec; inhabited onely by Christians: mortall (as they say) to the Mahometans, that attempted to dwell therein. About two miles further we passed by Bethsur, seated in a bottome betweene two rocky Mountaines, once a strong Fort: first built by Rhoboam, and after repaired by the Machabees: famous for sundry sieges; being in the vpper way betweene Ierusalem and Gaza, where wee saw the ruines of an ample Church; below that, a Fountaine not vnbeholding by Art, whose pleasant Waters are forth-with drunke vp by the earth that produced them. Heere, they say, that Philip baptized the Eunuch; whereupon it retaineth the name of the Ethiopian Fountaine. And no question, but the adioyning Temple was erected out of deuotion to the honour of the place, and memorie of the fact. Yet seemeth it strange vnto me, that a Chariot should be able to passe those rocky and declining Mountaines, where almost a Horse can hardly keepe footing. Having trauelled about a mile and a halfe further, we came to the Caue where Iohn the Baptist is said to haue liued from the age of seuen, vntill such time as hee went vnto the Wildernesse by Jordan, sequestred from the abode of men, and feeding on such wilde nourishment as these vninhabited places afforded. This Caue is seated on the Northerne side of a desert Mountaine (onely beholding to the Locust tree) hewne out of the precipitating Rocke, so as difficultie to be ascended or descended to: entred at the East corner, and receiuing light from a window in the side. At the vpper end there is a Bench of the selfe-same Rocke, whereon (as they say) he accustomed to sleepe; of which, who so breakes a piece off, stands forth-with excommunicate. Ouer this, on a little flat, stands the ruines of a Monasterie, on the South side naturally walled with the steepe of the Mountaine: from whence there gusheth a liuing Spring, which entreth the Rocke, and againe bursteth forth beneath the mouth of the Caue; A place that would make solitarinesse delightful, and stand in comparison with the turbulent pompe of Cities. This ouer-looketh a profound Valley, on the far side hem'd with aspiring Mountaines; whereof some are cut (or naturally so) in degrees like Allies, which would bee else vnaccessably fruitlesse, whose leuels yet beare the stumps of decayed Vines, shadowed not rarely with Oliues and Locusts. And surely I thinke, that all, or most of those Mountaines haue beene so husbanded, else could this little Countrey haue neuer sustained such a multitude of people. After wee had fed of such prouision as was brought vs from the Citie, by other of the Fraternitie that there met vs, wee returned towards Ierusalem, leauing the way of Bethlehem on the right hand, and that of Emas on the left. The first place of note that wee met with, was there where once stood the dwelling of Zacharie, seated on the side of a fruitfull hill, well stored with Oliues and Vineyards. Hither came the blessed Virgine to visite her Cousin Elizabeth. Here died Elizabeth, and here in a Grot on the side of a Vault or Chappell, lies buried: ouer which a goodly Church was erected, together with a Monasterie; whereof now little standeth but a part of the Wals, which offer to the view some fragments of painting, which shew that the rest haue beene exquisite. Beyond, and lower is our Ladies Fountaine, (so called of the Inhabitants) which maintaineth a little current through the the neighbouring valley. Neere this, in the bottome, and vttermoſt extent thereof, there ſtandeth a Temple, once ſumptuous, now deſolate; built by Helena, and dedicated to Saint Iohn Baptist, in the place where Zacharie had another houſe where the Prophet was borne, in a roome hewen out of the rocke; of principall deuotion with thoſe Chriſtians: poſſeſt, as the reſt, by the beaſtly Arabians, who deſile it with their Cattell, and employ it to the baſeſt of uſes. Tranſcending the leſſe ſteepe hills, and paſſing through valleyes of their Roſes voluntarily plenti- full; after a while wee came to a Monaſterie ſeated in a ſtreight betweene two rockie Moun- taines, enuironed with high walls, and entred by a doore of Iron; where a Biſhop of the Geor- gians hath his reſidence, who curteouſly entertayned vs. Within they haue a handſome Chap- pell, at the vpper end an Altar, and vnder that a pit, in which they ſay that the Palme did grow (but rather, if any, the Oliue, whereof that place hath ſtore) of which a part of the Croſſe) was made: for it was framed (as they report) of foure ſeueral woods; the foot of Ce- dar, the bole of Cypreſſe, the tranſome of Palme, and the title of Oliue. This is called there- vpon the Monaſterie of the holy Croſſe. Where in ſtead of Bells they ſtrike on a hollow beame (as the Grecians doe in the Temple of Golgotha) to ſummon their aſſemblies. Betweene this and Ieruſalem, we ſaw nothing worth noting, that hath not bene ſpoken of already.

The day following, wee went to reuiue the remarkable places about the Citie. Paſſing by the Caſtle of the Piſans, on the left hand entring at a little ſquare paſſage, wee were ſhewed a ſmall Chappell, the doore and windowes rammed vp; for that (as they ſay) the Mahometans became mortally ſicke, that, though but by chance did come into it, ſtanding where ſtood the Temple of Saint Thomas. From hence wee were brought to the Palace of Annas, deſtroyed by the Seditious in the time of the ſiege, where now ſtandeth a Church dedicated to the bleſſed Angels, and belonging to the Armenians, who haue their dwellings about it. Within the Court there is an old Oliue tree, enuironed with a low wall; vnto which, it is ſaid, that they bound our Sauour. Turning on the right hand, wee went out at a Port of Sion. South and not farre from thence, on the miſt of the mount is the place, as they ſay, where Chriſt did eate his laſt Supper; where alſo after his reſurrection, the doores being ſhut, hee appeared to his Apoſtles; where they receiued the holy Ghoſt; where Peter conuerted three thouſand; and where, as they ſay alſo, they held the firſt Councel, in which the Apoſtles Creed was decreed. Here Helena built a moſt ſumptuous Temple including therein a Canaculum, where that marble Pillar was preſerued that ſtood before in the Palace of Pilate, to which they tyed our Sauour when they whipped him. This Church ſubuerted by the Saracens, in the ſelfe ſame place the Franciſcans had a Monaſterie erected, who in the yeere 1561. were remoued by the Turkes: they building here a Moſque of their owne, into which no Chriſtian is permitted to enter. Yet not in the reſpects aforeſaid, ſo reuerenced by the Infidels, but in that it is deliuered by tradition (and not vnlikely) that David had there his Sepulchre. Betweene this, and the walls of the Citie, the Franches haue their buriall, where lie fixe Engliſh-men, ſent (as may bee ſuſpected) vnto their long-homes not many yeeres ſince, though coloured by the Franciſcans, in whoſe Monaſterie they lay, with pretence of Diuine vengeance for the ſuppoſed murder of their Drogaman. Se- uen they were in all, all aliue and well in one day, fixe dead in the other; the out-liuer becom- ing a conuert to their Religion. Turning a little on the left hand, we came to a ſmall Church, incloſed within a ſquare wall, arched within, with a walke on the top in manner of a Caue; the habitation of the Armenians, who haue of this Church the cuſtodie. Heere flouriſhed the proud Palace of Caiphas, in which our Sauour was buffeted, ſpit vpon, and ſo ſpitefully reuiled. Here Helena built a faire Church to Saint Peter; but that deſtroyed, in the roome thereof this leſſe was erected, and dedicated to Saint Sauour. On the right hand in the Court, they vn- dertake to ſhew where the fire was made, by which Peter ſtood when he denied his Maſter: and at the ſide of the Church doore, the chapter of a Pillar, whereon the Cocke crowing did moue him to contrition. At the vpper end of the Church, vpon a large Altar lieth a Stone, that (as they ſay) which was rolled againſt the mouth of the Sepulchre.

From hence we deſcended into the valley of Gehinnon, which diuideth Mount Sion from the Mountaine of Offence, ſo called for that Salomon by the perſwaſion of his wiues there ſacrificed to Chamock and Molech; but now by theſe Chriſtians called the Mountaine of Ill counſell, where they ſay, the Pharifees tooke counſell againſt Ieſus; whoſe height yet ſhewes the reliques of no meane buildings. This valley is but ſtreight, now ſeruing for little uſe; heretofore moſt delight- full, planted with Groues and watered with Fountaines; wherein the Hebrews ſacrificed their children to Molech. On the South ſide of this valley, neere where it meeteth with the valley of Iehofaphat, mounted a good height, on the ſide of the Mountaine is Aceldama, or the field of bloud; purchaſed with the reſtored reward of Treason, for a buriall place for ſtrangers. In the miſt whereof a large ſquare roome was made by the mother of Conſtantine: the South ſide wal- led with the naturall rocke; flat at the top, and equall with the vpper leuell. Out of which ari- ſeth certaine ſmall Cupolos open in the miſt to let downe the dead bodies. Through which we might ſee the bottome all couered with bones; and certaine Corſes but newly let downe: it being now the Sepulchre of the Armenians. A greedy Graue; and great enough to deuoure

the dead of a whole Nation. For they say, (and I beleue it) that the Earth thereof within the space of eight and fortie houres, will consume the flesh that is laid thereon. The like is said of Saint Innocents Church-yard in Paris: and he that sees the multitude of bones, that are there piled about it, the daily burials (it being a generall Receptacle for strangers) and smalnesse of the circuit, may be easily induced to credit. And why might not the Earth be transported from hence, as well as that at Rome in Campo Sancto, brought thither in two hundred and seuentie ships by the commandement of the aforesaid Empresse: which though changing soyles retayneth her vertue: it being also a place of buriall for Forreiners. In the Rocke about there are diuers Sepulchers, and some in vie at this day: hauing great stones rolled against their mouthes according to the ancient custome. Beyond on the point of the Hill, a Caue hewne out of the 10 Rocke, consisting of seuerall Roomes, is said to haue hidden sixe of the Apostles in the time of Christs Passion: first made without doubt for a Sepulcher; and after seruing for an Hermitage: the Roofe of the larger Roome retayning some shew of gilding. Below, where the Valley of Gehinnon and Iehosaphat, like two conioyning streames doe trent to the South, there is a dry Pit; where the Priests are said to haue hid the sacred fire when the Iewes were carried captiue into Babylon: and seeking it after their returne did find it conuerted into water. But Nehemiah caused it to be sprinkled on the Altar: when forth-with with the beames of the Sunne it miraculously flamed. This Valley of Iehosaphat (so called of that good King) from hence extendeth full North, and then enclineth a little to the West, first presenting (though naturall) no other then a large dry Ditch to the East of the Citie contracted betweene it, and the ouer-pearing Hills of 20 the opposite Oliuet. It is said to be about two miles long, and if it be so, but short ones: where broadest fruitfull; watered by the Torrent Cedron, which runneth no longer then fedde with showres: losing his intermitted streames in the Lake of Asphaltis. It was also called the Valley of Cedron, and of the King: where the generall Iudgement shall be, if the Iewes or Latines may be beleued; who ground their opinions vpon the Prophecie of Joel: which I will not gain-say, since some of our Diuines haue of late so laboured to approue it. Of the same opinion are the Mahometans. In the wall aboue it, there is a window not farre from the Golden Gate: where they say, that Mahomet shal sit whilst Christ doth execute Iustice. Passing to the Citie side of the Valley, at the foot of the Hill, and East of the South-east corner, is the place where the Prophet Esay was sawne in sunder by the Commandement of Manasses his Grand-father by the 30 Mother: and there buried, where there is a little Pauement vsed for a place of Prayer by the Mahometans. Close below this stood the Oke Roguel, where now a white Mulbery is cherished. North of it, in a gut of the Hill (aboue which in the wall stood the Tower) was the fish-pool of Siloe: contayning not aboue halfe an Acre of ground, now dry in the bottome: and beyond the Fountayne that fed it: now no other then a little Trench walled in on the sides, full of filthy water: whose vpper part is obscured by a Building (as I take it a Mosque) where once flourished a Christian Church built by Saint Helena. Deprived of those her salubrious streames; yet held in honour for their former vertues. Passing along wee came to our Ladies Fountayne (vpon what occasion they so call it, is not worth the relating) in a deepe Caue of the Rocke, descended into by a large paire of staires, and replenisht with pleasant waters. Here the Valley 40 streightning, and a little beyond no broader then serues for a Channell to the Torrent, on the other side stands the Sepulcher of Zacharie, who was slaine betweene the Temple and the Altar: all of the naturall Rocke, eightene foot high, foure square, and beautified with Doricke Columns of the same vnseparated stone, sustayning the Cornish, and topt like a pointed Diamond. Close to this there is another in the vpright Rocke; the Front like the side of an open Gallerie, supported with Marble Pillars, now betweene rammed vp with stones. Within a Grot, whither Iames retyred (as they say) after the Passion of our Sauour, with purpose neuer to haue receiued sustenance vntill he had seene him: who in that place appeared vnto him after his Resurrection. In memoriall whereof the Christians erected a Church hard by; whose Ruines are now ruined. A little farther there is a stone Bridge of one Arch, which passes the Torrent. In a Rocke 50 at the foot thereof, there are certayne Impressions: made (as they say) by our Sauours feet when they led him through the water. At the East end of this Bridge, and a little on the North, stands the Pillar of Absolon; which he here erected in his life time, to retayne the memorie of his name, in that his Issue Male fayled, (but he was not buried therein) being yet entyre and of a goodly Fabricke: rising in a loftie square; below adorned with halfe Columnes, wrought out of the sides and corners of the Doricke forme: and then changing into a round, a good height higher doth grow to a point in fashon of a Bell: all framed of the growing stone. Against this there lyeth a great heape of stones which increaseth daily. For both Iewes and Mahometans passing by, doe throw stones against it: yet execrating Absolon for his Rebellion against Dauid. Adioyning there is a large square, but lower by far, which hath an entrance like the Frontispice 60 of a Porch cut curiously without; the earth almost reaching to the top of the entrance: hauing a Grot within hewne out of the Rocke: some say, a Kingly Sepulcher; perhaps appertayning to the former. A little more North and vp the Torrent, at the foot of Oliuet, once stood the Village Gethsemani; the place yet fruitfull in Oliues: and hard by the delightfull Garden wherein our Sauour was betrayed.

They

They point out the place where he left two of his Disciples, and a little higher the third when he went to pray, and with all the place where he was taken. In this Garden there is also a stone, whereon they say that our Lady sate, and beheld the Martyrdome of Saint Steuens, who suffered on the side of the opposite Hill. Without the said Garden, in the ioyning of two wayes, they shewed vs the place, as they will haue it, where Saint Thomas stood, when incredulous forsooth of our Ladies Assumption, she let fall her Girdle to informe his beliefe.

Sepulchers of the blessed Virgin and her Parents.

And now we are come to the Sepulcher of the blessed Virgin, made thus, as it is, by the Mother of Constantine. Before it a Court; the building aboue ground, a square pile onely, flat at the top, and neatly wrought, like the largest Portico to a Temple. You enter at the South-side, and 10 forth-with descend by a goodly paire of staires of fiftie steps: about the midst of the descent, are two small opposite Chappels; in that on the right hand are the Sepulchers of Ioachim and Anna; in that on the left of Ioseph: the Parents and Spoule of the Mother of Iesus. These staires doe leade you into a spacious Church, stretching East and West, walled on each side, and arched aboue with the naturall Rocke. Vpon the right hand in the midst there is a little square Chappell, framed of the eminent Rocke, but flagged both within and without with white Marble, entred at two doores. At the far side her Tombe, which taketh vp more then the third part of the Room, now in forme of an Altar: vnder which, they say, that she was decently buried by the Apostles; and the third day after assumed into Heauen by the Angels. In this there burneth
20 eighteen Lamps continually; partly maintained by the Christians, & partly by the Mahometans, who haue this place in an especiall veneration. Neere the East Semicircle of the Church, there standeth a great Altar (ouer which the little light that this darke place hath, doth descend by a Cupolo.) neere the West another, but both vnfurnished; and by the former a Well of excellent Water. In a Canton of the Wall, right against the North end of the Sepulcher, there is a Clift in the Rock, where the Turkes do affirme, that our Lady did hide her selfe, when persecuted by the Jewes; into which I haue seene their women to creepe, and giue the cold Rocke affectionate kisses. The opposite Canton is also vsed for an Oratory by the Mahometans, who haue the keeping of the whole, and will not suffer vs to enter of freecost. Remounting the same staires, not farre off on the left hand, towards the East, and not aboue a stone cast from the Garden of Gethsamani, a strait passage descendeth into a vast round Caue, all of the naturall Rocke, the 30 Roofe confirmed with Arches of the same, receiuing a dimme light from a little hole in the top, in times past all ouer curiously painted. The place, they say, where Christ did pray, when in that bloudie agonie he was comforted by the Angels. From hence wee bent our course to the Citie. High on the Hill, where three wayes meete, and vpon the flat of a Rocke, is the place where Saint Steuens (who bore the first Palme of Martyrdome) was stoned to death. The stones thereabout haue a red rust on them; which, they say, giue testimonie of his blood-shed. A little about, we entred the Citie at the gate of Saint Steuens, (where on each side a Lion Retrograde doth stand) called in times past the Port of the Valley, and of the flocke; for that the Cattell came in at this gate, which were to be sacrificed in the Temple, and were sold in the Market place adioyning. On the left hand there is a stone bridge, which passeth at the East end of the 40 North wall into the Court of the Temple of Salomon: the head to the Poole Bethesda, vnderneath which it hath a conueyance, called also Probatium, for that the Sacrifices were therein washed ere deliuered to the Priests. It had five Ports built thereto by Salomon; in which continually lay number of diseased persons. For an Angell at certaine seasons troubled the water; and he that could next descend thereinto was perfectly cured. Now a great square profunditie, Greene, and vneuen at the bottome, into which a barren Spring doth drill from betweene the stones of the North-ward Wall, and stealeth away almost vndiscerned. The place is for a good depth hewne out of the Rocke, confined aboue on the North-side with a steepe Wall, on the West with high Buildings (perhaps a part of the Castle of Antonia) where are two doores to descend by, now all that are, halfe choked with Rubbidge; and on the South with the Wall of the Court of the Temple: whereof it is fit that something bee spoken; although not suffered to 50 enter without the forfeiture of our liues, or renouncing of our Religion.

Bethesda.

I will not speake of the former forme, and magnificencie thereof, by sacred Pens so exactly described. First built by Salomon, destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, re-edified by Zerubabel, (yet so far short of the first in glory, that those wept to behold it, who had beheld the former) new built or rather sumptuously repayed by Herod the Great; and lastly, vtterly subuerted by Titus. The Jewes assayed to re-edifie it in the Reigne of Adrian, of whom he slue an infinite number, leuelled it with the floore, and threw the Rubbidge into the Valley of Iehosaphat, to make it lesse steepe, and the place lesse defenceable, planting in the Roome thereof a Grove, which hee consecrated vnto Iupiter. Afterward Iulian the Apostata, to disprooue the Prophecie of our Saviour, did licence the Jewes to re-build it, furnishing them with mony out of his Treasurie: when loe, 60 a terrible Earth-quake shooke downe what they had begun; and a flame bursting forth, deuoured the Workmen, reported by Amianus Marcellinus a Pagan, and living in those times. But who built this that now standeth, is doubtfull. Some doe attribute it to the Christians; others to a Prince of the Arabians, (which is confirmed by the Christians of these Countries) and hee

the Saracen Omer, next Successor vnto Mahomet. Seated it is vpon Mount Moria, in the South-east corner of the Citie; without doubt in the very place where Salomons stood: the more eminent building consisting of an eight square round of a blewish stone, adorned with adioyning Pillars, and Tarrast aboue. In the midst of the sheluing Roofe, another vpright aspieth, though lesse by far, yet the same in forme and substance with the former, being couered ouer with a Cupolo of Lead. To the West of this a long building adioyneth, like the bodie of a Church, compact aboue, and no higher then the vnder Tarras of the other, but like it in colour. Now the Court (the same with that of the old Temple) is iust foure square every way, about a flights shoot ouer. In the East Wall, which is also a Wall to the Citie, stands the Golden Gate, (so called in that it was gilded) which belonged onely to the Temple, through which Christ passed twice; 10 first in triumph, and after a Captiue. It is said that the Emperour Heraclius returning from his Persian Victory, attempted to haue entred thereat in all his glory; but was miraculously prohibited, vntill he had put off all his Princely Ornaments; in a simple habite bearing that part of the Crosse of Christ on his shoulders, which he had recovered from the Persians. This Gate is now rammed vp by the Turkes, to preuent as some say, a Prophecie: which is, that the Citie should there be entred by the Christians. A part of the South-side, is also inclosed with the wall of the Citie. The rest not inferiour in strength, surrounded with a deepe Trench hewne into the Rocke: though now much choaked, heretofore inhabited in the bottome like a street. In the midst of this out-court, there is another; wherein the aforesaid Mosque doth stand, raised some two yards aboue it, and garnished on the sides with little Turrets, through which ascended; all paved 20 with white Marble (the spoile of Christian Churches) where the Mahometans, as well as within, doe performe their particular Oraysons. Sundry low buildings there are adioyning to the wall: as I suppose, the Habitation of their Santons. In the midst of that, on the South-side, there is a handsome Temple couered with Lead; by the Christians called the Church of the Purification of the Virgine: now also a Mosque. Godfrey of Bullein, with the rest of the Citie tooke this place by assault, and slue within the circuit thereof tenne thousand Saracens. By him then made a Cathedrall Church: erecting Lodgings about it for the Patriarch and his Canons. Into which there are now but two entrances: that on the West; and this Gate ouer the head of the Poole Bethesda (called of old the Horse-gate, for that here they left their Horses, it beeing not lawfull to ride any further) resembling the Gate of a Citie. One thing by the way may bee no- 30 ted: that whereas our Churches turne to the East. The Temple of Salomon regarded the West, perhaps in respect of Mount Caluarie.

Repassing the aforesaid Bridge, (seeing we might proceed no farther) on the North-side of the street that stretcheth to the West, now in a remote corner, stood the House of Iacobim, where a goodly Church was built to the honour of Saint Anna, with a Monasterie adioyning: of which some part yet remayneth, but polluted with the Mahometan Superstition. Turning backe, we tooke vp the said street to the West: not far onward, at the left hand stood the Palace of Pilate, without all question the Castle of Antonia, neere adioyning to the wall of the Temple, where now the Sanziacke hath his Residence; deprived of those lofty Towers, and scarce appearing a- 40 boue the wals that confine it. On the right hand, at the far end of a street that pointeth to the North, stood the stately Mansion of Herod: of which some signe there are left, that witnesse a perished excellency. Now at the West corner of that of Pilates, where the wall for a space doth turne to the East, there are a paire of high staires which leade to the place of Iustice, and Throne of the Romane President, where the Sauour of the World, was by the World condemned. The staires that they say then, were called Scala Sancta, I haue seene at Rome neere Saint Iohns in the Lateran; translated thither by Constantine. Three paire there are in one Front, diuided but by wals: the middlemost those: being of white Marble, and eightene in number; ascended and worne by the knees of the Suppliants, who descend by the other. At the top there is a little Chappell called Sanctum Sanctorum, where they neuer say Masse: and vpon this occasion. A 50 holy Father in the Roome adioyning, hauing consumed most part of the night in his Deuotions, is said, an houre before the dawning, to haue seene a procession of Angels passe by him, some singing, and others perhaps that had worse voyces, bearing Torches: amongst whom Saint Peter with the Eucharist; who executed there his Pontificall Function: and that done returned. This rumored the day following about the Citie, numbers of people flockt thither; who found the Roome all to bedropt with Torches in confirmation of this Relation. Whereupon decreed it was, that not any (as not worthy) should say Masse on that Altar. Now the way betweene the place of those staires and Mount Caluarie, is called the Dolorous way: alongst which our Sa- 60 uour was led to his Passion: in which they say, (and shew where) that hee thrice fell vnder the weight of his Crosse. And a little beyond there is an ancient Arch that crosseth the street, and supporteth a ruined Gallerie: in the East-side a two arched window, where Pilate presented Christ to the people. An hundred paces farther, and on the left hand there are the Relikes of a Church, where they say that the blessed Virgin stood when her Sonne passed by, and fell into a trance at the sight of that killing Spectacle. Sixtie sixe paces beyond (where this street doth meete with that other which leadeth to Port Ephraim, now called the Gate of Damascus) they say, say, that they met with Simon of Cyrene, and compelled him to assist our Saviour in the bearing of his burthen. Turning a little on the left hand, they shewed vs where the women wept, and he replied; Weepe not for me you Daughters of Ierusalem, &c. Then turning againe on the right, we passed vnder a little arch, neere which a house ascended by certain steps; the place where Veronica dwelt, who gaue our Saviour, as they say, a Napkin as he passed by the doore, to cleanse his face from the blood which trickled from his Thorne-pierst browes; and spittle wherewith they had despitefully defiled him: who returned it againe enriched with his liuely counterfeite, now to be seene at Rome vpon Festiuall dayes, in Saint Peters Church in the Vatican. Fronting the far end of this street, an ancient Gate which stood in the West wall of the old Citie, yet relists the sub-

10 uersions of time, called by Nehemia, the old Gate; by the Iebusites the Port of Iebus, and the Gate of Iudgement; for that the Elders there sate in Iustice: through which the condemned were led to execution vnto Mount Caluarie: then two hundred twentie paces without, and a little on the left hand; though now almost in the heart of the Citie. From hence we ascended the East-side of Mount Caluarie (eight hundred paces from the Palace of Pilate) and so descended into the Court of the Temple of the Sepulcher. Right against it are the ruines of lostie buildings, heretofore the Alberges of the Knight Hospitallers of Saint Iohns. Turning to the South we were shewed, where once stood the dwelling of Zebedens, in which James and Iohn were borne heretofore a Collegiat Church, but now a Mosque. A little higher wee came to the 20 Iron Gate, a passage in times past betweene the vpper Citie, and the neather (which gaue way vnto Peter conducted by the Angell) built by Alexander the Great: who hauing taken Tyrus, and the Sea-bordering Cities of Phoenicia and Palestine, begirt Ierusalem with his Armie: when on a sudden the Gates were set open, Iaddus the High Priest issuing forth, clothed in his Pontifi- call Habit, and followed with a long trayne in white Rayments: whom Alexander espying, aduanced before the rest of the company; and when he drew neere fell prostrate before him. For it came vnto his remembrance, how once in Dio a Citie of Macedon, consulting with him- selfe about his Asian Enterprize, he had seene in a Vision one so apparelled, who bid him boldly proceed, and told him that the God whom he serued would protect his Armie, and make him Lord of the Persian Monarchie. Then hand in hand they entred the Citie, the High Priest con- ducting him vnto the Temple, where hee sacrificed vnto God according to the manner of the 30 Hebrewes: Iaddus expounding vnto him the Prophecies of Daniel, which foretold of his victo- ries. From thence we proceeded vnto the House of Saint Marke, of which an obscure Church in the custodie of the Sorians doth retayne the memory. And beyond, we came to the Church of Saint James, standing in the place where he was beheaded; erected by the Spaniards, together with an Hospitall, and now posselt by the Armenians. This seene, we returned to the Couent.
The day following, wee went out (as before) at the Port of Sion. Turning on the left hand along the wall, wee were shewed the place where Peter wept, when hee had denyed our Sau- our; dignified once with a Church, and whereof there now remayneth some part of the founda- tion. Right against it there is a Posterne in the wall, formerly called Port Esqueline; at which they bore forth the filth of the Citie. The foundation of this part of the wall is much more 40 ancient, and much more strong then the rest, consisting of blacke stones of a mightie size. Not farre beyond, we crossed the Valley of Iehosaphat, and mounted the South end of Mount Oliuer, by the way of Bethania. Hauing ascended a good height, on the right hand they shewed vs where Iudas hanged himselfe (the stumpe of the Sycamore, as they say, not long since extant) being buried in a Grot that adioyneth. Neerer the top where Christ cursed the fig-tree, many there growing at this present. Descending the East-side of the Mountaine, a little on the left hand, we came to a desolate Chappell, about which diuers ruines; the Houses heretofore of Simon the Leper. From thence we descended vnto the Castle of Lazarus, (whereof yet there is some- thing extant) the Brother to Marie and Martha: close vnder which lyes Bethania, (two miles from Ierusalem) now a tottered Village, inhabited by Arabians. In it the Vault where 50 Christ rayled Lazarus from death; square and deepe, descended into by certaine steps. Aboue are two little Chappells, which haue in either of them an Altar: where stood a stately Church erected by Saint Helena; and after that an Abbey, Queene Milisend the Foundresse. A little North of Bethania, we came to the ruines of a Monasterie, now leuell with the floore, seated in the place vnto which the penitent Marie retyred from the corrupting vanities of the Citie. South-ward of this, and not far off, stood the House of Martha, honoured likewise with a Temple, and ruinated alike. Equally distant from both, there is a stone, whereon, they say, that our Saviour sate, when the two Sisters intreated him to restore life to their Brother now foure dayes buried: the Pilgrime that breakes off a piece thereof, stands excommunicated. A little 60 aboue, there is a Fountayne of excellent water, deepe sunke into the Rocke, (by which were- freshed our selues with prouision brought with vs) called the Fountayne of the Apostles. Now we ascended Mount Oliuet againe, by another way more inclining to the North. Vpon the right hand, and not far from the top, stood Bethfage, whose very foundations are now confounded; from whence Christ past vnto Ierusalem in triumph vpon an Asses Colt: euery Palme-sunday by the Pater-guardian superstitiously imitated.

Here looke we backe, and for a while suruey the high mountaine Quarantania, the low Plains of Iericho, Jordan, and the Dead Sea; which we could not goe to, by reason of our tardy arriual, the Pilgrims returning on the selfe-same day that wee came vnto Ierusalem. Vndertaken but once a yeere in regard of the charges, then guarded by a Sheck of the Arabians, to resist the wild Arabs, who almost famished on those barren Mountaines (which they dare not husband for feare of surprisall) rob all that passe, if inferiour in strength: yet payed wee towards that conduct, two Dollars apiece to the Sanziack. Jordan runneth wel-nigh thirtie miles from Ierusalem; the way thither by Bethania; made long and troublesome by the steepe descents and labyrinthian windings; being to the iudgement of the eye, not the fourth of that distance. In this the Pilgrims wash themselves, and bring from thence of the water, soueraigne (as they say) for sundry diseases. A great way on this side the Riuer, there stands a ruined Temple, vpon the winding of a crooked channell, forsaken by the streame, (or then not filled but by inundations) where Christ (as they say) was baptized by Iohn. On the right hand stood Ierico, a Citie of fame (and in the time of the Christians an Episcopall Sea) beautifull in her Palmes, but chiefly proud of her Balsamum, a Plant then onely thought particular vnto Iurie, which grew most plentifully in this valley, and on the sides of the Westerne Mountaines which confine it, being about two cubits high, growing vpright, and yeerely pruned of her superfluous branches. In the Summer they lanced the rine with a stone, (not to be touched with Steele) but not deeper then the inward filme; for otherwise it forthwith perished: from whence those fragrant and precious teares did distill, which now are onely brought vs from India; but they farre worse, and generally sophisticated. The bole of this shrub is of least esteeme, the rine of greater, the seed exceeding that, but the liquor of greatest, knowne to be right in the curdling of Milke, and not stayning of garments. Here remayned two Orchards thereof in the dayes of Vespasian; in defence of which, a battell was fought with the Iewes that endeauoured to destroy them. Of such repute with the Romanes, that Pompey first, and afterwards Titus did present it in their triumphs as an especiall glorie: now vtterly lost through the barbarous waste and neglect of the Mahometans. Where Ierico stood, there standeth a few poore Cottages inhabited by the Arabians. The valley about ten miles ouer, now producing but a spiny grasse; bordered on the East with the high Arabian Mountaines, on the West with those of Iurie; amongst which, Quarantania the most eminent, in that wilderness where Christ for fortie dayes was tempted by the Deuill, so high, that few dare attempt to ascend to the top; from whence the Tempter shewed him the Kingdomes of the earth; now crowned with a Chappell, which is yet vnruined. There is besides in the side an Hermitage, with a Cisterne to receiue raine-water; and another Grot, wherein the Hermites were buried. Here Saint Ierome (as they say) fulfilled his foure yeeres penance.

But now returne wee to the summit of Mount Oliuet, which ouer-toppeth the neighbouring Mountaines, whose West side doth giue you a full suruey of each particular part of the Citie, bedect with Oliues, Almonds, and Fig-trees; heretofore with Palmes: pleasantly rich when husbanded, and now vpbraiding the barbarous with his neglected pregnancy. So famous in sacred histories, and so often blest with the presence of Christ, and apparition of Angels. It is not much lesse then a mile in height, stretching from North to South, and hauing three heads. On the middlemost (and that the highest) there standeth a little Chappell, of an eight square fount, at euery corner a Pillar, mounted on three degrees, being all of white marble, and of an elegant structure: within it is not about twelve foot ouer, paved with the naturall rocke, which beareth the impression of a foot-step, they say, of our Sauours; the last that he set vpon earth, when from thence he ascended into Heaven: A place in honour inferiour vnto none, frequented by Christians, possesed by Mahometans, yet free to both their deuotions. Built it was by the mother of Constantine, and couered like the Sepulchre, with a sumptuous Temple (whose ruines yet looke aloft) together with a Monasterie. On the South-side of which, they shewed vs the Cell of Pelagia; a famous, rich, and beautifull Curtizan of Antioch, who conuerted by the Bishop of Dimiata, retired hither vnknowne, and here long liued in the habite and penurie of an Hermite, being not till dead, discovered for a woman. Descending, wee were shewed by the way, where our Sauour taught them the Pater noster, where hee fore-told of the destruction of Ierusalem, where the Apostles made the Creede, where hee wept ouer the Citie, (a paved square, now a Mahometan Oratorie) and such like traditions, not much worthy the mentioning. So crossing the valley by the Sepulchre of the blessed Virgin, we entred the Citie at the gate of Saint Steuens; returning the same way (as the day before) to the Monasterie.

Much of the day, and all the night following we spent in the Church of the Sepulchre: they then concluding the ceremonies and solemnities of that Festiuall. The next day wee prepared for our departure. Wee agreed with certaine Muocermen (so call they their Muliters) of Alep-pa (who had brought a Portugall hither with his Ianizarie, and interpreter then newly come from India) to carrie vs vnto Tripoly, and to defray all charges (our diet excepted) for fixe and twentie Dollars a man, and for halfe so much as if we went but to Acre, greatly to the displeasure of Atala the Drogaman; that would not vndertake our conuey vnder a greater summe: who who found a time to effect his malice; yet his little paines wee rewarded with foure Dollars. Caphar and Asse hire about the Countrey had cost vs sixe Sultanies. We gaue money to the Friers, and that not niggardly, considering our light purses and long iourney; whereof the Pater-guardian particularly enquired, lest their vow of pouertie they should couetously infringe (or rather perhaps defraud his desire) by retayning what was giuen, to their priuate vses: A crime with excommunication punished: yet that lesse feared, I suppose, then detection. They vse to marke the armes of Pilgrims with the names of Iesus, Maria, Ierusalem, Bethlehem, the Ierusalem Crosse, and sundry other Characters, done in such manner as hath beene declared before. The Pater-guardian would needs thrust vpon vs seuerall Certificates, which returned him as many Zecchines: he desired that we would make their pouertie knowne, with the dignitie of those sanctified places: as a motiue to reliefe, and more frequent Pilgrimages.

¶ VI.

His returne. Observations of memorable places by the way. Of Mount Carmel, Acon, Sidon, Tyrus of Facardin, Emer of Sidon his Greatnesse.

- 20 Having behind those friendly Italians that accompanied vs from Cairo (being now also vpon their returne) on the first of Aprill we departed from Ierusalem, in the companie of that Apothecarie (now Knight of the Sepulchre) and the Portugall before mentioned; together with an Alman and a French-man; all bound for Tripoly. Wee returned by the way which we strayed from in our coming; lesse difficult to passe; the Mountaines more pleasant and fruitfull, neere the Citie there are many Sepulchres and places of ruines, here and there dispersed. On the right hand, and in sight, is Silo, of a long time a station for the Arke of the Couenant; the highest Mountaine of Iury, bearing on the top some fragments of a Citie. North of it on another, the remaynes of that Rama Sophim (with more likelihood of the truth then the other) which was the habitation of Samuel: whose bones are said to haue 30 beene translated vnto Constantinople, by the Emperour Arcadius. After foure miles riding wee descended into the valley of Terebinth, famous, though little, for the slaughter of Golias. A Bridge here crosseth the Torrent, neere which the ruines of an ancient Monasterie, more worthie the obseruing for the greatnesse of the stones, then finenesse of the workmanship. Having rid foure miles further, they shewed vs Moden, the ancient seate of the Macchabees, toward the North, and seated on the top of an aspiring hill, which yet supporteth the reliques of a Citie: whereof there something hath beene spoken already. Beyond, by the high-way side there is another Monasterie, not altogether subuerted: of late inhabited by some of the Franciscans, who beset one night by the Arabs, and not able to master their terrour, quitted it the day following. About a stones cast off, there standeth a Church, now desolate, yet retayning the name 40 of the Prophet Ieremie. But whether here stood that Anathoth or no that challengeth his birth, I am ignorant. About three miles further, wee passed by a place, called Sereb, where by certaine ruines there standeth a pile like a broken Tower, engrauen with Turkish Characters, vpon that side which regardeth the way; erected as they say, by an Ottoman Emperour. Now hauing for a while descended those Mountaines that neighbour the Champaine, we came to the ruines of an ancient building, ouer-looking the leuell: yet no lesse excelling in commodious situation, then delicacie of prospect. They call it, The house of the Good Thiefe. Perhaps some Abbey erected in that place; or Castle here built to defend this passage. Vpon the right hand there standeth a handsome Mosque, euery way open, and supported with Pillars, the rooffe flat, and charged on the East end with a Cupolo, heretofore a Christian Chappell. This is ten miles from 50 Rama, whither we came that night; and wet as we were, tooke vp our lodgings on the ground in the House of Sion: nothing that day befalling, saue the violence done vs by certaine Spahies, who tooke our Wine from vs; and payments of head-money in sundry places, vnto which we were neither chargeable nor troublesome.
- Not vntill noone next day departed we from Rama: traouelling through a most fruitfull Valley. The first place we passed by was Lydda, made famous by Saint Peter, called after Diospolis, that is, the Citie of Iupiter, destroyed by Cestius; here yet standeth a Christian Temple, built, as they say, by a King of England to the honour of Saint George, a Cappadocian by birth, aduanced in the Warres to the dignitie of a Tribune, who after became a Souldier of Christ; and here is said to haue suffered Martyrdome vnder Diocletian. Others say, that there neuer was such a 60 man, and that the storie is no other then an allegorie. The Greeks haue the custodie of this Church, who shew a Scull, which they affirme to be Saint Georges. In the time of the Christians it was the seate of a Suffragan, now hardly a Village. Eight miles from Rama stands the Castle of Augia, built like a Caine, and kept by a small Garrison. A little beyond, the Muccermen would haue staid (which wee would not suffer, being then the best time of the day for trauell) that they

- they might by night haue auoided the next Village, with the payments there due: where wee were hardly intreated by the procurement of Attala, who holds correspondencie with the Moors of those quarters. They would not take lesse then foure Dollars a man (when perhaps as many Medeins were but due) and that with much iangling. They sought occasion how to trouble vs, beating vs off our Mules, because forsooth, wee did not light to doe homage to a sort of halfe-clad Rascals; pulling the white Shash from the head of the Portugal (whereby he wel hoped to haue past for a Turke) his Ianizarie looking on. Here detayned they vs vntill two of the clocke the next morning, without meate, without sleepe, couched on the wet earth, and washed with raine; yet expecting worse, and then suffered vs to depart. After a while wee entred a goodly Forrest, full of tall and delightfull Trees, intermixed with fruitfull and flowrie Launes. Perhaps the earth affoordeth not the like; it cannot a more pleasant. Hauing passed this part of the Wood (the rest inclining to the West, and then againe extending to the North) we might discouer a number of stragling Tents, some iust in our way, and neere to the skirts of the Forrest. These were Spahis belonging to the Host of Morat Bassa, then in the Confines of Persia. They will take (especially from a Christian) whatsoever they like; and kindly they vie him if he passe without blowes: nor are their Commanders at all times free from their insolencies. To auoid them, we stricke out of the way, and crossed the pregnant champaine to the foote of the Mountaynes, where for that day we reposed our selues: when it grew darke, wee arose, inclining on the left hand, mingling after a while with a small Carauan of Moors; enioyned to silence, and to ride without our Hats, lest discovered for Christians. The clouds fell downe in streames, and the pitchie night had bereft vs of the conduct of our eyes, had not the Lightning afforded a terrible light. And when the raine intermitted, the Aire appeared as if full of sparkles of fire, borne too and fro with the wind, by reason of the infinite swarmes of Flies that doe shine like Glow-wormes, to a stranger a strange spectacle. In the next Wood we out-stript that Carauan, where the theeuish Arabs had made sundrie fires; to which our footmen drew neere to listen, that we might passe more securely. An houre after mid-night the skie began to cleere, when on the other side of the Wood we fell amongst certaine Tents of Spahis; by whom we past with as little noise as we could, secured by their sounder sleepings. Not farre beyond, through a large Glade betweene two Hills, we leisurely descended for the space of two houres (a Torrent rushing downe on the left hand of vs) when not able longer to keepe the backs of our Mules, we laid vs downe in the bottome vnder a plump of Trees on the farre side of a Torrent. With the Sunne we arose, and found our selues at the East end, and North side of Mount Carmel.
- Mount Carmel. Mount Carmel stretcheth from East to West, and hath his vttermoost Basis walht with the Sea, steepest towards the North, and of an indifferent altitude: rich in Oliues and Vines when husbanded; and abounding with seuerall sorts of Fruits and Herbs, both medicinable and fragrant: now much ouer-growne with Woods and Shrubs of sweet saour: celebrated for the habitation of Elias, whose house was after his death conuerted into a Synagogue; where Oracles, it is said, were given by God; called by Suetonius the God Carmelus, whose words are these, intreating of Vespasian: In Iudea consulting with the Oracle of the God Carmelus, the Oracle assured him, that whatsoever he under-tooke should be successfull. Where then was nothing more to be seene then an Altar. From hence proceeded the Order of the Friar Carmelites, as successors to the children of the Prophets there left by Elias; who had their beginning in the Desarts of Syria, in the yeere 1180. instituted by Almericus Bishop of Antioch, and said to haue receiued their white habite from our Ladie, whom Albertus the Patriarke of Ierusalem transported first into Europe. There is yet to be seene the remaynes of their Monasterie, with a Temple dedicated to the blessed Virgin; vnder which a little Chappell or Caue, the ancient dwelling of Elias. This is inherited by an Emir of the Arabians, who after the ancient custome of that Nation doth liue in Tents, euen during the Winter, although posselt of sundrie conuenient houses; whose Signiorie stretcheth to the South, and along the Shoare. Within his Precinct stands the Castle of the Perigrines, vpon a cape, almost surrounded with the Sea, now called Tortora, built by Raimond Earle of Tolosa for their better securitie, and after fortified by the Templers. Ten miles South of this, stood that famous Casarea (more anciently called the Tower of Strato, of a King of Aradus the Builder so named, who liued in the dayes of Alexander) in such sort re-edified by Herod, that it little declined in magnificencie from the principall Cities of Asia; now leuell with the Floore, the Hauen lost, and situation abandoned.
- Chifon, Tabor, Hermon. We passed the Torrent Chifon, which floweth from the Mountaynes of Tabor and Hermon; and gliding by the North skirts of Carmel, dischargeth it selfe into the Sea. Carmel is the South bound to the ample valley of Acro; bounded on the North by those of Saron, on the West it hath the Sea, and it is inclosed on the East with the Mountaines of Galile. In length about fourteen miles, in bredth about halfe as much; the neerer the Sea the more barren. In it there arise two riuolets of liuing, but pestilent waters, drilling from seuerall marishes; the first is the Riuer of Belus, called by Plinie Pagida and Palus, and Badas by Simonides; whose sand affoordeth matter for Glasse, becomming fusable with the heate of the Fornace. Strabo reports the like like of diuers places thereabout. And Iosephus speaking of this, declareth, that adioyning thereunto, there is a pit an hundred cubits in circuite, conered with Sand like Glasse; and when borne away (for there-with they accustomed to Ballace their ships) it forth-with filled againe, borne thitherby winds from places adiacent: And moreouer, whatsoeuer Minerall was contained therein, conuerted into Glasse; and Glasse there laid, againe into Sand. Neere to this pit stood the Sepulcher of Memnon, the Sonne of Typhonius.

10 Having rid seuen or eight miles along the skirts of the hils, we crossed the Valley, and anon that other Riulet a little aboue, where it falleth into the Road of Acre; where to our comfort, we espyed the Ship that brought vs to Alexandria, with another of London, called the Elizabeth Confort: when entring the Towne, we were kindly entertained by our Country-men. Here stayed we, the rest of our company proceeded vnto Tripoly; this being the mid-way betwene it and Ierusalem. But our Muccerman would not rest satisfied with halfe of his hire, according to our compact, whom we were glad to be rid of for twentie Dollers a man: our Oaths being bootlesse against a True Beleener, for so do they tearme themselves. Memmons Sepulcher.
Ship of London.
Turkish Musulman.

20 This Citie was called Ace at the first, a refuge for the Persians in their Egyptian warres: Then Ptolomais of Ptolomy King of Egypt: Colonia Claudij, of Claudius Caesar, who heere planted a Colony: Afterward Acon, and now Acre. Seated on a leuell, in forme of a Triangular Shield: on two sides washt with the Sea; the third regarding the Champaine. The carkasse shewes that the body hath beene strong, double immured, fortified with Bulwarkes and Towers; to each wall a ditch, lined with stone, and vnder those diuers secret Posternes. You would thinke by the 30 ruines, that the Citie rather consisted wholly of diuers conioyning Castles, then any way mixed with priuate dwellings; which witnesseth a notable defence, and an vnequall assault, or that the rage of the Conquerors extended beyond Conquest: the huge Walls and Arches turned topsie-turuey, and lying like Rockes vpon the foundation. On the South side lyes the Hauen, no better then a Bay; open to the West, North-west, and South-west winds, the bottome stony, and ill for their Cables. There are the ruines of a Palace, which yet doth acknowledge King Richard for the founder, confirmed likewise by the Passant Lion. An hundred yeares after, it remained with the Christians, and was the last receptacle in the Holy Land, for the Knights Hospitalers of Saint Iohns of Ierusalem, called thereupon Saint Iohn de Acre; to whom a goodly Temple neere the South side of the Citie was consecrated, which now ouer-toppeth the rest of the 40 ruines. In a Vault thereof a great masse of Treasure was hid by the Knights of the Order, which made knowne from time to time vnto their Successors, was fetcht from hence about forty yeares since by the Gallies of Malta, the Inhabitants abandoning the Towne vpon their landing. In the yeare 1291. besieged by an hundred and fiftie thousand Mahometans, Acre receiued an vtter subuersion, which the Mamelucks after in some sort repaired, and lost it at last with their name and Empire, vnto the Turkish Selimus. It is now vnder the Sanziack of Saphet, and vsurped with the rest of that Prouince, by the Emer of Sidon. In the Towne there are not aboue two or three hundred Inhabitants, who dwell heere and there in the patcht-vp ruines; onely a new Mosque they haue, and a strong square Cane (built, where once was the Arsenall for Gallies) in 50 which the Francke Merchants securely dispose of themselves and their Commodities: who for the most part bring hither ready Monies, (Dutch Dollers being, as generally throughout Iury and Phoenicia, equivalent with Royals of eight, else-where lesse by ten Aspers) fraughting their ships with Cottons that grow abundantly in the Countrey adioyning. Here haue they a Cadee, the principall Officer. The English are much respected by the principall Meores: insomuch, as I haue seene the striker stricken by his fellow, a rare example amongst the Mahometans, which I rather attribut to their policie then humanitie, lest by their quitting of the place they should be deprived of their profit, they being the onely men that doe maintaine that trading. Here wrestle they in Breeches of oyled Leather, close to their thighs, their bodies naked and anointed according to the ancient vse, who rather fall by consent, then by slight or violence. The Inhabitants doe nightly house their Goats and Sheepe for feare of Iaccals (in my opinion no other 60 then Foxes) whereof an infinite number doe lurke in the obscure Vaults, and reedy Marishes adioyning to the Brooke; the Brooke it selfe abounding with Tortesses.

Four daies we stayed at Acre; in which time we vainely expected the leisure of the Merchants to haue accompanied vs to Nazareth, distant from hence about fiftene miles: who goe by one way and returne by another, for feare of the Arabs. Now a small Village of Galily, seated in a little Vale betwene two hils, where are the remaines of a goodly Temple (once the Chaire of an Arch-bishop) erected ouer the house of the blessed Virgine: whereof there is yet one roome to be seene, partly hewne out of the lining Rocke; amongst those Christians of great veneration. But the Romanists relate, that the roome wherein she was borne, was borne by the 60 Angels (at such time as the Countrey was vniuersally possessed by the Infidels) ouer Seas and shores to a Citie of Illyria. But when those people grew niggardly in their Offerings, it was rapt from thence, and set in the Woods of Picenum; within the possessions of a Noble Lady, named Lauretta, frequented by infinite numbers of Pilgrimes. When many miscarrying by the ambushment of Theeues, who lurking in the Woods adioyning, the blessed Virgine commanded the the Angels to remooue it vnto a certaine Mountaine belonging vnto two Brethren, where shee got much riches, and sumptuous apparell, by the beneuolence of her Votaries, and her charitable miracles. By which meanes the two Brethren grew also rich, and withall, dissensions about the deuision of their purchases. Whereupon it was once more transported by those winged Porters, and set in the place where as now it standeth, neere to the Adriaticke Sea, and not farre from Ancona, yet retaining the name of Lauretta. In which is her Image (made as they say, by Saint Luke) of the hue (though a Iew) of a Blackamore *. This Conclauē hath a couer of Marble, yet not touched by the same, included within a magnificent Temple, adorned with Armors and Trophies; and beset with Statues and Tables, representing her miraculous cures and protections; And well hath she beene paid for her labour: her Territories large, her Jewels inestimable; her apparell much more then Princely, both in cost and varietie; her Coffers full: of whom, though the Pope be a yearly borrower, yet are they doubly replenished by the first, and latter Spring-tides of deuotion. Now at Nazareth, no Christian is suffered to dwell by the Moors that inhabit it. Most of the old Citie seemeth to haue stood vpon the hill that adioyneth, which beares the decayes of diuers other Churches. Nazareth gaue the name of Nazareans vnto Christians, called here corruptly Nostranes at this present.

Vpon the eight of Aprill we went aboard the Trinitie, and hoised Sailes for Sidon: the winds fauourable, and the Seas composed; but anon they began to wrangle, and wee to suffer. Spouts of water were seene to fall against the Promontorie of Carmel, the tempest increased with the night; and did what it could to make a night of the day that ensued. But the distemperature and horror is more then the danger, where Mariners be English, who are the absoluteſt vnder heauen in their profession; and are by forreiners compared vnto Fishes. About foure of the clocke we came before Sidon, the Ship not able to attaine to the Harborage of the Rocke, which is enuironed by the Sea, and the onely protection of that rode for ships of good burthen: but some of vs were so sicke, that we desired to be set a shoare in the Skiffe, (a long mile distant) which was performed, but not without perill.

Phoenicia is a Prouince of Syria, interposing the Sea and Galily, stretching North and South from the Riuer of Valanus, to the Castle of the Peregrines, which is on the farre side of Mount Carmel. The chiefe Sea-bordring Cities of Phoenicia, are Tripolis, Biblis, Beritus, Sidon, Tyrus, and Ptolomais, now called Acre. Tripolis is so called, because it was ioyntly built by Tyrus, Sidon and Aradus. It is seated vnder Libanus, and commanded by a well-furnished Cittadell, manned with two hundred Ianizaries. Before it, there is an ill-neighbouring banke of Sand, which groweth daily both in greatnesse and neerenesse; by which they haue a Propheſie, that it shall in proceſſe of time be deuoured. The Towne and Territories are gouerned by a Bassa. Two miles off, and West from it, is the heauen, made by a round piece of Land adioyning to the maine by an Isthmos; the mouth thereof regarding the North. On each side a Bulwarke kept by an hundred Ianizaries, and planted with Ordnance to defend the entrance. Hither of late the Grand Signior hath remoued the Scale, which was before at Alexandretta, a Towne in the furthest extents of the Streights, beyond the Riuer Orontes, most contagiously seated by reason of the Marishes and loftie bordering Mountaines (towards the North, being part of Taurus) which deprive it of the rarifying Sunne, for no small part of the day; insomuch, that not many forreiners escape that there linger any season, who goe not a shoare before the Sunne bee high mounted, and returne againe ere too low declining: Notwithstanding, the Merchants doe offer great summes of Money to haue it restored vnto that place, as more conuenient for their Traffick with Aleppo, (the principall Mart of that part of Asia for Silkes, and sundry other Commodities) from thence but three daies iourney, being eight from Tripoly: which the Turke will not as yet assent to, for that diuers ships haue beene taken out of that Rode by Pirates, there being no Forts for protection, nor no fit place to erect them on. A thing vsuall it is betweene Tripoly and Aleppo, as betweene Aleppo and Babylon, to make tame Doues the speedy transporters of their Letters; which they wrap about their Legges like Iesses, trained thereunto at such time as they haue young ones, by bearing them from them in open Cages. A Fowle of a notable memory. Sidon is at this day contracted within narrow limits, and onely shewes the foundations of her greatnesse; lying Eastward of this that standeth, and ouer-shadowed with Oliues. There is nothing left of Antiquitie, but the supposed Sepulcher of the Patriarke Zebulon, included within a little Chappell amongst these ruines, and held (especially by the Iewes) in great veneration. The Towne now being, is not worth our Description; the Walls neither faire nor of force; the Hauen decayed, when at best but seruing for Gallies. At the end of the Peir, stands a paltry Blocke-house, furnished with sutable Artillery. The Mosque, the Bannia, and Cane for Merchants, the onely buildings of note.

The Inhabitants are of sundry Nations and Religions, gouerned by a succession of Princes, whom they call Emers: descended, as they say, from the Druses, the remainder of those French men which were brought into these parts by Godfrey of Bullen, who driuen into the Mountaines aboue, and defending themselves by the aduantage of the place, could neuer be vtterly destroyed by the Saracens. At length they afforded them peace, and libertie of Religion; conditionally

- nally that they wrote the white Turbant, and paid such duties as the naturall subiect. But in tract of time they fell from the knowledge of Christ: nor throughly embracing the other, are indeede of neither. As for this Emer, he was neuer knowne to pray, nor euer seene in a Mosque. His name is Faccardine, small of stature, but great in courage and atchieuements: about the age of forty, subtil as a Foxe, and not a little inclining to the Tyrant. He neuer commenceth battell, nor executeth any notable designe, without the consent of his * mother. To his Towne hee hath added a kingly Segnioury, what by his sword, and what by his Stratagems. When Morat Bassa (now principall Vizier) came first to his gouernement of Damasco, he made him his, by his free entertainment and bounty: which hath conuerted to his no small aduantage, of whom he made
- 10 vse in his contention with Frecke the Emer of Balbec; by his authority strangled. After that he pickt a quarrel with Ioseph Emer of Tripoly, and dispossessed him of * Barut, with the territories belonging thereunto, together with Gazer, about twelue miles beyond it; a place by situation inuincible. This Ioseph hated of his people for his excessive tyranny, got to bee made Seidar of Damasco (which is Generall of the Souldiery) and by that power intended a reuenge. But in the meane season Faccardine sackt Tripoly it selfe, and forced the Emer to flie in a Venecian shippe vnto Cyprus: where againe he imbarqued in a French-man, and landed at the Castle of the Paregrines; and there by Achmet the Arabian (formerly mentioned) entertained, hee repayed to Damasco, entred on his charge, conuerting his whole strength vpon the Sidonian, now in the field, and ioyned with Ali Bassa his confederate. In a plaine some eight miles short of Damasco, the
- 20 armies met; the Damascens are foiled, and pursued to the gates of the City: The Conquerors lodge in the suburbs, who are remoued by the force of an hundred and fifty thousand Sultanie. This battell was fought about the midst of Nouember in the yere of our Lord 1606. Three months after a Peace is concluded amongst them. But the sommer following, Morat the Great Vizier hauing ouerthrowne Ali Bassa of Aleppo, that valiant rebell (who in three maine battels withstood his whole forces; hauing set vp an order of Sedgmen in opposition of the Ianizaries;) they fought by manifold complaints to incense him against the Emer of Sidon, as confederate with the traytor; which they vrged with gifts, receiued and lost: for the old Bassa mindfull of the friendly offices done him by the Emer (corrupted also, as is thought, with great summes of money) not only not molesteth, but declareth him a good subiect. Hauing till of late held good
- 30 correspondency with the City and Garrison of Damasco, they had made him Sanziacke of Saphet. Now, when according to the gouernement of Turkie, which once in 2 or 3 yeeres doth vse to remoue the Gouernours of Cities and Prouinces; and that another was sent by the Damascens to succede him, he refused to resigne it; notwithstanding tendring to the Tefadar or Treasurer the reuenue of that Sanziackry; this was the first occasion of their quarrell. Hee got from the improuident Peasants the Castle of Elkisse, which he hath strongly fortified, and made the receptacle of Treasure: And the Castle of Banias from the Shecke that ought it, by a wile (which standeth on a hill by it selfe, and is indeede by nature inuincible.) For the Emer in peaceable manner, pitching his tents not farre from the wall, was kindly visited and entertained by the Sheck: when desirous to see it, he conducted him vp, hauing not aboue twenty or thirty in
- 40 his company, but those priuately armed; leauing order that the rest should ascend by twoes and by threes, and so surprised it without bloud-shed, planting the inhabitants in other places within his Dominions, and strengthning this with a Garrison. Out of the Rock whereon it is mounted ariseth one of the two heads of Iordan. His Signiory stretcheth from the Riuer of Canis (which they call Celp) to the foote of mount Carmel. In which the places of principall note, are Gazir, Barut, Sidon, Tyrus, Acre, Saffet (which was Tyberias) Diar, Camer, Elkisse, Banias, the two heads of Iordan, the lake Semochonthis (now called Houle) and sea of Tyberias, with the hot bath adioyning; Nazareth, Cana, and mount Tabor. Saffet is his principall City, in which there abide a number of Iewes, who affect the place, in that Iacob had his being thereabout before his going downe into Egypt.
- 50 The Grand Signior doth often threaten his subuersion, which he puts off with a iest, that hee knowes he will not this yeare trouble him, whose displeasure is not so much prouoked by his incroching, as by the reuealed intelligence which he holds with the Florentine; whom he suffers to harbour within his Hauen of Tyrus, (yet excusing it as a place lying waste, and not to be defended) to come ashore for fresh-water, bayes of him vnderhand his prizes, and furnisheth him with necessaries. But designs of a higher nature haue been treated of betweene them, as is well knowne to certaine Merchants imployed in that businesse. And I am verily perswaded, that if the occasion were laid hold of, and freely pursued by the Christians, it would terribly shake, if not vtterly confound the Ottoman Empire. It is said for a certainty that the Turke will turne his whole forces vpon him the next Sommer: And therefore more willingly condescends to a
- 60 Peace with the Persian. But the Emer is not much terrified with the rumor (although he seeks to diuert the tempest by continuance of gifts, the fauour of his friends, and professed integritie:) for he not a little presumeth of inuincible forts, well stored for a long warre; and aduantage of the mountaines: hauing besides forty thousand expert souldiers in continuall pay; part of them Moores, and part of them Christians: and if the worst should fall out, hath the sea to friend, and the the Florentine. And in such an exigent intendeth, as is thought, to make for Christendome, and there to purchase some Signorie; for the opinion is that he hath a masse of Treasure, gathered by wiles and extortions, as well from the Subiect, as from the Forreiner. Hee hath coyned of late a number of counterfeit Dutch Dollers, which he thrusteth away in payments, and offers in exchange to the Merchant: so that no new Dutch Dollers, though neuer so good, will now goe currant in Sidon. He hath the fift part of the increase of all things. The Christians and Jewes doe pay for their heads two Dollers apiece yearly, and head money he hath for all the Cattell within his Dominions. A severe Iusticer, re-edifies ruinous, and replants depopulated places; too strong for his Neighbours, and able to maintayne a defensue warre with the Turke: but that it is to be suspected that his people would fall from him in regard of his tyrannie. Now as for the Merchants, (who are for the most part English) they are entertayned with all courtesie and freedome; they may trauell without danger with their Purfes in their hands, paying for custome by three in the hundred. Yet these are but Traines to allure them, and disguise his voracitie; for if a Factor dye, as if the Owner, and hee his Heire, hee will seize on the goods belonging to his Principals, and seeme to doe them a fauour in admitting of a Redemption vnder the value, so that they doe but labour for his Haruest, and reape for his Garners. For such, and such-like eatings they generally intend to forsake his Countrey. The Merchandizes appropriate to this place are Cottons, and Silkes, which here are made in the Mulberry Groues, in indifferent quantitie. Other Commodities (which are many, and not course) they fetch from Damasco: two dayes iourney from hence; interposed with the Snow-topt Mountaynes of Antilibanus, so exceeding cold, that a Moore at our being here, returning from thence in the company of an English Merchant, perished by the way: the heate then excessiue great in the Valleyes on both sides.

Damascus is seated in a Plaine enuironed with Hills, and watered with the Riuer Chrysoras: descending with a great murmure from the Mountaynes; but after awhile hauing entred the plaine becommeth more gentle; seruing the Citie so abundantly, that few houses are without their Fountaines, and by little Riulets let into their Orchards: then which the habitable earth affoordeth not more delicate for excellencie of fruits, and their varieties: yet subiect to both the extreames of weather; rich in Trades, and celebrated for excellent Artizans. We were desirous to haue seene it, but were aduised not aduenture, because of the lawlesse Spahis there then residing in great numbers. The people about Sidon are greatly giuen to the nourishing of Cattell, (hauing notwithstanding not many) insomuch as Beeffe and Veale are seldome here to bee had, but when by chance they doe breake their legges or otherwise miscarrie. They fother them in the Winter (for they cut no grasse) with straw, and the leaues of Trees, whereof many doe flourish continually.

Our ship returning to Alexandria, and carrying with her two of our fellow Pilgrimes; on the five and twentieth of Aprill we returned also towards Acre by Land in the company of diuers English Merchants: the Champaine betweene the Sea and the Mountaynes fruitfull though narrow; and crossed with many little Riulets. After five miles riding wee came to a small solitarie Mosque not far from the Sea; erected, as they say, ouer the Widdowes house that entertayned Elias; close by it are the foundations of Sarepta. It was the Seate of a Bishop, and subiect vnto Tyrrus. Right against it, and high mounted on the Mountayne, there is a handsome new Towne now called Sarapanta. Beyond on the left hand of the way are a number of Caues cut out of the Rocke, the Habitations, as I suppose, of men in the Golden Age, and before the foundation of Cities. These are mentioned in the Booke of Iosua, and called Mearah, (which is the Caues of the Sidonians, and afterward called the Caues of Tyrrus, a place then inexpugnable, and maintayned by the Christians, vntill in the year 1167. it was by the corrupted Souldiers deliuered to the Saracens.

Wee crossed a little Valley deuided by the Riuer Eluthernus (now called Casmeir) which deriues his originall from Lybanus, and glideth along with a speedie course through a strangely intricate Channell: guiltie of the death of the Emperour Fredericke Barbarossa, who falling from his Horse as hee pursued the Infidels, and oppressed with the weight of his Armour was drowned therein, and buried at Tyrrus. On the other-side of the Valley stands an ancient Cane, whose Port doth beare the pourtrayture of a Chalice. Five miles beyond wee came to a Village seated on a little Hill in the midst of a Plaine, the same by all likelihood that was formerly called Palatyrus, or old Tyrrus. Forget I must not the custome obserued by the Inhabitants hereabout, who retayne the old Worlds Hospitalitie. Be the Passenger Christian or whatsoeuer, they will house him, prepare him extraordinary fare, and looke to his Mule, without taking of one Asper. But the precise Mabometans will neither eate nor drinke with a Christian: onely minister to his wants; and when he hath done, breake the earthen Dishes wherein he hath fed, as defiled. Now through this Towne there passes a ruinous Aquaduct, extending a great way towards the South, and through the Champaine, seeming often to climbe aboue his beginning, and from hence proceedeth directly West vnto Tyrrus, which standeth about two miles and a halfe below it.

Tyrrus was said to be built by Tyrus, the seuenth Sonne of Iaphet; re-edified by Phoenix, made a Colony of the Sidonians, and after the Metropolis of Phoenicia. The Citie was consecrated to

Her-

Hercules, whose Priest was Sichens. The Citizens famous for sundry excellencies, and forreine Plantations.

But in the yeare 1289. it was subdued by the Egyptian Mabometans, and from them by the Ottoman Selymus. But this once famous Tyrus, is now no other then an heape of Ruines; yet haue they a reuerent respect, and doe instruct the pensive beholder with their exemplarie frailtie. It hath two Harbours, that on the North-side the fairest, and best throughout all the Leuant, (which the Cursours enter at their pleasure) the other choaked with the decayes of the Citie. The Emer of Sidon hath giuen it with the adiacent Territories, to his Brother for a possession, comprehending fixe miles of the Continent in length; two in breadth, and in some places three.

10 A leuell naturally fertill, but now neglected: watered with pleasant Springs; heretofore abounding with Sugar-canes, and all varietie of fruit Trees.

We passed by certaine Cisternes, some mile and better distant from the Citie: which are called Salomons by the Christians of this Countrey. I know not why, vnlesse these were they Salomons Cisternes, which he mentions in the Canticles. Square they are and large; replenished with living waters, in times past conueyed by the Aquaduct into the aforesaid Orchards: but now vlesse and ruined, they shed their waters into the Valley below, making it plashie in sundry places: where the Aire doth suffer with the continuall croking of Frogs. Within night, wee came vnto certayne Tents that were pitched in those Marishes, belonging to the Emers Brothers Seruants, who there pastured their Horses. Where by a Moletto the Master of his Horse (whose Sister 20 he had marryed) we were courteously entertayned. The next morning after two or three houres riding, we ascended the Mountaynes of Saron, high and woodie; which stretch with intermitted

Vallies, vnto the Sea of Galilee, and here haue their white Cliffes washt with the surges; called Capo Bianco by the Mariner: frequented (though forsaken by men) with Leopards, Bores, Iaccals, and such like sauage Inhabitants. This passage is both dangerous and difficult, neighboured by the precipitating Cliffe, and made by the labour of man: yet recompensing the trouble with fragrant Sauours, Bayes, Rosemary, Marioram, Hyslope, and the like there growing in abundance. They say, that of late a Thiefe pursued on all sides, and desperate of his safetie, (for rarely are offences here pardoned) leapt from the top into the Sea, and swum vnto Tyrus, which is seuen miles distant; who for the strangenesse of the fact was forgiven by the Emer. A little beyond

30 we passed by a ruinous Fort, called Seandarone, of Alexander the builder; heere built to defend this passage: much of the foundation ouer-growne with Oziers and Weeds, being nourished by a Spring that falleth from thence into the Sea. A Moore not long since was heere assailed by a Leopard, that skulkt in the aforesaid Thicket; and iumping vpon him, ouerthrew him from his Asse: but the beast hauing wet his feet, and mist of his hold, retyred as ashamed without further violence: within a day or two after he drew company together to haue hunted him, but found him dead of a wound receiued of a Bore. The higher Mountaynes now comming short of the Sea, doe leaue a narrow leuell betweene. Vpon the left hand, on a high round Hill, wee saw two solitarie Pillars, to which some of vs rid, in hope to haue seene something of Antiquities; where we found diuers others laid along, with the halfe buried foundation of an ample building.

40 A mile beyond we came to a Fort maintayned by a small Garrison of Moores, to prohibit that passage if need should require, and to secure the Traueller from Theeues; a place heretofore vnpassable by reason of their out-rages. The Souldiers acquainted with our Merchants, freely entertayned vs, and made vs good cheere according to their manner of Diet: requited with a Present of a little Tobacco, by them greedily affected. They also remitted our Caphar, vsing to take four Dollers apiece of the stranger Christians. From hence ascending the more eminent part of the Rockie and naked Mountaynes, which heere againe thrust into the Sea, (called in times past, the Tyrian Ladder) by a long and steepe descent we descended into the Valley of Acre. Diuers little hills being here and there dispersed, crowned with Ruines (the Couerts for Theeues) and many Villages on the skirts of the bordering Mountaynes. Ere yet night, we re-

90 entered Acre.

Now is our Author shaping his course for England; and we haue a further Asian Discoverie to make. Thankfull to him for his paines (which haue eased vs of further search in the many many Holy Land Pilgrimes, which I haue in diuers Languages) wee will seeke a new Pilgrime to be our Guide, both in Syria, and in the parts adioyning. And loe, Ierusalem so pleaseth vs, that once againe we will trauell thither with Master Biddulph, following him from Constantinople to Aleppo, and thence by Land to Ierusalem, the Nauill and Centre of many our Pilgrimes and Pilgrimages.

the Saracen Omer, next Successor vnto Mahomet. Seated it is vpon Mount Moria, in the South-east corner of the Citie; without doubt in the very place where Salomons stood: the more eminent building consisting of an eight square round of a blewish stone, adorned with adioyning Pillars, and Tarrast aboue. In the midst of the sheluing Roofe, another vpright aspireth, though lesse by far, yet the same in forme and substance with the former, being couered ouer with a Cupolo of Lead. To the West of this a long building adioyneth, like the bodie of a Church, compact aboue, and no higher then the vnder Tarras of the other, but like it in colour. Now the Court (the same with that of the old Temple) is iust foure square euery way, about a flights shoot ouer. In the East Wall, which is also a Wall to the Citie, stands the Golden Gate, (so called in that it was gilded) which belonged onely to the Temple, through which Christ passed twice; 10 first in triumph, and after a Captiue. It is said that the Emperour Heraclius returning from his Persian Victory, attempted to haue entred thereat in all his glory; but was miraculously prohibited, vntill he had put off all his Princely Ornaments; in a simple habite bearing that part of the Crosse of Christ on his shoulders, which he had recovered from the Persians. This Gate is now rammed vp by the Turkes, to preuent as some say, a Prophecie: which is, that the Citie should there be entred by the Christians. A part of the South-side, is also inclosed with the wall of the Citie. The rest not inferiour in strength, surrounded with a deepe Trench hewne into the Rocke: though now much choaked, heretofore inhabited in the bottome like a street. In the midst of this out-court, there is another; wherein the aforesaid Mosque doth stand, raised some two yards aboue it, and garnished on the sides with little Turrets, through which ascended; all paved 20 with white Marble (the spoile of Christian Churches) where the Mahometans, as well as within, doe performe their particular Oraysons. Sundry low buildings there are adioyning to the wall: as I suppose, the Habitation of their Santons. In the midst of that, on the South-side, there is a handsome Temple couered with Lead; by the Christians called the Church of the Purification of the Virgine: now also a Mosque. Godfrey of Bullein, with the rest of the Citie tooke this place by assault, and slue within the circuit thereof tenne thousand Saracens. By him then made a Cathedrall Church: erecting Lodgings about it for the Patriarch and his Canons. Into which there are now but two entranecs: that on the West; and this Gate ouer the head of the Poole Betsaida (called of old the Horse-gate, for that here they left their Horses, it beeing not lawfull to ride any further) resembling the Gate of a Citie. One thing by the way may bee noted: 30 that whereas our Churches turne to the East. The Temple of Salomon regarded the West, perhaps in respect of Mount Caluarie.
 Repassing the aforesaid Bridge, (seeing we might proceed no farther) on the North-side of the street that stretcheth to the West, now in a remote corner, stood the House of Iaachim, where a goodly Church was built to the honour of Saint Anna, with a Monasterie adioyning: of which some part yet remayneth, but polluted with the Mahometan Superstition. Turning backe, we tooke vp the said street to the West: not far onward, at the left hand stood the Palace of Pilate, without all question the Cattle of Antonia, neere adioyning to the wall of the Temple, where now the Sanziacke hath his Residence; deprived of those lofty Towers, and scarce appearing aboue the wals that confine it. On the right hand, at the far end of a street that pointeth to the North, stood the stately Mansion of Herod: of which some signe there are left, that witnesse a 40 perished excellency. Now at the West corner of that of Pilates, where the wall for a space doth turne to the East, there are a paire of high staires which leade to the place of Iustice, and Throne of the Romane President, where the Sauour of the World, was by the World condemned. The staires that they say then, were called Scala Sancta, I haue seene at Rome neere Saint Iohns in the Lateran; translated thither by Constantine. Three paire there are in one Front, diuided but by wals: the middlemost those: being of white Marble, and eightene in number; ascended and worne by the knees of the Suppliants, who descend by the other. At the top there is a little Chappell called Sanctum Sanctorum, where they neuer say Masse: and vpon this occasion: A 50 holy Father in the Roome adioyning, hauing consumed most part of the night in his Deuotions, is said, an houre before the dawning, to haue seene a procession of Angels passe by him, some singing, and others perhaps that had worse voyces, bearing Torches: amongst whom Saint Peter with the Eucharist; who executed there his Pontificall Function: and that done returned. This rumored the day following about the Citie, numbers of people flockt thither; who found the Roome all to bedropt with Torches in confirmation of this Relation. Whereupon decreed it was, that not any (as not worthy) should say Masse on that Altar. Now the way betweene the place of those staires and Mount Caluarie, is called the Dolorous way: alongst which our Sa- 60 uour was led to his Passion: in which they say, (and shew where) that hee thrice fell vnder the weight of his Crosse. And a little beyond there is an ancient Arch that crosseth the street, and supporteth a ruined Gallerie: in the East-side a two arched window, where Pilate presented Christ to the people. An hundred paces farther, and on the left hand there are the Relikes of a Church, where they say that the blessed Virgin stood when her Sonne passed by, and fell into a trance at the sight of that killing Spectacle. Sixtie sixe paces beyond (where this street doth meete with that other which leadeth to Port Ephraim, now called the Gate of Damascus) they say,

say, that they met with Simon of Cyrene, and compelled him to assist our Saviour in the bearing of his burthen. Turning a little on the left hand, they shewed vs where the women wept, and he replied; Weepe not for me you Daughters of Ierusalem, &c. Then turning againe on the right, we passed vnder a little arch, neere which a house ascended by certain steps; the place where Veronica dwelt, who gaue our Saviour, as they say, a Napkin as he passed by the doore, to cleanse his face from the blood which trickled from his Thorne-pierst browes; and spittle wherewith they had despitefully defiled him: who returned it againe enriched with his liuely counterfeit, now to be seene at Rome vpon Festiuall dayes, in Saint Peters Church in the Vatican. Fronting the far end of this street, an ancient Gate which stood in the West wall of the old Citie, yet relists the sub-
10 uersions of time, called by Nehemia, the old Gate; by the Iebusites the Port of Iebus, and the Gate of Iudgement; for that the Elders there sate in Iustice: through which the condemned were led to execution vnto Mount Caluarie: then two hundred twentie paces without, and a little on the left hand; though now almost in the heart of the Citie. From hence we ascended the East-side of Mount Caluarie (eight hundred paces from the Palace of Pilate) and so descended into the Court of the Temple of the Sepulcher. Right against it are the ruines of Ioseph buildings, heretofore the Alberges of the Knight Hospitallers of Saint Iohns. Turning to the South we were shewed, where once stood the dwelling of Zebedeus, in which Iames and Iohn were borne heretofore a Collegiat Church, but now a Mosque. A little higher wee came to the
20 Iron Gate, a passage in times past betweene the vpper Citie, and the neather (which gaue way vnto Peter conducted by the Angell) built by Alexander the Great: who hauing taken Tyrrus, and the Sea-bordering Cities of Phoenicia and Palestine, begirt Ierusalem with his Armie: when on a sudden the Gates were set open, Iaddus the High Priest issuing forth, clothed in his Pontifical Habit, and followed with a long trayne in white Rayments: whom Alexander espying, aduanced before the rest of the company; and when he drew neere fell prostrate before him. For it came vnto his remembrance, how once in Dio a Citie of Macedon, consulting with himselfe about his Asian Enterprize, he had seene in a Vision one so apparelled, who bid him boldly proceed, and told him that the God whom he serued would protect his Armie, and make him Lord of the Persian Monarchie. Then hand in hand they entred the Citie, the High Priest conducting him vnto the Temple, where hee sacrificed vnto God according to the manner of the 30 Hebrewes: Iaddus expounding vnto him the Prophecies of Daniel, which foretold of his victories. From thence we proceeded vnto the House of Saint Marke, of which an obscure Church in the custodie of the Sorians doth retayne the memory. And beyond, we came to the Church of Saint Iames, standing in the place where he was beheaded; erected by the Spaniards, together with an Hospitall, and now posselt by the Armenians. This seene, we returned to the Couent.
The day following, wee went out (as before) at the Port of Sion. Turning on the left hand along the wall, wee were shewed the place where Peter wept, when hee had denyed our Saviour; dignified once with a Church, and whereof there now remayneth some part of the foundation. Right against it there is a Posterne in the wall, formerly called Port Esqueline; at which they bore forth the filth of the Citie. The foundation of this part of the wall is much more
40 ancient, and much more strong then the rest, consisting of blacke stones of a mightie size. Not farre beyond, we crossed the Valley of Iehosaphat, and mounted the South end of Mount Oliuet, by the way of Bethania. Hauing ascended a good height, on the right hand they shewed vs where Iudas hanged himselfe (the stumpe of the Sycamore, as they say, not long since extant) being buried in a Grot that adioyneth. Neerer the top where Christ cursed the fig-tree, many there growing at this present. Descending the East-side of the Mountaine, a little on the left hand, we came to a desolate Chappell, about which diuers ruines; the Houses heretofore of Simon the Leper. From thence we descended vnto the Castle of Lazarus, (whereof yet there is some thing extant) the Brother to Marie and Martha: close vnder which lyes Bethania, (two 50 miles from Ierusalem) now a tottered Village, inhabited by Arabians. In it the Vault where Christ rayled Lazarus from death; square and deepe, descended into by certaine steps. Aboue are two little Chappels, which haue in either of them an Altar: where stood a stately Church erected by Saint Helena: and after that an Abbey, Queene Milisend the Foundresse. A little North of Bethania, we came to the ruines of a Monasterie, now leuell with the floore, seated in the place vnto which the penitent Marie retyned from the corrupting vanities of the Citie. South-ward of this, and not far off, stood the House of Martha, honoured likewise with a Temple, and ruinated alike. Equally distant from both, there is a stone, whereon, they say, that our Saviour sate, when the two Sisters intreated him to restore life to their Brother now foure dayes buried: the Pilgrime that breakes off a peece thereof, stands excommunicated. A little 60 aboue, there is a Fountayne of excellent water, deepe sunke into the Rocke, (by which we refreshed our selues with prouision brought with vs) called the Fountayne of the Apostles. Now we ascended Mount Oliuet againe, by another way more inclining to the North. Vpon the right hand, and not far from the top, stood Bethsage, whose very foundations are now confounded; from whence Christ past vnto Ierusalem in triumph vpon an Asses Colt: euery Palme-sunday by the Pater-guardian superstitiously imitated.

CHAP. IX.

Part of a Letter of Master WILLIAM BIDDVLPH from Aleppo.

* The former, part of this Letter is omitted: the later also pruned in some things to prevent tedious repetitions, of those things which you haue had in others. Fame of Q. Elizabeth.

He * dolefull and lamentable beginning of your last Letter made mee exceeding sorrowfull; for therein you acquainted me with the death of blessed Queene Elizabeth, of late and famous memory; at the hearing whereof, not onely I and our English Nation mourned, but many other Christians who were neuer in Christendome, but borne and brought vp in Heathen Countries, wept to heare of her death, and said, she was the most famous Queene that euer they heard or read of, since the World beganne. But the ending of your Letter comforted vs againe, and mitigated our mourning. And (as my dutie was) I appointed one day to bee kept holy, which wee spent in Prayer, and Preaching, and Thanksgiuing vnto God for the happie aduancement of so Noble, Wise, Learned, and Religious a King ouer vs. And in signe of ioy, we feasted and triumphed in such sort, that the very Heathen people were partakers with vs of our ioy. After my departure from Constantinople, the first place wee touched at, was the two Castles at the Hellespont, about two hundred and twentie miles distant from Constantinople, where the order is, for all ships to stay three dayes, to the end that if any slaues be run away from their Masters, or Theeues haue stolne away any thing, they may thither be pursued in three dayes, before the ships passe: And then at three dayes end, the ship must be searched for goods, contra bando, and the Grand Signiors Passe shewed for all the Passengers in the ship; and then (their vsuall duties payed) they may set saile and away. Yet if the Master of the ship pay extraordinarily, they may more speedily bee dispatched: and many giue very liberally (when they haue a good winde) rather than they will be stayed many houres. From thence we came to Chios, where we stayed a few dayes. From Chios wee set sayle with a very good wind, which brought vs amongst the fiftie three Iles in the Arches, called Cyclades, or Sporades: And then, by a contrary wind, wee were driuen to Samos, which is an Ile before Ionia, ouer against Ephesus, where we anchored vntill wee had a good wind, and then sayled by Andros, an Ile, one of the Cyclades, and had a very good wind vntill we came to Rhodos, commonly called Rhodes, which is an Ile in the Carpathian Sea, neere Caria, where we were becalmed. It is called the Carpathian Sea of Carpathus, an Ile in the midst betwixt Rhodes and Creet. From Rhodes we came to Cyprus, a famous and fruitfull Iland in the Sea Carpathium, betweene Cilicia and Syria, which was once conquered by Richard the First, King of England. In this Ile, Venus was greatly honoured. There is still a Citie therein called Paphia, built by Paphus, who dedicated it to Venus. But the chiefeest Cities in Cyprus are Famagusta and Nicosia. There is great store of Cotton-wooll growing in this Iland, and exceeding good Wine made here, and the best Dimetey, with other good Commodities. From hence a French Gentleman (who came in our ship from Constantinople,) imbarcked himselfe for Ioppa, with a purpose to goe to Ierusalem. Ioppa is not two dayes sayling from Cyprus with a good wind: and Ioppa is but thirtie miles from Ierusalem by Land. Cyprus was vnder the gouernment of the Signiorie of Venice; but now it is inhabited by Greekes, and gouerned by Turkes. But our ship from Cyprus went to Tripoly in Syria, a Citie on the mayne Land of Syria, neere vnto Mount Lybanus, which is a Mountayne of three dayes iourney in length, reaching from Tripoly neere to Damascus. Whilest our ship stayed in the Roade at Tripoly, I and some others road vp to Mount Lybanus, to see the Cedar Trees there, and lodged the first night at the Bishops house of Eden, who vsed vs very kindly. It is but a little Village, and called by the Turkes, Anchora; but most vsuall by the Christians there dwelling, it is called Eden, not the Garden of Eden, (which place is vnknowne vnto this day) but because it is a pleasant place, resembling in some sort the Garden of Eden, (as the simple Inhabitants thereof suppose) therefore it is called Eden. This Bishop was borne in the same Parish, but brought vp at Rome: his name was Franciscus Amyra, by whom I vnderstood, that the Pope of Rome many yeeres since, sent vnto the Christians inhabiting Mount Lybanus, to perswade them to embrace the Romish Religion, and yeeld themselves to the Church of Rome, making large promises vnto them if they would so doe: whereof they deliberated long, but in the end yeelded, vpon condition they might haue libertie to vse their owne Lyturgie, and Ceremonies, and Lents (for they strictly obserue foure Lents in the yeere) and other Customes. Euer since which time, the Pope hath and doth maintayne some of their Children at Rome. These Christians which dwell vpon Mount Lybanus, are called Maronites, they are very simple and ignorant people, yet ciuill, kinde, and courteous to Strangers. There are also many Turkes dwelling on the same Mountayne, and an Emeer or great Lord, called Emeer Vseph, who gouerneth all the rest, both Christians and Turkes, beeing himselfe a Mahometan, yet one who holdeth the gouernment of Mount Lybanus, in despite of the Great Turke, and hath done a long time.

From Eden we rode ten miles further vp the Mountayne, to see certayne Cedar Trees, where we saw foure and twentie tall Cedar Trees growing together, as bigge as the greatest Oakes, with diuers rowes of branches one ouer another, stretching straight out, as though they were kept by Art. Although we read of great store of Cedars which haue growne on Mount Lybanus, yet now there are very few, for we saw none but these foure and twentie, neither heard of any other but in one place more. At these Cedars many Nostranes met vs, and led vs to their Villages. From these Cedars wee returned toward Tripoly, another way, descending by the side of the Mount towards a Village of the Maroniticall Christians, called Hatcheeth, where (as we were descending downe the side of the Mountaine) all the men, women 10 and children, came out of their Houses to behold vs: And when we were yet farre off riding towards them, they gaue a ioyfull shout altogether ioyntly, to expresse their ioy for our comming. And when we came neere, their women with Chaffing-dishes of coles burnt Incense in our way, and their Cassefes, that is, their Church-men (with blue Shashes about their heads) made crosses with their fingers towards vs (as their manner is in signe of welcome) and blessed vs, giuing God thanks that he had brought Christian Frankes, * of such far Countries as they vnderstood we were of, to come to visit them.

So soone as we were dismounted from our Horses, the chiefe Sheh, with all the rest of their ancientest men, came and brought vs to the chiefe house of the Parish, called the Towne-house or Church-house, and there spread Carpets and Table-clothes on the ground (as their manner is) 20 and made vs all sit downe; and euery one that was able, brought Flaskets of such good cheere as they had, to welcome vs, which was many Bottles or Ingesters of exceeding good Wine, with Oliues, Sallets, Egges, and such like things, as on the sudden they had readie, and set them before vs, and both by the cheerefulness of their countenances, gestures of their bodies, and presents of such present things as they had, expresse their gladnesse for our comming; and would also haue prepared Hens, Kids, and other good cheere, but we would not suffer them. This was about eleuen or twelue of the clocke. They would haue had vs continue with them all night, and with great importunitie craued it; but we vnderstanding that the Patriarch was but three miles off, at a Village called Sharry, we went to salute him, who hearing of our comming (albeit he were at a Feast amongst all his Neighbours) came to meete vs, and saluted vs, and brought 30 vs all in amongst his Neighbours into a Roome foure square, and round about beset with Carpets and Table-clothes on the ground, and such cheere as the season of the yeere did afford, set thereon, and made vs all sit down, and conferred with vs of our Country, and many other matters, sauing matters of Religion, for the poore man had no Latine, and little Learning in any other Language; only he had the Syracke, (which was his naturall Language) with the Turkish and Arabian Tongue. After wee had spent one houre with him, we left him with his Neighbours at Sharry, where we found him, for he could not conueniently come from them: for their manner is, when they feast, to sit from mid-day vntill mid-night, and sometimes all night, neuer altogether rising from their good cheere, but now and then one by Inter-courses, as occasion requireth, returning againe speedily. Yet hee sent with vs three men to bring vs to his owne house, neere
40 vnto a Village (foure miles distant from Sharry) called Boloxa, but vulgarly Blouza, from whence we descended downe the side of another part of the Mountayne, and in the middle of the descending of this Mountayne was the Patriarkes house, called Kanobeen Kadischa Mir-iam, in the Syracke Tongue, but in Latine, Coenobium Sancta Maria; that is, The Monasterie of Saint Marie. Ouer against the Patriarkes house is an high steeple Mountayne, from whence the water runneth downe into a deepe Valley betwixt the Patriarkes House and the Hill, and in the fall, the water maketh an exceeding great noyse, like vnto that Catadupa in Ethiopia, where the fall of Nilus maketh such a noyse, that the people are made deafe therewith that dwell neere it. This place is some-what like vnto it in fall, but not in effect: for this water beeing not so great as Nilus, maketh not the like noyse, neither worketh the like effect. There is also an extraor-
50 dinarie Echo thereabout.

One side of the Patriarkes house is a naturall Rocke, the other of hewen stones and squared Timber: a very strong House, but not very large, nor specious to behold. So are also many of their Houses, in most of their Villages, built against a Rocke, as a Wall vnto one side of it, especially Emeer Useph his House, the greatest part thereof being hewed out of the liuely Rocke, and the passage or descending vnto it so narrow and dangerous, that it is counted inuincible, which maketh him to hold out against the Turke, and to domineere in this Mountayne, will he, nill he. It is a most intricate Mountayne with Hills and Valleyes, Woods and Riuers, and fruitfull Pastures, Oliues, Vines, and Fig-trees, Goates, Sheepe, and other Cattle. It is also exceeding hauing Snow on the top all the yeere long.

60 At this Monastery of Saint Marie (which is the Patriarkes House) wee lodged all night, and both on Saturday at Euening Prayer, and on Sunday at Morning Prayer, we both heard and saw the manner of their Seruice in the Syracke Tongue, both read and sung very reuerently, with Confessions, Prayers, Thankesgiuings, the Psalmes of David sung, and Chapters both out of the Old Testament, and the new distinctly read. It reioyced me greatly to see their Order: and I observed in these ancient Christians called Nazarites, the Antiquitie of vsing set formes of Prayers in Churches, and also the necessitie thereof, that the people might haue something to say Amen vnto, beeing read in their Mother Tongue, that they may learne to pray priuately, by those Prayers which they daily heare read publikely. This is too much neglected in England, God grant reformation thereof.

There is no place in all the World, but foure Parishes or Villages on this Mountaine, where they speake the Syriack Tongue naturally at this day. And these are these foure Villages, which I named before; at all which places wee had kind entertainment, viz. First, Eden, called by the Turkes, Anchora. Secondly, Hatcheeth. Thirdly, Sbarry. Fourthly, Bolozza, called vulgarly Blouza. And these people are called Nostranes, quasi Nazaritans, as it were Nazarites, and none but they. But more generally they are called Maronites, but this name is common to them with others.

There are dwelling on one side of Mount Lybanus, towards the foot of the Mountayne (and in some other places in that Countrey) a kind of Christians, called Drusies, who came into the Countrey with King Baldwine, and Godfrey of Bullen, when they conquered that Countrey, (whose Predecessors or Ancestors are thought to haue beene Frenchmen) and afterwards when the Saracens recoured it againe, these men (whom they now call Drusies) fled into the Mountaynes to saue themselves; and there dwelling long, in the end their Posteritie forgot all Christianitie, yet vsed still Baptisme, & retained still the names of Christians, whom the Turcomen call Rasies, that is, Infidels, because they eate Swines flesh, which is forbidden by the Turkes Law.

These Turcomanny are kind, and simple people, dwelling alwayes in the fields, following their flockes, borne and brought vp, liuing and dying in Tents, and when their flockes and heards remooue, then all their men, women and children remoue with their household-stuffe, and houses too, which are but Tents made to remooue, after the manner of the ancient Israelites: & where they find good pasture, there they pitch their Tents; the men following their flocks of sheepe and heards of Cattle, the women keepe their Tents, and spend their time in spinning, or carding, or knitting, or some household huswiferie, not spending their time in gossiping and gadding abroad from place to place, and from house to house, from Ale-house to Wine-tauerne, as many idle Huswifes in England doe. Yet sometimes are these simple soules abused by Ianizaries, who in trauelling by them, take from them perforce victuals for themselves and for their horses, and giue them nothing but sore stripes, if they but murmur against them. But when Christian Merchants passe by them, they will (of their owne accord) kindly present them.

We returned from Mount Lybanus to Tripoly, by such an intricate way, that if we had not had a Guide with vs, wee should haue lost our selues. Neere vnto Tripoly there is a Plaine at least one mile in length, full of Olive-trees and Fig-trees. At the foot of this Mountayne, neere vnto Tripoly, there is a landie Mount which hath arisen (in the memorie of some olde men there yet liuing) where there was none before; and it groweth still bigger and bigger, and there is a Prophecie of it, that in time it shall ouerwhelme the Towne. Tripoly hath the Etimologie (as some say) of two Greeke words, viz. τρεῖς and πολις, because the Citie hath bin thrice built. First, on a Rockie Iland, where it was ouerwhelmed with water. Secondly, on the Marine neere vnto the Sea, where it was often sacked by Carsares. And now thirdly, a mile from the Sea, where it is annoyed with sand. Our ship being not readie to set saile at our returne from the Mount, but staying partly to dispatch their businesse, and partly for a good wind; we trauelled by Land two dayes journey, to see Tyrus and Sidon, hard by the Sea. And at Sidon we saw the Tombe of Zabulan, the Sonne of Iacob, held in great estimation and reuerent account at this present day.

Tyrus is now called (by the Turkes) Sur, because there beginneth the Land of Syria, which they call Sur; Tyrus is destroyed, and no such Citie now standing, onely the name of the place remaineth, and the place is still knowne where it stood. Eight miles from Tyrus towards the East, is the Citie Sarepta, of the Sidonians, where the Prophet Elias raised the Widdowes Sonne from death to life. We saw also Baruta, where sometimes was a great Trade for Merchants, but from thence they remoued it to Damascus, and from Damascus to Tripoly, and of late, from Tripoly to Sidon. Ioppa is not far from these parts, oftentimes Barkes come from the one to the other. At our returne we went abroad, and presently set saile for Scanderone, (as it is now called by Turkes;) otherwise called Alexandretta by the Christians, which is the very bottome and vtmost border of all the Streights. The Aire is very corrupt, and infecteth the bodies, and corrupteth the blood of such as continue there many dayes, partly by reason of the dregs of the Sea, which are driuen thither: and partly by reason of two high Mountaynes which keepe away the Sunne from it a great part of the day. And it is very dangerous for strangers to come on shoare, before the Sunne be two houres high, and haue dried vp the vapours of the ground, or to stay on shoare after Sun-setting. The water also neere vnto the Towne are very vnholosome, coming from a Moorish ground; but at the Fountayne, a mile off, there is exceeding good water to drink. It is far more healthfull to sleepe aboard then on the shoare. Scanderone is in Cilicia, and Cilicia is the Countrey Caramonia, (as it is now called) in the lesser Asia, and is diuided into two parts, viz. Torcher and Campestris. It hath on the East, the Hill Amanus: on the North, Taurus: on the West, Pamphilia: on the South, the Cilician Sea.

Scanderone is the Port for Aleppo, where all our Merchants land their goods, and send them vp to Aleppo vpon Camels. The Carauans vsually make three dayes iourney betwixt Scanderone and Aleppo. Whiles our Camels were preparing, wee tooke boat and went to an ancient Towne by the Sea side, called at this day Byas, but of old, Tarsus, a Citie in Cilicia, where Saint Paul was borne, mentioned Act. 22. 3. which Towne is arched about (as many of their Cities are) to keepe away the heat of the Sunne, which Arches they call Bazars. At the Gardens neere Tarsus (and likewise at other Gardens within three miles of Scanderone) wee saw great store of Silke-wormes, which at the first bee but little graines like vnto Mustard seed: but by the bearing of them in womens bosomes, they doe gather an heat, whereby they come vnto life, and so proue wormes; they keepe them in Tents made of reeds with one loft ouer another full of them, and feed them with leaues of Mulberie trees; these wormes (by naturall instinct) doe fast often, (as some report) every third day.

Here we stayed certaine dayes to auoyd the infection of Scanderone. The Mountaines which obscure Scanderone, and make it more vnhealthfull, I take to be a part of Taurus, which is a great and famous Mountaine, beginning at the Indian Sea, and rising into the North, passeth by Asia vnto Maotis, bordering vpon many Countries, and is called by many names. Sometimes it is called Caucasus, which is the highest Hill in all Asia, which parteth India from Scythia, and is part of the Hill Taurus. Sometimes it is called Amanus, which Hill parteth Syria from Cilicia. And sometimes it is called by other names, according vnto the Sea coasts along which it extendeth. About Scanderone there are many rauinous beasts, about the bighesse of a Foxe, commonly called there Lackalles, engendred (as they say) of a Fox and a Wolfe, which in the night make a great crying, and come to the graues, and if there haue beene any Corse buried the day before, (if the graue be not well filled, with many great stones vpon it) many of them together, with their feet, doe scrape vp the earth, and pull vp the corps and eate it.

At our returne from Tarsus, Edward Rose our Factor marine, prouided vs horses to ride to Aleppo, and a Ianizarie, called Parauan Bashaw with two Immoglans to guard vs, with necessarie victuals for our selues to spend by the way, for there are no Innes nor Victualing-houses in that Countrey, but traouellers take victuals for themselves, and prouender for their Horses with them. Our Merchants and Passengers making haste to be gone from this contagious and pestiferous place Scanderone (which one very well called, The bane of Francke) left their goods with the Factor marine to be sent after them, because the Malims and Muckremen (as they call the Carriers) were not yet come downe with their Camels to carrie them vp: but we met them at the Fountaine of fishes neere vnto Scanderone. About eight miles from Scanderone, we came to a Towne called Bylan, where there lieth buried an English Gentleman, named Henrie Morison, who died there comming downe from Aleppo, in companie with his brother Master Phines Morison, who left his Armes in that Countrey with these Verses vnder written.

To thee deere Henry Morison

Hath left this fading memorie,

For Monuments, and all must die.

From Bylan wee came to the Plaine of Antioch, and went ouer the Riuier Orontes by Boate, which Riuier parteth Antiochia and Syria. Antioch Plaine is very long and large, at least ten miles in length. We lodged the first night at Antiochia, in Pisidia, an ancient Towne about fife and twentie miles from Scanderone, mentioned Act. 11. 26. where the Disciples were first called Christians. Here we lodged in an house, but on the bare ground, hauing nothing to sleepe on, or to couer vs, but what wee brought with vs, viz. a Pillow, and a Quilt at the most, and that was lodging for a Lord.

This Antioch hath beene, as a famous, so an exceeding strong Towne, situated by the Sea, and almost compassed (at the least on both sides) with exceeding high and strong Rockes. The Inhabitants at this day are Greekes, but vnder the gouernement of the Turke, but for matters of Religion, ordered and ruled by their Patriarchs, for the Greekes haue foure Patriarchs to this present day, viz. The Patriarch of Antioch, the Patriarch of Ierusalem, the Patriarch of Alexandria, the Patriarch of Constantinople, who ruleth all the rest. Yet as the Iewes, so also the Greekes to this day are without a King, and both they, and their Patriarchs are but slaues to the great Turke.

And although their Patriarch of Constantinople be counted their chiefe Patriarch: yet I haue knowen one Milesius (a learned man indeed) who was first Patriarch of Constantinople, preferred to the place by Master Edward Barton, an English Gentleman, and Lord Ambassadour for Queene Elizabeth of famous memorie, who for his wisdom, good gouernement, policie, and Christian carriage, hath left an immortall fame behind him in those Countries, to this present day, and lieth buried at an Iland of the Greekes, within twelue miles of Constantinople, called Bartons Iland to this day. After whose death, this good man Milesius was by the Greekes displaced from being Patriarch of Constantinople: (which they durst not doe whiles Master Barton was liuing) becaule, being a man of knowledge, he laboured to reforme the Greekes from many of their superstitious customes. Whereupon (presently after the death of Master Barton) they said, their Patriarch was an English-man, and no Greeke, and therefore manzulled him, that is,

And being there Patriarch, hee excommunicated the Patriarch of Antiochia, because he accepted of reliefe at the Popes hand, and made him come to Alexandria, to humble himselfe vnto him, and acknowledge his fault before he would suffer him to execute his Patriarchs office.

The English Ambassadors with the Great Turke haue beene, 1. Master Hareborn. 2. Master Barton. 3. Sir Henry Lello. 4. Sir T. Glouer. 5. Sir Paul Pinder. 6. Sir Ioh. Aires. 7. Sir Thomas Roe, now Lierger there for his Maiestie.

Master Henry Lello (a learned, wise, and religious English Gentleman, sometime Student in Oxford, and afterwards at the Innes of the Court) succeeded Master Barton in his place, and in many things exceeded him, especially in his religious carriage and vnspotted life: and had not the times beene more troublesome in his Regiment, then in the time of his Predecessor Master Barton; he would euery way haue gone beyond him. Hee first of all reformed his familie, and afterwards so ordered himselfe in his whole carriage, that he credited our Countrey: and after ten yeeres gouernement of the English Nation there, hee returned into his Countrey with the teares of many, and with generall good report of all Nations there dwelling or sojourning; and is worthily by his excellent Maiestie rewarded with Knighthood for his good seruice. If Milesius had liued, this good Gentleman would haue restored him to Constantinople, as he placed many other Arch-bishops both at Salonica, (of old called Theffalonica) and elsewhere.

In the Mountaines betwixt Scanderone and Aleppo, there are dwelling a certaine kind of people, called at this day Coords, comming of the race of the ancient Parthians, who worship the Deuill, and alledge for their reason in so doing, that God is a good man, and will doe no man harme, but that the Deuill is bad, and must bee pleased, lest hee hurt them. There was one of our Carriers a Muccreman and Malim, named Abdel Phat, who was said to be of that Race and Religion. There is also, although not in the direct way, (yet for safety and pleasantnesse of the way, it is sometimes taken in the way to Aleppo) an ancient Citie called Achilles, where one Afan Bashaw ruleth like a King (paying duties to the Turkes) successiue from his Predecessors, comming of the house of Sanballat, who hindred the building of the Temple of Ierusalem, who is called to this day, Eben Sumbolac, that is, The sonne of Sanballat: and all his kinred call one another, Ammiogli, that is, Brother Ammonite; for they account themselves of the race of the Ammonites. This Afan Bashaw is now old, and (for the most part) referreth all matters of gouernement to his Kinsman Vseph Bege, that is, Lord Ioseph.

The second night, in our trauell from Scanderone, we lodged at a place called, The Gardens, in the open fields, hauing the ground to our Bed, a stone to our Pillow (as Iacob in his trauell had) and the Skie to our couering. And many poore Trauellers in these parts (who come vnprovided) haue nothing but the aire for their supper, except they can meet with the fruits of Trees, or Herbs of the fields. Wee met in some places with Villages of Tents, where our Ianizarie Paganan Bashaw (being partly feared and partly loued amongst them) brought vnto vs from them, Bread and Water often times. Their Bread is made all in Cakes, after the ancient manner, as Abraham entertayned Angels with hearth Cakes. At one place we had also presented to vs very good sweet Goats milke, and also good sowre milke, turned by Art, which is the most common dish in those hot Countries.

The day following, we came about noone to a Village, called Hanadan, eight miles on this side Aleppo, ouer against which Village, on the right hand, on the top of the hill, there is (as the Iewes report) the Sepulchre of the Prophet Ieremie. At this Village Hanadan there are many Pigeon houses, whereof the poore people make much profit, bringing them to Aleppo to sell. At this Village we dined with Musmelons, Samboues, and a Muclebite. And after dinner, we slept an houre or two (as the custome of the Countrey is) and then rode forwards towards Aleppo, whither we came by five of the Clocke, and were kindly entertayned at Cane Burgol by the worshipfull Richard Colthurst Esquire, Consull for the English Nation there.

Aram Sobah, some thinke to haue beene that Citie which is now called Aleppo. And of this Aram Sobah I find mention made, 2. Sam. 8. 3, 4, 5. And also in the title of the sixtie Psalm, where mention is made of the salt Valley which is but halfe a dayes iourney from Aleppo, which is a very great Plaine, without grasse growing on it, the very sand whereof is good Salt naturally: after raine, being dried againe by the Sunne, they gather it. There is also a little Iland or Mountaine in the midst thereof, plaine on the top, which yeeldeth the best Salt. Some Iewes there dwelling, doe also say, that Aleppo was the Citie Sepheruaim: but I thinke it to be a better Citie, which some say, was called Apollonius: but I know no reason for it, except it were built by one of that name. Howsoeuer, it should seeme this Citie Aleppo hath often changed her name, and that, if it were not Aram Sobah, yet to be built not farre from the place where Aram Sobah stood. But the Turkes (changing the names of all places where they come) call Aleppo at this day, Halep, which signifieth Milke, because it yeeldeth great store of Milke.

Aleppo is inhabited by Turkes, Moors, Arabians, Iewes, Greekes, Armenians, Chelfalines, Norstranes, and people of sundry other Nations. The Turkes come of Magog the sonne of Iapheth.

The Moors are more ancient dwellers in Aleppo then Turkes, and more forward and zealous in Mahometisme then Turkes: yea all the Church-men amongst the Turkes are Moors (whom the Turkes count a base people in regard of themselves, and call them Törs.) Yet their Church-men men they haue in great reuerence; and not onely theirs, but they reuerence Church-men of all Nations, and call them holy Men, Saints, and men of God. I my selfe haue had great experience hereof, both in the place of my abode at Aleppo, and in my iourney towards Ierusalem, and in other places. In Aleppo, as I haue walked in the streetes, both Turkes and Moores, and other Nations, would very reuerently salute me after the manner of their Countrey: yea, their very Souldiers, as I haue walked in the Fields, with many other of our Nation, without a Ianesarie to guard vs, though they haue beene many hundreds together, yet haue they not offered either me or any of my companie wrong, for my sake, but haue said one to another, Hadah Cassies; that is, This is a Church-man, and therefore take heed what you doe vnto him, for he is a good man, &c. At Ierusalem many strangers of sundry Nations vnderstanding that I was an English Preacher, came and kissed my hand, and called me the English Patriarke. Yea, in all my ten yeeres Trauels, I neuer receiued, neither was offered wrong by any Nation but mine owne Countrey-men, and by them chiefly whom it chiefly concerned to protect me from wrongs: yet haue I found them most forward to offer me wrong, onely for doing my dutie, and following the order of our Church of England: knowing that I had none of the Reuerend Fathers of our Church to defend me. So would it be in England, if we had not the Reuerend Fathers in God the Lord Bishops of our Church to protect vs. All other Nations, both Heathen and Christian, goe before vs herein, in reuerencing and prouiding for their Church-men. The Turkes honour their Mustie (which is their chiefe Ruler in Ecclesiasticall matters, next vnder the Grand Signior) as an Angell: The Nostranes, Greekes, Armenians, Chelbalines, and Christians of all other Nations, performe double honour vnto them: onely in England, where there is a more learned Ministerie (I speake by experience) then in any Nation in the world, they are least of all regarded: Which maketh our Aduersaries, the Papists, say, (as I haue heard some of them speake in my hearing, many thousand miles from England) that if wee our selues were perswaded of the truth of our Religion, wee would reuerence our Church-men as they doe, and not scorne them and contemne them as we doe.

They also account fooles, dumbe men, and mad men, Santones, that is, Saints. And whatsoever such mad men say or doe, though they take any thing out of their houle, or strike them, and wound them, yet they take it in good part, and say, that they shall haue good lucke after it. And when such mad men die, they Canonize them for Saints, and erect stately Monuments ouer their graues, as wee haue here many examples, especially of one (who being mad) went alwayes naked, whose name was Sheh Bonbac, at whose death they bestowed great cost on his funerall, and erected an house ouer his graue, where (to this day) there are Lampes burning night and day, and many idle fellowes (whom they call Daruises) there maintained to looke vnto his Sepulchre, and to receiue the offerings of such as come to offer to Sheh Bonbac, which they take to themselves, and there is no weeke but many come out of the Citie of Aleppo and other places, to offer. For this Sepulchre is built on an Hill, three miles from Aleppo, betweene the Kings Garden and the Fountaine of Fishes. If any be sicke, or in danger, they vow that if they recouer or escape, they will offer so much money, or this or that good thing to Sheh Bonbac. There is also such another Bedlam Saint in Aleppo yet liuing, whom they call Sheh Mahammet a Santone, who goeth alwaies naked, with a Spit on his shoulders; and as hee goeth thorow the streetes, the Shop-keepers will offer him their Rings; and if hee thrust his Spit thorow their Rings, they take it for a fauour and signe of good successe: The like account they make, if hee take any thing from their Shop-boards, or box them or any of their house: yea, they are yet more mad vpon this mad man then so, for both men and women will come vnto him, and kisse his hand, or any other part, sometimes his thighs, and aske him counsell, for they hold that mad mens soules are in Heauen talking with God, and that hee reuealeth secrets vnto them. In regard whereof, the Bashawes themselves oftentimes, and chiefe Captaines will come vnto him with some present, and kisse some part of his naked body, and aske him whether they shall goe to battell or not, and what successe they shall haue in warre: And looke whatsoever he saith, they hold it for an Oracle. Not long since, the Turkes had a victorie against the Christians; and at their returne, they reported that this naked Santone, Sheh Mahammet of Aleppo, was seene naked in the field, fighting against their enemies, and that by his helpe they ouer-came them, although hee were not neere them by many thousand miles. Whereby you may see how the Demill doth delude them still, as hee did their Fore-fathers at the first by Mahomets Machiavelian deuices.

Their Daruises also they haue in such reputation, that oftentimes great Bashawes, when they are in disfaour with the King, and feare either losse of life, or goods, or both, to auoide danger, will turne Daruises, and then they account themselves priuiledged persons from the rigour of their Law. The witnesse of a Daruise or of a Church-man, will passe better then any mans witnesse besides, yea, better then Shereffes whom they account of Mahomets kindred, and they are knowne from others by their greene Shashes, which no man else may weare: for greene they account Mahomets colour, and if they see any Christian wearing a garment of that colour, they will cut it from his backe, and beate him, and aske him how he dare presume to weare Mahomets

Turkes reuerence Church-men of all sorts.

Mad and foolish sanctification. Sheh Bonbac. Sheh Mahammet a naked Santone.

saith, that each other day hee washeth his naked body at the Fountaine of the great meets colour, and whether hee bee Kin to God or not? This I haue knowne put in practise vpon Christians (not acquainted with the customes of the Countrey) since my comming: one for hauing but greene Shooe-strings, had his Shooes taken away. Another wearing greene Breeches vnder his Gowne (being espied) had his Breeches cut off, and he reuiled and beaten.

The Turkes haue no Printing amongst them, but all their Law and their Religion is written in the Morisco tongue, that is, the Arabicke tongue. And he is accounted a learned man amongst them, that can write and reade. And as for the Latine tongue, hee is a rare man amongst them that can speake it. Some few amongst them haue the Italian tongue: and many (especially in and about Constantinople) speake the vulgar Greeke, that is, Romeica tongue. For in Constantinople there are as many Grecians and Hebrues as Turkes. The poore, amongst the *Moore*s and Turkes at Aleppo, beg oftentimes in the streetes, in the name and for the sake of Syntana Fissa, who was (as they say) a Whore of Charitie, and would prostitute her selfe to any man Bacshesse (as they say in the Arabicke tongue) that is gratis freely.

Salutations of the Turkes.

The Diet of the Turkes is not sumptuous, for the most common dish is Pilaw, which is good sauiory meate made of Rice, and small morsels of Mutton boyled therein, and sometimes roasted Buckones, (that is, small bits or morsels of flesh.) Their more costly fare is Sambouses and Muclebites. Sambouses are made of Paste, like a great round Pastie, with varietie of Herbes and meates therein, not minced, but in Buckones. A Muclebite is a dish made of Eggs and Herbes. Their smaller Sambouses are more common, not so big as a mans hand, like a square Pastie, with minced meate therein. They haue also varietie of Helloway, that is, sweet meates compounded in such sort, as are not to be seene elsewhere. The poorer sort feede on Herbes and Fruits of the Trees. Their most common drinke is Coffa, which is a blacke kinde of drinke, made of a kind of Pulse like Pease, called Coana; which being grownd in the Mill, and boiled in water, they drinke it as hot as they can suffer it; which they finde to agree very well with them against their crudities, and feeding on Herbes and raw meates. Other compounded drinks they haue, called Sherbet, made of Water and Sugar, or Honey, with Snow therein to make it coole; for although the Countrey bee hot, yet they keepe Snow all the yeere long to coole their drinke. It is accounted a great curtesie amongst them to giue vnto their friends when they come to visit them, a Fin-ion or Scudella of Coffa, which is more holesome then toothsome, for it causeth good concoction, and drieth away drowynesse. Some of them will also drinke Bersb or Opi-um, which maketh them forget themselves, and talke idly of Castles in the Ayre, as though they saw Visions, and heard Reuelations. Their Coffa houses are more common then Ale-houses in England; but they vse not so much to sit in the houses, as on Benches on both sides the streetes, neere vnto a Coffa house, euery man with his Fin-ion full; which being smoaking hot, they vse to put it to their Noses and Eares, and then sup it off by leasure, being full of idle and Ale-house talke, whiles they are amongst themselves drinking of it; if there be any newes, it is talked off there. They haue also excellent good fountaine waters in most places of that Countrey, which is a common drinke amongst them, especially in Summer time, and in their trauels at all times of the yeere.

Some of our Merchants haue weighed their water and ours in England, when they haue come home, and haue found their water lighter then ours by foure ounces in the pound; and the lighter the water is, the more pleasant it is to drinke, and goeth downe more delectably, as if it were Milke rather then water. In great Cities where the Fountaines are either farre off, or not so plentiful, there are certaine poore men, which goe about the streetes from morning to night, with a Beares skinne full of water, sewed vp and fastned about his shoulders like a Tinkers Budget, with a Bole of Brasse in his hand, and offereth water freely to them that passe by, except they giue them any thing in curtesie, (some seldome times.) The greatest part of them are very curteous people amongst themselves, saluting one another at their meetings, with their hand on their brest (for they neuer vncover their head) with these words: Salam Alike Sultanum: that is, Peace bee vnto you Sir. Whereunto the other replyeth, Alekem Salam: that is, Peace be to you also. And sometimes thus: Elph Marhabba ianum. Or in Turkish, thus: Hosh Geldanos, Sophi Geldanos: that is, Welcome my deare friend. And in the Morning, Subalkier Sultanum, that is, Good morrow Sir: and in the Euening, thus, Misalker Sultanum, that is, Good euen Sir. And when friends and acquaintance meete, who haue not seene one another many dayes before, they salute one another in Turkish, thus: Neder halen? that is, how doe you? In Arabicke, thus, Isb halac Seedi? that is, How doe you Sir? And Isb babiac? that is, how doth thy Gate? (meaning all within his Gate) and so proceed by particulars, to aske how doth thy Childe, Slaue, Horse, Cat, Dog, Ass, &c. and euery thing in the house, except his Wife; for that is held a very vnkinde question, and not vsuall amongst them. And if a man come to their houses, and at the doore enquire of the Children for their Father, they will answer him: but if he enquire for the Mother, they will throw stones at him and reuile him.

Their women (as hath beene shewed before) haue little libertie to come abroade, except it be on the Eue before their Sabbath (which is Thursday) to weepe at the graues of the dead, or to the Bannios or hot Baths to wash themselves (as the vse of the Countrey is.) And when they

they come abroad, they are alwayes masked; for it is accounted a shame for a Woman to bee seene bare-faced: yea, they are so ielous and suspicious ouer them, that Fathers will not suffer their owne Sonnes, after they come to fourteene yeeres of age, to see their Mothers.

These bee their common salutations one to another. Their more speciall salutations to great Personages are these. When a man commeth to salute the great Turke, or Grand Signior himselfe (into whose presence few are admitted except Ambassadors and great Personages) they are led betweene two by the armes, for feare of a stab, by which meanes one of their Grand Signiors was once killed, and when they returne, they goe backwards; for it is accounted a disgrace to turne their backe parts to a great Man. In like manner they salute their Bashawes, and other 10 great Men (but not led by the armes) but with their hands on the brest, bowing downe their heads to kisse the skirt of his Garment, pronouncing these words, Ollah towal omrac Seedi, that is, God prolong your dayes Sir. And so long as they talke with a Bashaw, they stand with their hands on their brest Maiden-like, and bow low at their departure, and goe backward. They neuer vncover their heads vnto any man, no not to the King himselfe; yea, it is a word of reproach amongst them, to say, when they mislike a matter, I had as liene thou shewedst me thy bare head.

They call one another diuersly, and not alwayes by their names, but sometimes by their fathers Calling, Trade, or Degree: as Eben Sultan, that is, The sonne of a King: Eben Terzi, The sonne of a Taylor. And sometimes by their fathers qualities, as Eben Sacran, that is, The sonne of a Drunkard. And sometimes by their Marks, as Colac cis, that is, A man without eares: Comfi Sepher, that is, Sepher with the thin beard. And sometimes by their Stature, as Tow-ill, that is, A tall man: Sgire rugiall, that is, A little man. And sometimes by their Offices, as I-asgee, that is, A Secretarie: Niba, that is, A Clerke, &c. And sometimes by their humours, as Chiplac, that is, A naked man: or, One who was of a humour to weare no cloathes but breeches. But their 20 common word of curtesie either to strangers, or such whose names they know not, or whom they purpose to reuerence, is Chillabee, that is, Gentleman. And there is no man amongst them of any degree, will refuse to answere to any of these names. But if Nature haue marked them either with goggle eyes, bunch backs, lame legs, or any other infirmitie or deformitie, as they are knowne by it, so they are content to bee called by it. But they haue gone on pilgrimage to their holy Citie Mecha, where their Prophet Mahomet was buried, at their returne are called 30 Hogies, that is, Pilgrims, as Hogie Tabar, Hogie Mahamet, &c. which is counted a word of great grace and credit amongst them. And the witnessse of an Hogie, will bee taken before any other.

There are also many Arabians in Aleppo, called vulgarly, Arabs or Bedweens. They haue two Kings at this day, viz. Dandan and Aberisha; the one their lawfull King, the other an Vsurper; and some follow the one, and some the other, and are bitter enemies one to another; yet haue I seldome heard of any great warres betwixt them, for they seldome meet. They neuer come into any walled Townes or Cities, for feare of treason: but liue in Tents, and are here to day, and many hundred miles off within few dayes after. They are a base, beggarly, and roguish people, wandering vp and downe, and liuing by spoile, which they account no sinne, because they are 40 Mahomets countreinmen, and hee allowed them libertie to liue by theft. Yet their Kings doe no great harme, but take Toll or Tribute of the Carauans as they passe by, which if they pay willingly, they passe quietly, and are not robbed, but a little exacted vpon. One of their Kings hath often times pitched his Tents neere vnto the Citie of Aleppo, and many Merchants being desirous to see them and their order, tooke occasion to present him with some small Present or other, which he tooke very kindly, and admitted them to his Table, and gaue them a Tent to lodge in all night: on the morrow for breake-fast one of them made him a minsed Pie, and set it before him hot as it came out of the Ouen: And when he saw it cut vp and opened, and perceiued smoke to come out of it, he shrunk backe, fearing it had bene some engine to destroy him, and that the fire would follow after the smoake. But when hee perceiued no fire followed the 50 smoake, he was content to taste of it, and highly commended it, as the daintiest dish that euer he tasted of in his life.

These Arabian Kings neuer keepe any money in their purses, but spend it as fast as they finde it, and when they want, with their Sword they seeke a new purchase. Some are Souldiers, fighting faithfully on any side that will giue them pay. Some of this roguish Arabian Race follow neither of their Kings, but wander from place to place in Caues and Rocks, and liue by their Sword, not onely robbing, but killing such as they can ouer-come. Others of them (of a better minde) sojourne in Cities of Trade and Traffique, and make themselues seruants to any Nation that will set them on worke, and well reward them. Some of them are Horse-keepers, some Bastages, that is, Porters, and some vnder-Cookes in Kitchens, and are very seruiceable. But for the most part their Lodgings are on some Dunghill or other, or odde corner of the Citie, with 60 some silly Tent ouer their heads. Their wiues weare Rings in their Noses, either of siluer or brasle, fastned to the middle gristle of their Nose, and colour their Lips blue with Indico, and goe alwayes bare-legged and bare-footed, with Plates or Rings of brasle about their ankles, and bracelets of brasle about their hands. They are people which can and doe endure great hardnesse and miserie, both for Diet and Lodging. Their Women are skilfull in mourning and crying by arte,

Art, and therefore they are hired to crie at the Funerals of Turks and Moors oftentimes, tearing their haire, and making all their face blue with Indico. There are here spoken so many severall Languages as there are several Nations here dwelling or sojourning, euery Nation (amongst themselves) speaking their owne language. And here are of most Nations in the World some, who either come with their Merchandise to sell or buy commodities, or sojourne here as strangers, or else haue access and recess to this Citie as Trauellers. But of all Christian languages, the Italian tongue is most vsed, and therewithall a man may trauell furthest. But of all the Orientall Tongues, these foure are most spoken in these parts, Arabicke, Turkish, Armenian, and Persian, or Agimesco. Besides all these Mahometans (which I haue already named) there are many Iewes in Constantinople, Aleppo, Damascus, Babylon, Grand Cairo, and euery great Citie and Place of Merchandise, throughout all the Turkes Dominions, who are knowne by their Hats: for they were accustomed to weare red Hats without brimmes at my first comming: But lately (the head Vizier being their enemy) they are constrained to weare Hats of blue cloth, because red was accounted too stately, and Princelike a colour for them to weare. They are of more vile account in the sight of Turkes then Christians; insomuch that if a Iew would turne Turke, he must first turne Christian before they will admit him to bee a Turke. Yea, it is a word of reproach amongst the Turkes, and a vsuall protestation amongst them, when they are falsely accused of any crime, to cleare themselves they vse to protest in this manner, If this bee true, then God grant I may die a Iew. And the Iewes in like cases vse to say, If this be not a false accusation, then God grant I may die a Christian, praying better for themselves then they beleue, and as all of them must be that shall bee saued. And the poore Christians sojourning and dwelling in these parts, doe hate them very vncharitably and irreligiously: (in that we reade Rom. 11. many Arguments prouing that they shall be conuerted againe) for on Good Friday in many places (especially at Zante) they throw stones at them, insomuch that they dare not come out of their houses all that day, and yet are scarce in safetie in their houses, for they vse to throw stones at their windowes and doores, and on the roofof their houses. On Thursday about noone, the Iewes begin to keepe within doores, and continue there with their doores shut vntill Saturday about noone, for if they come forth before that time they are sure to be stoned, but after noone on Easter Eue if they come abroad, they may passe as quietly as euer they did. And some ignorant Christians refuse to eate of their meat or bread: their reason is, because the Iewes refuse to eate or drinke with Christians to this day, or to eate any meate that Christians kill. But it is not vnusuall amongst Christians of better knowledge, to eate of the Iewes meat, which ordinarily they buy of them: for the Iewes to this day eate not of the hinder part of any beast, but onely of the former parts, and sell the hinder quarters of their Beefe, Mutton, Kids, Goats, &c. to Christians.

They obserue still all their old Ceremonies and Feasts, Sacrifices onely excepted. Yet some of them haue confessed, that their Physicians kill some Christian Patient or other, whom they haue vnder their hands at that time, in stead of a Sacrifice. If a man die without Children, the next Brother taketh his Wife, and raiseth vp seed vnto his Brother: and they still marrie in their owne Kindred. Many of them are rich Merchants: some of them Drogomen, and some Brokers. Most of them are very craftie and deceitfull people. They haue no Beggars amongst them, but many Theeues, and some who steale for necessitie, because they dare not begge. All matters of controversie betwixt themselves, are brought before their Cakam to decide, who is their chiefe Churchman. Most of the Iewes can reade Hebrew, but few of them speake it, except it be in two places in Turkie, and that is at Salonica, formerly called Thessalonica, a Citie in Macedonia, by the Gulfe Thermaicus; and at Safetta in the Holy Land, neere vnto the Sea of Galile: Which two places are as it were Vniuersities, or Schooles of learning amongst them.

Amongst all the sorts of Christians, there is amongst the Maronites an ancient companie of Christians, called vulgarly Nostranes, quali Nazaritans, of the Sect of the Nazarites, more ciuill and harmelesse people then any of the rest. Their Countrey is Mount Lybanus (as I wrote vnto you heretofore) but many of them dwell at Aleppo, whereof some of them are Cassies, that is, Church-men; some of them are Cookes, and seruants vnto English Merchants and others; some Artificers: All of them liue somewhat poorely, but they are more honest and true in their conuersation then any of the rest, especially at their first comming from Mount Lybanus to dwell in Aleppo; and many, during their continuance there, if they bee not corrupted by other wicked Nations there dwelling: in whom I obserued more by experience then I heard of them, or noted in them when I was amongst them at Mount Lybanus. And especially for the manner of their marriage, and how they honour the same.

They buy their wiues of their Fathers (as others there dwelling, doe) but neuer see them vntill they come to be married, nor then neither vntill the marriage be solemnized betwixt them: for there is a partition in the place where they meet to be married, and the Man and his Friends stand on the one side, and the yong Woman and her Friends on the other side, where they may heare, but not see one another, vntill the Cassies bid the yong Man put his hand thorow an hole in the wall, and take his Wife by the hand. And whiles they haue hand in hand, the Mother of the Maid commeth with some sharpe instrument made for the purpose, and all to bepricketh the new new married mans hand, and maketh it bleed. And if hee let her hand goe when hee feeleth his hand smart, they hold it for a signe that hee will not loue her: But if hee hold fast (notwithstanding the smart) and wring her hard by the hand vntill shee crie, rather then hee will once shrinke, then he is counted a louing man, and her friends are glad that they haue bestowed her on him. And how they honour Marriage aboue others, I obserued by the naming of their first man-child. For as amongst vs the women, when they are married, lose their Surnames, and are surnamed by the husbands surname, and children likewise; so amongst them the father loseth his name, and is called by the name of his eldest sonne, in this manner. I haue knowne a Nostrane, whose name was Mou-se, that is, Moses, who hauing a man-child, named him Useph, that is, Ioseph, and then was the father no more called Mou-se, Moses, but Abou Useph, that is, The father of Ioseph. Another whose name was Useph, named his eldest sonne Pher-iolla, after which he was no more called Useph, but Abou Pher-iolla, The father of Pher-iolla. Another man called Iubrael, that is, Gabriel, his sonne at the time of Baptisme being named Mou-se, hee alwaies after was called Abou Mou-se, that is, The father of Moses: such an honour doe they account it to be the father of a man-child.

These Nostranes reuerence their Cassises greatly, and kisse their hand wheresoeuer they meet them: yet are most of them altogether vnlearned, hauing onely the knowledge of the Syriac Tongue, wherein their Lyturgie is read. They keepe their Feasts at the same time as wee doe, viz. Christmasse, Easter, and Whitsuntide: and at Christmasse on the Twelfth day in the morning, called Epiphanie, their young men haue a custome (betimes in the morning) to leape naked into the water: I could neuer heare any reason of their so doing, but Uxansa de prease, The custome of their Countrey. And though it bee then very cold, yet they perswade themselves, and others, that then it is hotter then at any other time, and that the water then hath an extraordinary vertue to wash away their sinnes. On Munday in Easter weeke and Whitsun weeke, these Nostranes goe with their Cassises to the graues of the dead, and there kneele downe, and burne incense, and pray at euery graue.

The Chelsalines are Christians, dwelling vpon the borders of Persia, betweene Mesopotamia and Persia, at a place called Chelsa. These bring Silke to Aleppo to sell. They are plaine dealing people: If a man pay them money, and (by ouer-reckoning himselfe) giue them more then their due, though there be but one piece ouer, so soone as they perceiue it, though it bee many dayes after, they will bring it backe againe, and restore it, and thinke they shall neuer returne safely into their Countrey, if they should not make restitution thereof. These people perswade themselves, and report vnto others, that they dwell in that place which was called Eden, whereinto Adam was put to keepe it and dresse it.

The Greekes in Aleppo are very poore, for they are there (for the most part) but Brokers or Eden. Bastages, that is, Porters; and many of their women as light as water, maintayning their husbands, themselves, and their families, by prostituting their bodies to others. And their owne husbands are oftentimes their Pandars or procurers to bring them Customers. But the Greekes that liue at Constantinople, are many of them great Merchants, and very rich; but exceeding proud, and sumptuous in apparell, euen the basest of them, and especially their women, who though they be but Coblers wiues, or poore Artificers wiues, yet they goe in Gownes of Sattin, and Taffata, yea of Cloth of siluer and gold, adorned with Precious stones, and many Gemmes, and Jewels about their neckes and hands. They care not how they pinch their bellies, so that they may haue fine apparell on their backs. And at the time of their Marriage, the women condition with their husbands to find them decent apparell, and conuenient diet, and bring them before their Patriarch of Constantinople to confirme it; which, if it be not performed accordingly, if they complaine to their Patriarch, they are diuorced presently, and hee taketh an other man to her husband, better able to maintayne her: and hee may marrie another woman if hee please.

And both at Constantinople, Aleppo, and other places of Turkey, where there is trafficking, and trading of Merchants, it is no rare matter for Popish Christians of sundry other Countries, to Cut Cabine, (as they call it) that is, to take any woman of that Countrey where they sojourne, (Turkish women onely excepted, for it is death for a Christian to meddle with them) and when they haue bought them, and enrolled them in the Cadies Booke, to vse them as wiues so long as they sojourne in that Countrey, and maintayne them gallantly, to the consuming of their wealth, diminishing of their health, and endangering of their owne soules. And when they depart out of that Countrey, they shake off these their sweet-hearts, and leaue them to shift for themselves and their children. And this they account no sinne, or at leastwise such a sinne as may be washed away, with a little holy water. And these are the vertues which many Christians learne by sojourning long in Heathen Countries.

Euery Bashaw who hath gouernement ouer others in a Citie or Countrey, tyranniseth ouer those which are vnder their regiment; and sometimes strangeth, sometimes beheadeth, and sometimes puts vnto terrible tortures those who offend. Yea, oftentimes without offence; onely because they are rich and haue faire houses, the Bashaw will lay to their charge, such things as he

he himselfe knoweth to be vntrue, and put them to death that hee may seize vpon his goods. There was a Sheriffe or a Green-head in Aleppo, whom they account Mahomets kindred, who offending the Bashaw, and brauing him in termes, as though he durst not punish him, hee caused one of his Officers to goe with him home, and when he came before his owne doore, openly in the street to breake both his legs and armes, and there let him lie, and no man durst find fault, or giue him food; or Physician, or Chirurgion come to him; or wife or seruants take him into house, but there he lay all day, and should so haue continued vntill hee had died for hunger, or Dogs eaten him, had not his friends giuen money to the Bashaw to haue his throat cut, to rid him out of his paine. And this is a common punishment amongst them. And sometimes for small offences, they will lay a man downe on his backe, and hoyle vp his feet, and with a cudgell giue 10 them three hundred or foure hundred blowes on the soles of their feet, whereby many are lamed. And some they set on a sharpe stake naked, which commeth from his fundament vp to his mouth, if he find not fauour to haue his throat cut sooner. And some are ganchèd in this manner; they are drawne vp by a rope fastned about their armes, to the top of a Gazouke or Gibbet full of hookes, and let downwards againe, and on what part soeuer any hooke taketh hold, by that they hang, vntill they die for hunger. And some in like sort are drawne ouer a Gibbet, and they being compassed about the naked waite with a small cord, the cord is drawne by two men to make them draw vp their breath, and still pulled straighter and straighter, vntill they be so narrow in the waite, that they may easily be cut off by the middle at one blow, and then the vpper part is let downe on a hot grid-iron, and there seared vp, to keepe them in sense and feeling of paine so long as is possible, and the neather part is throwne to the Dogs, &c. 20

They, whom they call Franckes or Free-men, liue in greater securitie amongst them then their owne People, by reason that they are gouerned by Consuls, of their owne Nation, and those Consuls also are backed by Ambassadors, for the same Nations which are alwaies Liegers at Constantinople: and when their Consuls abroad are offered wrong, they write vnto the Ambassadors, how, and by whom they are wronged: and then the Ambassadors procureth from the Great Turke, commandements to the Bashaw of Aleppo to redresse their wrongs, and punish such as offend them. Otherwise there were no dwelling for Franckes amongst them, but they should be vsed like slaues by euery slaue. And notwithstanding, their Consuls and Ambassadors to, yet they are oftentimes abused by Turkes, both in 30 words and deeds. In words they reuile them, as the Egyptians did the Israelites, and call them Gours, that is, Infidels; and Cupec, that is, Dog; and Canzier, that is, Hog; and by many other odious and reproachfull names: And though they strike them, yet dare they not strike againe, lest they lose their hand, or be worle vsed. They also oftentimes make Auenias of them, that is, false accusations; and suborne false witnesses to confirme it to be true: and no Christians word will be taken against a Turke, for they account vs Infidels, and call themselues Musselmen, that is, True beleeuers.

This miserie abroad will make vs loue our owne Countrie the better when we come thither. And that is the best lesson which I haue learned in my trauels, Mundi contemptum, that is, The contempt of the world. And Saint Pauls lesson, Phil. 4.11. In whatsoever state I am, there- 40 with to be content. Oh how happie are you in England, if you knew your owne happinesse! But as the prodigall sonne, vntill he was pinched with penurie abroad, neuer considered the plentie of his fathers house: So many in England know not their owne felicitie, because they doe not know the miseries of others. But if they were here in this Heathen Countrie, they would know what it is to liue in a Christian Common-wealth, vnder the gouernment of a godly King, who ruleth by Law and not by lust; where there is plentie and peace, and preaching of the Gospel, and many other godly blessings, which others want. And God long continue his mercies to our noble King Iames, and his whole Realmes, and giue vs grace as farre to excell other Nations in thankfulness as we doe in happinesse. And thus for present I commend you to the most gra- 50 cious protection of the Almighty IEHOVAH, beseeching him, (if it be his will) to send vs a ioyfull meeting, both in this world, and in the world to come. Amen.

Part of another Letter of Master WILLIAM BIDDVLPH, from Ierusalem.

WOrshipfull and my singular good friend, I being now (by the prouidence of God) at Ierusalem, Captus amore tui, raptus honore loci, for the loue I beare to you, and delight I conceiue in this famous place, where our sweet Sauiour Christ vouchsafed once his blessed bodily presence; I could not but remember you with some salutation from hence, hauing such choice 60 of Messengers (by reason of the great concourse of people vnto this place at this present, from sundry places of Christendome) to transport my Letters vnto you: Nothing doubting but that as my former Letters (which I haue heretofore written vnto you both from Aleppo, and other places) concerning my former voyages, and such things as (by diligent obseruation) I noted in my my trauels, were acceptable vnto you; so that this shall be much more acceptable, both in regard of the Place from whence it came, as also of the matter subiect herein contayned; beeing my Voyage from Aleppo in Syria Comagena, to Ierusalem, vndertaken this present yeere 1600. not moued as Pilgrims with any superstitious deuotion to see Reliques, or worship such places as they account holy; but as Trauellers and Merchants, occasioned by Dearth and Sicknes, Pestilence, and Famine in the Citie where we sojourne: which two are such fellow-like companions, that the Gracians distinguish them but by one Letter, calling the Pestilence λινος, and the Famine λινος: By reason whereof all Trafficke was hindered, and those Merchants whom they call Frankes, or Freemen, either remoued to other places, or such as stayed in the Citie, caused their gates to bee shut vp, and came not abroad vntill Sol entred into Leo, which is vsually the twelfth or thirteenth day of July, at which time the Plague still ceaseth in this place, though it bee neuer so great, and all that are then sicke, amend; and such as then come abroad, need not feare any danger. The Turkes, Moors, Arabians, and other Mahometans, neuer remouue for feare of any sicknesse, nor refuse any mans company infected therewith; for they say, euery mans fortune is written in his fore-head, and that they shall not dye before their time; not knowing what it is to tempt God, and to refuse ordinary meanes. But in this interim, from the beginning of this sicknesse (which was in March) vntill the expected and vndoubted end, when the Sunne entred into Leo, we whose names are subscribed (for causes aboue mentioned) tooke our Voyage from Aleppo towards Ierusalem, hauing Letters of commendation, from Clarissimo Imo the Venice Consul, and sundry others of the chiefe Italian Merchants, to their Padres at Ierusalem, for our kind vsage there, with libertie of conscience.

The Plague

Anno Dom. 1600. The ninth of March, after Dinner we set forth, garded with Ianizaries, and accompanied with sundry English, Italian, and French Merchants, who in kindnesse rode with vs seuen or eight miles, to bring vs on the way, and then returned to Aleppo. But most of our English Merchants brought vs to Cane Toman, ten miles from Aleppo, where we made merry with such good cheere as we brought with vs. For there was nothing to be had for money but Goates Milke, whereof we had as much as we would. Here we purposed to haue slept all night, but hauing no other Beds but the hard ground, with Iacobs Pillow (a good hard stone) vnder our heads, vnaccustomed to such Downe Beds, we could not sleepe, but spent the time in honest mirth vntill it was past mid-night, and then our friends tooke their leaue of vs, and returned towards Aleppo, and we proceeded in our iourney towards Ierusalem. The night beeing darke, and the way dangerous and theeuish, our Ianizarie, Byram Bashaw, willed vs euery one to take a match lighted in our hands, and to whirle it about, that the fire might be seene the further, to terrifie the Theeues, lest they should surprize vs on the sudden. And when wee came to suspicious places (as Caues, Rockes, Barnes, or odde Cottages in the way) our Ianizarie vsed to ride before; and as Fowlers beate vpon Bushes for Birds, so hee (with his Launce) would strike and beate vpon such places, lest wild Arabs (which lye lurking in such places) should steale vpon vs on the sudden. When the day appeared, our way was pleasant and comfortable vnto vs, vntill we came to a Village called Saracoepe, whither we came about noone, the tenth of March. And because our Seisenars or Sumptor Horses (which carryed prouision for Man and Horse, as the custome of the Countrey is) were tyred, and we our selues also (for want of sleepe the night past) wearied and hungry, wee were constrained to lodge there all night on the hard ground by our Horse heeles, in an old Cane distant from Cane Toman eight and twentie miles.

Saracoepe.

The eleuenth of March, betimes in the morning wee departed from Saracoepe, and came betimes in the after-noon to a fine Village called Marrab, where there is a very faire new Cane builded by Amrath (commonly called Morat) Chillabee, sometimes Defterdare, that is, Treasurer of Aleppo, and afterwards of Damascus, who for the refuge of Trauellers, and their protection against Theeues, built a stately strong Cane like vnto Leaden Hall in London, or rather the Exchange in London, where there are faire vpper Roomes for great men in their Trauels, and the neather Roomes are for ordinary Trauellers and their Horses, but in hot weather the best make choise to sleepe on the ground in low Roomes, rather then in their Chambers. The Founder hereof also ordained, that all Trauellers that way should haue their entertaynement there of his cost. Hee alloweth them Bread, Pillaw, and Mutton, which our Ianizaries accepted off; but we scorning reliefe from the Turkes without money, sent vnto the Village, where (besides our owne prouision which wee brought with vs) wee had also other good things for money. Marrab is distant from Saracoepe, foure and twentie miles.

The twelfth of March was a very raynie day, yet we trauelled all the forenoone, vntill wee came to a Village, called Lacmine, which a farre off made shew of a very faire Village; but when we came thither, wee found it so ruinous, that there was not one house able to throude vs from the extremitie of the showre: the Inhabitants thereof hauing forsaken it, and fled into the Mountaynes to dwell, for feare of the Ianizaries of Damascus, who traueilling that way vsed to take from them, not onely victuals for themselves, & Prouender for their Horses without mony, but whatsoeuer things else they found in their houses. Onely there was a little Church or Chapel in good preparation, wherinto (for a little mony) we obtayned leaue to enter, our selues with our horses & carriage, & there we brought out our victuals, & refreshed our selues, and baited our horses, horses, and rested vntill it left rayning. After the showre, while our Horses were preparing, we walked into the fields neere vnto the Church, & saw many poore people gathering Mallows and three leaved grasse, and asked them what they did with it: and they answered, that it was all their food; and that they boyled it, and did eate it: then wee tooke pitie on them, and gaue them bread, which they receiued very ioyfully, and blessed God that there was bread in the World, and said, they had not seene any bread the space of many monethes. The showre ceasing, wee rode from this Chappell and Village of Lacke money (I should haue said Lacmin, but might say, lacke men and money too) and rode forward vntill wee came vnto a Village or Towne called Tyaba, where (because it was neere night) we desired to lodge, but could not bee admitted into any house for any money, whereupon our chiefe Ianizarie, Byram Bashaw went into an house, 10 and offered to pull man, woman, and child out of the house, that wee might bring in our Horses, and lodge there our selues. But when we saw what pittifull lamentation they made, we intreated our Ianizarie either to perswade them for money, or to let them alone. And vnderstanding that there was a faire Citie in our way, ten miles off, wee Hue, with our Ianizarie, being well horsed, rode thither, and left our carriage with the rest of our company at Tyaba, to come to vs betimes in the morning.

Tyaba.Aman.Hemse.Iobs Citie.Hus.

This Citie is now commonly called Aman, but of olde it was called Hamath, 2. Kings 17. Here we lodged in a faire Cane, but on the cold ground, and vpon the hard stones, and thought our selues well prouided for, that wee had an house ouer our heads to keepe vs dry. Hamath is from Marrab, about fise and thirtie miles. On the fourteenth of March wee trauelled from 20 Hamath, a pleasant way, & a short dayes iourney, to a fine Towne called vulgarly Hemse, but formerly Hus, distant from Hamath, but twentie miles. This is said to haue beene the City where Iob dwelt, and is to this day called by the Christians inhabiting in those borders, Iobs Citie. And there is a fruitfull Valley neere vnto it, called the Valley of Hus, and a Castle not farre off, in the way to Tripoly, called Hus Castle to this day. But I make some doubt whether Iob were euer at place, for Iob is said to haue dwelt amongst the Edomites, or wicked Idumeans: and Idumaea bordered vpon Arabia Felix, and not neere Syria, where this Citie called Hus standeth.

On the fifteenth day of March, we went from Hus towards Damascus, which is foure dayes iourney off, and all the way (vntill we came within ten miles of Damascus) is a Defart, vn-inhabited, and a Theeuish way; onely there are erected in the way certayne Canes to lodge in. 30 But if they bring not prouision with them both for man and horse, and some Quilt or Pillow to sleepe on, the hard stones must be their Bed, and the Aire their Supper: for some of their Canes are nothing but stone wals to keepe out Theeues. In Citiees they haue very stately Canes, but not for Trauellers, but for themselves to dwell in; for every rich man calleth his house a Cane. But the Canes that stand in high wayes, are in Charitie erected by great men, for the protection of Trauellers; but most of them are very badly kept, and are worse than Stables. Our first dayes iourney from Hus was a very vncomfortable and dangerous Defart: wee saw no House all the way vntil we came vnto a Village called Hassia, where we lodged in an old Castle distant from Hus two and twentie miles.

The sixteenth of March, from Hassia, we rode to an ancient Christian Towne called Char- 40 rah, where our prouision being spent, we made supply thereof, and bought Bread and Wine of the Christians there dwelling. It is inhabited by Greekes and Turkes, but governed by Turkes only. There is but one Church in the Towne, which is dedicated to Saint Nicholas, by the Christians who first builded it. But both Christians and Turkes pray therein: the Christians on the one side or Ile of the Church, and the Turkes on the other. But the Christians are ouer-ruled by the Turkes, and constrained to find them Oyle to their Lampes in the Church. For the Turkes not only burne Lampes in their Chutches every night, but during the whole time of their Lent they beset the battlements of their Steeples round about with Lampes. But when their Lent is ended, they burne Lampes in their Steeples onely once a week, and that is on Thursday at night, which is the Eue before their Sabbath. After wee had refreshed our selues heere, halfe the day 50 being not yet spent, we roade from hence to a poore Village called Nebecke, or (as they pronounce it) Nebbkeh, where we lodged in an old Cane, distant from Hassia seuen and twentie miles. And vnderstanding at this place, that the way that wee were to passe on the morrow, was full of Arabs, and that two dayes before, many men were found in the way killed by them, we feared to goe any further. Yet meeting with company contrarie to expectation, March the seuteenth we went forwards, and saw no house nor company all the day long besides our selues, vntill we came to a Village called Cotifey, where wee lodged in a very stately new Cane, built by Synan Bashaw; and not altogether finished. This Cane doth farre exceed that at Marrab, (before mentioned) for hereunto is adioyned a faire new Church and a Bazar, that is a Market place where Trauellers may buy many good things. Heere is also meate for Trauellers, and 60 Prouender for their Horses to be had of the Founders cost. And in the middle of this Cane, there is a faire large Fountayne of water, of hewed stones foure square, wherein there is exceeding good water for Trauellers to drinke, and Chambers for their Lodging: but if they will haue any Beds, they must bring them with them, or sleepe on the hard ground, as most men that trauell that way are wont to doe.

The eighteenth of March, from Cotifey, wee had not much more then twentie miles to Damascus. The first ten miles was a Desart, and dangerous way, and we hardly escaped danger; for an Arabian Horseman seeing vs come, stood as a Spie in our way, to view our strength, and marked euery one of vs very narrowly, and what weapons we had; and then rode vp an high Mountayne, as fast as if it had beene plaine ground, to acquaint his companions what a prey hee had found for them. Whereupon our Ianizarie cast aside his vpper garment, being a Gamberlooke, and bad vs all make readie our Weapons, and hee himsele rode before vs with his Launce on his shoulders, expecting their comming vpon vs suddenly: but they hauing espyed (from the top of the Mountayne) fittie Ianizaries of Damascus at the least, with their limmoglans comming after vs, came not, and so by the prouidence of God wee escaped their hands. The other part of our way to Damascus, was a pleasant Plaine of tenne miles in length, hauing many fruitfull Villages, fine Riuers, and pleasant Gardens thereon. At our entrance into this Plaine or Valley, riding downe an Hill, we beheld the prospect of Damascus ten miles off, whither we came about two of the clocke in the afternoone, and tooke vp our Lodging in the middle of the Citie, at a Cane called in Morisco, Cane Nebbe, that is, The Cane of the Prophet; but by the Turkes, Cane Haramin, where we hired three Chambers for our money, and our Seruants bought our meate, and dressed it themselves, as they did also all the rest of the way where wee could get any thing. To this end we tooke a Cooke with vs, and other Seruants from Aleppo, to dresse our meate, and to looke to our Horses. Heere we met with Frenchmen, and other Christians, staying for company to goe to Ierusalem.

Dangerous way.

At Damascus many Iewish Merchants, and Greekes, and others, knew some of vs, and came to salute vs, and present vs with such good things as they had, both Wine, and Bread, and Kiddes, and Fruit, &c. and lent vs very good Beds with sheets and other furniture, which refreshed well our wearied bodies.

The nineteenth and twentieth of March, wee stayed at Damascus to rest our selues, and see the Citie.

Damascus is a most ancient Citie, and as Esay spake of it in his time, The head of Aram is Damascus, Isa. 7. 8. so Damascus is the chiefeest Citie of Syria to this day. The situation thereof is most pleasant, being built on a plaine ground, strongly walled about, and a strong Castle therein, with many fine Riuers running on euery side of it, especially Abanah, and Pharpar, mentioned, 2. Kings 5. which now are diuided into many heads. The Turkes say, that their Prophet Mahomet was once at Damascus, and that when he saw the pleasant situation of it, and beheld the stately prospect of it, excellling all others that euer hee saw before, refused to enter into the Citie, lest the pleasantnesse thereof should rauish him, and moue him there to settle an Earthly Paradise, and hinder his desire of the heauenly Paradise. It hath also many pleasant Orchards, and Gardens round about the Citie, and some wayes for the space of a mile, and more about the Citie there are many Orchards, and great varietie of fruits: some called Adams Apples, and Adams Figs, and fundrie other strange Fruits. Damascus is called by the Turkes, Sham, and they call it, the Garden of Turkie, because there is no place in all the Turkes Dominions, especially in Syria, that yeeldeth such abundance of Fruit. Here we stayed two dayes and three nights to rest our selues, and see the Citie. And hauing a Greeke to our Guide, he shewed vs first a stately Muskia, or Turkish Church erected in the place where the Temple of Rymmon stood, mentioned, 2. Kings 5. And two other memorable matters, mentioned, Acts 9. 25. viz. the place where the Disciples let downe Paul in the night through the wall in a Basket, whereof the Christians there dwelling keepe an exact memoriall; taking vpon them to demonstrate the very place of the wall; which we not beleeuing, they confirmed it with this reason, that Damascus was neuer ouercome; and that there haue beene Christians dwelling there euer since the time of Paul, and therefore might keepe a memoriall of the very place: But to let the place passe, the thing it selfe we know to be true. He shewed vs also the house of Ananias, which is vnder the ground, whereinto we were led, downe a paire of staires from the street, as it were into a Celler; and the doore being vnlocked, we entred with Candel into the place, where we saw two darke Chambers, where a man cannot see to reade in the day time without Candel; here they say, he liued in secret for feare of the Iewes. Many Christians comming thither to see that place, with a coale write their names on the wall, and there are so many names there already, that there is scarce roome for any other to set his name. Some of them report Damascus to bee built in the place where Kain killed his Brother Abel. And some say it is neere it, and offered to bring vs to the place; but we refused.

They take vpon them also at Damascus, to demonstrate the place where Saint George was buried, so they doe likewise at Aleppo, but I thinke the one to bee as true as the other. There is a fine Towne neere vnto Damascus, about two or three miles distant on the side of an hill, called Salbia, from whence a man may behold the prospect of the Citie of Damascus most pleasantly, with the Gardens and pleasant places about it.

At Damascus we met many thousand Turkes, going on Pilgrimage towards Mecha in Arabia, to visit Mahomet's Sepulchre, as they vsually doe euery yeere about their Byram time; for they they hold, that whoſoeuer once in his life time ſhall not goe on Pilgrimage to Meeha, to ſee the Sepulchre of their Prophet, ſhall neuer enter into Paradife. And therefore ſome of them goe thither often in their life time, partly for deuotion, and partly to buy Merchandiſe. For there are brought thither at that time of the yeere, great ſtore of Commodities from India, Persia, and other places; and none may buy or ſell there but Mahometans. And it is forbidden to all Chriſtians vpon paine of death, to come neere Meeha within ſiue miles: partly, leſt they ſhould marre their Markets; but chiefly, leſt they ſhould ſee their folly or rather madneſſe in worſhipping an Iron Sepulchre; after the ſight whereof, many of their old men (which thinke neuer to come thither againe) uſe to pull out both their eyes, after they haue ſeene ſo holy a ſight. And whoſoeuer (ſay they) dyeth in his Pilgrimage thither, or returning from thence, is ſure to goe 10 to Heauen preſently. And they that haue bene there but once, are alwaies after called Hogies, that is, Pilgrims: and are called by that name in this manner. If his name before were Mahomet, he is at his returne called Hogie Mahomet. If before Muſtapha, hee is alwaies after called Hogie Muſtapha, &c. And they that haue bene often at Meeha and returne againe, are called Great Hogies. And euery yeere when the Carauan of Pilgrims returne from Meeha, hee that hath bene there oftneſt, is called, The great Hogie: and is greatly honored of them all, for hee rideth before them all in more ſtately apparell then they, with Flowers and Garlands about his Horſe, and when they come neere any great Citie, the chiefeſt men in the Citie ride forth to meet him, and bring him into the Citie with great ſolemnitie. They falſly affirme, that this their Temple at Meeha in Arabia, was built by Abraham, and they prepare themſelues with 20 greater care to goe to worſhip there, then many Chriſtians doe when they come to the Lords Supper, for they diſburden their hearts of all hatred and malice, and reconcile themſelues one to another, &c. Otherwiſe they hold that all their labour is loſt, and that they ſhall bee neuer awhit the better for their Pilgrimage. But if they forgiue one another, and repent them for their former ſinnes, they thinke there to obtaine full remiſſion of all their ſinnes, and that at their returne they are pure and without ſpot.

March twentie one, we departed from the Citie of Damaſcus, and about ſiue or ſix miles from the Citie, paſſed by a Village called Daria; neere vnto which, we ſaw a great multitude of men, women, and children on their knees, in the high way: and by that time they had ended their deuotion, we drew ſo neere as to ſalute them; and aſking what they were, it was told vs, that 30 they were all Chriſtians of ſundry Nations, viz. Armenians, Greekes, Chelſalines, Noſtranes, and ſundry others, who went to Ieruſalem, to viſit and worſhip the holy places there. We aſked further, what they meant to fall on their knees in that place: they answered vs, that it was the place where * Paul was conuerted, and that it was their cuſtome when they trauelled that way, to fall on their knees, and pray vnto God to conuert them. They were in number at the leaſt foure or ſiue hundred people, there was a Greeke Patriarke, and an Armenian Biſhop in their companie. Many of them knew vs, (hauing ſeene vs in Aleppo) and ſaluted vs by our names. Wee rode a while in companie together, and lodged all together that night at a Cane, called Saffa, diſtant from Damaſcus ſix and twentie miles.

March twentie two, we rode before the reſt of the companie. Our way that we trauelled all 40 this day, was exceeding bad, rockie, wateriſh, and barren, called Arabia Petrea, where our Horſes oftentimes ſtucke faſt in the puddles and myrie places, and ſometimes ready to breake their owne legs, and their Riders necks, among Rocks and Stones; it was neither pleaſant going on foot, nor riding this way, for there was no path nor even ground, but huge ſtones and Rocks ſo neere together, that our Horſes could goe but a foot-paſſe, and oftentimes met with ſuch Marſhes and Quagmires, that wee were conſtrained to goe farre about before wee could find better waies to paſſe ouer. It is alſo exceeding cold in this place alwaies (in reſpect of other places in that Countrey) for there are neither Trees nor Houſes, nor high Hills to keep away the violence and force of the Windes. The Carauans that trauell vſually that way betwixt Damaſcus and Egypt, ſay, that this dayes Iourney troubleth them more then all the reſt, and that they neuer paſſe by 50 that way, but they leaue two or three of their Camels behind them, ſome miſfortune or other befalling vnto them. Wee ſaw alſo in ſundry places this way, the carkaſſes of many dead Camels, which haue miſcarried amongſt the Rocks. It is alſo a very theeuish way, full of wilde Arabs: yet (by the providence of God) we came ſafely that day to Conetra, where we lodged in a good Cane, diſtant from Saffa eight and twentie miles.

In a Bazar (like vnto a Cloiſter) adioyning to the Cane, wee tooke pleaſure to walke vp and downe ſome few turnes, which the Turkes beholding, wondred at vs: (for it is not their cuſtome in thoſe hot Countries, to walke vp and downe as wee doe in cold Countries, but to ſit ſtill on the ground like brute Beaſts) and one of them came vnto vs, and aſked vs what wee meant to walke vp and downe in ſuch ſort, and whether wee were out of our way, or out of 60 our wits. If your way (ſaid hee) lyeth toward the vpper end of the Cloiſter, why come you downewards? And if at the nether end, why goe you backe againe? It ſeemed no leſſe ſtrange vnto them, to ſee a Chriſtian with a cut Doublet: and they called him foole, and aſked him what he meant to make holes in his Coate: for they neither cut nor pinke any of their Garments, but but wearing them all plaine, sparing for no cost, to guard them with lace of siluer and gold, if they be able. And such as weare long haire on their heads, the Turkes call Slouens, and account them sauage Beasts; for they themselues weare no haire on their heads at all, but shau them euery weeke once, and keepe them warme with a Turbant of white Shash, made of cotton Wooll, which they neuer vncover in their salutations to any man, but bow their heads, with their hands on their breasts. But if a man haue a faire long beard, they reuerence him, and say hee is a wise man, and an honorable personage. But if they haue no beards at all, they call them (if they be yong) Bardasses, that is, Sodomiticall Boyes. But if they be men growne, and haue no beards, they call them fooles, and men of no credit; and some of them refuse to buy or sell with such, and say, they haue no wit, and that they will not beleue them, &c.

Long beards.

The three and twentieth of March, we had a more pleasant way; for the first ten miles wee rode thorow the fields, and a very pleasant Parke. But when we came out of this Parke or Forest, we were somewhat troubled, partly by reason of the bad way, and partly by bad people in the way. The people did more trouble vs then the way; for there sate amongst the Rocks, in our way, many Turkes and Arabs, with Maces of Iron, and other weapons, who stayed vs, and demanded Capbar or toll money; we were glad to giue them content, that we might passe safely by them. But the Carauan of Christians, who came after vs, though they were many hundreds, yet some of them being not able, some not willing to pay so much money as they demanded, were shrewdly beaten with their Iron Maces. There was a Iesuit in their company, who escaped not without stripes, whereat (as I haue heard) he reioyced, and counted it meritorious, in that he suffered such misery in so holy a voyage. And in my hearing at Ierusalem, one of his companions told him, that he merited much to sustaine such trauell and labour, and be at so great cost and charges, and suffer so many stripes for Christs sake: but I know, had it not beene more for loue of his purse then for loue of Christ, he might haue escaped without stripes, yea, with these kind speeches, Marhabbab Ianum, that is, Welcome my friend or sweet-heart. At another place in my Trauels, I heard a Frier bragging of his good workes, and saying, that hee had done so many good workes, that if he should kill three men, his good workes would make satisfaction, and merit remission for them all. Here I may fitly take occasion to teach those that purpose to trauell into Turkey, how to behaue themselues. If they bee set vpon by Theeues, they may defend themselues in their trauels, if they be strong enough; but if they be polling officers (as these were) they must not bee contradicted. But neither in their Cities, nor in their trauels may they strike againe, though they be abused and beaten by any man (except they bee Theeues and Robbers) for if they doe, they shall either bee put to death, or haue their hand cut off. Neither if a man receiue a box on the eare at any of their hands, must he giue one bad word, or looke frowningly vpon him that smote him: for then hee will strike him againe, and say, What, Goure? Dost thou curse me, and wish that the Deuil had me? but hee must kisse his beard, or the skirt of his Garment, and smile vpon him, and then he will let him passe.

An admonition for Trauellers.

Base thraldome.

At the foot of this Mountayne there is an old Cane, where vsually Trauellers lodge: but it being not yet noone, we resolu'd to trauell eightene miles further, to the Sea of Galile. At the foot of this stony Hill, hard by this Cane, there runneth a pleasant Riuer, which diuideth Syria from Galile. And ouer this Riuer there is a faire Bridge, the one end whereof is out of the Holy Land, the other in it. This Riuer is called Jordan, the head whereof commeth from Mount Lybanus, and maketh three Seas. The first, is the waters of Maron, which we left on our right hand, about ten miles off. The other, on the left hand, which lay in our way as wee should trauell. The second, is the Sea of Galile or Tiberias, or Lake of Genezareth. The third, is the Sea of Sodome, called Mare mortuum, where the Riuer Jordan endeth. The Bridge that crosseth this Riuer Jordan at the entrance into the Holy Land, is called Iacobs Bridge; for two causes. First, it is said, that there Iacob met his brother Esau. Secondly, that there Iacob wrestled with an Angell.

Iacobs Bridge.

The first part of Canadan called Galile, beginneth at this Bridge, and to this day it is a very pleasant and fruitfull Countrey. After wee were entred into Galile, about two miles from the Bridge, our Ianifar asked vs whither wee would goe vp to a Mountayne, and so to Saphetta neere vnto Mount Carmel, which is a place of leaning for Iewes; or keepe the lower way, and goe by the Sea of Galile, which is the pleasanter way: and thereof we made choise; and tooke Saphetta in our way afterwards.

About seuen miles from Iacobs Bridge, our Guide brought vs to a Well, adorned with marble Pillars, and couered with stone, which hee said to haue beene the Pit whereinto Ioseph was put, when his Brethren sold him to the Ishmalites. But it seemed to vs incredible: first, because that was a drie Pit, and this is full of sweet water. Againe, Iacob dwelt at Hebron twelue miles beyond Ierusalem, and his Sonnes kept Sheepe in Shechem. And that drie Pit whereinto they put Ioseph was at Dothan (which we saw afterwards) and this Pit which they shewed vs with marble Pillars, was in Galile; not neere Dothan nor Shechem where Iosephs Brethren kept their Fathers Sheepe. But by others of better iudgement, we vnderstood that this also was called Iosephs Pit, or Well, because it was built by one Ioseph, not Ioseph the sonne of Iacob, but some other. But the ignorant people which trauell that way, are apt to beleue any thing that is told them. About ten miles from this Well, we came to a Cane, called by the *Moore*s Minium, but by the Turkes Missia, hard by the Sea of Galile, where we lodged all night, hauing trauelled that day by computation fixe and thirtie miles.

Sea of Galile.

The foure and twentieth of March we rode along by the Sea of Galile, which Ioh. 6. 1. is called by two names, viz. the Sea of Galile or Tiberias. Galile, because it is in Galile: and Tiberias, because the Citie Tiberias was built by it, and Bethsaida an other ancient Citie; of both which we saw some ruinous walls. And it is said in that Chapter (Ioh. 6. 1.) that Iesus went ouer the Sea of Galile: and in an other place, that he went beyond the Lake. And, Luke 9. 10. it is said, that he went into a solitarie place, neere vnto a Citie, called Bethsaida, which place of Iohn, I learned to vnderstand better by seeing it, then euer I could before by reading of it. For, seeing that Tiberias and Bethsaida were both Cities on the same side of the Sea, and Christ went from Tiberias to, or neere vnto Bethsaida; I gather thereby, that our Sauour Christ went not ouer the length or breadth of that Sea; but ouer some Arme, Bosome, or Reach thereof, viz. so farre as Tiberias was distant from Bethsaida; which is also confirmed in that it is said elsewhere, A great multitude followed him on foot thither; which they could not haue done, if hee had gone quite ouer the Sea, to the other side among the Gergesens, which is out of the Holy Land. And therefore this Sea of Galile, is also called the Lake of Genesareth, because the Countrey of the Gergesens is on the other side the Lake, from whence the Swine ran head-long into the Sea and were choaked therein: and as that place was out of the Holy Land; so the people which then inhabited it, were as farre from holinesse, when they requested our Sauour Christ to depart out of their Coasts. And such like holy people inhabit there still, viz. wild Arabs and Turks, &c. Wee saw also (neere vnto this Sea) the place where that Towne (mentioned, Ioh. 2. 1.) called Cana of Galile stood, where our Sauour Christ at a marriage turned Water into Wine; in place whereof there standeth now a poore Village, inhabited by Turks. This Sea of Galile is (by computation) in length eight leagues, and in breadth fve leagues, and euery league is three miles, and then it encloseth it selfe into a narrower compasse, carrying but the breadth of an ordinarie Riuer vntill it come to Sodome, where it endeth, which is called Mare Mortuum, that is, The dead Sea.

Tiberias and Bethsaida.

Genesareth.

Cana.

After we had rode about seuen miles by the Sea of Galile, we left it on our left hand, and ascended vp a Mountayne on the right hand. This Mountayne was not very steeple, but exceeding pleasant and fertile, for (being the Spring-time) it was so beset with such varietie of flowers among the greene grasse, that they seemed to fleere in our faces, and to laugh and sing (as the Psalmist speaketh) as wee went, Psal. 65. 13. This is said to bee that Mountayne, mentioned Ioh. 6. 9. where our Sauour Christ wrought a miracle, in feeding fve thousand men with fve Barley loaves, and two Fishes.

Saphetta a Iewish Vniuersitie.

When we came to the top of the Mountayne, we saw Saphetta on the right hand, a Vniuersitie of the Iewes, where they speake Hebrew, and haue their Synagogues there. The Citie Saphetta is situated on a very high Hill with three tops, and so the Citie hath three parts; one part is inhabited by Iewes, the other two by Turks. We asked some Iewes, whom we knew formerly to haue beene Merchants of Aleppo, what they meant to leaue their Trade and to liue there: They answered, they were now old and came thither to die, that they might be neerer to Heauen. The Iewes haue here more libertie then in any part of the Holy Land. They dare not come to Ierusalem, for feare lest the Christians there dwelling, stone them. Whiles we were at Saphetta, many Turkes departed from thence towards Mecha in Arabia. And the same morning they went, we saw many women playing with Timbrels, as they went along the street, and made a yelling or shrieking noise as though they cryed. We asked what they meant in so doing: It was answered vs, that they mourned for the departure of their Husbands, who were gone that morning on Pilgrimage to Mecha, and they feared that they should neuer see them againe, because it was a long way and dangerous, and many died there euery yeere.

Mourning with Timbrels.

All the way which we trauelled this day, was very pleasant; and all the Ground both Hills and Dales very fruitfull, according as it is described by Moses, Deut. 8. 7, 8. and Deut. 11. 10, 11. And we came that day, about two of the clocke in the afternoone to a Village, called in the Arabick tongue I-nel Tyger, that is (by interpretation) The Merchants Eye, wherein there are two very faire Castles for Trauellers to lodge in from danger of wild Arabs, which abound in those parts: we tooke vp our lodging in the neereft Castle, which is the faireft.

Tabor.

Mount Tabor.

After we had refreshed our selues, and slept a while: being hard by Mount Tabor, wee desired to ascend to the top of it, and tooke Ally (one of our Ianifaries) and rode towards the Mountaine. But vnderstanding that it was very dangerous, by reason of wild Arabs, which lodged in Caues, and Rocks, and Bushes, about the Mountaine, wee hired some of the principall Arabs to goe with vs, and guard vs from the rest. And as wee went, wee beheld the prospect of the Mountaine to be very pleasant, somewhat steeple, but not very high (in respect of some other Mountaines thereabout) nor very large, but a comely round Mountaine, beset with Trees and thicke Bushes, which at that time of the yeere flourished greene: wee rode so farre as wee could for steepnesse, and then left some of our Seruants at the foot of the Mountaine to keepe our Horses,

Horses, and tooke vpon vs to clamber vp on foot, which wee should neuer haue beene able to haue done, had there not beene very high Grasse, Sprigs, and Bushes to hold by. One of our Arabs went vp before vs, as fast as if it had beene euen ground, but we came very slowly after, which he perceiuing, would looke backe, and often vse these words to cheere vs, Gel, gel, gel, that is, Come, come, come; and sometimes these, Ish balac Seeadi, How doe you Masters. Wee were almost all out of breath, and one of our companie cried, For the lone of God let vs returne, for I can goe no further; Oh, I shall die, I shall die. Whereupon, one of vs being neerer the top then he himselfe supposed (to cheere the rest) said, Come cheerefully, I am on the top; which somewhat heartned the rest: otherwise they had all gone downe againe. Being on the top, we

- 10 rested a while to take breath; and then we walked vp and downe the top of the Mount, and saw onely one house, or rather low Cottage vninhabited, hauing onely two darke roomes in it, meete for Foxes or Iaccals to lodge in, and saw no signe of any other Tauerne or Tabernacle. Onely we vnderstood, that (many yeeres since) there was a Monasterie there inhabited by Popish Friers, but being molested by the Arabs, tooke away the holinesse with them, and left the Mountaine behind them; yet still they call this Mount Tabor, in Italian, Monte Santo, that is, the Holy Mountaine: as if there were some inherent holinesse in the Mountaine. And two dayes after we had beene there, came a Iesuit and two Friers with a yong Gentleman of Paris in France, who was a Protestant, and some other companie with them, who had a desire to ascend to the top of this holy Mountaine, and went all together vntill they were wearie, which
- 20 was at the foot of the Mountaine, and in the heate of the day: wherefore the French Gentleman said, he would stay for them there vntill they returned, but was himselfe already wearie, and would goe no higher; the Iesuit and Friers reproued him, and called him foole, and told him he did not know what hee might merit by going to the top of that holy Mountaine. Merit (said the Gentleman) what may I merit? Thou maiest merit (said they) fiftie yeeres pardon. The Gentleman, to breake a iest with them, asked them whether hee might merit fiftie yeeres pardon for the time past, or for the time to come: It (said he) for the time past, I am not so old (for he was but twentie two yeeres of age) if for the time to come, he did not thinke hee should liue so long. They answered him, if he did not liue so long, he might giue the yeeres which remained, to his friends. Yet could they not perswade him to goe vp any higher. When we had seene
- 30 enough this Mount, returned againe to the Castle, with good stomacks to our Supper, and wearied bodies, desiring rest. Tabor is distant from Galile not much aboute twentie miles.

Merit-mongers.

- The five and twentieth of March, being the feast of the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, and (according to the computation of our Church of England) the first day of the yeere 1601. we trauelled ouer very pleasant fields all the way, the fields of Basan, not farre from the Mount Basan, where there was exceeding good Pasture, and fat Cattell: onely wee wanted good water to drinke, and our Wine was spent, and the day exceeding hot. Wee saw in our way some
- remnants of that old Tower or Fortresse, mentioned 2. Kings 5. 24. where Gehazi the Seruant of Elisha, ouer-tooke Naaman, and tooke of him two Talents of siluer, and two change of Garments. We saw also many other places worthy obseruation, but (for want of a good Guide) we
- 40 knew not the names thereof, for the Turkes inhabiting those Countries, haue giuen new names to most places. This was the pleasantest daies iourney we had in our whole trauell. I neuer saw more fertill ground and pleasant fields, and so much together, all the whole day, from Mount Tabor, to a Village called vulgarly Ienine, but of old En-gannim, whereof wee reade, Iosh. 15. 34. Neere vnto this Village is the place where Isabel beheaded Sisera, mentioned Iudg. 4. 21. En-gannim is distant from Mount Tabor twentie two miles. It is a very pleasant place, hauing fine Gardens, and Orchards, and Waters about it. We stayed here all the day (the six and twentieth of March) because (the Turkes Romadan, which is their Lent, being ended) on this day beganne their Feast called Byram; and our Ianisarie was loth to trauell on that day, being their Feast day, and so much the rather, because his name also was Byram.

- 50 The seuen and twentieth of March, riding from En-gannim, wee were endangered twice: First, by certaine Theeues dwelling neere vnto En-gannim, who made vs pay Caphar, or pole money twice, once at En-gannim. And when we departed from thence, they pursued vs with Bowes and Arrowes, and other weapons: we withstood them long in parley; at length euery man prepared his instruments of death ready for battell. Our Ianisaries Kinsman, Fatolla, had his Musket ready, and being about to giue fire, was stayed by our Ianisarie, who saw not onely these Arabs present very desperate, with their Bowes and Arrowes ready drawne, but messengers also sent to raise vp all the whole rabblement thereabout vpon vs; hee told vs, wee were best giue them content, or else we were all but dead men: wherefore, to auoide further danger, we gaue them their owne desire, vpon condition, they would pursue vs no farther nor suffer any
- 6 of their companie to molest vs: the chiefeft of them answered, Stopherlo, Stopherlo, that is, God forbid, God forbid, we should doe you any harme, if you pay vs what we demand; which we did with all speede, and rode away from them, being glad we were rid of them.

and Horse from the Carauan which followed after; and a woman also riding on an Asse with their carriage) and (as our Guide told vs) he neuer trauelled that way but he saw some men killed: and therefore bade vs all charge our Peece, and shoot off when he bade vs, though we saw no bodie, lest the wilde Arabs should set vpon vs on the sodaine, lying in ambush, which wee also did in a place most dangerous, to daunt the enemies before wee saw each other. But before wee came vnto the most dangerous place, there ouertooke vs many Turkes well armed, who dwelt in Ierusalem, and were glad of our companie thither. And shortly after wee had discharged euery man his piece, we saw a great companie of Arabs on an high Mountaine neere vnto our way, yet out of the reach of our shot, who perceiuing vs to bee too strong for them, durst not set vpon vs. And so (by the prouidence of God) wee came that night to an ancient and famous Citie, (situated in a fruitfull valley betwixt two Mountaines) called Sychar, a Citie in Samaria, mentioned, Iohn 4. Neere whereunto wee saw Jacobs Well, where our Sauour Christ asked water of the woman of Samaria. Wee came thither in good time, for wee were exceeding thirstie, and dranke thereof liberally and freely: The water thereof goeth downe very pleasantly, like vnto Milke. From Jacobs Well we went into the Citie, and lodged in a very ancient and stately Cane, but very badly kept. It had beene better for vs to haue slept by Jacobs Well, as others did; for here we slept on the hard stones neere vnto a Chappell in the middle of the Cane, vnder two or three great Fig-trees and Mulberrie-trees, where we were scarce safe from theeues, for we had some things stollen from vs in the night, whiles wee slept vnder the Trees on faire broad stones, whereunto we ascended by a faire stone paire of staires, fixe or seuen steps from the ground. Sychar is distant from En-gannim, seuen and twentie miles.

Beere.

Ierusalem.

The nine and twentieth of March, wee departed from Samaria to Ierusalem, and met many Souldiers in seuerall companies by the way, who knowing our Ianizarie, and other Turkes in our companie, let vs passe by them quietly, and gaue vs the salam aliek, that is, peace be vnto you. The first part of this dayes iourney was somewhat pleasant; but, the neerer we came to Ierusalem, the more barren and tedious our way was. About ten of the Clocke we came to a great Forrest or Wildernesse full of Trees and Mountaines. When wee were on the top of this Mountaine, we saw the maine Sea on our right hand, and small Ships sayling towards Ioppa. About three or foure of the clocke, we came to a ruinous Village called Beere, but of old (as it is reported) Beerseba, which in former times was a great Citie: And it is said to be the place where Ioseph and Mary comming from Ierusalem (the feast being ended) missed the Child Iesus, and sought him sorrowing; and returning to Ierusalem, found him in the Temple amidst the Doctors, hearing them and posing them. Our purpose was to lodge here all night, being all of vs wearie and hungrie, and all our prouision spent. But finding nothing here to be had for money, either for Man or Horse; and vnderstanding that Ierusalem was but ten miles off, wee went on in our way somewhat faintly, fixe or fixe miles, and then beholding the prospect of the Citie, wee were somewhat cheered and reuiued, and solaced our selues with singing of Psalmes, vntill wee came neere vnto the Citie. Many Greekes dwelling in Ierusalem, seeing vs afarre off, came to meet vs, supposing their Patriarch had beene in our companie, who came two or three dayes after vs.

Ioppa gate.

Master Timberley hath published a booke of his Voyage.

We dismounted from our Horses at the West gate of the Citie, called Ioppa gate, or the Castle gate; which is a very strong gate of Iron, with thirteene Peece of Brasse-ordnance planted on the wall about the gate. Wee stayed in the porch of the gate, and might not be admitted into the Citie, vntill wee were searched by an Officer (as the manner is.) In the meane time there came to vs two Italian Friers, viz. Padre Angelo, and Padre Aurelio, and kissed our hands, and bade vs welcome, and told vs, that two other Englismen were at their house, viz. Master Timberley, and Master Borell.

When we were searched without the gate by a Turkish Officer, and deliuered vp our weapons to the Porter to keepe for vs in the gate-house vntill our returne (because no Christian may enter into Ierusalem with weapons) these two Padres led vs to their Monasterie; at the gate whereof wee were searched againe by another Turkish Officer before wee might enter into the house. For the office of the former Searcher at the gate of the Citie was onely to receiue the weapons of all Christians, and deliuer them safe to them againe at their departure. But this Searcher went further and searched all our carriage, which he caused to be opened, to see whether we had any Gun-powder, or any other engines there. For they are very suspicious of all Christians, fearing, lest for deuotion to the place, they should worke treason; therefore they suffer not Christians to enter into the Citie weaponed, lest they make insurrection against them when they are many together, and conquer the Citie, as heretofore they haue done. To this end also is the Citie walled about with strong walls, and fortified with foure strong gates, and a Castle, (but by Sultan Solymán) and euery gate well planted with Ordnance for feare of Christians. And partly for hope haue they enuironed this Citie with such strong walls, that Christians for deuotion to the place, might come and build within the walls, and bee subiect to the Turke. For though their walls be large and strong, yet there is great roome within the walls to build more houses then are there, for there are fields of Corne within the walls of the Citie; and

and the houses stand very thin, scattered, and dispersed, here one, and there two or three together; there is not one faire street in all Ierusalem as it now is.

After they had thus narrowly searched all our carriage, euen to our cases of Bottles, we were admitted into the Monastery; at the entrance wherinto, met vs Master Timberley, and Master Boreel, and then Signior Francisus Mannerba, the Padre Guardian of the Monasterie, and all the rest in order, and bade vs welcome, and led vs into a faire Parlour, and set good cheere before vs, and serued vs themselves. After Supper we deliuered them our Letters which wee had brought from the Venice Consull of Aleppo, and other Italian Merchants there, in our behalfe. Which when they had read, the Guardian said, our custome is, when strangers come to vs, to call them 10 the first night to Masse, and to Confession, and to giue euery man a Candle to hold in his hand at Masse time; and at night to wash their feet and to bring them to bed, and to many other ceremonies, during the whole time of their continuance there. But as for vs, they vnderstood by Letters what we were; and told vs that we were so highly commended by their Patrons and Benefactors, the Venice Consull, and Merchants of Aleppo, that if they should shew vs halfe the fauour which was required at their hands, they should themselves lie without doores, and suffer vs to rule and dominiere at our pleasures. And that therefore they would not vrge vs to any thing against our consciences, but giue free libertie both of persons and consciences, as if wee were in England, or in our owne houses elsewhere; and so much the rather, because they vnderstood our Merchants were rich, and hoped to gaine by vs. In regard whereof, although it were 20 Lent, wherein they eate no flesh, yet offered vs Hens, Egges, Milke: any thing that was there to be had for money, they requested vs to command it. And during the time of our continuance there, he commanded one Padre Aurelio to attend vpon vs, and see that wee wanted nothing; and another of his brethren, one Padre Angelo, to be our guide abroad, and to shew vs all ancient Monuments and places worth seeing, either in the Citie, or out of the Citie.

These kind speeches being vsed, they brought vs to our chambers where wee should lodge all night, and prouided for euery man seuerally a good neat Bed with faire sheets, and all things very wholsome and handsome, where wee slept sweetly, and refreshed our wearied bodies all that night very comfortably.

But although they dealt thus kindly with vs (at the instance of their Benefactors) in giuing 30 vs libertie of conscience, yet they deale not so with others. For some I doe know who haue beene there, and made no conscience to doe as they haue done. Wherefore, I admonish those who haue a desire to trauell to Ierusalem hereafter, to take heed to themselves, that they make not shipwracke of conscience; for if they come not well commended, or well moneyed, or both, there is no being for them, except they partake with them in their idolatrous seruices. True it is, that the Turkes giue libertie of conscience vnto all that come thither; but they giue not entertainment vnto any Christians in their houses. And the Greeke Patriarchs are poore, and not able to protect such as come vnto them for refuge. These Padres, though they bee Papists, yet haue they rich Benefactors, and want nothing, and (for the most part) very kind and curteous to strangers in all things, libertie of conscience onely excepted, wherein they seeke to 40 make others like vnto themselves, and to seduce them from their Faith, and to winne them to the Church of Rome: and offer vnto them who haue money in their purses, to make them Knights of the Sepulcher; but no good English Subiect will accept of that order of Knight-hood; for at the receiuing thereof, they sweare to bee true to the Pope, and to the King of Spaine, and to other things, which no man can doe with a good conscience. And this kindnesse and libertie of conscience, which wee found amongst them, wee imputed not so much to the men, as to our owne money: for it cost vs charo, viz. one hundred Duckets for our entertainment.

After wee had rested one night in Ierusalem, the first day wee walked about the Citie our selues without our guide, onely to view the Citie, wee found it exceeding hot, and hotter then 50 it is vsually at Midsummer in England: It seemed strange vnto mee, how it should once bee so cold, that Peter should creepe to the fire, and now (at the same season) so hot that wee could not indure the heate of the Sunne. But after I had beene there a few dayes, the very place resolved that doubt: for there fall great deawes, and before the Sunne haue dried it vp, it is cold, and in the night season (about that time of the yeere) somewhat cold, as I felt by experience when I slept in the fields all night. And Peter hauing watched with Christ in the night, might well be cold in the morning, before the heat of the Sunne had expelled cold.

But here wee will breake off, hauing with Master Sandys his eyes curiously viewed Ierusalem Holies in the former Chapter.

CHAP. X.

The Iourney of EDWARD BARTON Esquire, her Maiesties Ambassador with the Grand Signior, otherwise called the Great Turke, in Constantinople, SVLTAN

* MAHVMET CHAN. Written by Sir THOMAS GLOVER then Secretarie to the Ambassador, and since employed in that Honourable Function by his Maiestie, to SVLTAN ACHMET. Two Letters are also inserted, written from Agria, by the said Ambassador BARTON.

*If any think it ill that a Christian Ambassador should accompany the Turke in this warre against Christendom: they may please to vnderstand, that his intents were to doe service to the Christians, if occasions were offered for peace: as also he did in deliuerie of the Emperors Seruants here mentioned, &c

First, the Ambassador well mounted, and his two spare Horses, with a Coach with foure Horses; next before him his Chausers, and an Enterpreter, with three Ianizaries: and before the Chausers, and Ianizaries, his men, (beeing twelue in number) in Liueries rode before him, and foure Gentlemen next after him: and foure Coaches with the Christian Captiues (being three and twentie in number) the Family of Signior Crotskij, the Emperour his late Ambassador in Constantinople, which hee redeemed from the Great Turke, and had licence to carrie them along with him, and to send them into their owne Countrey, allowing and giuing him the foure Coaches, with two Horses in each Coach, and a man to tend on euery Coach. Lastly, thirtie fixe Camels for carriage of prouision, and to euery fixe Camels, two men to attend on them, to lade and vnlade as occasion serued (which in Turkish, are called Deuedzilens) of them there were twelue in all wayting on the Camels: More the Chausers man and another Turke, called Mahomet, who was recommended to the Ambassadour to be his Lackey, to runne by his Horse vntill wee came to Agria.

Now on Friday being the second day of Iuly, 1596. the said Ambassador parted his house (which is in the Vines of Pera), and tooke his Iourney, hauing to accompany him that first day, Master John Sanderfon Merchant (who was by him left an Agent or Logotenent vntill his returne) Jonas Aldrich Merchant, and John Field a Physician: who brought him that day vnto a place, called Aquadulce, and there pitched their Tents, remayning there that night, and the next day ensuing. On Sunday morning at Sunne rising, we departed from Aquadulce, and came to Ponte Piccolo, about mid-day, which is some fiftene miles distant from Aquadulce, and there wee pitched our Tents. On Munday, before the breake of the day, parted thence about ten of the clocke in the morning, and arriued at Ponte Grande, which is about twelue miles distant; where hauing pitched our Pauillions the Ambassadour sent his Chaus, and the Droque-men, with the Grand Signior, his Commission to the Cady of the said Towne, for his allowance of prouision, who sent him five Sheepe, two hundred Loaves of Bread, five Meatres of Wine, one loade of Hay, with twentie Kyllowes of Barley.

Or Selimbria.

On Tuesday, before day, we parted Ponte Grande, and by Sun-rising wee came to a small Village, called Combergast, where the Ambassador his people broke their fast, and after an houres stay parted thence, and came to a Towne, called Celebria, about eleuen a clocke, which is some ten miles distant from our last Lodging. There also the Ambassadour sent his Commission to the Cady of the said Towne, who sent him three Sheepe, two hundred Loaves of Bread, ten Meaters of Wine, one loade of Hay, and twentie Kyllowes of Barley, wee pitched our Tents a quarter of a mile distant from the Towne; and an houre within the night, the Moone being vp, parted thence.

Bulgaria.

The twentieth, wee were to passe through a great Wood, betwixt two Mountaynes that day, and in the night to keepe watch. These men are Bulghars, beeing appointed by the Grand Signior, to guard all Trauellers (I meane of the Campe) that come that way, for which seruice the said Bulgharians pay no Tribute to the Turke. Then wee came to a Village, called Sernia, which is at the entrance betweene those two Mountaynes, and no other passage but one that goeth to Wallachia, all the Countrey else within these Mountaynes, beeing as it were enuironed with mightie steepe, woodie hils, as though they were wals of strong Cities; this was the passage that Iulius Caesar passing out of Sernia, lost so many thousand men before he could gaine it; for this passage is as though it were hewen or cut out betwixt these two Mountaynes. At the mouth or rather the entrance on the North-side, it is fortified with a mightie great wall from Mountayne to Mountayne, and a strong Castle in the midst, with a great Gate to passe thorow, there is yet to be seene part of the wals, or rather fragments: the wals adioyning to the Gate are maruellous loose, and shake, readie to fall: some two houres before night, we came to the foot of the Mountayne, and there pitched our Tents a mile from a Towne, called Erebunia; being from Tartarbo sardgi eight and twentie miles, this day and nights trauell was all betwixt these two Mountaynes.

The five and twentieth, we came to the mouth or entrance of a strong passage beeing tenne miles long betwixt two Mountaynes, the way winding in and out, as it were, hewen, or cut out of the Mountaynes, on both sides verie loftie: this place is of a wonderfull strength for resisting of the Enemies: Now little after mid-day, we came to pitch our Tents towards the end of the said passage, by a faire River side.

The fixe and twentieth, passing along the River side, on the high way, wee found two men most miserably put to death, hauing each of them a stake thrust in at his Fundamente, through his bodie, and so out by his necke; the stake being set up right on end: the cause was for killing of a Ianizarie, they being Christians. The Grand Signior passing by, caused them so to suffer.

The eight and twentieth, we came to a Towne, called Neesa, and a little before our coming to the same, we saw two men staked as afore-said, who were Transiluanians, came purposely to spie and view the Campe: also at this Townes end, there were of Christians heads head, and stopt full of Hay hanged on posts by strings, to the number of three hundred which foure moneths before were slaine by Turkes, vnder Mahomet Bassa, at Bosnia: From the entrance of the straight passage to this place are ten miles, and from Sofpa to this place all high Mountaynes, rockie and troublesome to trauell: these Mountaynes part Serua and Sclauonia, this Citie is situated in a verie delectable Valley, hauing towards the West-side a faire Plaine, that stretcheth it selfe towards Albania and Macedonia, here we rested all that day and night.

The third of August, wee came to spread our Tents close by the mayne Campe, halfe a mile distant from Belgrado, which is a maruellous great Plaine adioyning to the Citie, and about the midst of the Campe, the Grand Signior his Pauillion is alwayes placed; and now hard by his Pauillion by force of hands was raised a small Hill, vpon which was growne a Haw-thorne, cut artificially spreading, which made a marvellous good shadow: euery Euening the Great Turke would ascend into it to view his Campe, and to be seene of his people, being a custome amongst the Turkes, his Souldiers in the Wars to see their King, once in foure and twentie houres.

The seuenth, the Ambassador went to the chiefe Vizier, Abraham Bassa, about the Captiues he had in his charge, and inconference with him presently, the said slaues were sent for, and beeing brought before the Bassa, in the presence of the Ambassador and other Viziers, and great personages, their deliuerance being pronounced, to be sent by the Ambassador into their Countrey, it was granted by them all; whereupon the said slaues kissing the Bassa his feet, as the manner of the Turkes is for such a grace; and the Ambassador also giuing them thanks, tooke his leaue and so departed, carrying his Captiues along with him to his Pauillion.

The thirteenth, about Quindi, the Ambassador with his company departed from Belgrado, riding by the South-west end of the Castle, came to the Riuer Lana, neere where it entred into the Danubium, to passe the bridge purposely made for the Grand Signior, his Armie to passe the same, which bridge is artificially builded vpon fortie five great Boats made for that purpose like Lighters, but much broader, deeper and flat bottomed, the length of the same bridge is some one hundred paces, the breadth betwixt the Rayles fortie foot: for space of eight dayes the Armie was going ouer, in such sort; as a man could not passe for the continuall presse of the people.

Next morning, the Grand Signior parted thence, and some two houres after, the Ambassador followed: now the ordinarie riding of the Great Turke, was in this manner (not speaking of the whole Armie, which went before and followed him, but only of those that attended on his owne person) before him rides one thousand of the brauest and best armed Horsemen, euery one with his Lance. Next them some three hundred Chauses; then one hundred Foot-men next before him, with Bowes & Arrowes; then followes his Youths, all for the most part at mans state (called Iehoglans) about some three hundred clothed in Gownes of Brocado, of Gold and Siluer, all of one fashion, and a Cap on their heads, made in manner of a French-hood, of course red cloath; in the midst amongst them, are fortie or fiftie men riding on Camels, Horses and Mules, who play on Drummes, Fifes, and many other sorts of Instruments, continually all the way along: after these follow some fortie Coaches; then his ordinary Seruants, as Stable-men, Kitcheners and such like: this day traouelling till about eleuen of the clock, we came and spread our Tents, as neere the Grand Signiors Pauillion as we could, and close by the Danubium: whence we came, to this place, is about some nine miles.

The next morning, the Grand Signior departed from Slanconie, and about ten of the clocke came to spread his Pauillion vnder the side of an hill, close on the other side of the Danubium, some seuen miles from the Towne aforesaid; all alongst this Hill full of Vineyards, where the Souldiers gathering and spilling Grapes, were complayned of; whereupon, fixe of them beeing taken, were hanged on Trees in the Vineyards, and after, a strict commandement given not to take any thing perforce from any man, vpon paine of death: here the Ambassador was sent for to the Bassa, and readie to depart, the Bassa willed the Ambassador, that the next morning, as the Grand Signior should passe along on his way, hee should bee ready to salute him, for hee said, that he asked for him, and marvelled hee could not see him. Vpon this, taking his leaue, departed; and so went to the Great Hodgia his Tent, and after awhile to his owne Tents. The next morning, perceiuing the Great Turkes departure, the Ambassador with his men about him, all on Horse-backe salute his Highnesse according to their manner, bowing, at seuerall times, and the Grand Signior beholding the Ambassador with his retinue, also did bow himselfe vnto them very kindly, and so past on his way, for that the Grand Signior, vpon the newes aforesaid, was desirous to see the Ambassadour, which was cause that the Bassa willed the Ambassadour to doe as aforesaid.

The five and twentieth, the Grand Signior parted this place (in the morning early) the rather to hasten towards Hatvan, not that hee himselfe in person would goe, but being neere the way to Agria, whereto he went to lay his siedege, might vpon any occasion send more succour; the Ambassador also followed him with his retinue, finding (as before) all plaine Champion grounds, full of Grasse, and Hay: The Grand Signior willing to see his whole Armie, gaue order that they should all troope together that day, that hee might haue full view of them, which was done accordingly, and a sight almost vncredible, ouerspreading a Plaine, further then any man could discerne. The Ambassador, to haue a full view of them, mounted a small Hill, about the midst of that Plaine, somewhat higher then the rest; from whence beholding them with great wonder, round about so farre as could not be discerned, the Plaine was ouer-spread (as aforesaid) with people and carriages. And about Quindi, we came to spread our Pauillions neere vnto a ruined Towne; for that there was no body dwelling in the same, we did not demand the name, being from the place wee came, some twelue miles: All along this way wee saw many reliques of Castles and Townes, which by these warres, afore-time, and now, haue beene, and are destroyed and pulled downe.

The twelfth of September, the Grand Signior remoued neere Agria, within full sight thereof, and there hath laid his siege, commanding a Turret of wood to bee made very high, to the end hee might view the whole Campe, to see all what past at his pleasure. All the way from Belgrado, hetherto newes were bruted, that Maximilian was vnder Vatia, where hee kept long Councell, yet hitherto (though he had full power of the Emperor) makes no show nor signe to meete meete the great Turke, or succour Agria. The same night the Ianisaries built and entred their Trenches, placing good store of Artillarie therein; hauing Abraham Bassa the Visere, and As-san Bassa the Beglerbie of Grecia, to their guard, and began to beate the East part of the Castle; also Giofar Bassa and Mahomet Bassa, the North part, the Bassa of Natolia and Caramania; the West part. The thirteenth, the Hungarians set their Suburbs on fire, which were very well fenced with a high Wall, yet distrustful their forces, fearing that the Turkes once entring the same, should make a Fortresse of offence, fired the same, and fled vnto the Castle: Now the Turkes perceiuing them to be gone vp into the Castle, scaled the out wals of this Towne, and tooke such pillages as the fire had left there: The chieftest of the Inhabitants of this Citie, fled 10 into the Countries thereabouts, before the Grand Signior his approaching to the said siege, and the rest retyred themselves into the Castle, as afore said, with as much goods as they could. The foureteenth, the Turkes entred, and burned and spoyled the rest of the Suburbs, with a great Church, but were soone repelled, and the Church, with the rest, for that time was well defended. The same day Cigalla was appointed out Skire, with a troope of light Horse-men, to see that no succour should come to the Castle.

The twentieth, Turkes giuing fire to a Mine, it proued contrarie to their mindes, the force comming forth, and not into the Castle: After which, the defendants perceiuing it tooke courage, and assaulted the Trenches of the venturers, whom they found vnprovided of defence; slew many, and taking some of them and their Banners, retired into the Castle with their prey, and 20 there set the Banners vpon the wals, to terrifie the Turkes. The two and twentieth at night, the Turkes filled the Castle Ditches with Wood and Hay, but because they were not ready, or deuised to couer the same with earth, as it ought to be; the defendants seeing it, presently with Wild-fire consumed it; so for that time frustrated their desire, yet continuing their batterie, made foure seuerall places of the Castle wals assaultable. The three and twentieth, by night had they provided sufficient wood, and other matter to fill the Ditches; in the meane time, the Beglerbie of Ianik being sent hither to the siege, without order from the Grand Signior or the chieftest Bassa, and word being brought, the Emperour was strong in those parts, if pardon had not beene gotten for him, he had lost his head; yet presently was sent backe againe from whence he came, vpon his owne proper cost and charges, and that was his penaltie for the offence.

30 The foure and twentieth, the Turks giuing fire to a Mine, had made a great breach, and thereupon gaue a generall assault, which indured most fearefully on both sides, for the space of an houre; yet at last the Turkes were beaten backe. After a little rest made, began a new assault, which continued two houres; in the which, the Turkes got the better, gayning the wals and the Artillery on the same, which presently they turned vpon the Castle. The twentieth fve, the Turks gaue an assault vpon the inner part of the Castle, but repulsed with a great slaughter. The twentieth sixe, the Turks attempting to vndermine the Castle, and presently thereupon, to giue a generall assault: but the Christians hauing by some meanes knowledge thereof, to hinder the Turkes they should not giue fire thereunto, and to haue more time themselves to countermine theirs, went and cast great quantitie of vnbeaten corne on that side the wall, so that the Turks could not wel stand 40 to come nigh to dig or bring powder, so for that day the assault was deferred. The eight & twentieth, in the morning, first fired a Mine which cast vp the Castle wall, the breadth of two Carts, and presently vpon the same, gaue a new assault; but because the Ianisaries was not backed, the assault tooke no effect, but about two houres after, refreshing themselves, and gathering more strength, about mid-day began the assault afresh, which indured till night; but because of the great raine that at the instant fell, they preuailed not, though on both sides many slaine, and the Castle put in great ieopardie. On Wednesday the nine and twentieth, and Thursday the thirtieth, still skirmishing for all it rained.

The first of October, as before said, continually skirmishing, it chanced that an English-man a Trumpeter, fled out of the Castle, and being taken by the Turkes, was brought to the Grand
 50 Signior, and being examined, aduised him of the weake estate thereof: according to whose report, in the morning being Saturday the second of October, it was rendred vpon condition they might depart with Bag and Baggage: which was granted. The third, being licenced to depart according to the Grand Signior his promise, vnder the charge of the Beglerbie of Natolia. At their departure forth of the Castle, they were spoyled of their goods carried with them, and most of them slaine by the Spabies, Ianisaries of Hatman, and other Turks, not without suspicion of the Grand Signior his knowledge, because he vsed no seuerer punishment for the breaking of his commandement, and his owne promise. There were in number about one thousand Souldiers, and as many more men, women, and children Inhabitants, which were saued and kept to remaine Subjects there: the chiefe Captaines were kept and promised their libertie. The chiefe was Hounger, 60 Signior Paulo: The Coronell Gulielmo Trozka, Iohannes Iacobus, Comes Atarne Bohemo, Iohannes Kinskye de Tetan; and Count Rugero Italiano.

A Letter written by Master Edward Barton Ambassador, to Master Sanderfon; inscribed Al Molto Mag. Sig. Gio. Sanderfon, &c.

These two letters written by the Ambassador his owne hands, I haue for his sake and theirs inserted, giuen me by Master Sanderfon.

Loving friend, I haue written twice unto you, as well from Bellograd as also Solnok, of what in my voyage hitherto had passed, but my Letters were intercepted and torne, brought unto my hands againe, and being of no great importance, I will no more reply them, but aduise you of the Grand Signior, and our arrivall at Agria, which happened the twelfth of September, and the selfe same night he made his trenches and batteries in six severall places; the Vice-Roy in one place, the Beglerbie of Grecia in another, the Beglerbie of Natolia in the third, the Ianisaries in the fourth, Iesser Bassa Eunuch in the fifth, Mahemed Bassa Gera in the sixth; Cigal Ogli was Captaine over the light Horsemen, to scour the coasts on all sides, that no succour should come, and to learne aduice of the Emperours proceedings and designes.

The thirteenth, the Inhabitants set all their Suburbs on fire, which might be little lesse then Gallata, which though they were well defended with a strong wall, yet the defendants being few in number, and distrusting to their owne strength, left the defence of them, and retired themselves within the Castle. The sixteenth, the Ianisaries offered a generall skirmish, even under the Gate of the Castle, where on both sides many were slaine, but the Hungars keeping themselves close within the wals, and the Ianisaries tyred, soone retired. The seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth, they intended to undermine the Castle, and the twentieth, put fire thereto, but not succeeding to their mindes (though they valiantly attempted to enter the breach) they gave courage to the defendants to make issue to mutuall damage. The foure and twentieth, the assailants having made another breach, valiantly entred the same, but not being seconded with fresh forces, were repelled, yet two houres after, in the same day, taking on them better courage, and more valiantly seconded, gave a new assault, when by chance, a woman in the Castle setting, by chance, fire on a Barrell of Powder, and the Souldiers of the Castle thinking it was a Mine fired in the Castle, for feare thereof retiring themselves, gave the Turkes courage to enter a small but strong Bastion, builded for defence of a weake part of the Castle, which they valiantly even to the last defended; and ever after, with myning and counter-myning, continuall assaults and skirmishes on both parts fighting, to the extreame losse of the defendants. The first of October, an English Trumpetter escaped out and fled to the Vice-Roy, requiring life and libertie, and declaring the weakenesse of the Castle, was brought before the Grand Signior, to whom likewise he made like relation; according to whose reports, the next day being Saturday the second of October, the Castle was rendered, with compact that all the Souldiers should safely retire whither best they list, and the Inhabitants to remaine continuall Inhabitants, and owners of their former possessions; the latter of which promises was observed, but the first was broken, because the Inhabitants of Hatuan, a Castle belonging to the Grand Signior, two dayes iourney thence, together with the Tartars, assaulted the said Souldiers a mile from Agria in their departure, and cut them all in pieces, because Maximillian with the Emperours forces, having a moneth since taken Hatuan, did most cruelly, without compassion, put all the Inhabitants to the sword. Hence the Grand Signior doth within five daies determine to goe towards Buda uncertaine upon what designe. From Solnok I sent my Drogueman to Buda with the Emperours Ambassador his familie, and in Buda I released five other, with all which companie, consisting of seven and twentie, I received Letters from my Drogueman, and the Gentleman in Buda released; that they departed from Pest the thirteenth of December toward the Emperours Court, God send mee a good answer speedily. And I pray you send this aduice for England; Commending me to Iu. Field, and Doctor Sette Cotte, and Master Peter Gallant, with Sign. Ant. Peron, and the French Secretarie: this fift of October, 1596.

Sette Cotte had beene Jew, Christian, Turke, of all, and therefore no Religion: now a rich Turke. Gallant a rich Merchant, Peron a rich Grecian.

Your assured, E. BARTON.

Part of another Letter written likewise by the said Ambassadour from Agria, to Master Sandy the English Consull at Aleppo.

IThinke that at your residence with me, you remember how that the Grand Signior had made me grant of the libertie of all the Emperours Ambassadors his family, which now he hath performed, and I haue sent them by my Drogueman unto the Emperour, even twentie eight persons of which number divers were Gentlemen of account, so that I hope my service therein shall be gracefull to his highnesse, and acceptable to his Maiestie, and of delight to you and the rest my good friends, whom I could not leaue unadvised thereof, as alike of the Manslulling of the Bassa, and successe of Abraham Bassa, late high Treasurer, now Bassa of that place, to whom, as to my very good friends, I will earnestly commend you, and the rest of my Countrymen and friends, &c.

The Polish Ambassadour departed from Agria, having with him three Ianisaries, and two Girles, which the Ianisaries tooke at Agria the same day, the Ambassadour having occasion to goe to the Bassa, at his returne his Chausers carried him through the Citie of Agria, which was burned burned and spoyled to the ground, and lying a mile beyond the Towne, vpon a great Plaine, the poore Christians that were licenced to depart out of the Castle, lay all slaine there scattered. Returning back, we saw vnder the Castle wals of Christians that were slaine at the siege a great number heaped vp together close to the wall, about two fathome high, all naked frying in the Sunne, besides in diuers other places many more. Comming along to our Pauillion, wee saw with certaine Ianifaries five women and children, the one of five yeeres, and the other sucking the mothers brest; those women and children the Ianifaries made purchase of, at rendring vp of the Citie, and the Castle of Agria. The Girle of five yeeres of age, the Ambassadour bought for ten Chekines; Here the Grand Signior stayed till the Castle was againe repaired.

- 10 The tenth, came newes that Christians were within three daies iourney of the Campe, where vpon Gieffer Bassa, and the Beglerbie of Grecia, were sent to view the Christians Campe; who more ventrous then wise, entring the clawes of the Christians, were wholly discomfited, & most of their retinue slaine, and pursued to the Turks campe; for which cause they were both deposed. Yet Affan Bassa was preferred to the Beglerbie of Grecia, which five daies before was taken from him. Now Cigalla was made General together with Affan Bassa, and appointed to go on the Christians: but Agria wals being already repaired, the Grand Signior resolved himselfe to go in person, and departed from Agria on the fourteenth, traueilling all that day, till about Quindie, then came to spread his Tents or Pauillions. Next morning proceeding on his iourney, about ten of the clocke hee came in sight of the Christians, and within halfe an houre after, began to skirmish
- 20 with them, they being intrenched neere to their Campe, by two old Churches or Chappels vpon a great Plaine, neere to a long puddle or moorish ground, of some foure miles long, all alongst a small banke or hill, in breadth some seuen or eight Rods; and beyond this, vpon this hill or banke aforesaid, had the Christians incamped themselues. About mid-day, at the aproaching of the Grand Signior, they skirmished freshly, and some Turkes intrenched themselues neere vnto one of these Churches aforesaid, these continuing all day skirmishing, as aforesaid, where both sides shewed great valour, but small bloud shed, in respect of such infinite forces as were there, especially of Turkes. The Ianifaries in particular, brauely entred the Christians Trenches, but not being seconded, were most of them put to the Sword; and the Christians perceiuing no seconds, valiantly marched forwards, and gained the Turkes Trenches, put them to flight with
- 30 some slaughter. Now the night approaching, and raine withall, the Grand Signior retired with his Pauillions, some mile off: the Ambassadour also with his companie, seeking to plant themselves for that night, not finding his carriages, was constrained to rest in the open field without any Tent, or ought else ouer his head, and neither meat nor drinke. The Ambassador was faine to send two of his Ianifaries to seeke for somewhat for him and his Companie, as also for their Horses; at length they brought some twelue Okes of Bisket, whereof some part wee eate, and the rest gaue our Horses: also Beniamin Bushop hauing formerly vnder Agria bought a Dutchman, Slaue to the Turks, who riding all day with vs, and being ill at ease, the same night he dyed with his Horse in his hand.

- The sixteenth, when after a troublesome night, approached the day, that bloody day, that
- 40 dreadfull day to the Turkes, but most vnfortunate to the Christians: In the morning newes being brought, that the Christians had forsaken the Turkes Trenches, and retired to their owne; the Turkish Horse-men that seeing, assaulted them valiantly, and though they found good encounter, yet repulsed the Christians. Now againe, when the Christians had set their forces in good order, they brought their maine campe forth, and soone repelled the Turks, where the poore Ianifaries, being Foot-men, were all put to the Sword, some two thousand persons, the Christians seeing the Turkes flie, followed in braue Martiall manner: The Foot-men Harquebuses, before them the light Artillerie, and after them the Horse-men in warlike manner, whose approaching so terrified the Turkes, that without respect of their Emperour, and their liuings depending on him, they fled in most shamefull wise, so that the Christians without resistance, approached euen nigh the Pauillions of the Grand Signior. At which time I leaue to the world, to consider
- 50 what fright the Grand Signior was in, seeing all his Armie flie; yet encouraged by some about him of his chiefe Officers, caused his Banners Imperiall, to march forwards vpon the Christians; and he with his Bow and Arrowes shot thrice, and at some say, slue three Christians. Now the Tartars, for feare of the Harquebuses, gathered themselues about the Grand Signior his Pauillion, and houering a little off; and Hassan Bassa who had the charge of the reward (lest the Christians Horse should assault the Grand Signior on the backe side) approaching with all the Grecian light horsemen, who taking the right side of the Christians, were al ready on the face encountred with those who inuironed the Grand Signior, and on the other side, by the Tartars, were on the sudden so frightened, that the Horse-men forsaking the Artillerie and guard of the Foot-men, fled
- 60 without order, and being pursued, many of them were slaine; but the poore footmen soone incompassed by the troopes of Turkes Horse-men, were all most cruelly without blow offering or shew of resistance, put to the Sword; many of the Horse-men by benefit of the night, escaped to the Mountaynes of Agria.

The seuenteenth in the morning, there came to the Ambassadors Pauillion, two great Chauses from

from the Bassa, who willed him to goe with them to view the place where the Christians had encamped themselves: which he did, taking foure Ianizaries, his owne two Chausers, two Spahis, and his owne men. Now missing one of his Ianizaries, his fellow not hauing seene him all that day, riding along at the entrance of the Christians Campe, found the said Ianizarie slaine, whom the Ambassador shewed the Chausers, & so past along; the foresaid Chausers shewed the Ambassador what place they had chosen for their Armie; which, if they had kept themselves within that compasse, and let the Turkes assault them still as they began, and they but to defend themselves, in small time would haue wearied the Turkes, and done them great damage; and little hurt to themselves: for onely but at two muddy watery places (by the foresaid old Chappels) could the Turkes come neere them to doe any great harme: for hardly could a Horse 10 passe, for being layed in, so that no possibilitie was for the Christians to haue any great repulse. But passing those places, assaulting and skirmishing with the Turkes was their ouerthrow. Thus these Chausers led the Ambassador from the one end to the other, which is about two miles long, and a very great Plaine, and Woods at the end thereof. There was all their Ordnance left behind them, and much Armour which the Christians that fled cast away, to goe with more speed when the Turkes pursued them so neere. When they came to the end thereof, some which fled, being overtaken, lay slayne, both Horse-men and Foot-men. There was left great store of Wheat, Meale, Bread, Butter, Cheese, Bacon, Sausages, Beefe, and other prouision. Now, the Ambassador returned to his Pauillion, bringing these two Chausers with him to dinner; which done, they tooke their leaue and departed. After this conquest, the Grand Signior rested in his Pauil- 20 lions there three dayes.

The nineteenth, the Grand Signior raysed his whole Armie, bending his course homewards, arriuing at Constantinople on Sunday, being the twelfth of Decemb. 1596. at which time he was receiued with great pompe, and before his entrance, the Ambassador, being placed by the chiefe Vizere, that when the Grand Signior came, hee went and saluted him, as the manner amongst them is, and kissed his hand; which done, he returned to his Horse. The Agent aforesaid, with a fresh Horse, and a troope of more then twelue met; hauing met him foure miles off from Constantinople, and about midday came to his owne house in the Vines of Pera, God be thanked, and his holy and blessed Name, for this, and our preseruacion in so dangerous a Voyage, and for all other his infinite goodnesse towards vs, be praised for euermore. Amen. 30

* This holy Flag, and these Arrowes seeme to be reliques, and of holy esteeme as those three words also.

The Ambassador reported to Master Iohn Sanderfon, that the Hodice or Schoole-master of the Great Turke, encouraged him in this extremitie to get upon his Horse, wrapping himselfe in Mahomets Flag, and to take these three * Arrowes, and shoot them toward the Christians Campe, vsing these words following, Bismilla Rohmane Reheim; which hee did. Cigalogli encouraged the Turkes to turne upon the Christians then busied in pillaging, and put them to flight. After which seruice Cigalogli (before Mansul'd or put out of his place of High Admirall) came to the Turke, who embraced and kissed him, saying, he deserved not onely his place againe, but the Kingdome.

The Reader may informe himselfe more fully of this Battel, and the Christians spoile through greedinesse of spoile, in Knolles, or other Writers of the Turkish Sorie. This our Author hath also written his Voyage, from thence sent by the Ambassador into Poland, also from Constantinople 40 to Tripolis in Syria, 1601. from Constantinople to Aleppo, 1602. into England, 1603. and againe from Constantinople to England, 1604. But I feare my Reader will bee wearie of Turkie: from whence yet yee may not, shall not depart, till yee haue bene made spectators of a Tragicall Comedie, and a Comickall Tragedie (Comickall, I hope to vs, if the sinnes of Christendome preuent not, to the Turkes a Tragedie) the most dismall that euer yet befell the Ottomans. In the first, the same man is both Author and Actor; in the next, you haue a Choragus, to whom wee owe much for this, for former his learned and honourable seruices, both full of Raritie and Varietie, the parents of Wonder and Delight.

IN his youth, when France and Netherlands had taught him to ride a Horſe, and vſe his Armes; with ſuch rudiments of Warre as his tender yeeres in this Mar-tiall Schoole could attayne vnto; he was deſirous to ſee the World, and trie his fortune againſt the Turke. Opportunitie caſting him into the companie of four French Gallants well attended, ſaying to him they were deuoted that way; ouerperſwaded him in the Low Countries, to goe with them into France:
with ſuch ill weather as winter affoordeth, in the darke night they arriued in the broad ſhallow inlet of S. Valereys in Piccardie. A worſe winter, and darker night accompanied him, namely his French Gallants; which, liking well his apparell, and thinking him better furniſhed with money then themſelues, plotted with the Maſter of the ſhip, who conueyed them and his Trunks aſhoare; and left him aboard till the Boat could returne, which was not till next day towards euening. The reaſon he alleaged was, the Sea was ſo high he could come no ſooner: And that his pretended French Lord was gone to Amiens, where they would ſtay his comming. Which treacherous villanie, when diuers other Souldiers Paſſengers had vnderſtood, they had like to haue ſlaine the Maſter: and had they knowne how, would haue runne away with the ſhip.

ter pretending

prean and his

One of the Souldiers, called Currianuer, compassionating his iniurie, aſſured him this great Lord Deprean, was onely the ſonne of a poore Lawyer of Mortaine in Bas Brittagine, and his attendants Curſel, La Nelie, and Monferat, three younger Brothers, as arrant cheaters as himſelfe; and if he would accompanie him, he would bring him to their friends, and in the interim ſupplie his wants. Thus traueiling by Diep, Codobecq, Honſieu, Pount Rodemer in Normandie, they came to Caen in Bas Normande. Where both the Noble Currianuer, and many of his friends kindly welcommed him, and brought them to Mortaine, where hee found their friends, as hee had promiſed him, but to ſmall purpoſe. Yet the bruit occaſioned the Ladie Columbe, the Baron Larſhan, the Lord Shafſe, and diuers other honourable perſons to ſupplie his wants, and to giue him kind entertaynment with them, to recreate himſelfe as long as he would. But ſuch pleaſures little ſuted with his poore eſtate: and his reſtleſſe ſpirit could neuer find content to receiue ſuch noble fauours as he could neither deſerue, nor requite. Whereupon, wandring from Port to Port, to find ſome Man of Warre, he ſpent that he had, and in a Forreſt, neere dead with grieve, a rich Farmer found him by a faire fountaine vnder a tree. This kind Peſant relieued him againe to his content, to follow his intent. Not long after, as he paſſed through a great Grove of trees betwixt Pounterſon and Dinan in Brittaigne, it was his chance to meet Curſell, more miſerable then himſelfe. Without any word they both drew, and in a ſhort time Curſell fell to the ground:
where, from an old ruined Towne the Inhabitants ſeeing them, were ſatisfied, when they heard Curſell confeſſe what formerly had paſſed; and that in the diuiding what they had ſtolne from him, they fell by the eares among themſelues: but for his part hee excuſed himſelfe to be innocent, as well of the one as of the other. In regard of his hurt, Smith was glad to bee ſo rid, directing his courſe to an honourable Lord, the Earle of Ployer: who (during the Warres in France) with his two brethren had beene brought vp in England; by whom he was better refurniſhed then euer. When they had ſlewed him Saint Malo, Mount Saint Michael, Lambal, Saint Brioux, Lanion, and their owne faire Caſtle of Tunkadeck Guigan, and diuers other places in Brittaigne, and their Cornwall; taking his leaue he tooke his way to Rennes, the Bretons chiefe Citie; and ſo to Nantes, Poytiers, Rochell, and Bordeaux. The rumour of the ſtrength of Bayon in Biſkay cauſed him to ſee it: And from thence tooke his way from Leſkar in Bearn, and Pau in the Kingdome of Nauarre to Tolouſe, Viſers, and Carcaſſon in Gaſcoigne; Narbonne, Montpellier, Nyſmes, and Poundegale, in Langedock, and through the Countrey of Auinion by Arles, to Marſellas in Pronence.

A desperate Sea-fight.

There embarking himselfe for Italie, the ship was inforced to Toulon; and putting againe to Sea, ill weather so grew vpon them, they anchored close aboard the shoare, vnder the little Ile of Saint Marie against Nice in Sauoy. Here the inhumane Prouincials with a rabble of Pilgrims of diuers Nations going to Rome, houely cursed him not onely for a Hugonot, but said, his Nation were all Pirats; rayling on his dread Soueraigne Queene Elizabeth, and that they neuer should haue faire weather so long as he was aboard them. There disputations grew to that passion, that they threw him ouerboard: yet God brought him into that little Ile, where were no Inhabitants. The next morning hee espied two ships more ride by them, put in by the storme; which fetched him aboard, well refreshed him, and so kindly vsed him, that hee was well contented to trie the rest of his fortunes with them. After he had related vnto them this former discourse: what for pitie and for loue of the Honourable Earle of Plover, this Noble Britton his neighbour, Captaine La Roshe of Saint Malo, regarded and entertayned him. With the next faire wind they sayled along by the coast of Corfica, and Sardinia, and crossing the Gulfe of Tunis, passed by Cape Bona, to the Ile of Lampadosa; leauing the coast of Barbarie till they came at Cape Rosato, and so along by the African shoare for Alexndria in Egypt. There hauing deliuered their freight, they went to Scanderone; and after keeping their course by Cyprus, and the coast of Asia; sayling by Rhodes, the Archipelagus, Candia, and the coast of Greece, and the Ile Cephalonia; they lay to and againe a few dayes, betwixt the Ile of Corfu, and the Cape of Otranto in the Kingdome of Naples, in the entrance of the Adriaticke Sea, till they mette with an Argosie of Venice, which it seemes, the Captaine desired to speake with: whose vntoward answer was such as shue them a man. Whereupon presently the Britton gaue them his broad side, then his sterne, and his other broad side also; and continued his chase Peeeces till hee gaue so many broad sides one after another, that the Argosies Sayles and tackling were so torne that shee stood to her defence, and made shot for shot. Twice in one houre and halfe the Brittons boarded her, yet they cleered them selues. But clapping her aboard againe, the Argosies fired him, with much danger to them both, but was presently quenched. This rather augmented ted the Brettons rage, then abated his courage; and hauing re-accommodated himselfe againe, he shot her so betweene wind and water, that shee was ready to sinke: then they yeelded. The Brettons lost fifteene men, shee twentie, besides diuers hurt: the rest went to worke on all hands; some to stop the leakes, others to guard the prisoners, which were chayned; the rest to rife her. The Silkes, Veluets, Cloth of gold, and Tissue; Peasters, Chickines, and Sultanies, they vnloaded in foure and twentie houres in wonderfull store: whereof hauing sufficient, and tyred with toyle, they cast her off with all her companie, with as much good Merchandize as would haue fraughted such another Britton.

Three Armies.

The siege of Alba Regalis.Fierie Dragons.

After the losse of Caniza, the Turkes with twentie thousand besieged the strong Towne of Olimpach, so straitly, as they were cut off from all intelligence and hope of succour, till Iohn Smith an English Gentleman, acquainted Baron Kizell, Generall of the Arch-Dukes Artillerie, that he had taught the Generall his worthy Friend, such a Rule, that hee would undertake to make him know any thing he intended, and haue his Answer; would they bring him but to some place, where he might make the flame of a Torch seene to the Towne. Kizell inflamed with this strange inuention; Smith made it so plaine, that forth-with he gaue him Guides, who in the darke night brought him to a Mountaine, where he shewed three Torches equi-distant from each other, which plainly appearing to the Towne, the Gouvernour presently apprehended: and answered againe with three other fires in like manner, each thus knowing the others being and intent. Smith, though distant seven miles, signified to him these words. On Thursday at night I will charge on the East, at the Alarme sally you: Eberspaught answered he would. And thus it was done, First, he writ his Message, as brieve you see, as could be; then diuided the Alphabet in two parts thus: A B C D E F G H I K L with one Light, the other Letters following with two, M N O P Q R S T V W X Y Z. The first part from A to L is signified by shewing and hiding one Linke so oft as there is Letters from A to that Letter, you meane; the other part from M to Z, is mentioned by two Lights in like manner; the end of a word is signified by shewing of three Lights, euer staying your Light at that Letter, you meane, till the other may write it in a Paper, and answer by his signall, which is one Light. It is done, beginning to account the Letters, by the Lights every time from A or M: by this meanes, also the other returned his Answer, thereby each understanding other. The Guides all this time, hauing well viewed the Campe, returned to Kizell, who doubting of his power, being but twentie thousand, was animated by the Guides which related that the Turkes were so diuided by the Riuer in two parts, that they could not easily second each other. To which Smith added this conclusion, that two or three thousand pieces of Match, fastened to diuers small Lines of two hundred fathome in length, being armed with Powder, might all bee fired and stretched at one instant, before the Alarme, upon the Plaine of Eynaburge, supported betweene two stanes, at each Lines end: in that manner, would seeme as if they were so many Musketiers: which was so put in practice, as being discovered by the Turkes, they prepared to encounter these false fires, thinking there had bin some great Armie, whilst Kizell with his Forces entred the Turkes quarter. They now ranne up and downe as men amazed, and it was not long ere Eberspaught was pell mell with them in their Trenches: in which distracted confusion, a third part of the Turkes that besieged that side towards Konbrucke were slaine, many of the rest drowned, and fled: the other part of the Armie was so busied to resist the false fires, that Kizell before the morning had put in two thousand good Souldiers into the Towne, and with small losse was retyred: the Garrison was also well relieved with that which they found in the Turkes Quarter: Which caused the Turkes to raise their Siege, and returne to Caniza, and Kizell with much honour was receiued at Kerment: and occasioned the Author a good reward and preferment, to bee Captaine of two hundred and fiftie Souldiers, under the conduct of Colonell Meldrich.

A generall Rumour of a generall Peace, now spread it selfe all ouer the face of those tormented Countries: but the Turke intended no such matter, but lenied Souldiers from all parts he could, and the Emperour also by the assistance of the Christian Princes, provided three Armies: the one led by the Arch-duke Matthias, the Emperours Brother, and his Lieftenant Duke Mercurie to defend low Hungarie; the second by Ferdinando the Arch-duke of Stiria, and the Duke of Mantua his Lieftenant to regaine Caniza: the third by Don Gonzago Gouvernour of high Hungarie to ioyne with Balta, to make an absolute Conquest of Transilvania.

Duke Mercurie with an Armie of thirtie thousand (whereof neere ten thousand were French) besieged Stolewisenburg, otherwise called Alba Regalis, a place so strong by art and nature that it was thought impregnable. There hapened many a bloudie sally, strange stratagems and valiant Exploits on both sides by severall Nations; but in brieve, Earle Meldritch by the information of three or foure Christians escaped out of the Towne. Captaine Smithooke occasion upon the great Assemblies, thronging together at every Alarme, to put in practice the fierie Dragons, which hee had demonstrated him and the Earle Von Sults at Comora, which he thus performed. After hee had prepared fortie or fiftie Earthen round bellied Pots prepared, with mixtures, Powder and Bullets, as experiences had taught him, (though with exceeding danger) he so fitly placed them in slings, graduated so neere as they could to these Assemblies, and other places of aduantage, that at mid-night upon the Alarme, it was a fearefull sight to see the short flaming course of their flight in the Ayre: but presently after the fall, the lamentable noyse of the miserable slaughtered Turkes was most terrible; besides, they fired that strong Suburbe, at the Port of Buda, in two or three places, which so troubled the Turkes to quench, that had there beene any meanes to haue assaulted them, they could hardly haue resisted the fire and their Enemies.

This Citie being taken by the incredible Aduentures of the Duke, the Earle Roseworthe with the other Colonell and Captaines, which had beene in possession of the Turkes, more then fiftie yeares: the Turke sent presently Asan Bassa with thescore thousand, if it were possible to re-gaine it: the Duke understanding this, with twentie thousand met him: where five or sixe thousand were slaine, with the Bassa of Buda, and foure or five Zanzackes.

Turke

A Battell, and the Bassa of Buda slaine.

Duke Mercurie diuiding his Armie, sent the Earle Meldrich (of whose Company was Captaine Smith in this encounter) to assist the Lord Balta, Generall for the Emperer Rodulph, against Sigismundus Bathur, the Prince of Transilvania: who was beyond all mens belife, newly returned from Polonia: and established in his Estate; the Earle neither finding pay, nor such regard as he expected, perswaded his Troupes rather to serue the Prince against the Turkes, then Balta against the Prince. The Souldiers worne out with these paylesse Truels, upon hope to make Bootie of what they could get from the 10 Turke, were easily perswaded to follow him wheresoener: especially to helpe to re-gaine or ransacke his Fathers Country then possessed by the Turkes, which (they hard) notwithstanding those Warres, were rich and unspoiled. The Prince glad of so a braue a Commander, and so many expert and ancient Souldiers, made him Campe-master of his Armie, gaue him all necessaries else hee could, and what freedome they desired to ransacke the Turkes.

The Earle hauing made many incursions into the Land of Zarkain, amongst the rockie Mountaines, where the people were some Turkes, some Tartars, some Iewes, but most Banditos, Renegadoes, and such like, which sometimes he forced into the Plaines of Regall: where is a Citie, not only of men and 20 such like, which sometimes he forced into the Plaines of Regall: where is a Citie, not only of men and Fortifications, strong of it selfe; but so enuironed with Mountaines, and the passage so difficult, that in all those warres, no attempt had beene made vpon it to any purpose. Hauing satisfied himselfe with the situation and those passages, amongst which he had many a sharpe encounter: at last, with eight thousand he pitched his Campe before it. The Inhabitants scorning so small a number, sallied in such abundance, that about one hundred and fiftie were slaine on both sides, and the Turkes chased so neere the Ports, that the Towers small shot and Ordnance caused the Earle to retyre.

Regal besieged.

The next day Zachell Moyzes, Lieutenant Generall to the Prince, came with foure thousand Foote and Horse, and foure and twentie Peeces of Ordnance, but in regard of the situation of the place, they did more feare then hurt them: till they had spent neere a moneth in raising their Mounts and Batteries; which slow proceeding the Turkes daily derided, and as fearing least they should depart ere they assaulted the Citie, sent this challenge to any Captaine in their Armie: That to delight the Ladies who did long to see some Courtlieke pastime, the Lord Turbashaw did defie any Captaine that had the command of a

30 Companie, which durst cumbat with him for his head. The matter being discussed, was accepted. But so many questions grew for the undertaking, that it was decided by lots, and the lot fell vpon Captaine Smith, before spoken of. Truce being taken for that time, the Rampiers all beset with faire Dames, and men in Armes, the Christians in Batalia; Turbashaw, with a voice of Hoboyes entred the field, well mounted and armed: on his shoulders were fixed two paire of great wings, richly garnished with gold, siluer, and precious stones, a Ianifarie before him, bearing his Launce; on each side, another leading his Horse; where long he stayed not before Smith with a noise of Trumpets (onely a Page bearing his Lance) passing by him, with a curteous salute, tooke his ground with such good successe, that at the sound of the charge he passed the Turke thorow the sight of his beauer, face, head, and all, that hee fell dead to the ground; where alighting, vnbracing his Helmet, he tooke off his head, leauing the Turkes his body, and 40 so returned without any hurt at all. The head he presented to the Lord Moyzes the Generall, who kindly accepted it, and with ioy to the whole Armie, he was generally welcome.

The death of this Captaine, so swelled in the heart of one Grualgo his vowed friend, as rather irragged with madnesse then choller, he directed a particular Challenge to the Conquerour, to regaine his friends head, or lose his owne, with his Horse and Armour for aduantage: which, according to his desire, was the next day undertaken, as before. Vpon the sound of the Trumpets their Launces flew in pieces, vpon a cleere passage, but that the Turke was neere unhorsed: their Pistols were the next, which marked Smith vpon the Placket; but the next shot, the Turke was so wounded in the left arme, that not able to rule his Horse, and defend himselfe, he was throwne to the ground, and so bruised with the fall, that he lost his head, as his friend before him, with his Horse and Armour; but his bodie and his rich apparell, was

50 Enery day the Turkes made some sallies, but few skirmishes would they indure to any purpose, our workes and approaches being not yet aduanced to that height, and effect as necessitie required. To delude time, Smith with many inconstadictable perswading reasons, obtained leaue, that the Ladies might know he was not so much enamored with their Seruants heads, but if any Turke of their ranke would come to the place of Combat to redeeme them, hee should haue his also vpon the like condutions, if they could winne it. The Challenge presently was accepted by Bony Molgro. The next day both the Champions entering the field, as before, each discharging their Pistols, hauing no Launces, but such martiall weapons as the Defendant had appointed, no hurt was done. Their Battle-axes were the next, whose piercing bills made sometimes the one, sometimes the other, to haue scarce sence to keepe their Saddles: especially the

The Turke prosecuted his aduantage to the vttermost of his power: yet the other, what by the readinesse of his Horse, and his iudgement and dexteritie in such a businesse beyond all mens expectation, by Gods assistance, not onely auoyded the Turkes violent blowes, but hauing drawne his Faulchion, pierced the Turke so vnder the hundred Ducats, and Meldrich made him Sergeant Maior of his Regiment. The Towne with an incredible trouble and danger was assaulted, and at last taken perforce, where the Earle remembering his Fathers death, caused all he could find beare Armes to be put to the Sword, and their heads to be set upon stakes, round about the walls, in the same manner as they had served the Christians when they tooke it. 10

Varatzo, Sol-mos, Cuprouka.

Then he sacked Varatzo, Solmos, and Kuprouka, whereto had retired the remnant of this Den of Theenes, leaving five thousand dead (though he lost neere as many, yet) with all the spoyle and two thousand prisoners (most women and children) he returned to Esenberge, not farre from the Princes Pallace, where hee incamped. The Prince coming to view the Armie, presented with the Prisoners, and sixe and thirtie Ensignes (after his accustomed manner, having given thanks to God) he was acquainted what service Smith had done at Olimpach, Stolewisenberge, and Regall; for which, with great honor and solemnitie, he gave him three Turkes heads in a Shield for Armes, with an oath ever to wear them in his Colours, his picture in gold, and three hundred Duckats yeerely for a pension.

Smith.

During all this time, Balta and the Prince being capitulating of a peace, the Emperour had raised new forces for Balta to invade Transilvania; which caused the Prince to condescend to the Articles propounded him: which when Moyles understood, then in field with the whole Armie (that hated the Germans as ill as Turkes) he gave battell to Balta. Betwixt them in sixe or seven houres, more then sixe or seven thousand on both sides were slaine. Moyles thus overthrowne fled to the Turkes, and his scattered Troopes, some one way, some another. The Prince excused himselfe of this unexpected accident, made composition for his dispersed Troopes, yielded himselfe to Balta; and all his Countrey and Subjects to the Emperours obedience. 20

Balta thus possessed of Transilvania, drew all the Christians of those old Regiments of Sigismundus, of whose greatnesse and true affections, he was most suspicious, under the conduct of Rodoll Voyuad of Walachia, forced out by Jeremy, put in by the Turke. In this Armie of thirtie thousand, Captaine

Smith was one, who (under his noble Colonell holding the same places he had before) had many severall employments in every dangerous encounter, which would be too voluminous particularly to relate, before they could draw Prince Jeremy to battaile, where (as it is recorded) two thousand on both sides, lay dead in the fields; but Jeremy fled, and Rodol had the victorie, and thereby againe his Soueraintie. 30

Meldrich not long after with thirteene thousand, was sent against the stragling escaped Troopes of Jeremy, which ioyning with some Tartars, foraged the frontiers towards Moldavia; but when they heard it was the Crimme Tartar and his two sonnes, with thirtie thousand, and that Jeremy which had escaped, lay with fiftene thousand in Ambuscado for him, about Langanow, hee retired towards Rotenton, a strong Garison for Rodoll: But they were so inuironed with these hellish numbers, that they could make no great haste for skirmishing with their Scoutes and Forragers: Yet by getting through a wood in a thick Fog, meeting two thousand laden with pillage, and two or three hundred Horse and Cattell, the most of them were slaine or taken prisoners, who told Meldrich where Jeremy lay, expecting the Crimme Tartar. Meldrich intending to make by him his passage by force, was aduised of a pretie stratagem by Captaine Smith, which presently so accommodated two or three hundred Trunkes, with wild-fire upon the heads of Launces, charging the enemy in the night, gave fire to the Trunkes, which blasted forth such flames and sparkles, amazing not onely the Horse but also the Foot, that by the meanes of this flaming encounter, their owne Horses turned tailes with such furie, as by their violence overthrow Jeremy and his Armie, without any losse at all to Meldrich. But of this victorie they not long triumphed; for, being within three leagues of Rotenton, in the Valley of Vereft Horne; the Tartar with fortie thousand had so beset him, that they were forced to fight with this matchlesse number, where neere thirtie thousand were slaine. The Earle, with some fiftene hundred escaped, but the rest were all slaine or taken prisoners: as the Historie at large will plainly shew, the times, place, chiefe Commanders, with the manner and order of their battels, and fights, to which I referre you. 50

§. II.

Diners valiant English-men in this battell. Captaine SMITH taken, sold, sent into Turkie, and ouer the Black Sea to Tartaria. His admirable escape and other trauels in diuers parts of Christendome.

N this dismall battell, Nederspol, Veltus, Zarnana, Mauazo, Banell, and many other Earles, Barons, Colonels, Captaines, braue Gentlemen and Souldiers were slaine. Giue me leaue to remember the names, and honor the memories of our owne Countrey-men in those exploits, which as resolutely as the best, in the defence of Christ and all did what men could doe, and when they could doe no more, left there their martyred bodies, in testimonie of their Martiall minds, onely Ensigne Carlton, and Sergeant Robinson escaped. Ensigne Carlton

 But Smith amongst the slaughtered dead bodies, with toyle and wounds lay groning, till being and Sergeant found by the Pillagers that he was able to liue, and perceiuing by his Armour and habit, that his Robinson escape ransome might be better to them then his death; they led him Prisoner with diuers other. Well Captaine they vsed him till his wounds were cured, and at Axopolis they were all brought into the Mar- Smith taken.
 ket place and stripped, that the Merchants might see their limbs and wounds, (who had Ser-

10 nants vpon purpose to try their strengths) and there sold like beasts. Smith fell to the share of Basba Bogall, who sent him forth with to Andrinopolis, and so for Constantinople to his faire Mi-stris for a Slaue. By twentie and twentie chained by the necke, they marched in Fyle to this great Citie, where they were deliuered to their severall Masters, and he to his young Charatz Tragabigzanda.

This Noble Gentlewoman tooke sometimes occasion to shew him to some friends, or rather to speake with him, and because she could speake Italian, would faine her selfe sicke when shee should goe to the Banias, or weepe ouer the graues, to know how Bogall tooke him Prisoner, and if he were, as Bogall writ to her, a Bohemian Lord conquered by his hand, with many more which he had with him, whom hee would present her ere long, whose ransomes should adorne 20 her with the glory of his Conquests. But when shee heard him protest he knew no such matter, nor had euer seene Bogall till hee bought him at Axopolis, and that hee was an English-man, onely by his aduentures made a Captaine in those Countries: to try the truth, shee found meanes to find out many which could speake English, French, Dutch, and Italian; to whom he relating the most part of those former passages, (which they honestly reported to her) shee tooke as it seemed, much compassion on him. But hauing no vse for him, least her mother should sell him, she sent him to her Brother the Tymor Bashaw of Nalbrits, in the Country of Cambrya in Tartaria.

But let vs remember his passing notes in the speculatiue course from Constantinople, by Sander, How he was Pelus, Pannasamusa, Lastilla, to Varna, an ancient Citie vpon the blacke Sea, where hauing little sent into Tar-30 more libertie then his eies iudgement, he might see the Townes with their short Towers, in a taria most excellent plaine, pleasant, and fertile Countrey, full of Villages, and disperfed faire buildings, as well in Sagonia as Romania. But from Varna, nothing but the blacke Sea, till he came Varna.

to the two Capes of Taur and Pergillo, which are two muddy Promontories, at the entrance of the Straight Niger, which hath a very deepe Channell, and as he coniectured, ten leagues long, and three broad. At the entrance of the Disabachi Sea, are a great many of high blacke Rocks on each side the Channell to ones thinking, which they said were onely Trees, Weedes, and Muds, throwne from the in-land Countries by the inuadations, and by the violence of the Currant cast there by the Eddy: of which as they sayled, they saw many without sight of Land, seeming like high Rockes on low Ilands, which are onely great flats of Osie Quagmires, where 40 infinite heapes of Trees doe sticke; and by their waight, time, and multitudes, though the boughes rot, the bodies they say, haue made many of those Osie Flats firme Land in many places: Thus sayling this Disabachi Sea, till hee came betwixt Susack and Curaske, onely two visibie Townes appeared at the entrance of the Riuer Bruago. In sixe or seuen daies sayle, hee saw foure or fise, seeming strong Castles of stone, with flat tops and Battlements about them; but arriuing at Cambria, he was according to their custome, well vsed. The Castle was of a large Cambria circumference, ten or twelue foote thicke in the foundation. Some sixe foote from it a Palizado, and then a ditch round about, fortie foot broad, full of water: on the one side of it a Towne all of low flat houses, but no great matter as it seemed; yet it keeps all that Country in admirable awe and subiection. Three daies he rested there, then it was two daies iourney to Nalbrits, the 50 Tymors habitation, a place not of much lesse strength then Cambria, where sometimes resideth this Tymor Nalbrits, Brother to the Ladie Tragabigzanda. To her vnkind Brother this kind Ladie writ so much for his good v sage, that hee halfe suspected as much as she intended. For shee told him, he should there but sojourne to learne the language: and what it was to be a Turke, till time made her Master of her selfe. But the Tymor her Brother diuerted, and peruerted all this to the worst of crueltie: for within an houre after his arriuall, hee cauled his Drugman to strip him naked, and shaued his head and beard as bare as his hand, a great Ring of Iron with a long stalke bowing like a Sickle about his neck, and a coate made of Vlgrayes haire, much like Haire-cloath, guarded about with a piece of an vndressed skinnie. There were many other Christian Slaues, but more then two hundred Forsados, and he being the last, was Slaue of Slaues to them 60 all. Among those slauiish fortunes, there was no great choise, for the best was so bad, a Dog could hardly haue liued to indure: and yet for all their paines and labour, no more regarded then a Beast. The Tymor and his friends fed vpon Pillow, which is boyled Rice and Garnancis, with little bits of Mutton or Buckones, which is rost pieces of Horse, Vlgray, or any Beast. Samboses and Muselbits are great dainties, and yet but round pies full of all sorts of flesh chopped, with

- varietie of Hearbs. Their best drinke is Coffa, made of a Graine, called Coana, boyled with water and Sherberke, which is onely Hony and Water. Mares Milke, or the Milke of any Beast, they hold restorative; but all the Comminaltie drinke pure Water. Their Bread is made of this Coana, which is a kind of blacke Wheate, and Cuscus a small white Seed like Millet in Biskany. Our common victuall, was the Intrals and Offall of Horses and Vlgryes; of this cut in small pieces, they will fill a great Cauldron; which being boyled, and with Cuscus put in great bowles in the manner of Chafing-dishes, they sit about it on the ground; after they haue raked it through as oft as they please with their fowle fists, the remainder was for the Christian Slaues. Some of this broth they would temper with Cuscus, like Butter for Fritters, and putting the fire off from the hearth, powre there a bowle full, then couer it with coales till it be baked, which stued with the remainder of the broath, and small pieces of flesh, was an extraordinary daintie. The better sort are attired like Turkes, but the plaine Tartar weareth halfe a blacke Sheepes skinne ouer his backe, two of the legges tyed about his necke, the other two about his middle; with another ouer his belly, and his legges tyed in like manner behind him: then two skinnies more made like a paire of Bases, serue him for Breeches, with a little Cap close to his skull of course blacke Felt, and they vse exceeding much of this Felt for Carpets, for Bedding, for Coates, and Idols. Their houses are much worse then your Irisb: but the In-land Countrey hath none but Carts and Tents, which they euer remoue from Countrey to Countrey, as they see occasion, dring with them infinite troupes of blacke Sheepe, Cattle, and Vlgryes, eating vp all before them as they goe.
- For the Tartars of Nagi, they haue neither Towne nor House, Corne nor Drinke, but Flesh and Milke; and liue all in Hordias, three or foure thousand of them in a company, all liuing in great Carts, fiftene or sixtene foot broad, which is couered ouer with small Rods, wratled together in the forme of a Birds-nest turned vpwards, and with the Ashes of bones, tempered with Oyle, and a Clay they haue, & Camels haire, they loome them so wel, that no weather wil pierce them, and yet they are very light. Each Hordia hath a Murse, which they obey as King. Their gods are infinite, but the Crimme Tartar and the Tauricks, obey Murtissalla Mahomets chiefe Prophet. One thousand or two thousand of those glittering white Carts drawne with Camels, Deere, Bulls, and Vlgryes, they bring round in a Ring, where they pitch their Campe, and the Murse with his chiefe Alliances are placed in the midst: They doe much hurt when they get any Stogs, which are great Boats, vsed vpon the Edle a Riuer we call Volga, to them that dwell in the Countrey of Poronlog, and would doe much more, were it not for the Muscouits Garisons that there inhabite.
- All the hope he had euer to be deliuered from this thraldome, was onely the loue of Tragabigzanda, who surely was ignorant of his bad vsage: for although he had oft debated the matter with some Christians, which had beene there long Slaues, they could not find how to make any escape, by any reason or possibilitie. But God beyond Mans expectation or imagination, helpeth his Seruants when they least thinke of helpe, as it hapned to him. In this miserable estate, he became a Thrasher at a Grange in a great field, more then a league from the Tymors house. The Bassa as he oft vsed to visite his grounds, visited him, and tooke occasion so to beate, spurne and reuile him, that Smith forgetting all reason, beate out his braines with his bat: and seeing his estate could not be worse then it was, he cloathed himselfe in his cloathes, hid his body vnder the Straw, filled his Knapfacke with Corne, shut the doores, mounted his Horse, and ranne into the Desart at all aduenture: Two or three daies thus fearefully wandring he knew not whither, and well it was hee met not any to aske the way. Thus being euen as one taking leaue of this miserable world, God did direct him to their great way or Custragan, as they call it, which doth crosse those large Territories, and is generally knowne among them by these markes.
- In euery crossing of this great way, is planted a Poste, and in it so many bolts with broad ends, as there are waies, and euery bolt hath the figure painted ouer it, that demonstrateth to what part that way leadeth, as that which pointeth towards the Crimmes Countrey, is marked with a halfe Moone: if towards the China, the picture of the Sunne; if towards the Georgians and Persia, a blacke man full of white spots; if towards Muscovy, the signe of a Crosse; if towards the habitation of any other Prince, the figure whereby his Standard is knowne. To his dying spirits thus God added some comfort in this melancholy iourney, wherein if hee had met any of that vild generation, they had made him their Slaue, or sent him backe againe to his Master. Sixteene daies he trauelled in this feare and torment after that crosse, till hee arriued at Axopolis, vpon the Riuer Don, a Garrison of the Muscouits. The Gouvernor after due examination of those hard euents, tooke off his Irons, and so kindly vsed him, that he thought himselfe newly risen from death.
- The most he could learne of these wild Countries was this, that the Countrey of Cambria is two dayes Journey from the head of the great Riuer Bruapo, which springeth from many places of the Mountaynes of Inagachi, that ioyned themselues together in the Poole Kerkas, which they account for the head, and falleth into the Sea Dissabach: which receiueth also the Riuer Don, and all the Riuers that fall from the great Countrey of the Circassi, the Caitaches, the Tauricacs, ricaces, Pricopes, Cumania, Cossunka, and the Crymme, through which Sea hee sayled, and vp the Riuier Bruapo to Nalbrits, and thence through the Deserts of Circassi to Exopolis, as is related, where he staid with the Gouvernour, till the Conuoy went to Coragnaw, then with his Certificate how he found him, and had examined him, with his friendly Letters he sent him by Zumalacke to Coragnaw, whose Gouvernour in like manner so kindly vsed him, that by this means, he went with the safe conduct to Leitch & Donka, in Cologosk, and thence to Birniske, & Newgrade, in Seberya, by Kexachica vpon the Riuier Niger, in the Confines of Littuania. From whence with as much kindnesse he was conueyed in like manner by Coroskie, Duberosko, Duzihell, Drohobus, and Ostroge in Volonia. Shaslaw and Laxco in Podolia, Halico and Collonia in Polonia, and to Hermonstat in Transilvania. In all his life he seldome met with more respect, mirth, content and entertaynement, and not any Gouvernour where he came, but gaue him somewhat as a Present besides his charges, seeing themselves subiect to the like calamitie. And because our Authour hath so thorowly trauelled Europe, I haue here presented Hondius his Map of Europe.

Through those poore continually forraged Countries there is no passage, but with the Caruans or Conuoyes; for they are Countries rather to bee pittied then enuyed, and it is a wonder any should make Warres for them. The Villages are here and there a few Houses of streight Firre-trees, laid heads and points aboue one another made fast by notches at the ends, more then a mans height, and with broad split boards pinned together with wooden pinnes thatched for couerture: in ten Villages you shall scarce find ten Iron Nayles, except it bee in some extraordinarie mans House. For their Townes, Exopolis, Lech, and Donka haue Rampiers made of that wooden walled-fashion, double, and betwixt them Earth and Stones, but so latched with crosse Timber, they are very strong against any thing but fire, and about them a deepe Ditch, and a Pallizado of young Firre-trees, but most of the rest haue only a great Ditch cast about them, and the Ditches Earth is all their Rampier, and the toppe on it round, well enuironed with Palizadoes; Some haue some few small Peeces of small Ordnance and Slings, Curriours and Muskets; but their generallest Weapons are the Russe Bow and Arrowes. In their wayes you shall find pouements ouer Bogges, only of young Firre-trees laid crosse ouer one another for two or three houres Iourney, or as the passage requires, and yet in two dayes trauell, you shall scarce see fixe Habitations. Notwithstanding, to see how their Lords, Gouvernours, and Captaines are ciuized, well attyred and accoutred with Iewels, Sables, Horses, and after their manner with curious Furniture, it is wonderfull; but they are all Lords or Slaues, which makes them so subiect to euery Inuasion.

stimoniall.

In Transilvania he found so many good friends, that but to see and reioyce himselfe after all those Encounters to see his Natiue Countrey, he would euer hardly haue left them, though the Miracle of Vertue, their Prince was absent. Being thus glatted with content, and neere drowned with ioy; he passed high Hungaria, By-fylecke, Tocka, Cassouia, and Vnaderawa, by Vlmitch in Moravia, to Prague in Bohemia: at last he found the most generous Prince Sigismundus with his Colonell at Lipswicke in Misenland, who gaue him his passe, intimating the seruice hee had done, and the honours he had receiued with fifteene hundred Duckers of Gold to repaire his losses. With this he spent sometime, to visit the faire Cities and Countries of Dresden in Saxonie, Mandabourge, and Brunswicke Castle in Hessen, Wittenberge, Vlme and Minikin in Bauaria, Ausburge and her Vniuersitie, Hanna, Franckford, Mets, the Palatinate, Wormes, Spire, and Strambsurge. Passing the Cardinalship to Nancey in Lorraine, and the Kingdome of France, by Paris to Orle- 20

Then vnderstanding that the Warres of Mully Shash and Mully Sedan, the two Brothers in Barbarie of Fex and Moroco (to which hee was animated by some friends) were concluded in peace, he imbarcked himselfe for England with one thousand Duckets in his Purse, which after with a great deale more hee employed, in searching more dangers in the West Indies, and the vnkowne parts of vnciuilized America, where how he discouered and inhabited Virginia, how hee was taken Prisoner by Powhatan, their Emperour 1607. and deliuered, how hee tooke the King of Paspahagh, Prisoner in single Combate, and the King of Pamavuke Prisoner in the 30

Preteence of visiting Mecha.

He Grand Signior Sultan Osman discontented since his disgrace in Poland, as soone as he came to Constantinople, pretended a Iourney vpon the Emir de Saida, who was reported to be in Rebellion, hauing taken Armes to other ends. But being diuerted from this purpose by the great instance of the Viziers, and that it would not so well serue his secret Designes, because hee must then keepe an Armie on foote; hee gaue out that hee would visite Mecha, the Tombe of his false Prophet.

To make this Voyage the more secure, in appearance, hee seemed content to accept of any Treatie with the Polacks, euen to conditions both of disadvantage and dishonour; for his estates in Hungarie, he re-enforced the Frontiers with diuers troupes, and though hee were much troubled at the league betweene the Emperour of Germanie and Bethlem Gabor, yet he dissembled it so, as that he would not displease the Transilvanian, but rather offered new succours, and forbearance of his Tribute. From the Incursions of the Cossacks, hee hoped to assure himselfe, by the treatie of the Poles, and in occasion of breach, he had the Tartars readie to requite them (it being both their trades to liue vpon spoile and robberie) and for more securitie hee appointed twentie Gallies to keepe the Blacke Sea. The common people and Viziers that loued rest, and knew not the Designe, were much troubled and discontent at this Iourney, who made many Re- 60 monstrances to him of the inconuenience and danger to leaue the seat of his Empire to the trust of a Deputie, in a time when Bethlem Gabor was newly reconciled to the Germane Emperour, and therefore not to be trusted; and the Polacks newly reconciled to him, and therefore to be mistrusted. Diuers other reasons were made to him, many Petitions deliuered from the Churchmen, Lawyers, and from all Estates. But melancholike Reuenge had wholly possessed him, so that by no meanes he could be perswaded to desist. The Souldierie passed so farre, as to threaten publikely, and to protest, they would not follow, but rather set vp another King in his absence that should stay among them. In conclusion, carried by his owne fate to destruction: the

- 10 taking from Churches, and his Wardrobes, whatsoever could be conuerted to Bullion) suddenly met at the Hippodrome in the Citie vpon a word giuen; and from thence ranne to the Seraglio in tumult, but without Armes, and there according to their barbarous mutinies cryed out for the King (hauing first taken order to stop the passage of any thing vpon the water) who appearing to them, asked what this inolencie meant, and what they pretended. They then by the mouth of a multitude (for they had no head but that of the Monster) demanded first that hee should not proceed in his purpose to goe to Mecha, nor into Asia, but that he must abide in the Citie. Secondly, they would haue deliuered to their furie the Great Vizier De-laur Bassa, the Hoia, or Confessor of the King, the Cashariaga Gouvernour of the women, the Tesferdar, or Treasurer, the Cadde Leskar, or Chiefe Iustice, and some others, as Enemies to the State, and consenting to
- 20 this Voyage, which they pretended would be the ruine of the Empire. The first, after a little dispute, the King granted vnto them; promising to giue over his Iourney, but they not content, exacted it in writing. To the second, he replied, that it was dishonour to him to haue his Seruants so vsed without order of Iustice: but perswaded them to haue patience to stay vntill Saturday, the next Diuan, or publike Councell, where they should all appeare, and if they were found culpable, they should receiue punishment; not meaning to performe any of this, but to get time and allay their pesent furie. These fellowes not content with this moderate answer, vndertooke to know that they were guiltie, and therefore that they needed no other witnesse, tryals, nor Iudge, but themselues, and with extreme clamour, called to haue them deliuered. But the King refusing to giue them any other satisfaction, and they vnprepared for
- 30 force, returned into the Citie, which now was all in feare, euery house and shop shut vp, expecting a generall sacke. But they followed the way of their owne hatred, and first went vnto the house of the Hoia, which they brake and pillaged: but not finding him, they proceeded to the Great Viziers, who made some defence, and (they being vnarmed) beate him off; and so they separated being now Euening, but yet kept a Guard in some parts of the Towne.

- This night the King made an attempt to send ouer to Asia side, but was preuented; and to fortifie and defend his Seraglio, which is walled strongly about, and hath alway in it of household Seruants about three thousand, but it seemes no man would arme in his cause. For the next morning, the Mutiners assembled againe, and taking their Armes, went first to the Musti, or Arch-priest among them, and forced him and diuers others to accompanie them to the Court;
- 40 where they anew demanded these men, but with more instance and furie. In the meane time the Hoia, Caddee Leskar, and Tesferdar fled, and were yet neuer heard off. The Vizier retyred to the King, and perswaded him earnestly to goe ouer in person in his owne Boates (which from his Garden he might easily doe) to Asia, and there to take Horse, and he would secure him from all perill; but the King would not mooue, bidding him stay confident and assured that hee would punish these Rebels.

- The wise old man seeing this constancie or obstinacie, desired leaue to shift for himsefe, which he either tooke or obtayned, and so got away to the Hermitage of a Saint renowned amongst them, who (like himsefe) betrayed him to a Captaine of the Ianizaries; yet did him the fauour as not to deliuer him to the multitude, but carried him backe to the Kings House. At this time
- 50 it was disputed in the Seraglio, about the deliuerie of these Officers, the Emperour refusing, the Rebels clamouring and threatening; insomuch, as he began to feare they would breake in, and in their rage doe worse then was yet pretended. Whereupon, whether by the Kings order, or by his owne consent (willing to bee the Peace-offering) the Vizier went out to them, and with a good assurednesse demanded what they sought of him, and wherein he had offended: But they answered him with their Swords, and suddenly cut him in pieces.

Saint Knaue.

- The Emperour seeing their furie so out-ragious, had now more cause to doubt, and retyred himsefe then too late, when hee had lost his braue Counsellor; would haue fled into Asia, and could not, but conueyed himsefe into a priuate place, prepared by his Bustengi Bassa, or chiefe
- 60 Gardiner. The Rebels continue without in their madnesse, asking for the King, and for more Sacrifices. But the Seruants protesting they knew not where he was, they said, they must haue a King, and if he would not appeare, they would make another; and hauing awhile attended, they resolved to enter the Palace (but first tooke a generall Oath not to sacke the Imperiall Throne, which they called their house and their honour) and there seeking for the King, not able to find him, they extorted by confession the Cashariaga, and slue him, and then they demanded for Mustafa, Vncle to Osman, by him formerly deposed, a man esteemed rather holy (that is franticke) then wise, and indeed fitter for a Cell, then a Scepter. The King the first day of this tumult had put Mustafa into a Vault with two Negro women, without bread or drinke, in which estate these new Electors found him almost naked, and halfe pined. At first sight, hee thought they had beene the Messengers of death: but that feare passed ouer, he begged of them a Cup of water. Whom they tooke, and instantly proclaimed their Emperour, which hee was loth to accept, uti pudebat aucti nominis; How vnstable are the Estates of the greatest Princes! Quem dies videt veniens iacentem, hunc vidit dies fugiens regnantem, He that was now in the lawes of death, naked, starued, and dying for thirst, is become the Emperour, and may drinke Gold, or the blood of men.

They as yet not knowing what was become of Osman, and loth to trust Mustapha in the Palace, carried him in triumph to the old Seraglio, and there left him, departing to the sacke of the Viziers house, and so in the Euening to their Rendeuou, where they kept both good guard, and good order in the Citie, from fires and other Insolencies. Sultan Osman amazed with these newes, so soone as they had left the Court, came out and called to Councell in the night, Huzein Bassa, late Vizier in the Polish Warre, and the Aga of the Ianzaries, both faithfull to him, and demanded their aduice; first, hauing sent to the old Seraglio, to practise the women there, to strangle Mustafa; but some taking his part, a new vprore beganne in the house betweene that Sexe: and the Souldiers that kept watch, taking the Alarum, entred in, and rescued him, and from thence remooued him to the Chambers of the Ianzaries, where they guarded him for that night, in an ill Lodging. All this while Osman consults what course to take. These two his friends, and some others, tell him, that the case was desperate, and could not bee cured but by a desperate remedie. And they agreed that the Aga should goe and perswade with the Mosti, and that the King in the morning should suddenly present himselfe to the Souldiers at their owne doore, and make experience, what his Presence, his submission, and his beneuolence promised could worke, to moue them to Loyaltie, or compassion; which counsell early in the morning they put in practice. The King accompanied with the Mosti, (who neuer consented to his deposing, though he fauoured the Souldiers against the Vizier) with Huzein Bassa, and about twelue Horse-men, went directly to the Ianzaries Colledge where Mustafa was kept, and there in teares made them an Oration, offering great recompence, repenting of his errour; and finally, inuoked them by the merits of his Father and all his Ancestors to haue some pitie vpon their true Master. The multitude (tam prona in misericordiam, quam immodica sanitia fuerat) now knew not what to doe; a silent murmure ranne among them, and they were halfe conuerted: But the Aga of the Ianzaries, thinking to merit of the King, and beginning to plead vnseasonably for him, with some harsh words of vpbraidure, Vt natura Maris omni flatu venti turbida, anew moued their furie, so that they cryed out Treason, and fell vpon him and Huzein Bassa, and cut them into pieces, euery man taking a part of their flesh to satisfie their reuenge. The Mosti would speake, but is withdrawne by some, for respect to his place, and with difficultie conveyed away. Now the poore Osman sees his friends slaine, and knowes not which way to conuert himselfe, but binding vp his eyes with a Napkin, expects death as the last of their furie; But they carrie him first before Mustafa, and accuse him as the disturber of the Peace of the Empire, and demand sentence against him, more vulgi suum quisque flagitium alijs obiectantes. The forsaken Prince pleades for life, and the new King knowes not how to condemne, but nods and agrees to all that is propounded. At last, they consult with themselues, and put him vpon an Horse (an insolent Spahie changing Turbants with him) and sent him away Prisoner to the seuen Towers vnder good guard, and then returned to their new Master, and placed him in the Seraglio and Imperiall Throne, where he hath need to haue good Broths and nourishment to restore his decayed bodie.

Mustafa enthronized.

The Souldiers thinke all is done, and (onely sacking the houses of Huzein Bassa, and some others their conceiued Enemies) returne in quiet to their seuerall Lodgings, and haue no further malice. But the new Vizier Daout Bassa, made by Mustafa, knew well, if Osman liued, that this storme might passe ouer, and hee would as easily and by the same meanes returne to his Estate, as hee fell from it, Vulgus ut mos est, cuiusq; noui motus cupidum. Therefore hee consulted with some few interessed in Mustafas preferment, and thereby obnoxious to Osman, to search how many of the Royall blood were left aliue, and resolved if there remayned two, to make an end of Osman. Two of his Brothers were found, the one about twelue, the other about seuen yeares of age: and thereupon the Vizier went himselfe to the Prison with a packe of Hangmen, and gaue order to strangle the vnfortunate Prince: who now hauing had no rest in two nights, and thinking himselfe secure for a season, was newly false asleepe: but awaked by the comming of these Messengers, asked what newes, saying, hee did not like their sudden intrusion. They at first stood amazed, and the King made shew to defend himselfe; but a strong Knaue strooke him on the head with a Battle-axe, and the rest leaping vpon him, strangled him with much adoe. Thus one of the greatest Monarkes in the World is first affronted by mutined troupes, his owne slaues, almost vnarmed, and few in number, no man taking vp a Sword

Sword to defend him: and they who began this madnesse, not meaning to hurt him, by the increase of their owne furie, which hath no bounds, depose him against their owne purpose, and at last expose his life against their will, to the counsels of other men, whom they equally hate. And now they mourne for their dead King, as freshly as they raged vnreasonably, knowing they haue stayned their honour, being the first of their Emperours they euer betrayed, and that they haue set vp another that in all likelihood they must change for disability: Nonnunquam tulit documenta fors maiora, quam fragili loco starent superbi.

- This is the last act of the life of Sultan Osman: but his intents and great designs, which drew vpon him this fatall blow, I suppose will not bee vnworthy the communication, the Practices, 10 Reasons, Secrets, and Counsels of all Actions being the Soule of Historie, and res gesta but the bare carkasse: and I am perswaded, as many Ages haue not produced so strange an Example of the incertaintie of humane greatnesse; so in the disposition thereof, and in the wayes leading thereunto, there is seene evidently the wonderfull prouidence of God, in confounding of the counsels of the worldly wise, who had laid a foundation of new greatnesse, whereby he aspired the vniuersall Monarchie, ambitious of the honour of Traian, in whole time the decayed Empire was said, Primum mouere lacertos, & senectutem Imperij, quasi reddita iuuentute reuiuiscere. And lastly, the world may see vpon how weake foundations this Monarchie was at first builded, but it is now shaken and corrupted; how their Kings are subiect to the rage of a few Slaues, how Anarchie hath prepared it an easie prey to any able hand, that would attempt it. From the Inua- 20 sion of Poland, all these changes took their beginning. Sultan Osman aduanced to the Throne in his youth, full of heate and blood, being of a great and haughtie spirit, very couragious, strong of bodie, and a mortall hater of Christians, enuious of the glory of his Ancestors, and ambitious to rayse his name aboue any of theirs, had proiected in himselfe the Conquest of the Remaynes of the bordering Europe. But to so great designs he had one vice that resisted all hope of prosperi- tie, which was extreme Auarice, and he fell into the latter times and decrepit age, Vbi vires luxu corruppebantur, contra veterem disciplinam & instituta maiorum, apud quos virtute quam pecunia res militaris melius stetit. His first enterprize was that of Poland, mooued by the Incursions of the Cossacks, which yet he vndertooke of his owne head, without the counsell of any his Viziers (who in a Monarchie growne to the height by ease and wealth, and perhaps, longa dominatione 30 inertes, are euer corrupt and lazie) and against the liking of all the Souldiers, who now contrarie to their Institution being marryed, and Fathers of a Family, entred into Trades, receiuing nothing in Warre more then in Peace, prater pericula & labores, are not easily drawne from their owne Chimneies. This action he thought so easie, as he had disposed of his Conquest, and deu- ded the liue Lions skinne. But being met vpon the Borders with a poore Armie in comparison, he was first arrested at Chotyn a little Fortresse, which he was faine to leaue behind him vntaken. And then seeking to aduance into the plaine Countrey, by forcing the Trenches of the Chan- cellor of Poland, opposed against him, he could neuer procure his Ianizaries to fight, though en- 40 gaging his person once or twice beyond the regard of his qualitie, and his owne Troupes readie to mutinie against him, or to forsake him, he was at last entorced to rayse shamefully his Campe, and to accept of any Treatie to saue his outward honour. In this attempt he lost aboue one hun- dred thousand Horses for want of Fodder, and fourescore thousand men for want of fighting: for they would rather dye, running, or pillaging, or eating, then in the face of the Enemie. For this disgrace he conceived so inward and rooted an indignation against the Ianizaries, and so iust- ly, that he often lamented himselfe, and complayned hee was no King, that was subiect to his owne slaues, vpon whom he spent great Treasures, and yet they would neither fight in Warre, nor obey in Peace, without exacting new bounties and Priuiledges. Delaur Bassa a man of 50 great wit and courage, lately called from the Easterne parts, where hee had long gouerned with honour, who came in, though late, yet in a very braue and Warlike Equipage, aboue all other his Captaines, was suddenly made Great Vizier, the former Huzein Bassa being in the same dis- grace, common with the Souldier, though not in the same fault. This man was neuer bred at Court, but had liued many yeares in Action, and so had neither Faction nor Dependance heere, but stood vpon himselfe and his owne merit: And beeing now vnlooked for, and aduanced to this high dignitie, he wrought vpon the Kings discontent, and nourished it: and in conclusion, brake with him, that it was true, he was no Emperour, nor could be safely aliue, while the Ia- nizaries had the power which they lately vsurped. Informing him, that they were corrupted from their ancient Institution, and were lazie Cowards, giuen ouer to Ease and Lust, Et animo per libidines corrupto, nihil honestum inerat. But if his Maiestie would pull vp his spirits, and follow his aduice, hee would prouide him a new Souldioury about Damascus, and from the Coords, of men euer bred in the Frontier, Hardnesse, and Warre, of 60 great Courage and Experience, and that of them hee should erect a new Militia, that should wholly depend of him, entertayning onely fortie thousand in pay, which should alway be his Guard, and that in the distribution of euery Prouince, he should constitute that the Begh- ler-begh in his Gouernment should trayne some of the Inhabitants, who in all occasions of ma- king a great Armie, should be in readinesse, and hereby hee should spare infinite Treasures spent upon these Drones that eate vp his Estate; And with men of new spirits and hopes, hee should be enabled to doe greater matters, then any of his Ancestors: but withall he desired the King to communicate this counsell to no man, nor to trust his life vpon anothers secrecie. Delanir Bassa neuer reuealing himselfe to any but the King, who extremely pleased with this aduice, that flattered his owne humour, consented, and remitted all to the Viziers direction, who was a true Souldier, and a very wise man, able by his credit in Asia, to performe all hee had vndertaken: for he was exceedingly beloued in those parts, very rich, and had kept Damascus, whereof he was Gauernour, for himselfe in the last Rebellion. Vpon this conclusion betweene them, it was first agreed, that the King should pretend to goe in person against the Emir de Zaida, who was moued to take Armes really to assist in the designe: but they vsed it, to colour the departure of the Emperor; which when it was well weighed, it was found, that then the Army of the Ianizaries must be kept together, which could not agree with their ends. Hereupon the iourney of Mecha was diuulged, that the King might, vnder the shadow of an holy pilgrimage, goe out with a smal trayne, and disperse those who were suspected to him. And for this preparation was made, but somewhat too grossly by melting of all the Plate, Saddles, furniture of house, Lamps of Churches, and whatsoeuer could more easily be conueyed away in metal, with all the Jewels and treasure. This gaue the first suspicion, which was confirmed by diuers vnaduised words let fall from the King, of disdayne against the cowardize of the Ianizaries, and that he would shortly find himselfe soldiers that should whip them; & lastly, dismissing all his household, except some few elect, the discontented obserued and betrayed him. Delanir Bassa kept his owne secret, and in the meane time prepared by his friends in Asia 10000. about Damascus, 10000. from the Coords, besides those in readinesse of the Emir de Zaida, and all vpon pretence of defending the borders of Persia, who hauing intelligence of some change in those parts; And gaue order that all these should meet the King at Damascus, where he would presently cut off his Guard, and stay there, vntill he had regulated his new Armie, and discipline, and then to returne triumphant to Constantinople, and vtterly root out the order of Ianizaries, Spahis, and Timariots, and to exauctorate all their Captaines and Officers to settle a new gouernment, and to change the name of the Citie. And these things succeeding, he then resolved with his new Souldiers to attempt the recouerie of his honour in Christendome: in the meane time to hold a dissembled friendship there in all parts. Certainly, this was a braue and well-grounded designe, and of great consequence for renewing of this decayed Empire, languishing vnder the intolencies of lazie slaues, if God had not destroyed it: It being very true, that the Turkish Emperour stands at the deuotion of his owne troops for peace or warre, life or death, and is in effect nothing but the Steward or Treasurer of his Ianizaries. If this proiect had taken effect, what euents it might haue produced by a Ciuill Warre, is not easie to iudge. For doubtlesse, the Souldiourie here would haue set vp another King, and maintayned him as well as they could, and this European part had beene in danger to haue beene torne away by the diuision. Besides, Delanir Bassa hauing the King and the Treasure in his possession, and his owne credit so great, and his inclination, velle imperare, once discovered, it may well be thought that he had some ends of his owne to share a part of this mightie estate: If on the other side, the Vizier had proued true and faithfull, the reformation and new erection of the Discipline of Warre, and the encrease of Treasure consequent to the dismissal of the old Militia, would haue beene fearefull to all Christendome: But, Ubi est sapiens? Ubi disquisitor saculi huius? Nonne infatuauit Deus sapientiam mundi huius? Perdam sapientiam sapientum, & vanam reddam intelligentiam intelligentium. It is a great question whether is the wiser wilh, that these Counsels had succeeded or not: for either diuision and subuersion, or a new prosperitie and enlargement of their Dominion had necessarily followed.

Some obseruations upon this occasion, will not be very impertinent to those that desire to know as well the disposition and vse, as the things themselves. First, in the purpose of the Souldier, not at all to violate or hurt the King, much lesse to depose and murder him; but onely to take away those about him, whom they thought assistants in this proiect: yet the furie once on foot, they proceeded by missensible steps, to the uttermost of outrage, against many innocents in that businesse, though otherwise obnoxious, and against the Throne and life of their owne Emperour, vbi furor ingruat innocentes ac noxios iuxta cadere. Secondly, in the degrees, that yet the King had not falne thus low, if first hee had not lost that awe and reuerence which alway attendeth vpon Maiestie, by vnseemely offices, done by him in the streets and Tanernes, apprehending many Souldiers for pettie faults, like a Constable, making his person common, cheape, and despised among them which were wont onely to be seene and feared, as somewhat supra humanitatem. And this he did also in hatred and disdayne of those that had in the Warre forsaken him. And now in this last act, if his owne obstinacie had not plunged him into destruction, but that he had softened them by a seasonable yeelding to time, he had preuayled onely by time. Thirdly, in the order, That these Mutiners hauing no head, or direction, kept that reglement, that they tooke oath in their surie, in hot blood, in the Kings yard, not to dishonour, spoyle, nor iacke the Imperiall Throne, neither committed nor suffered any insolence nor violence in the Citie to the Neutrals, but rather proclaymed peace and iustice. Fourthly, in the consequents, that at the third dayes end, all was at quiet, and all men in their trade, as if no such thing had hapned; Onely the Ianizaries suffered no Duan nor Councell, until untill they had received a Donative, as Guerdon of their iniquitie, in which also the infinite waste of Treasure is worthe of consideration, which must of necessitie be exceedingly exhausted by three changes in foure yeeres, and by the late Warres in Persia and Poland: For every Ianizarie in the Citie, absent or present, whose roll is about fortie thousand, receiue five and twentie Chequins gold, besides Spaheis, Iamoglans, and other orders at every alteration, which amounts in all neere to two millions. And now these fellows all lining, that haue tasted the sweet of prosperous mutinies, haud ignari summa scelera incipit cum periculo, peragi cum praemio, they haue taken such a head as cannot safely be suffered on, nor securely be taken off. Lastly, of certaine presages that fore-ran, it being related to mee from the mouth of a Cadee, inward with the King a moneth before the tumult: That Osman dreamed in the Osman's dreame.

10 night, that he thought to ride a Camell, and being mounted, he could not force him to goe by faire meanes nor stripes, and that then he descending in a rage, the bodie of the beast vanished, and left the head in the Kings hand. Who next day troubled at this fancy, sent to a learned Man, familiar with him, for the interpretation. Hee excused himselfe as unfit to giue opinion in a matter of that consequence, but perswaded Osman to send to the Mufti. Hee also craved pardon, but withall said, there was none so fit to interpret it, as Mustafa the Kings Uncle, and now Emperour, who is esteemed a holy man, that hath Visions, and Angel-like speculations, in playne termes, betweene a mad man and a foole. The King repayres to Mustafa, who briefly tells him, The Camell signifies his Empire: his riding, abuse in gouernement: his descension, his disposition: the vanishing of the bodie, the revolt of his Subiects: the head remayning in his hand, onely a bare Title; and that hee should shortly die within few moneths, 20 and lose his Kingdome, but the emptie name of Emperour should accompanie him to his Grave.

Conference betwixt the Emperours Ambassador and the Vizier.

A second of lasse consequence in the Vizier Delauir Bassa, from whom the Lord Ambassador hauing receiued particular friendship about sixe dayes before this vprore, he went to visit, and hauing no other businesse but to perswade him to stay the King from this intended Pilgrimage, the Ambassador gaue him many reasons in the present estate of their owne affaires, especially the Treaty of Poland yet depending. To which the Bassa replied very grauely. Then the Ambassador vrging the feare of some tumult, collected from the licentious speeches rumoured in the Towne, and he was bold to deale plainely, sincerely, and friendly, That if any such thing should happen, the fault would bee imputed to the Bassa, as being of authoritie to perswade the King, whom his qualitie and youth would excuse, but all the furie would be discharged upon the greatest Minister; desiring him to consider the euent, at least, to take his affection 30 in the best part. The old Renard stayed a while from replie: at last, smiling to himselfe at the Ambasador, who perswaded him against that which was his owne counsell, he gaue him a finall answer, that there was no remedie, he durst not hazard himselfe to oppose the Kings resolution: but assured him, hee would so order the matter, as this iourney should not proceed so farre as was expected. The Ambassador concluded for himselfe, desiring then that he would leaue him a particular recommendation to the Chimacham or Deputie as his friend. To which hee sodainly replied, Trouble not your selfe, nor feare; I will neuer remoue so farre, but that I will leaue one of my legs in this Citie to serue you: which the poore man fulfilled; for being murdered in few dayes after, one of his legs whole and entire, was hanged in the Hippodrome, the most publike place of the Citie. Lastly, in things yet to come, and so probably to be suspected, That the Souldiours in Asia, who haue now lost their hopes, will not sit downe by this af-40 front, but rather will attempt some reuenge, for the death of that King who was their Martyr; or that some great Bassaes farre removed from Court, will apprehend this occasion, not to obey an Usurper, set up by treason; And upon this colour ground their owne ambitions, or that all euery where will fall into combustion and intestine Warre; For I dare not hope, that God will open the eyes of Christian Princes to see the littlenesse of their owne vnciuill quarrels, while this mightie Monarchie inuiceth them to concord, and to diuide it as a prostituted spoyle.

On Saturday euening, the first of Iune following, the Capiaga or Maior Domo of the Serraglio, hauing receiued a secret order to remoue the brethren of Osman from their lodgings, and in the night to strangle them: as he was performing his command, ayded with a few of his Carnifices to carrie away the Princes, they cried out: the Pages running to the noise, and encouraged by the Castiaraaga, who had some suspicion, without further examination kill the Ca-50 piaga, now almost euery order hauing risen against their owne head. That night they sent secretly to the Ianizaries and Spaheis, to informe them what they had done, and in the morning early hanged his bodie in the Hippodrome for a publike spectacle. The Souldiers returned in furie to Court, in fauour of the Pages, and demanded iustice against those that had consented to this wicked order; which had made an end of all the Ottoman race, onely this Mustafa being left aliue, who is so holy a Saint, that he will not people the world with sinners, nor indure any women about him. The innocent King protests he knowes nothing of this purpose: and if his command were procured, it was gotten by subreption, and he is easily beleeued. But his mother another Livia, and the new Vizier, Daout Bassa, who had her daughter to wife, were vehemently suspected. It was a day of Diuan or Councell: But these Souldiers would suffer 60 none, untill they had an account of this Treason. The Vizier denies all; the mother is a woman, and hidden in the house: yet it is very likely, they both were guilty to vphold and secure their owne authoritie. It being rumoured, that the Vizier determined to place subditiuously, in the roome of the elder Prince, his owne Sonne, and very like him, and so to gouerne Mustafa for a time

time, and by his remoue, to establish himselfe and his Race for euer. But now somewhat must be done to appease the people; Therefore Daout Bassa is degraded from his Office, and one Hu- zem Bassa newly arriued from the Gouvernement of Cairo, aduanced to his place, with promise of further examination. Since, the furie once ouer, there hath beene no great search nor disco- uery made. I thinke the Sultans Chequines haue quieted the matter. This new Vizier, a man here without friends, yet very rich, of a stubborne and obstinate nature, reported iust in his wayes, but peremptorie and inflexible; Audax, ferox, & prout animum intendit prauus aut indu- strius eadem vi: one from whom all men may expect much good, or much ill; Begins his gouern- ment roughly, vndertakes to punish insolencies early, and professeth a reformation, or to bee a Sacrifice. A man fit for these times that are desperate: For the worst will be, that hee must at 10 last endure their furie. In the meane time he procures a little awe, and hath restored the face of Iustice: yet I am perswaded it cannot last long, the Ghost of Osman will not bee at rest, vntill there are some Parentalia made vnto him. The nature of this Vizier is vnsupportable; But if he preuaile, and once settle, he will anew change the King, and lay an Obligation vpon the Bre- thren of Osman; For he will neuer thinke himselfe secure vnder a man gouerned by an insolent woman, Dominandi auida: And what assurance can he haue in that Prince, Cui non iudicium, non odium est nisi indita & iussa? And though I cannot fore-see the particulars, and where the Sore will breake out, yet I am sure the whole body is sicke; and Princes of Christendome shall haue breath three yeares, before they shall haue cause to feare this State, whose present King is Men- tis inops, and the next in expectation, a Child, vnfit for action, and all the great men and Soul- 20 diers decayed, mutined and corrupted.

And now tyred with this Tragical sight and contemplation, we will commend you to other Pilgrims, who shall guide you thorow the Deserts, to the tops of the holy Mountains, Oreb and Sinai, and after those Holies, recreate your eyes with an admirable Spectacle of the Mamalukes, fine seates of Adiuitie, that profit and pleasure may conclude this Booke.

Alexandrian Patriarch of the Greekes.

HE nine and twentieth of October, 1565. we* ioyned our selues to the Cara- uan, hauing before obtained Letters commendatorie from the Patriarch of the Greekes, which dwelleth at Cairo to the Friers of Mount Sinai. They tell of this Patriarch, that he for prooue of his Religion in contention with a Jew, be- 40 fore the Bassa five and thirtie yeares before, drunke a draught of poyson without harme, which the Jew doing, dyed. At this time, he was one hundred and three yeares old. I had with me three Pilgrims. Nouember the third, we departed from Cairo, and on the fift, came to the shoare of the Red Sea, two miles from which in times past Sues flouri- shed. The next day, we saw at the right hand of the Red Sea, that ditch which lyeth betwixt it and Nilus, which Darius, and after Ptolomeus made thirtie foote deepe, one hundred foote broad, seuen and thirtie miles in length, and there ceased, finding the Red Sea higher three cubits, then the Land of Egypt. The Region is desart, and not inhabited, wherein they vse Camels dung for want of Wood. The Water of the Red Sea, is of the colour that other Seas are of. But the Land adioyning, is Red and Mountainous, whence it is called the Red Sea, or from the Sun- 50 beames reflected on that Sea from those Mountaines. Curtius saith, from a King called Erythrus, (which signifieth Red.) Here first we saw the place where the Israelites had passed thorow that Sea on dry Land. After that, we saw Mara, where Moses by casting in a piece of wood, made the water sweete, which still so continueth, sauing that from the neighbour Sea, it is somewhat brackish: and here our Camels dranke, which in five daies they here first did, which is the more to be admired for their great burthens, some bearing fixe hundred pounds; others, foure hundred or five hundred pounds weight. Here washing in the Red Sea, I hurt my foot on a sharp Corall, whereof here is great store, both Red and White. On the seauenth of Nouember, after mid- night, was an Eclipse of the Sunne, and our Ethiopian Companions continued (as long as it con- tinued) beating Basons. The next day, we went fortie Italian miles: and the day after forlooke 60 the Red Sea, declining on the left hand towards the Mountaines. The tenth, we left the Cara- uan, which went the right-hand way toward Thoro. Wee went towards the left hand, and in a Valley saw that Tree which is called Spina Christi, or Gum Arabike, whereof they say Christs Crowne of Thornes was made. The eleuenth, we saw the tops of Mount Sinai, and admired the height height thereof. The twelfth, we saw a Viper or Aspe, whitish and skaly on the belly, on the backe white and spotted, with two little hornes on the fore-head. The thirteenth, we came to the Monasterie of Saint Katharine in a narrow Valley, at the foot of Mount Sinai, built of square stones, founded (as they say) by the Emperour Iustinian, strong, high, and compassed with pleasant Gardens. The length of it, is one hundred twentie five paces. In it we saw the Sepulchre of Saint Katharine; after that wee saw a Chappell built on that place, where they say was the Bush in which first God appeared to Moses. It hath fifteene Temples, twenty five Chappels, and diuers little Cels, in which Greeke Calogeri doe keepe. In the adioyning Valley is a Hill of maruellous aspect, as if it were all burnt and couered with Ashes, where (they say) Moses kept Iethros sheepe. Neere the Monastery, before Mount Sinai, is the place in Mount Horeb, in which God commanded Moses to goe into Egypt to deliuer the Israelites.

- 10 The foureteenth of Nouember, by a waylesse and broken way, (which the Monkes by steps or staires, such as they are, haue indeuoured to make better) wee ascended Mount Sinai. And when we had passed the two gates, which in old times were shut, we came to three Temples or Chappels; one of Saint Barbara, the second of Saint Marina, the third of Elias the Prophet. Round about are some houses, whilome the Monkes dwellings. In Elias his Temple, behind the Altar, is a Caue, in which (they say) the Prophet lay hid, when hee fled from Iesabel. On the left hand, beneath the top of the Mountaine, is the place where Moses desired to see God. On the top of Mount Sinai, towards the East is a little Temple; and on the left hand a Chappell.
- 20 Heere entred, our Monke-guide said prayers in Greeke, and we sung the Decalogue, Lords Prayer and Creed in German Rithmes. And this is the place where God gaue to Moses the Tables of the Law, written with the finger of God. There is a Chappell in which the Mahumetans doe their deuotions. Eight paces thence is a Caue, in which Moses after his second fortie daies Fast, receiued the Tables of the Law. After these sights, wee descended the Hill, where comming to a certaine Cisterne, we refreshed our selues with meat. And going a little lower, we saw a broken and hollow Rocke on the left hand, wherein Iohn the Egyptian Hermite liued with great austeritie, and writ the Booke, called Scala Paradisi. It cannot bee entred but creeping: within on the right hand, is a stone as it were a bed, and another against it like a feat; aboue, a hole whereby light descendeth, sufficient to reade by. Descending hence on the left hand, in a certaine Valley is the Temple of Saint Iohn Baptist, with a Garden, Vineyard, and little house.
- 30 Against it is another Temple of Saint Anne; and on the left hand, on the top of the Rocke, is a Caue couered with stone, in which two Brethren of a King comming to see the place, settled their abode till death.

Mount Sinai.
Bellonius calleth this Mount Horeb. So Baumgarten, and indeed all these hills are part of Sinai, which yet κατ'εξοχην is giuen to the highest top, which some for deuotion to that Saint, now call Saint Katharines Mount.

Rocke of Iohn the Hermite.

Basilianisme.

- After this we ascended another Hill, whence besides many Regions the Red Sea may be seene. In the Valley thereof is Pantaleons Temple, & an Hermitage. Hence with great labour we descended into a Valley, by a broken and dangerous way, ouer against Saint Katharines Mount, wherein is the Monasterie of fortie Fathers and diuers houses, sometimes the habitations of Hermits. There is a Church of Saint Onophrius, and a pleasant Garden, with various and excellent fruits. Hauing lien all night in this Monasterie, the next morning, with farre greater labour and danger then before, we climbed the high and inaccessible hill of Saint Katharine: on the top whereof is a sharpe Rocke, whereon toward the East is built a low Chappell, fifteene foote long, and ten broad, in the midst whereof is a Monument, in which sometime the body of Saint Katharine was kept. Heere our Monke said his prayers, and we sung Veni Sancti Spiritus in our vulgar tongue. This Mountaine of Saint Katharine is farre higher then the other two, Horeb and Sinai, which both seeme hillocks, not hills to this. In the top we looked to the Red Sea, and Thora. Descending neere the Nets of Horeb, we saw the Rocke which being stricken with Moses his Rod, powred forth water like a Fountaine. In the former part are yet seene twelue rifts or clefts, and as many behind, but lesse perspicuous: but the former part doth still so liuely represent the tokens of the miracle, as if water had but lately gushed thence. That former part is twelue cubits, the whole thicknesse fiftie two foot. On the left hand of the Valley, is the Temple of the Holy Apostle, with a notable Garden, and against it another of Saint George, with a flourishing Garden. Betwixt this Temple and the Monastery of Saint Katharines, is a round Caue cut into the Rocke, five and thirtie foote large, in which they say Aaron made the golden Calfe. The last night we abode in Saint Katharines Monasterie: and the sixteenth of Nouember departing, passed by Raphidim, the eleuenth Mansion of the Israelites, and thence by diuers places of their two yeares Peregrination, where the Tabernacle and Arke were made.

- The eighteenth we came to Thora, which Citie is on the shoare of the Red Sea of no lustre; Toro the Hauen small, in which ships laden with Spices out of Arabia, Abassia, and India, resort. In this Citie wee saw a Mermaids skinne taken there many yeares before, which in the lower part ends Fish-fashion: of the vpper part, onely the Nauill and Breasts remaine, the armes and head being lost. The Inhabitants are most Christians, liue like the Greekes, and performe their Holies in the Arabicke tongue. No Jew may enter this Citie, nor goe to Mount Sinai, the Christians hauing priuiledge (as we were told) to kill them. I saw there one Jew which farmed the Customes of the Christians. the chiefe of the Monasterie, and giuen him certaine Duckets of Gold, we departed from Thora, and in our departure to Cairo, not farre thence saw the twelue Fountaines, and seuentie Palmetrees where the Israelites encamped: But the trees are now much more. The foure and twentieth we found the Carauan new arriued where we had left them. The nine and twentieth, wee passed the Valley against Pihabiroth, betwixt Magdalo and the Sea against Baalsephon. The thirtieth, we came safe to Cairo. At this time was no frost there, nor wet as with vs, but all fresh and flourishing, the Corne and Fruits ripe, as with vs in Summer. The Grasse groweth not as with vs, but is sowne by hand, &c.

For the better vnderstanding of these Relations, and for addition of things heere omitted, I haue thought good to giue you Bellonius, which almost twentie yeares before had made the same Voyage, and Breidenbachius, then Chamberlaine, and after Deane of Mentz, which Anno 1483. had trauelled out of the Holy Land to Sinai, and thence to Egypt; and lastly, Martin Baumgarten, a German Knight, whose peregrination hapned Anno 1507. I haue also here added for further Illustration, the Map of the Israelites peregrination in the Desart, here after mentioned.

Provision for food in the Desart.

Bellonius in company of the Lord of Fumet, attended with twentie lanizaries for his Guard, went from Cairo 1547*. Their provisions were water of Nilus, a Camels load of Bisket, and many Muttons killed, and the flesh shred (the bones being taken out) into small gobbets, and boyled with Onions and Suet till all the liquor was consumed, then seasoned with Salt and Spices, and put vp in Vessels: which continued so fresh, that fifteene daies after being heated with Onions, they seemed as fresh as if they had beene first dressed. It was in September when the the nights were very cold, and the day exceeding hot, for which cause they trauelled much by night, and in three iourneys came to the Well of Suez, in a Castle a mile and halfe from the Towne, the water of which is brackish. They haue there a huge Cisterne for rayne-water, which seldome happeneth, but then with great vehemence, so that once or twice a yeere it is filled. The Well is deep, and the water is drawne by a wheele turned with Oxen; vpon the wheele are two ropes with many Pitchers fastned, which emptie themselues into a Cisterne vnderneath; a thing vsuall in Egyptian Gardens: By the way as we trauelled grew Ambrosia, Sena, Rose of Ierico, Colocynthis, Acacia *, a peculiar kind of Genista, and many other vnkowne plants. Beyond Suez we entred a wide Plaine all greene with Sena, growing of it selfe. Wee 10 found Vipers, and Cameleons differing from the Egyptian, white and red: Capars as high as dwarfe Fig-trees, the Capars as big as Egges and the seed biting like Pepper; the leaues continue greene perpetually, the Wooll is finer then Silke, and whiter then Cotton. The first Village which after Suez we encountred in our way toward Sinai was called Pharagon, not hauing about three or foure houses builded, the people dwelling vnder Palm-trees, (for it seldome raineth) or vnder Rockes in Caues. Here were Pomgranats, Oliues, Figs, Peares, and other Trees profitable by fruit and shade; The Cattell and Fowles are there much lesse then in Egypr.

The ascent of the Mountaine is by hand-made steps for Camels; for Horses can very hardly passe: which when we had ascended, we had two miles to passe betwixt round hills, here and there disperfed, of differing quantitie, before wee came at the Monasterie of Saint Katharine;

Sinai.

20 and although we began to ascend the Hill at breake of day, it was after-noon before wee came thither. The Monkes are Christian Maronites, which obserue the Greeke Rites, of diuers Nations, Syrians, Greekes, and Arabians. Pilgrims haue no place of entertaynment but the Monasterie, which is situate at the foot of Mount Horeb, watered by a Spring thence flowing, cleere, sweet, coole, and excellent. It is walled with high walls against enemies, and hath also a Mosque for Arabs and Turkes. In the vallies are pleasant Gardens, where Vines, Pulse, Herbs, and fruitfull Trees grow, especially Almonds. Mount Sinai when the Sunne riseth, ouer-shadoweth 30 Horeb, which is from it a mile and halfe; and on the top of Sinai yee may view ouer Horeb the Region beyond full of Rockes and Hills, vnto the Easterne Plaine where Ierusalem standeth: to the West, nothing but Arabia Deserta; and North-west, the Region washed by the Mediterranean Sea (but not the Sea it selfe) five dayes iourney thence. Southward are easily discerned both the shoares of the Red Sea extended like an English Bow, and the Ethiopian Deserts and Mountaines, where stands the Monasterie of Saint Macarius, and Saint Antonie. When 40 wee came to the top wee found it hard stone of Iron colour, yet not without plants: for Ab-sinthium seriphium, which beareth the Worme-seed, Panax asclepium, Conyza, and Eupatorium. Arabum groweth about the Mountaine. In height it expells Oeta and Ida, but seemes lower then Olympus. The Plaine on the top is not much greater then that of the greatest Pyramis, that is, foure paces, but a little lower much larger, and is ascended with great difficultie. It is not so cold as the Alpes, nor so hot as the low Plaines of Europe. We lay all night in S. Katharines Monasterie, and the next day were shewed the pensile receptacle of S. Katharines bones, hanging in the Church, which is adorned with goodly Pictures and Relicks. The Rock which Moses strucke with his Rod is a solid stone, right vp, of colour and qualitie like Thebaick Stone, of which 50 Obelisks and Pompey's Pillar in Alexandria were made, then which no Stone more resists Iron.

Dreames of a burning Zone, and earthly Paradise.

But the Legend of Saint Katharine is better knowne by Deane Breidenbach, a man seeming more deuout then Bellonius, who with the Earle of Solms, and Philip de Bichen a German Knight, first visited Ierusalem, and the holy places of Palastina; and thence passed together to Sinai, about sixtie yeeres before. Their iourney was by Gazera, where they saw a huge Fig-tree which bare figs seuen times in the yeere. Thence wee departed (sayth he) on the ninth of September. On the eleuenth, wee passed a sandy Plaine, so large that we could see no end, but the Sea on the West. At last, wee came into Cawath or Cades, where wee had raine, which there is seldome. Now were wee come into a true Desert, vtterly without all signe of habitation. We saw smokes sometimes, but they arose of sands moued with the wind. On the twelfth, we came to Gayon: on the thirteenth, to the Brook Wadalar, where was store of Coloquinrida. On the fourteenth, to Magare and Gebelhelel, where we saw nor man, nor beast, nor bird, but Ostriches. The fifteenth, into a very cold Desert, the earth white like Chalke, and the sand like burnt Lime, called Mynschene. The sixteenth, wee could see no end toward the East, and it is said to reach without habitation two moneths iourney, yea as some thinke, to the torrid Zone which continueth to the terrestriall Paradise: that day we came to Alherok. The seuenteenth to Mesmar, to the foot of the Hill Caleb which seemeth made by hand. The eighteenth, we trauelled the Salt Land, where the deaw, hills, vallies, stones, and sand, are like Salt. The nineteenth, we came to mountaynous places, and saw Mount Sinai and Horeb on the left hand, and the Red Sea on the right, foure dayes iourney distant. The way was rockie and praeipitious. The twentieth, the Spina Christi with their sent refreshed vs, but the Mountaines were rockie and barren, of colour betwixt blacke and red, and the stones in the Sun-shine seemed as if anoynted with Oyle. There we saw a great beast bigger then a Camell, and our Guide said it was an Vnicorne : and there we saw a Shepheard with his flocke, which seemed to vs a maruellous sight. At euen, wee stayed at a place called Scholie. This comfort wee had from our Ladie and S. Katharine, that after mid-night we saw a Star brighter then the rest, to arise from the South, which we called S. Katharines Star, and directed vs before day standing ouer Mount Sinai. On the one and twentieth, we saw Mount Sinai, higher then the other Mountayns, and came to Abalharoch, a Plain euery way enuironed with hils, where Moses kept Iethroes sheep. The two and twentieth, wee came to another Plaine of the Red Sand, and the Hils were red, reaching to the Roots of Sinai. Wee had a very bad way, and entred the Monasterie of Saint Katharine, at the Root of Mount Sinai.

Indulgences.

The specialties of Horeb.

The foure and twentieth of September, taking victuals with vs for two dayes, wee ascended Horeb, and there saw the Fountayne, which when the Monkes were once leauing the place for Todes, Serpents and noysome Creatures molesting them, they were by the blessed Virgin commanded to stay, and doubting whether it might be an illusion, as they were praying, this Fountayne sprang vp amongst them, and still continueth : and here is our Ladies Chappell. We passed higher to an Arch of stone, which they say, no Iew can passe. Then comming to the toppe of that Hill wee came to the Plaine whence Horeb riseth without coniunction of any other Hill, where are three Chappels within one wall, of Marina, Elizeus and Elias : in each of which is seuen yeares Indulgence, and as many Lents. On the top of Horeb is a little faire Chappell shut with an Iron doore, where the Decalogue in two Tables was giuen; wee put off our shooes to enter, and prostrating our selues, kissed the place where Moses receiued the Law. Fiftene paces off is the Caue where he fasted fortie dayes. Ouer it a Moschee, where the Moores daily resort in honour of Moses. There is a great Cisterne, called Moses Well. This Mountayne riseth round, and is not coherent to other Mountaynes, and from the Monasterie to the top thereof are about seuen thousand steps ascending, besides those which are gone on plaine ground. In the former Chappell is plenarie Remission of all sinnes.

Manna.

Hauing refreshed our selues with food we descended towards the West, a dangerous way, and came to the Monastery of fortie Saints, and after a little rest ascended Sinai by a harder way, by Breaches, Rockes, Ouer-hanging Stones, Precipices, Steepes and exceeding heate of the Sun; refreshed in the way by two Springs. After much sweat wee came to the toppe on the five and twentieth of September, euen to the holy place where the Angels had brought from Alexandria, the bodie of the glorious Virgin and Martyr Katharine, in which place it lay three hundred yeares guarded by Angels, till it was revealed to a certaine Abbot, that it should be thence translated to the Monasterie where now it is. We with much ioy kissed the place, and measured our bodies in the place, which is a stonie Plaine, still hauing the Impression of a humane bodie, not made by Arte, but formed by the touch of that sacred bodie. The Red Sea seemed but three leagues distant, being two dayes Iourney. We might thence see the Deserts of Thebaida, where Anthony and the old Heremites liued, and diuers barren Ilands in the Red Sea, and the Deserts of Elim and Sin. Also a place in which they said was a Monastery, the Bels whereof might be heard at all Canonically houres, but the house no man could find. In the descent we came to Saint Katharines Well, and cut twigs of that kind (they said) whereof Moses burning-not-burned-Bush was, good for the falling sicknesse. After much labour wee came to the Monasterie of fortie Saints which the Pagans had martyred, and now there are but two Monkes of Saint Katharines which keepe there. The Edifices are of Mudde and Reeds, except the Church and the Wall encompassing. In their Garden is a Chappell in the Caue where Onophrius liued an Anchorite. Here we did eate, and then compassed Oreb, to returne to Saint Katharines Monasterie. Wee found at the foot of the Mount, the Rocke of Oreb, where Moses smote twice and water flowed. On the sixteenth of September, we confessed our selues, and prepared to see the Relikes of Saint Katharine, and the Tombe being opened, kissed the same, and rubbed our Iewels. The Tombe was in the right side of the Quire, and therein the head, two hands and some other members, the rest dispersed thorow the World. Neare to it is the Chappell where the burning Bush grew. In both these places is plenary pardon, as also many Chappels thereabouts haue great Indulgence. In the twelue Pillars of the Church are many Relikes, and their Pictures hanging by. There is also a Moskee.

The Monkes of Saint Katharines, are of Saint Basils Order : they vse Brazen Rings in stead of Bels : they are Proprietaries, buy, sell, worke with their hands, contentions continually, abstinent in dyet, vse rough Garments : in their Garden is the place where the Golden Calfe was made, the Stone against which Moses brake the Tables, the Water of Curling which Moses made the people drinke, and we saw a Calfe of Stone standing on the toppe of a Hill therein, which they said (and what can bee said which some Fooles will not beleue?) that if any went vp, hee could not find it, whereupon some say, that the Deuill carryed the Molten Calfe thither. In this Valley and the others adioyning to Sinai, is found Manna only in August and September, which the Monkes gather and sell to Strangers. It fells toward day like Dew or Frost on the grasse and leaues, and beeing gathered runnes together like Pitch, and at the Heate of the Sunne or Fire is melted, tasteth like Honey, and cleaues to the Teeth. The Abbot of that Monasterie is constrained ned to giue food to one hundred Arabs daily. All Nations may be receiued into their Order, but Iacobites and Armenians; but beeing receiued must obserue the Greeke Rites. The seuen and twentieth of September wee departed. The first of October, wee came to the common way which leades from Gazeia to Cairo, and by another way to Thor, where the Indian ships arriue without Iron-workes, because they passe by Mountaynes and Rockes of Load-stone which would attract them. Wee came to the place in the Red Sea, where the Israelites passed on dry Land. Next day going along by the shoare, we came to the imperfect workes, whereby the Red Sea should haue beene conueyed to Nilus.

Tale of Load stones.

- Martinus à Baumgarten*, the first of October, 1507. departed from Cairo, and came on the tenth to the Ditch, and the other passage. There are leene still to this day; * as Orosius also testifieth the foot-prints of Chariots and Horsemen on the shoare, which howsoeuer by any con- fused, soone recouer the like forme. On the seuenteenth, we came to Saint Katharines. Thence in the night by Moone light, we ascended Horeb by almost seuen thousand staires of stone, be- sides the greater part naturall. Neere to the Church where Moses receiued the Tables (the Moun- tayne and others adioyning still shine like to molten Copper) is a Moschee of Saracens ouer the place where he fasted fortie dayes in a Caue, which Caue the Saracens still vse to get Prophets, and account the issue there generated, holy. Descending from Horeb, by the West we came to a Valley twixt it and Sinai, in which was the Monastery of the forty Saints, where hauing fed we ascended Sinai with great danger, with wounded hands, sliding feete by the loosenesse of the stones, creeping knees, breathlesse breasts; the Monkes our Guides scarcely able to discern the true Mountayne amongst so many Hill-tops, * of like semblance. The way beeing marked out by certaine stones set by Pilgrimes, brought vs at last to the top, where a fresh Spring refreshed vs. Thence returned to the Monasterie of the fortie Monkes, and compassing Horeb we came to the Rocke in the Root of Horeb, which Moses smote twice: a square stone, with one sharpe point fast to the earth, with twelue marks according to the number of the twelue Tribes. A little off is the place where Dathan and Abiron were swallowed: by night we got to S. Katharines, so wea- rié, that the next day we could scarcely stand on our feet. In our returne, we were often set on by Arabs, which liue in subiection to no man, wearied with the Camels hard pace, and more with Famine (which made vs sometime halfe asleepe, and dreaming of victuals, reaching to receiue them, fall off our beasts) we got at last to Cairo. There wee saw a Ziraph, speckled white and higher then any beast I had euer seene, the necke so long, that it exceeds a mans armes twice stretched out, the head of a Cubit, the brest high, the backe low, eyes pleasing, eating any thing which was giuen it. We saw also an Indian Oxe of a shorter bodie and greater head then ours, with great blunt knottie Hornes. The Mamalukes are of such authoritie, that they doe what they list to any Saracen, turne him out of his house, and dwell in it as long as they please. No Saracen may ride or beare Armes in the Citie, but are slaues to these slaues, giue way, rise, kisse their knees and feet, (their hands as a great great bountie.) Their mad Men and Penitents are esteemed Saints, and may goe into any house and eate, drinke, yea, lye with the woman freely, and that Issue forgotten is esteemed holy: they are honoured whiles they liue, and when they are dead haue Monuments and Temples, and to touch or bury them is a matter of esteeme. One wee saw sitting as naked as hee was borne on the Sands, and heard him commended for that hee mdled not carnally with Women or Boyes, but Female Asses or Mules.

- Of the Mamalukes hee reporteth, that Tongobardinus the Soldan entertayned him in his Pa- lace, shewed him his house of women, whereof thirtie fiue were there present, dallying and tal- king, exceeding fragrant. The next day shewed him a great fight, where almost sixtie thousand Mamalukes were assembled, standing with great reuerence and silence all in white and like ha- bit. The Soldan also with a large blacke beard horned or mitred Diademe in a Summer open Roome and white Raiment: not farre from him his Pope (whom they call Calipha) Sociennus late, a browne man, and beneath him the Turkish Embassador. Beneath the Castle was a large Plaine prepared before to that purpose, in the middelt whereof were three heapes of Sand, fittie paces distant, and in each a Speare erected with a marke to shoote at, and the like ouer against them, with space betweene for fixe Horses to runne abreast. Heere did the yonger Mamalukes gallant- ly adorned, vpon their Horses running a full careere, yeeld strange experiments of their skill, not one missing the marke, first, with casting Darts, and after with their Arrowes, as they ran: and lastly, trying their slaues. Others after this, in the like Race of their running Horses, shot with like dexteritie diuers Arrowes backwards and forward. Others in the midlt of their Race alighted three times, and (their Horses still running) mounted againe, and hit the Marke neuer- thelesse. Others did hit the same, standing on their Horses thus swiftly running. Others three times vn bent their Bowes, and thrice againe bent them whiles their Horses ran, and missed not the Marke: neither did others, which amidst their Race, lighted downe on either side, and a- gaine mounted themselues: no, nor they which in their swiftest course leaped and turned them- selues backwards on their Horses, and then (their Horses still running) turned themselues for- wards. There were, which whiles their Horse ranne, vngirt their Saddles thrice, at each time shooting, and then againe girding their Saddles, and neuer missing the Marke. Some sitting in their Saddles, leaped backwards out of them, and turning ouer their heads, setled themselves againe in their Saddles and shot, as the former, three times. Others laid themselves backwards on their running Horses, and taking their tayles, put them into their mouthes, and yet forgot not their ayme in shooting. Some after euery shot drew out their Swords, and flourished them about their heads, and againe sheathed them. Others sitting betwixt three Swords on the right side, and as many on the left, thinly clothed, that without great care euery motion would make way for death, yet before and behind them touched the Marke. One stood vpon two Horses running very swiftly, his feet loose, and shot also at once three Arrowes before, and againe three behind him. Another sitting on a Horse neither bridled nor saddled, as hee came at euery Marke arose and stood vpon his feete, and on both hands hitting the Marke, sate downe againe 10 three times. A third sitting on the bare Horse, when hee came to the Marke lay vpon his backe and lifted vp his legges, and yet missed not his shoot. After all this they ranne with like swiftnesse (for all these things, which, where is the Vaulter that can doe on his Imaginarie Horse standing still? these did running) and with their staues carried away those Markes, as triumphing ouer their innocent Enemie. One of them was killed with a fall, and two sore wounded in these their Feats of Actiuitie. They had an old graue man which was their Teacher. If I haue long detayned thee in this Spectacle, remember that the Race of Mamaluks should not bee forgotten, the rather, because their name is now razed out of the World; and this may seeme an Epitaph on their Sepulchre, after whom none perhaps are left able to doe the like, nor in all Franciscus Modius 20 his Triumphall Pandects to be paralleled.

The Causes of his going to Persia, and strange Accidents in the way.

50 Nmy first yeares, my friends bestowed on me those Learnings which were fit for a Gentlemans ornament, without directing them to an Occupation; and when they were fit for agile things, they bestowed them and me on my Princes Service, in which I ran many courses, of diuers Fortunes, according to the condition of the Warres, in which, as I was most exercised, so was I most subiect to accidents: With what opinion I carryed my selfe (since the causes of good or ill must be in my selfe, and that a thing without my selfe) I leaue it to them to speake; my places yet in authoritie, in those occasions were euer of the best; in which, if I committed errour it was contra-rie to my will, and a weaknesse in my iudgement; which, notwithstanding, I euer industriated my selfe to make perfect, correcting my owne ouer-sights by the most vertuous Examples I could make choice of: Amongst which, as there was not a Subiect of more worthinesse and vertue, for such Examples to grow from, then the euer-living in honour and condigne estimation, the Earle of Essex: as my reuerence and regard to his rare Qualities was exceeding; so I desired (as much as my humilitie might answere, with such an e-minencie) to make him the patterne of my ciuill life, and from him to draw a worthy modell of all my actions. And as my true loue to him, did transforme mee from my many imperfections, to be, as it were, an imitator of his vertues; so his affection was such to mee, that hee was not onely contented, I should doe so; but in the true Noblenesse of his minde gaue mee liberally

the best Treasure of his mind in counselling me; his fortune to helpe me forward, and his verie care to beare me vp in all those courses, which might giue honour to my selfe, and inworthy the name of his friend: in so much, that after many actions, into which (peradventure) he prouoked my owne slacknesse. The Duke of Ferrara dying, and leauing Don Cesare d'Este Inheritor of that Principallitie, who by his birth could indeed challenge nothing iustly being a Bastard; notwithstanding, in the worlds opinion, hee was most likely to haue beene established in that succession, through the long continuance of the gouernment in that name. The Earle holding opinion, that the Dukes greatest necessitie at the first must be of encouragement, and Captaines sent me presently (though the least amongst many) accompanied with diuers Souldiers of approued valour, and procured the Count Maurice, Generall of the States Army, to write him Letters 10 of as much comfort, as could be giuen from so braue a Prince, and so famous an Estate: and though my journey was vnder-taken in the dead of Winter, and I left no paines vntaken to accelerate it; yet before I could arriue in Italy, I found the Duke giuen ouer to quieter resolutions, and Ferrara yeelded to the Pope; himselfe satisfying himselfe with Modena & Regium, of which he now beareth the Title. Which when I had aduertised the Earle of, as he who neuer had his own thoughts limited, within any bounds of honorable and iust ambition. So he also desired, that those whom he had chosen into a neerenesse of affection, should also answere both his owne conceit of them, and satisfie the world in his election of them: wherefore, not willing I should returne, and turne such a voyce as was raised of my going to nothing; as vnwilling that I should by a vaine expence of Time, Money and Hope, be made a scorne to his, and (through him) to my enemies: He proposed vnto me (after a small relation, which I made vnto him from Venice) the Voyage of Persia. 20 Hauiing with these Aduertisements receiued strength to my owne mind, large meanes, and Letters of fauour and credit to the Company of Merchants at Aleppo.

HONDIVS his Map of Candie.

I embarked my selfe at Venice for Aleppo, in a Venetian ship, called the Morizell, the foure and twentieth of May, 1599. Fiue and twentie daies the ship was sayling betweene Malmocko the Port of Venice, and Zant; in which space one of the worst in the Ship, a Passenger to Cyprus, vsed most scandalous speeches of her Maiestie, which being brought vnto me, not onely moued with the dutifull zeale which a Subiect oweth to his Prince; but euen with that respect which euery Gentleman oweth to a Lady, I commanded one of my people to giue him a fit reward for so vile an abuse: which was no sooner done, but the Ship was all in an vprore. And though the cause of the act was iust, and so vnderstood by diuers principall Merchants, which went to Zant, and that the punishment was nothing proportionable to the sceleratnesse of the fact; yet through the instigation of one Hugo de Potso, a Portugall Factor, which was going to Ormus, (though they shewed all to be satisfied, because they durst doe no other, yet) when we were to haue departed in the Ship from Zant, they would no more receiue vs, so that we were forced to hire a Carramosall to carrie vs to Candy, where we receiued most honorable entertainment, (the comming of Strangers thither being a thing so vnusuall, that the Duke desired to shew the Magnificence of the great Signorie to vs that came first, and peraduenture should bee the last for a long time.

Duke of Candy
vnder the state of Venice.

From thence in the same Carramosall we departed to Cyprus and Paphos, where wee found nothing to answere the famous Relations giuen by ancient Histories of the excellency of that Iland, but the name onely, (the barbarousnesse of the Turke, and Time, hauing defaced all the Monuments of Antiquitie) no shew of splendor, no habitation of men in a fashion, nor possessors of the ground in a Principallitie; but rather Slaues to cruell Masters, or Prisoners shut vp in diuers prisons: so grievous is the burthen of that miserable people, and so deformed is the state of that Noble Realme. Notwithstanding, the Redemption of that place and people were most facile (being but foure thousand Turkes in the whole Iland.)

Cyprus.

From Paphos we went to the Salines in a little hired Barke, where we found the Morizell, in which wee came to Zant. The Portugall and his Complices presently went on shoare to the Subbassa of the place, (for so is called the Gouernor there) and told him diuers Pirats who had lost their ships, were come into the Harbour in a small Boat, amongst whom were some Boyes and Youths, worth much Money; besides, I know not what Jewels and Treasure we had amongst vs, with the which he would giue him a good preuent also, if he would send some of his Souldiers and take vs. At this Oration of his, were present certaine Armenian Passengers, who had knowne vs in the ship, which moued with the enormitie of so vile an act (that Christians should sell and betray Christians to Turkes, and that vpon no cause of offence, which they were witnesses of, we should be persecuted with such a kind of inhumane crueltie) with all speed possible hired a Boat themselves for Alexandretta, came with it vnto vs, provided in it victuals for vs, and the Masters themselves to lose no time; and beseeching vs, with teares in their eyes, to flie from thence with all speed possible, relating vnto vs the scelerat Treason conspired against vs, and our imminent perill. Wherefore we instantly changed into that Boat, and perceiuing a Frigate a farre off, rowing towards vs for haste, left most of our things behind vs, and yet could not make so much speed, but that the Janizaries which were in the Frigate, and chased vs, bestowed some shot vpon vs, and had peraduenture overtaken vs, if the night had not ended their chasing vs, and our dangers.

A strange deli-uerance.
Wickednesse
of a Portugall.

This Boat in which we were, was an ordinary Passenger betweene Cyprus and Alexandretta, a small way off, onely a night and a halfe sayling, and halfe a daies sayling: So that by reason the Master was vnlike to mistake his way, much lesse so iust contrary as hee did, towards two houres in the night, we met another passage-Boate, put off from Famagusta, holding the course which we intended. The night was faire, with the shining of the Moone and Star-light; yet, by reason of the difference in sayling, wee first lost sight of that Boate, then by our different course, the Master of ours, in stead of Alexandretta, going for Tripoly, which certainly was a great worke of God to preserue vs. The other Boat, at breake of the day, being taken at the entrance of the Port of Alexandretta, by certaine Turkish Pirats, who put all to the sword that were in it, and hearing of vs, we had rowed so farre into the Riuer Orontes, before they could recouer vs, that they durst no further prosecute that prey. There we found a goodly Countrey, repleat euen naturally with all the blessings the earth can giue to man, for the most part vncultivated here and there (as it were) sprinkled with miserable Inhabitants, which in their fashion shewed the necessitie they had to liue, rather then any pleasure in their liuing.

Another deli-
uerance.

From thence we sent our Interpreter to Antiochia, to prouide vs Horses to bring vs thither, which he returned within two daies after, and with them wee proceeded thither, full of great care how we should escape from thence. The Turke hauing giuen certaine scales to trade in, out of which, as it was vnlawfull for any to conuerse; so it must needs be an vneuitable peril for so great a company, when the same great Providence, which at first defended vs from the former hazards, gaue vs the good hap to meete with two Janizaries, Hungarish-runnagates, who vnderstanding that we were Christians, compelled against our dispositions into that place, our intention to be a visitation of Ierusalem, and withall, our feare of some great preiudice by our being arrined out of the distinguished places for all Christians; hauing told vs first, that they themselues had beene Christians, and though they had, for reasons best knowne to themselues, altered that condition; yet they wished well to those which still were so, and especially, to all of those parts: and afterwards cheerefully comforting vs, inuited vs to lodge in their house, securing vs, by a number of protestations, from al dangers; which as they courteously offered, so (if I may giue so faire a terme, to such a people) they honorably performed: For being by the Cady of Antiochia required to present vs vnto him, they did not onely deny vs, as bound vnto it by the lawes of hospitalitie, in respect of their promise, as they themselues said; but called fiftie other Ianizaries of Damasco, their friends to defend vs, if the Cady should haue offered violence.

Those Ianizaries of Damasco, amongst other Garrisons, were appointed as those of Cairo against the inuasions of the Arabs, who are through all those Prouinces, a people dispersed, liuing in Tents, without a certaine place of abode, remouing their habitations according to the seasons, and their owne Commodities: part of which, who are remooued on that side of Euphrates, which is of Mesopotamia, now called Diarbeck, are peaceable to the Turke, and not much infestious to Trauellers. Their King being a Saniacke of the Turkes, and by that Title holding Ana and Der, two Townes vpon the Riuer, which pay him his stipend. The other, vpon the other side towards Egypt, through all Arabia Petra, and Deserta, and spreading as farre as the limits of Arabia Felix; being in multitudes, and not possible bee brought to a quiet and well-formed manner of liuing, are dangerous to Strangers, and continuall spoylers of those parts of the Turkes Dominions, which euery way border vpon them: for the safetie of which (as I said) those two Garrisons of Cairo and Damasco were instituted; the first, of twelue thousand, the other of fiftene hundred Ianizaries. Those Ianizaries (which were appointed for the safetie of the Prouinces, and had their first priuiledges, not onely for a reward to their vertues; but to binde them by such rewards, to answer the Princes confidence in them) now obey no authoritie which calleth them to other Warres: but by combining themselues in a strength together, tyrannize the Countries committed to their charges: in such a sort, that they are not onely Princes (as it were) ouer the people, but doe also terrifie the greater Ministers, (a great weaknesse in the very Basis of so huge an estate) want of necessary prouision for the warres in all those parts; not speaking of those for peace, thence the ruine of the Prouinces, for the most part, and the misery of those poore focke of people, which doe liue in the parts inhabited, are onely the meanes to giue him peace. Yet the negligence of the Princes Christian, will not make vse of these extreame defects of his to amplifie their Dominions, to eternize their Honours; and (that which is the greatest) to glorifie God, which hath made them Princes, onely to execute his iudgements. I will leaue them, and speake of my Ianizaries rare disposition vnto me, who did not onely performe their promise in defending me in Antiochia, but deliuered me safely from them into our English Consuls hands in Aleppo: from whom, and from all the Merchants there abiding, I receiued such an entertainment, with so carefull, so kind, and so honourable a respect, as I must needs say, they were the onely Gentlemen, or the most benigne Gentlemen that euer I met withall. For my company being so great, that it was no light burthen vnto them; besides, gaue an occasion to the Turkes condition of getting to make quarrels for that end: so that they were not onely at expence by defraying me and mine, but at more by preserving vs from oppression amongst them. I had not beene fully one moneth expecting a commoditie of passage by Carauan into Persia: but that the Morizell arriued, who presently had the aduice of my being at Aleppo: And though that Hugo de Posso threatned as much as an ill mind, and great purse could make him hope to preuaile against me by; and questionlesse had raised some great trouble against me, if he had come safe to Aleppo. Yet euer the first prouidence which saued me before, determined so well also for me then, that foure miles from Aleppo he dyed: by which meanes I was preserved from perill, and those honest Merchants (my friends) from great trouble.

After sixe weekes staying in Aleppo (a wearisome time to my selfe, being drawne from thence continually by the instigation of my desire, which longed for the accomplishment of the end, that I proposed to my selfe, and as chargeable a time for my friends, which would needs make me a burthensome guest vnto them) the Tasterdall, which is the Treasurer, and the great Cady, which is (as it were) the Lord Chiefe Iustice of Babylon, arriued at Aleppo, from thence to goe by the Riuer of Euphrates to the place of their Regiment. With those, as diuers others went, so did I also, for the more securitie of my Voyage (their company being euer defended, besides with the respect of their persons, with a good company of Ianizaries) to Birr, which is the place of imbarment. Diuers of our Merchants brought me, and left me not vntill I was boated. Thirtie daies we were going vpon the Riuer to Babylon, resting euery night by the shoare side: In all which way we found few Townes; onely Racha, Ana, Derrit, and otherwise as little habitation, except heere and there a small Village: and one of better reputation, which is the landing place, thirtie miles from Babylon, called Phalugium. To tell wonders of things I saw, strange to vs, that are borne in these parts, is for a Traueller of another profession then I am, who had my end to see, and make vse of the best things; not to feed my selfe and the world with such trifles, as either by their strangenesse might haue a suspicion of vntruth: or by their lightnesse nesse adde to the rest of my imperfections, the vanitie or smalnesse of my iudgement. But because I was desirous to certifie my selfe truly of the estate of the Turke, in those parts through which I passed, vnderstanding where we lodged one night, that the Campe of Aborisci, King of those Arabs, which inhabite the Desart of Messopotamia, was a mile off; I hazarded my selfe in that curiositie to goe into it, and saw a poore King with tenne or twelue thousand beggerly Subiects, liuing in Tents of blacke Haire-cloath: yet so well gouerned, that though our cloathes were much better then theirs, & their want might haue made them apt enough to haue borrowed them of vs; we passed notwithstanding through them all in such peace, as we could not haue done, being Strangers, amongst ciuill bred people. That day, as it hapned, was the day of Iustice amongst them, which was pretty and warlike. Certaine chiefe Officers of the Kings, mounting on horse-backe, armed after their manner, with their Staues, Targets, Bowes and Arrowes; and so giuing iudgement of all Cases, which the people brought before them. The King gaue vs good words, without any kind of barbarous wondring, or other distastfull fashion. But when we returned to our Boat, we found the Master of his house, Master of our Boat, with a sort of his Arabs: and in conclusion, we were forced to send his Master three Vestes of cloath of Gold, for beholding his person. This is that King of the Arabs, which I said before, was a Saniacke of the Turkes; and for that place held of the Turke, Ana and Dirr, two Townes vpon the Riuer.

As soone as we came to Babylon, hauing put the stocke which I had all into Iewels and Merchandize, to carry the fashion of a Merchant; at the Dogana, which is the Custome-house, all (whatsoeuer) was stayed for the Bassa: and (as I perceiued) not so much for any great vse which he meant to speake of those things; as for the suspition which hee had of me, and mine extraordinary company bearing much cause thereof with it; and because I gaue out I had more goods comming with the Caranan by Land, to binde me not to start from thence. In the meane time, by very necessitie, hauing left me nothing in the world; what extreame affliction I was in, by that meanes, for the present: and in what iust cause of feare for the future, euery man may easily iudge. I had my Brother with me, a young Gentleman, whose affection to me, had onely led him to that disaster, and the working of his owne vertue: desiring in the beginning of his best yeares, to inable himselfe to those things, which his good mind raised his thoughts vnto. I had also fise and twentie other Gentlemen, for the most part: the rest, such as had serued me long, onely carried with their loues to mee, into the course of my fortune. I had no meanes to giue them sustenance to liue, and lesse hope to vnwrap them from the horrible snare, into which I had brought them, being farre from all friends, and further from counsell, not vnderstanding the language of the people, into whose hands I was false, much lesse their proceedings: onely thus much I knew, they were Turkes, inhumane in their natures, and addicted to get by all meanes iust and vniust.

But I will leaue my selfe a little in that great straight, and speake of Babylon; not to the intent to tell stories, either of the huge ruines of the first Towne, or the splendor of this second: but because nothing doth impresse any thing in mans nature more, then example, to shew the truth of Gods Word, whose vengeance, threatned by his Prophets, are truly succeeded in all those parts. Ninieue (that which God himselfe calleth, That great Citie) hath not one stone standing, which may giue memorie of the being of a Towne: one English mile from it, is a place called Mosul, a small thing; rather to bee a witnesse of the others mightinesse, and Gods iudgement, then of any fashion of Magnificencie in it selfe. All the ground on which Babylon was spread, is left now desolate, nothing standing in that Peninsula, betweene the Euphrates and the Tigris, but onely part, and that a small part of the great Tower. The Towne, which is now called Bagdat, and is on the other side of Tigris, towards Persia (onely a small Suburbe in the Peninsula) but remoued from any stirpe of the first; to which men passe ordinarily by a Bridge of Boats, which euery night is dissolued, for feare either of the Arabs, or some storme vpon the Riuer, which might carrie away the Boats, when there were no helpe readie. The buildings are after the Moriseco fashion, low, without stories; and the Castle, where the Bassa is resident, is a great vast place, without beautie or strength, either by Art, or Nature; the people somewhat more abstinent from offending Christians, then in other parts, through the necessitie of the Trade of Ormuz: vpon which standeth both the particular and publike wealth of the State. Victuals are most abundant, and excellent good of all sorts, and very cheape; which was a mightie blessing for mee, which had nothing but a generall Wardrobe of clothes, not in our Coffers, but vpon our backs; which we were forced to make money of by piece-meale, according to the falling of the Lot, and our necessitie; and with that liued: and if feeding-well had beene all, which we had cause to care for, we also liued well.

But after one moneth was past, and time fastned euery mans eyes more firmly vpon vs: One day a Florentine Merchant (whom I had onely knowne in the way betweene Aleppo and Babylon, by a riding acquaintance) came vnto mee, and after a little other discourte, told mee, that there was a great muttering amongst diuers great men there, what I was, and what my designs might bee; that he found me to be dangerously spied after: and wished mee to haue regard, (if not not to my selfe) yet to so many, which he did imagine were impawned in that misfortune by my meanes. And though it were true, that hee came vpon the motion of an honest, pious, and charitable heart; yet I was so fearefull of an Italian Merchant, that I did rather imagine him to be the spie, then lightly to haue bene an instrument of his preuention. Therefore agreeing with him in the complement onely, I answered determinately in the rest; that I knew no iust cause of perill, therefore I feared none; and if there were any curious eyes vpon me, because of the number of my companie, the Carauan comming, they should see good vse made of them all; and vtill that time I would haue patience with their looking and speaking. Him I thanked for his kindnesse, and offered my selfe largely vnto him, as though I had least suspected him; though in truth I did most: and most vniustly. For, two dayes after he returned to me againe, and as a man moued in his very soule with anguish, told me, that within ten dayes the Carauan of Aleppo would arriue; in the meane time, beseeched me not to couer my selfe longer from him, who did so truly wish me well, not so much for my person (which he could know little) but because his conceit was, that I would not haue hazarded my selfe in such a iourney, but for some great end, which he did beleue well of; and besides, in charitie to a Christian, and so many Christians with me: saying, that there was a Carauan of Persian Pilgrims, arriued two dayes since from Mecca without the Towne, who were forced to take that way (though the longest) by reason of the Plague, which rained very exceedingly in those places, by which they should haue passed. Hee was not ignorant of my wants, for which hee also had prouided; and taking me by the hand, beseeched me againe to beleue him, and to goe presently with him to the Carauan: which I did, not being able to answer, through admiration of so generous a part in him, and an amazement, with a thousand diuers thoughts spred vpon mee. When I came there, hee brought me to a Vittorin, of whom hee had alreadie hired Horses, Camels, and Mules for mee; and I found a Tent pitched by his seruants: and then opening his Gowne, hee deliuered mee a bag of Chequins, with these very words: The God of Heauen blese you, and your whole companie, and your enterprise, which I will no further desire to know, then in my hope, which perswadeth me that it is good; My selfe am going to China, whence if I returne, I shall little need the repayment of this courtesie, which I haue done you with a most free heart; if I die by the way, I shall lesse need it: but if it please God so to direct both our safeties with good providence, that we may meet againe, I assure my selfe, that you will remember mee to be your friend; which is enough, for all that I can say to a man of your sort. And almost, without giuing me leasure to yeeld him condigne thanks (if any thanks could bee condigne) for so great and so noble a benefit, he departed from mee. And as I heard afterward from him by Letters from Ormuz, he receiued much trouble after my departure, through his honourable desire to perfect the kindnesse which he had begun. For, imagining that by the continuall spies, which claue to my house, that my flight could not be secret: hee had no sooner left mee in the Carauan, but that he changed his lodging to mine, saying that I had done the like to his; and went to the Cady, telling him that I was sicke, desiring his Physician to visite mee, knowing well enough that the Cady had none, but onely to giue colour to my not appearing in the Towne. The Cady answered, he was sorrie for my sicknesse, and would send to the Bassa for his Physician, which Signior Vittorio Speciera (for so was this honourable Florentine called) would by no meanes; hoping, as hee said, that my sicknesse would not bee so great, as would require the trouble of his Highnesse. By this meanes fife dayes passed before I was missed; and when I was once discovered to be gone, fiftie Ianizaries were sent after mee, to bring mee backe againe: the Carauan hauing diuided it selfe by the way, whereof one part went a visitation of a Santon in the Desarts of Samarone; and the other passed the right way for Persia by the Mountaines, gouerned by a Prince of the Courdines, called Cobatbeague. The Ianizaries hearing of them to be past, and thinking that all had bene so, they returned: and that noble-minded Florentine was forced to pay fife hundred Crownes, to make his peace with the Bassa.

My frailtie gaue mee a continuall terrour, during those thirtie dayes, in which wee wandred with that companie of blinde Pilgrims through the Desarts; not knowing what God had wrought for my securitie, and those which were with mee, by that good man, Signior Vittorio. At the end of which wee arriued in the King of Persia's Dominions, hauing first passed a great tract of good and ill Countries, the Desart places of which being onely sand, gaue no meanes for Inhabitants to liue; the fruitfuller parts were vsed by certaine people, called Courdines, liuing in Tents, knowing no other fruit of the earth, but what belonged to the sustenance of their Cattell, vpon the Milke, Butter, and Flesh, of which they liue, ruled by certaine particular Princes of their owne, which giue partly an obedience to the Turke, and part to the Persian, as they are neereft the Confines of the one or the other. Yet in that simplicitie of liuing (not being without that contagion of all Mankind, of all Prouinces, and of all States, ambition of getting superioritie, and larger Dominion) some Warres daily grow in amongst them, euen to the extirpation of a whole Nation: as we found freshly, when we passed by one of those Princes, called Hiderbeague, all whose people were deuoured by the sword, or carried away captiue by Cobatbeague; and himselfe remayned onely with some twentie soules, in certaine poore Holds in a Rocke.

The

The precise summe, which I receiued of the Florentine, I set not downe, to preuent the scandales of diuers, who measuring euery mans mind by the straightnesse of theirs, will beleue no act, which doth not symbolize with themselves: but so much it was, that being thirtie dayes vpon the way to the Confines; then fiftene from the Confines to Casbine, where wee attended one moneth the Kings arriual; it was not onely sufficient to giue vs abundant meanes for that time, but to clothe vs all in rich apparell, fit to present our selues before the presence of any Prince, and to send extraordinarily in gifts, by which wee insinuated farre into the fauour of those, which had the authoritie of that Prouince, during our abode, and expectation of the Kings comming: in which time we were well vsed, more by the opinion, which they had, that the King would take satisfaction by vs, then by their owne humours; being an ill people in themselves: and onely good by the example of their King, and their exceeding obedience vnto him. The Gouvernour visited mee once; Marganabeague, Master of the Kings house, (whom I had won vnto me by Presents) came oftentimes to see mee: besides (as it seemed) being more inwardly acquainted with the Kings inclination, fitted himselfe more to that, then others did, which knew it lesse.

II.

20 Of Abas King of Persia, his Person, Vertues, Perils, Escapes, Aduancement, Government, and Conquests.

AND now that I am in Persia, and speake of the Kings absence; since hee is both one of the mightiest Princes that are, and one of the excellentest, for the true vertues of a Prince, that is, or hath beene; and hauing come to this greatnesse, though by right; yet through the circumstances of the time, and the occasions, which then were, toly his owne worthinesse, and vertue, made way to his right: besides, the fashion of his gouernment differing so much from that which wee call barbarousnesse, that it may iustly serue for as great an Idea for a Principalltie, as Platoes Commonwealth did for a Gouernment, of that sort.

30 I hold it not amisse, to speake amply first of his Person, the nature of his People, the distribution of his Gouernment, the administration of his Iustice, the condition of the bordering Princes, and the causes of those Warres, in which hee was then occupied; that by the true expression of those, this discourse may passe with a more liuely, and a more sensible feeling.

His Person then is such, as well-vnderstanding Nature would fit for the end proposed for his being, excellently well shaped, of a most well proportioned stature, strong, and actiue; his colour somewhat inclined to a man-like blacknesse, is also more blacke by the Sunnes burning: his furniture of his mind infinitely royall, wise, valiant, liberall, temperate, mercifull, and an exceeding louer of Iustice, embracing royally others vertues, as farre from pride and vanitie, as from all vnprincely signes, or acts; knowing his power iustly what it is; and the like acknowledgement will also haue from others, without any gentilitious adoration; but with those respects, which are fit for the maiestie of a Prince; which foundeth it selfe vpon the power of his State, generall loue, and awfull terrour. His fortunes determining to make prooue of his vertue, draue him (in his first yeeres) into many dangerous extremities; which hee ouercomming by his vertue, hath made great vse of, both in the excellent encrease of his particular vnderstanding, and generall tranquillitie, strength of his Countrey, and propagation of his Empire. For the Lawes, and Customes, or both, of that Kingdome, being such, that though the King haue a large encrease of Issue, the first-borne onely ruleth; and to auoide all kind of cause of ciuill dissention, the rest are not inhumanely murdered, according to the vse of the Turkish gouernment, but made blind with burning Basons: and haue otherwise all sort of contentment and regard fit for Princes children. Xa-Tamas King of Persia dying without Issue, Xa-Codabent, his brother was called blind to the Kingdome; who had Issue, Sultan Hamzire Mirza the eldest, who succeeded him, and this present King called Abas.

50 The eldest Sonne of the King remayned at the Court of his Father, administering all that, which his Fathers defect of light vnabled him to doe. Abas the second Sonne, twelue yeares of age vnder the gouernment of Tutors, held the Prouince of Yasde; and (as Courts are full of Rumours, and suspicion neuer wanteth in Princes, especially which haue such imperfections, as they are compelled to take knowledge of) the vertues of Abas, by which hee bound to him the hearts of his Prouincials, spread themselves further, and so to the Court; where they were increased to such a condition, as altered the Father, and Brothers reioycing in them, to an opinion

60 that his winning of the affections of the people, proceeded not from any other worthinesse, but artifice; which had the intent of it stretching to the Crowne: which tooke such hold in the Fathers minde, worne with age and griefe, and sore with his late misfortunes, that hee resolved secretly his death: The newes of which being brought to Abas, speedily by the meanes of secret friends, not onely to himselfe, but to his Gouvernours (which as they were the greatest of the

the state, so they were not unfriended in the Court) being so farre from any such deligne, that he had no sort of prouision at hand to defend himselfe; hee fled to the King of Corassan, a Countrey of the Tartars, limiting vpon the East of Persia, euer infestuous to that State, not more in their owne disposition (being a people giuen to spoyle, vnquiet, and which cannot liue in rest) then through their dependance vpon the Turke, whose Religion they professe (which the Persians do not, but much altered) and whose Pensionaries they were, by which they were bound in all seasons, when the Turke was tyed to the Christians wars, to diuert the Persian from looking to the commoditie of such a time; besides, on occasions, the Turke vsed to transport great forces of them ouer the Caspian Sea into Siruana; and from thence passed them into Hungarie; eyther the longer way by Land, or the shorter by Sea, ouer Negropont. To this King Abas was exceeding welcome, and cherished, and honoured like his owne Sonne. Shortly after the flight, the Father dyed, and Sultan Hamzire Mirza, his Sonne, succeeded him, who renewed the Truce with the Turke, through the necessitie which hee had to vse the most, which his strength and power could yeeld him, to suppress a great Rebellion of the Turcomans: whom, at the last, he so brake with diuers Battels, and all other sort of afflictions, that they deliuered him vp their Princes, and then themselues. Their Princes he beheaded, and of them, slue twentie thousand of the ablest for the warres, assuring his peace with them by their extremest ruine; and as he was, by all reports, a most braue, and warlike Prince, hauing pacified his owne State, and desirous to recouer, not onely what was freshly lost; but all which was formerly taken from the Sophies Kingdome, by the power of the Ottomans; vnited all his thoughts, and all his Councils to that one great end; which all finished with his life, ending it selfe by Treason of his Princes (not without perswasion of the Turke) when hee had fit yeares, minde, and courage; and meanes ioyned with occasion, to haue made himselfe the greatest Prince of many Ages: all which though they, made his death miserable, yet the manner was more miserable; being vilely slaine by his Barber retyring halfe drunke from a Banquet, to which hee was prouoked by the Conspirators, which presently parted the State betweene them; euery man making himselfe absolute Prince of those Prouinces, which they had in gouernment; and parting the Royall Treasure amongst them for their reciprocall mayntenance, disposed themselues vnitedly to resist the comming in of Abas; whom notwithstanding they did not much feare, hauing promise of the Turke, that hee should be detayned in Corassan where he was refuged: and knowing that he had neither Men nor Money, nor yeares to giue him any incouragement to attempt against them, who had soone confirmed themselues, both with giuing good satisfaction to the people, and with liberalitie to the Souldioury; and their entrance into the State being without opposition, and so, without offence, made the foundation both more sure and more facile.

Abas in the meane time, whose iust Title made him King, assured himselfe that both the murder of his Brother, and this parting of the State, had the Turkes counsell concurring with those Princes Impietie: and not doubting but the King of Corassan was also perswaded to detayne him resolved notwithstanding by his necessitie, began to deale boldly with him for his assistance against his Rebels, the King of Corassan, though pre-occupied by the Turke, yet desirous to bee his Friend as farre off, and also doubting the successe of Abas, neither hauing yeares, nor experience, nor Friends; In fine, being destitute of all reasonable hope, not to moue the Turkes displeasure vpon such a disadvantageous condition, was notwithstanding contented to see whether some thing might be moued by such a helpe as should not appeare to be giuen by him, but rather voluntarie followers of Abas his fortune: he gaue him three thousand Horse onely to put him in possession of that State, which by his vertue, and fortune, is growne now so great, that it hath deuoured all the States of the Tartars, extended it selfe so farre as Cabull to the East; the Arabian gulfe downe to Balsaracke on the South; within three dayes Iourney of Babylon on the West; and to Tauris on the North; embracing the whole Circumference of the Caspian Sea vnto Astracan, which is the vttermost of the Moscouites Dominion, and Seruane of the Turkes, which lyeth vpon that Sea: an Empire so great, so populous, and so abundant; that as it may compare with most of the greatest that euer were, so is it terrible to the Turkes which is the greatest that now is; though I doe thinke verily, That in Asia the Persian hath as great an extent of Territories, as the Turke, and better inhabited, better gouerned, and in better obedience and affection, I am sure he hath. With this small troupe, the King of Persia, guided by his infinite Royall courage, entred Persia. But as those which are wicked, are euer so well instructed in the Art of their possession, that they neuer want Instruments in themselues to deuise, and in others to act those counsels which must euer be waking, to maintayne what they haue gotten by their sceleratenesse. So their Spyes hastened, with such diligence, to giue those Rebels notice, of their Kings being on foot, that the next of them to him, had time to arme great forces, and encountred him in a Prouince, called Sisiane: and though his inuincible spirit, without any sparke of feare, made him aduenture to fight vpon so vnequall termes, as was three thousand against twentie thousand: he found by his experience, that Maiestie and right, is nothing without power to beare them vp: and that no exquisite vigour of the minde, can resist the violence of sinister fortune, nor oppression of many hands. Yet did Fortune so much care (for so great vertue) that she gaue him way to escape to the Mountaynes, all the rest of the small troupe beeing cut in pieces. This victory assured the Rebels (as they thought) from all further danger; the King of Persia, whose owne minde ever comforted him, with a stedfast assurance of his greatnesse, to which hee is now growne, hauing recouered the Mountaynes, liued amongst the Heardel-men for three monethes vnknowne, changing continually from place to place, without any certaine abode, accompanied onely with ten or twelue followers, which were of his first Gouvernours, and other young Gentlemen brought vp with him from his child-hood. But being now no longer able to temporize with his great desire, resolving to proue the last, and the vttermost of his fortune, and remembering how much loue and affection those of Tasid had shewed towards him in the time of his gouerning them, and how much he had truly deserued of them, determined to shew himselfe in that Prouince; and prooue what effect the Maiestie of his person, the iullice of his cause, and former obligation would worke in them: which, though it were a foundation prooued euer false, almost by all experiences, The peoples affections euer raising mens hopes, and ruining their persons: Yet it prooued otherwise with this King; who was no sooner certainly knowne in those parts, but numbers of people came flocking to him, armed and appointed for the warres: in such sort, that before any prouision could be made against him (this being an accident so farre removed from all sort of suspicion) he had a power together, too strong to bee easily suppressed; which was no sooner heard by Ferrat Can, a great Prince, and discontented with the alteration of the gouernment (to whose share none of that partition had falne, his fortune being such, that at the time of the other Kings death, he had none of the Prouinces to administer, and they were parted onely betweene them, which held them) hee I say, with his Brother, and a company of some ten thousand, came and ioyned themselues to the forces of the King. Neither were the men so welcome, as that Ferrat Can (being a wise Prince, and a great Souldier) grew a partie, and such as the King also stood in need of: Neither did the King lose any sort of opportunitie, but hearing of the Assembly which certaine of the Princes were making in the neere Prouinces vnto him, with all speed fell vpon them, and ouerthrowing them followed them as farre as Casbin.

In the meane time, those of Shyras, Asphaan, Cassan assisted by the Kings of Gheylan, and Mazandran, gather mightie forces; the Turkes armed at Tauris, and the Prince of Hamadan, hauing called in a strength of the Courdines, to his assistance, was marching also towards Casbin: So that the King was likely to bee so inclosed with all these Armies, that his first victory would rather haue proued a snare to his intrapment; then important, as he hoped, to the summe of his affaires: Whence he resolved to helpe, with Art, that which hee was much too weake to accomplish by strength. Wherefore he leaueth Ferrat Can in Casbin with some fve thousand men, accompanied with Zulpher his Brother; and himselfe, with the rest of his power marched towards the Can of Hamadane. Ferrat Can, according to the deliberation taken betweene the King and him, shewed himselfe altered from the Kings part, writeth to the Rebels, which were all, in a grosse, aduanced as farre as the mid-way betweene Cassin and Casbin, and offereth not onely to ioine that strength which he had with them, but to mutinie the Kings Armie, which was lodged in the Mountaynes towards Hamadane, in a shew to keepe those straights, to giue impeachment to the passage of that other Army; but indeed to protract time onely, and to expect the euent of his other counsels. The other Cans rebelled easily, and desirously imbraced Ferrat Cans proposition; hastened the Army towards Casbin, which they entred without difficultie, both by the nature of the place, which is not of any strength, and conueyance of Ferrat. There were many dayes spent in Counsell, and at last it was concluded, since the suppression of the King was certaine, being abandoned by him which was his onely Captaine and Counsellour; by so great a part of his strength; and vpon the confidence which Ferrat gaue them to mutinie the rest; that it would prooue too dangerous to call in those forces of the Turkes, which were in readinesse for their succour. Not knowing whether they should so easily free themselues of them againe, if they were once entred: They feared the Turkes purposes, and as much feared to know them; therefore to auoid the danger of being compelled to experience them, they determined to write to the Bassa of Tauris, that the warre was so certaine to bee finished by themselues, that they would reserue fauour till a more vrgent opportunitie: and with that deliberation a principall man was dispatched with a Present for the Bassa. Of this, the King had present aduice, by a confident Messenger, and also that few nights after, the principals of the Army were to meete together at Ferrat house, inuited to a great Banquet; which being vnderstood by him, electing fve thousand of his best men, and best horsing, with great and close Iourneyes, hee came to Casbin; where hauing secretly disposed his people in the Mountayne, couered with the quarter of Ferrat Troupe, he expected the signe which was to be giuen him. The Prince (as it was appointed) failed not of comming, nor he of his signe to the King, nor the King to accomplish his resolution. For Ferrat hauing protracted the Banquet the most part of the night, when the whole companie was heauie with Wine and sleepe, the King was receiued into the house with three hundred men, where without any vproare, hee slue all those which were inuited, to the number of threescore and ten; the Seruants and Pages being so suddenly taken hold of, and with such dexteritie, that without any mouing of other Rumours, the same fashion of Feast of Singing and of Dancing, continued all the night; and in that space all the rest of those people, which the King had with him, were appointed, in the breaking of the day, to make the greatest shew, and the greatest noyse that they could vnder the foote, of the Mountayne, as though all the Army had beene there, marching to the Towne. When the Alarme beganne to bee hot in the Towne, and euery man fell to his Armes, and repaired to Ferrats Lodging, where they supposed their Princes to haue beene; the King hauing disposed his three hundred men which were shut fitly in the house, and Zulpher hauing his five thousand all in a troope, in the great place, the threescore and ten Cans heads were shewed, all laced vpon a string, and hung out of a Tarras; vpon which the King presently shewed himselfe, accompanied with Ferrat Can; whereas the Maiestie of the King, the terrour of the sight represented before them, the feare of the Armie, 10 which they saw (as they thought) at hand, Zulpher and Ferrat Cans power amongst them, which they perceiued turned against them; their being destitute of Commanders, and the guiltinesse of their owne consciences, for their rebellion, strooke them into so dead an amazement, that they stood readie, rather to receiue all mischiefe, then that they had either courage, or minds, or counsell to auoide it.

But vpon offer of pardon, they cryed out, Let the King liue, let the King liue; we are all King Abas his slaues, and will not suffer to liue any of his Enemies: and there was more trouble to defend the poore people of Casbin from sacking by them (their Towne euer hauing beene a well disposed Harbour for the Rebels) then to turne their hearts and armes to the Kings part. Besides, the succours which the Gheylan and Mazandran had sent the Rebels, were with great difficultie 20 saued, and returned to their Countries by the King of Persia, with commandement to tell their Masters, that as the poore men were not culpable, which obeyed their Princes authoritie, by whom they were sent against him, and for that innocencie, hee had giuen them their liues; so that he would not be long from seeking his reuenge vpon their Masters, which had more iustly deserued it, by his neuer prouoking them to any offence. And when hee came with his Armie thither, he would proue, by those mens acknowledgement vnto him, whether they could discern by the benefits they had already receiued of him in the gift of their liues, which they had forfeited vnto him, by bearing Armes with Rebels against him, what better hopes they might conceiue of him, if they would dispose themselues to deserue good of him. In this meane time, the fame of this great successe, flew to both the Armies about the Mountaynes of Hamadan: 30 which, as it comforted the Kings with exceeding ioyfulness; so it entred into the others with such a terrour, that they presently vanished, euery man retyring to his best knowne safe-guard, that part of the Warre ending with the blast onely of the fortune of the other, with little expence of time, labour and bloud: which beeing vnderstood by the King, hee raised Oliner-Dileague to the title of a Can, and sent him, with those forces which he had to Hamadan, to settle the Countrey in a good forme of gouernment, and to ease it from the oppression of the other disperfed Troupes. Zulpher he also called Can, and sent him to Ardenile, which frontireth vpon Tauris, with an Army consisting of foure and twentie thousand men, in shew to quiet the Countrey, but indeed, to preuent any mouing of the Turkes. And because hee knew, that as his State stood then weake, raysed (as it were) freshly from a deadly sicknesse; it was not fit for him (at 40 that time) to bind himselfe to wrastle with such an Enemy, by taking knowledge of his ill disposition towards him; he dispatched Embassadours to Constantinople, to Tauris, and to the Bassa of Babylon, to congratulate with them, as with his friends, for the felicitie of his fortune; and to strengthen himselfe, by Alliance, also the more firmly, against the proceeding of any thing which the Turk might designe against him, either then or in future time; he required the Daughter of Simon Can, one of the Princes of the Georgians, to wife, which was, with as readie an affection performed, as demanded.

Whiles that Lady was comming from her Father, the King vnderstanding that the Cans Son of Hispbaan held yet strong the Castle, and whether he gaue it out to amaze his Armie, which now began to looke for satisfaction, for the great trauels and dangers which they had passed, or 50 whether he had heard so indeed; true it is, that he gaue out, that the most part of the Treasure of the former Kings of Persia, was by the consent of the Rebels, for securitie, kept together in that Castle: to receiue the which, and to chastise that Rebelle, the King marched thither with a part onely of his Armie, leauing the rest at Casbin, which was Frontier to Gheylan against which his purpose carried him. Without much trouble hee expugned the Fort at Hispbaan, beeing a large Circumference onely of Mud-wals, somewhat thicke, with Towers, and certaine ill Battlements, and suppressed that Rebelle; but Treasure he found none, for the indignation whereof, he made the World beleue, dismantled the Castle. His owne necessitie to content the Army, and his Armies necessitie to aske contentment, drew him suddenly backe from thence to Casbin, where hee had not stayed many dayes (for daily satisfaction with hope hauing no reall meanes) 60 but that the Queene arriued, honourably accompanied with two thousand Horle, and Byraicke Myrza her Brother. The Marriage was soone dispatched, those Countries vsing few Ceremonies in such cases: and God blessed them both so happily, that within the tearme of lesse then one yeare, she brought him a gallant yong Prince who is now liuing, called Sephir Mirza.

The

Gheylan and Mazandran.Populotis and fertile.The meanes by which King Abas setled the quiet of Persia.The people

The King vnwilling to oppresse his Countrey, and desiring to reuenge himselfe vpon the Kings of Gheylan, and Mazandran, to enlarge his Empire, and to content his Souldiers; hauing a flourishing Armie, both in men, and the reputation of his present victory; resolu'd all vnder one, to increase his State, honour himselfe, ease his Countrey, and satisfie his Souldiers with the Enemies spoyle. Gheylan is a Countrey cut off from Persia, with great Mountaynes hard to passe, full of Woods (which Persia wanteth, being here and there onely sprinkled with Hills, and very penurious of fuell, onely their Gardens giue them Wood to burne, and those Hills, which are some Faggots of Pistachios, of which they are well replenished) betweene those Hills there are certaine breaches, rather then Valleyes; which in the Spring, when the Snow dissolueth, and the great abundance of Raine falleth, are full of Torrents; the Caspian Sea includeth this Countrey on the East: betweene which and the Hills, is a continuing Valley, so abounding in Silke, in Rice, and in Corne, and so infinitely peopled, that Nature seemeth to contend with the peoples industry; the one in sowing of men, the other in cultivating the Land; in which you shall see no piece of ground which is not fitted to one vse or other: their Hills also (which are Rockes towards Casbin) are so fruitfull of Herbage, shadowed by the Trees, as they shew, turned towards the Sea, that they are euer full of Cattell, which yeeldeth Commoditie to the Countrey, by furnishing diuers other parts. In this then lay the difficultie most of the Kings Enterprize, how to enter the Countrey.

Yet before the King would enter into this Action, hee called vnto him to Casbin, all Gouernours, and all Administratours of Iustice, whosoever had occupied those Functions, during the vsurped Rule of the Cans, through all his Prouinces; with the Kinsmen, Friends and Children of the said Cans: besides, that all men of power, as Mirzaes, Cans, Sultans, and Beagues, which are principall Titles of Dukes, Princes, and Lords, should repaire thither, without excuse of Age, Sicknesse, or any other pretence whatsoever: which beeing done, hee appointed new Gouernours and Officers of all sorts; hee cleered all his Prouinces for three yeares, for paying any Tribute-Custome, or any other ordinary or extraordinary Exaction whatsoever. His Chiefe Vizier he made one Haldenbeague a Wise man, excellently seene in all Affaires, of great Experience; but such a one as was onely his Creature, without Friends or Power: him hee commanded to passe through all his Prouinces, accompanied with the Xa-Hammadaga, who is, as it were, Knight Marshall, to cleere them from Vagabonds, Robbers, and seditious Persons. Ologonlie, which had followed him in all his Aduersitie (a man of great Worthinesse) hee made Bearer of his Great Seale, which is an Office there, liker the Lord Priuie Seale, then Chancellour. (The place of the Vizier comprehending in it, the Office of Chancellour, and High Treasurer) him hee also aduanced to the dignitie of a Can. Bastana, an Ancient approoued man, both for Fidelitie and other Worthinesse, hee made principall Aga of his House; which is as great Chamberlaine. Curtchibasschie Captaine of his Guard, which is a General-ship of twelue thousand shot, who attend at the Port by turnes, two hundred and fiftie euery quarter, except when the King goeth to the Warres, that they are all bound to be present. Ferrat Can he made his Generall.

Thus hauing wisely and prouidently placed through all his Estates, those who must be most assured to him, their Fortunes depending onely vpon him, hauing no more strength, nor authoritie in themselves, then they receiued from him: and hauing all the great ones in his Armie with him, or such of them as could not bee able to follow him, eyther by their few, or many yeares, or sicknesse, so securely left at Casbin, that they could not by themselves, or any other, moue any Innouation. And moreouer, hauing dispatched all those, and keeping their persons with him which had any Obligation to the former Cans, secured by that meanes (as much as the counsell of any man could secure him) from perill at home: hauing called Oliner du Can from Hamadan, and appointed him a Successor for that Gouvernement with ten thousand new men; he set himselfe forward to his Enterprize, with his old Troupes, and great part of his rebelled Army, with no greater courage and counsell then Fortune: for those men which were remitted by him to Gheylan, and Mazandran, (as those which had bin some-what exercised in the wars) hauing, with some more, adioyned vnto them the guard of the Streights, from which the mayne Armie of the Kings was some foure leagues remoued (remembring the benefit of the King, better then their faith to their Princes) at the very sight of the first Troupes, retyred themselves from the places left to their confidence in charge; which aduantage beeing followed by Ferrat, with the Alarme giuen, fell so iustly vpon that Army, that what with the vnexpected terrour of the Streights abandoning, and their being surprized in disorder, the Army was facily broken, with the death of two of the Kings, and an infinite slaughter of people, which had beene much greater if the Woods had not couered them from the furie of their Enemies. The greatest of those Kings hauing escaped with much difficultie (accompanied euer with the terrour of the perill from which hee had escaped) neuer ended his flight, vntill hee came into Sernane; and from thence went to Constantinople, to desire succour from the Turke, where hee yet liueth. The other which remayned, beeing but one, without any great difficultie or alteration of Fortune, was suppressed.

The Countrey beeing first spoyled, and ransomed at a great rate, which they might well beare, by reason of their great Riches, which they had gathered together through a long peace, and the Kings Armie excellently well satisfied; hee dispatched instantly Embassadors to the Turke, the Georgians, and his old Friend, the King of Corassan, to giue them an account of this new victorie: not doubting, but as it would bee exceeding pleasant to some; so it would be as bitter to others: and leauing Ferrat Can to gouerne the Countrey, and Oliner Dibeague, as his assistant, but to be commanded by him, hee returned himselfe full of glorie, and great victorie into Persia, disposing himselfe to reduce his State to that excellent forme of government which now it hath.

First then, after his arriuall in Casbin, hauing heard by his Vizier, and the Relation of Xa-Hammadaga, who had not onely spoyled the Subiects in their substances; but also of all Orders, and iust forme of government, which it now hath; and giuen them, by that meanes, more matter of diuision, then vnion; insomuch, that they were full of Theeues, of Vagabonds, of Factions, and such like Insolencies: hee iudged it fit, to reduce it to the more peaceable and obedient, to giue it in those cases, a good condition of government: Whereupon, hee presently dispatched that Xa-Hammadaga, a terrible, and resolute person, with full power and authoritie, for the Reformation of those Disorders; who in short time, though with more terrible Examples, reduced all the Prouinces to a vnite Tranquillitie, with mightie reputation.

Whilest hee was busied in that Administration; the King, to shew that it was necessitie, that counsell'd to giue him that excessiue authoritie, and to preserue it from beeing odious to himselfe, appointed in the chiefe Citie of euerie Prouince, a Governour elected of those of most valour: to him he ioyned two Iudges of Criminall and Ciuill Causes, a Treasurer, two Secretaries, with an excellent President, and two Aduocates generall, for the causes both particular and generall of the whole Prouince; Besides the particular Aduocate of euerie Citie, which should bee resident in that Metropolis. These determined all Causes within themselves of those Prouinces in which they had the Administration; and because they should neither bee burthen some to the Prouinces, nor corrupted in partializing; the King paid them their stipend, enioyning them vpon paine of life to take no other sort of reward. And because such things, and Causes might fall out, as by reason of the importance of them, or appellations of the parties might bee brought before himselfe, because hee would euer know what hee did, and be continually informed, not onely of the generall State of the Prouinces, but of their particular Administration; he ordayned Posts once euerie Weeke from all parts, to bring all sort of Relations to the Court; for which cause also he willed that one of the two generall Aduocates should euer bee Resident there, who receiuing those Relations presenteth them to the Vizier, and hee to the King. The Vizier, sitteth euerie morning in counsell about the generall State of all the Kings Prouinces, accompanied with the Kings Councill, Aduocates Resident, and the Secretaries of State; there are all Matters heard, and the Opinions of the Councill written by the Secretaries of State; then after Dinner, the Councill, or such a part of them as the King will admit, present those Papers, of which the King pricketh those hee will haue proceed; the rest are cancelled; which being done: the Councill retyre them againe to the Viziers, and then determine of the particular businesse of the Kings House. The King himselfe euerie Wednesday, sitteth in the Councill publicly, accompanied with all those of his Councill, and the foresaid Aduocates: thither come a flood of all sorts of people, rich and poore, and of all Nations without distinction, and speake freely to the King in their owne Cases, and deliuer euerie one his owne seuerall Bill, which the King receiueh; pricketh some, and reiecteth other, to bee better informed of. The Secretaries of State presently record in the Kings Booke those which hee hath pricked, with all other Acts, then by him enacted; the which Booke is carryed by a Gentleman of the Chamber, into his Chamber, where it euer remayneth: and woe be to his Vizier, if after the King hath pricked, Bill, or Supplication, it be againe brought the second time.

When hee goeth abroad to take the Ayre, or to passe the time in any exercise, the poorest creature in the World may giue him his Supplication: which hee receiueh, readeth, and causeth to bee registred; and one request, or complaint, is not ordinarily brought him twice: and though these bee great wayes, wise wayes, and iust wayes, to tye vnto him the hearts of any people; yet the nature of those is so vile in themselves, that they are no more, nor longer good, then they are by a strong and wisely tempered hand made so: The Countrey not beeing inhabited by those nobly disposed Persians, of which there are but a few, and those few are as they euer were: But being mightily wasted by the Inundation of Tamberlaine, and Ismael afterward making himselfe the head of a Faction, against the Ottomans; and by that reason, forced to re-people his Countrey to giue himselfe strength of men against so potent an Aduersary, calling in Tartars, Turcomans, Courdines, and of all scumme of Nations; which though they now liue in a better Countrey, yet haue not changed their bad natures: though as I said, so carefull and true Princely a regard of the King for the establishment of good and iust Orders, for the government of this Countrey, in equitie, generall securitie, and tranquillitie;

The people.

had beene of sufficient abilitie to haue bound the hearts of people vnto him : Yet knowing what his were, and to leaue no meanes vnacted which might both assure them more, and himselfe with them; because he knew, that their owne dispositions, which were euill, would neuer rightly iudge of the Cause of many rigorous Examples that had passed : which by that fault in them, had ingendred him hatred amongst them; to purge their mindes from that sicknesse, and gaine them the more confidently, hee determined to shew, that if there were any cruell Act brought forth, it did not grow from himselfe, but from necessitie, wherefore hee displaced, by little, finding particular occasions daily against some or other, all the whole Tymarri of his Estate; as though from them had growne all such Disorders, as had corrupted the whole gouernment, 10 sending new ones, and a great part of them Gheylanders to their Possessions, with more limited Colonies: authoritie, and more fauourable to the people; the old ones part he cashiered, part he distributed in Gheyland and Mazandran, which hee had new conquered, so that by that Arte, the people beganne to rest exceeding well satisfied, and himselfe the more secured; those which succeeded them beeing bound to his Fortune; and those which were remooued also, beeing disposed in the new conquered Prouinces, which they were bound to maintayne in securitie, for their owne Fortunes, which depended onely vpon their preserving them for the King.

When all these things were done, and the King beganne to thinke himselfe throughly established, for a long time, both from intrinsicke and extrinsicke dangers. The Turkes forces being 20 so occupied in the Warres of Hungarie, that hee had no leisure to looke to his increasing the Tartars of Corrasan his Friends, by the old Hospitality which he had receiued from their King; and if not his Friends, yet cold Enemies, such as would be long resolving, before they would attempt any thing to his preiudice. There fell out a new occasion to trouble both the peace of his minde and Countrey, if it had not beene preuented with great dexteritie, celeritie, and fortune. For Ferrat Can, not regarding his benefits downe to the King, knowing too well his owne worthinesse, and attributing vnto that, the successes of all the Kings Fortunes, and for so great causes, not being able to limit his mind within any compasse of satisfaction, not resting contented with the place of Generall, nor gouernment of Gheyland, nor with the honour to be called the Kings Father, but despising that Haldenbeague should be Vizier, and not himselfe all, which had 30 giuen the King all; began to take counsell to innouate, and alter the things with the Bassa of Sernan, and Tauris. So dangerous are too great benefits from a Subiect to a Prince, both for themselves and the Prince, when they haue their minds only capable of merit, and nothing of dutie.

These practises of his were most dangerous, for which hee did more assure himselfe, to haue laid a strong foundation for the discontentment of those Timari, which the King had sent into his gouernment, and so had they beene, questionlesse, if Oliuer di-Can, through his true zeale to his Masters seruice; and, perhaps, a little enuy at the others greatnesse, had not made him so watchfully diligent, that hauing gathered his intentions by very momentall circumstances, hee gaue the King from time to time notice of them, which at the first were negligently receiued, and rather taken as matter of emulation, then truth. But when those very same aduertisements 40 euer continued, and Oliuer di-Can, was not at all terrified from sending of them; neither by the Kings neglecting them, nor rebuke, and that Mahomet Shesia was also secretly arriued in the Court, with more particular and certaine aduice, that the Bassa of Sernan had sent a great summe of money to Ferrat, which was receiued on a certayne day, and in a certayne place. The King hereupon presently sent Xa-Tamascoolibeague, his chiefe Fauourite, to will Ferrat Can, for very important affaires, for the determining of which his presence was requisite, to repaire to the Court; which he excused, through his indisposition, which he said to be such, that he could not possibly trauell: so that persisting in that deniall, when Xa-Tamas Coolibeague perceiued that he would not be perswaded, he returned with all expedition to the King; who assuring himselfe the more by the deniall, of the former related accusations, instantly commanded his guard of 50 twelue thousand Courtchies to be in a readinesse; with which, and a thousand of the Xa-Hammagaes he vsed such celeritie, that he preuented the newes of his comming, and was sooner arriued at Ferrats house then he had almost opinion that his Messenger had beene returned: yet, although amazed with his owne guiltinesse, and the Kings sudden comming, he made shift to make great shew of the indisposition which he had so long counterfeited.

The King, as soone as he came vnto him, said; That he had taken a great iourney to visite him in his sicknesse, and to bring him the Cure thereof; and hauing commanded all out of the Chamber, but themselves onely alone (as the King himselfe told me) he vsed such like speeches vnto him: Father, I doe acknowledge, that first from God, then from you, these Fortunes which now 60 I haue, haue receiued their being. And I know, that as a man, I may both erre in my merit to God, and in my well deseruing of your seruice. But my intention (I can assure you) is most perfect in both: the time of my establishment in my estate, hath beene so small, that I could scarce vse it sufficiently to performe my generall dutie towards my people, ouer whom (by Gods permission) I am appointed: much lesse to provide for euery particular satisfaction, as I mind and will doe; which you principally, as a Father to me, both in your yeares, and my election should should haue borne withall. But since some ill spirit hath had power to misleade your wisedome so farre, as to make you forget your great vertue; you shall once receiue whole some counsell from me, as I haue done often from you, &c. Ferrat neither excused nor confessed, but indifferently answered the King, as sory to haue giuen cause of offence, and infinitely reioycing (as he seemed) that the King had so royally pacified himselfe with him: and not daring to refuse to goe with the King, desiring him to vse some few daies in the visiting of the Country: in which time he hoped that God, and the comfort of his presence, would raise him from his infirmitie. The King hauing staid some eight or ten daies in the Countrey, was sooner hastned thence then he thought, by the newes of the Queenes death, who was deceased by a sudden and violent sickness after his departure: so that with great speed taking Ferrat with him, and leauing Lieutenant in the Countrey, for Ferrat, Mahomet Shefia, he returned to Hissphaan, where after some dayes spent in sorrow, (for his great losse) he lent to Alexander, the other Can of the Georgians, to demand his Daughter, by that meanes to binde againe that league, which might haue bene dissolved by the death of the other Queen: In that Embassage went Xa-Tamas Coolbeague, who returned with the Lady within few moneths.

In the meane time, the Brother to that King of Corasan, who had so royally and carefully brought vp the King of Persia, when he fled from the wrath of his Father, rebelled against his Brother, slue him, and all his Children, but onely one; whose Tutors fled with him into the Mountaines, and so escaped the present danger, and persecution of that Tyrant. Diuers other also, as they had bene in estimation or fauour with the old King, fearing for that the violence of the present authoritie, and others onely discontented with the alteration, and the wicked meanes of it, fled into Persia, by whom the King hauing largely and perfectly vnderstood the state of things, hauing so faire a way both to shew an infinite royall point of gratitude, to that one poore posteritie of the murdered King, for great obligations to the Father; and withall, to assure himselfe in future times and occasions, from that certaine enemy, which had euer hung like a dangerous Cloud ouer his State, vsually breaking into terrible Tempests, as it was, or should be carried against him by the breath of the Turke: though he knew those Tartars so obstinate enemies to his Gouvernement and Religion, that if they had the most odious reasons of disynion amongst themselves, yet that they would combine against him, without reposing himselfe vpon any hope to bee holpen by those partialities, which the refuged vnto him seemed to promise: but confident onely in the Iustice of the Cause which he intended, in his owne force, vertue, wisedome and fortune; he resolved to gather his Armie, and to goe for those parts, to which he was, besides his owne disposition mightily instigated by Ferrat Can, whose feare and ambition being without meanes of end, gaue him assurance by place of Generall which he held, to haue some faire opportunitie giuen him to end them, with the Kings ruine, and without his owne danger.

Thirtie thousand men the King tooke with him for that warre, twelue thousand Harquebussiers which bare long pieces, halfe a foote longer then our Muskets, sleightly made: the Bullet of the height of Caluer, which they vse well and certainly: and eightene thousand Horse, which may seeme a small troope in these places, where the warres are carried with innumerable multitudes. But the King of Persiaes iudgement agreeth with that of the best experienced Captaines, that multitudes are confusers of Orders, and deuourers of Time, and of those meanes which nourish the Warres; and are good for no other vse, but to make a warre soone breake off, and to consume the world. This Army being chosen out from all his Forces, of elected good men, hee carried into Corasan with wonderfull expedition, and had taken it vtterly vnprovidid, if Ferrat Cans aduertisement had not preuented his celeritie, who had not onely giuen notice to them, but to the Bassa of Tauris of the Kings purpose, and his owne resolution, promising them a certaine victorie, and the deliury of the Kings owne person. A daies journey the King passed peaceably into the Countrey, without the sight onely of an enemy: himselfe with fise thousand of the best men, accompanied with diuers of the principallest, was a kind of Vaunt-guard to the rest, which followed with Ferrat Can, Zulphir Can, and Olmer di Can, which marched softly. The King by that meanes was farre aduanced; and being almost assured in himselfe, that through the celeritie of his comming, he should find yet no enemy sufficiently able to resist him, and more confidently by the perswasion of Ferrat Can: some sixe hundred Horse vnder the leading of Vseph-Aga (which were sent to discouer before the Kings troope) fell vpon fiftie thousand of the enemy; vpon which fight he would faine haue retired: but being so farre ingaged that hee could not, and vnable to resist so great a force, with the losse of almost all his company, hee was beaten backe to the Kings Grosse: who by the dust rising a farre off, and the great noyse following, imagining what it was indeed, with a great and ready courage provided himselfe ready to fight, and dispatched Messenger vpon Messenger, to command Ferrat Can to aduance vnto him. To the first Ferrat answered, that it was but a troope of some few Rascals, and desired the King to march on, any not trouble himselfe nor his Army, and to diuers the like. At the last, when young Hassan-Can came from the King, and told him the Kings danger, and that certainly the whole Force of the enemy had charged him; hee began to shew feare, and to call a Councell of the

the Commanders, then to know what they were best to resolve of for the saving of the Army, since the King had so rashly lost himselfe. Which when Oliuer di-Can heard, vpbraiding him of Treason, called vpon all those which loued the King to follow him; and putting Spurs to his Horse, being followed by Courtchibassa, and most of the Kings Guard, and many other, with all possible haste speeded to the King, who by this time was forced to sustaine and retire as well as he could, without disorder or shew of feare. But when this Troope of Oliuer di-Can was seene, his men receiued new courage; and the enemy which dependeth more vpon Ferrats treason, then their owne valour, beganne to be exceeding amazed, doubting that it had beene the whole Army, and that Ferrat had exchanged his Treason from his Master to them: Wherefore slackning their first fury, and rather standing at a gaze then fighting, the King commanded Vseph-Aga to charge them throughly afresh, and not to giue them time to take new courage; which he did with so good fortune, that lighting vpon the Vsurper of Corazan and his Sonne, he slue them both with his owne hands; from which grew the first maine flight of the enemy, and the beginning of the victorie for the King. The chase was desperatly followed, so that in that battell and the chase, were slaine thirtie thousand men, with the Vsurper King and his Sonne; and diuers of the principall of the Countrey taken. That night the King pitched his Tents in the place of the battell, and being informed by Oliuer di-Can and the whole Army, which cried out with open mouth of Ferrats Treason, tempered the outward shew of his indignation with a compassionate feeling of mans errors and frailtie; excused the constraint and necessitie, of the Iustice which he was forced to doe: protesting, that though for his States and owne preseruati-

on, he was at last compelled to giue his Iustice place, about the power of his loue and Obligation: yet what the Father had rent from himselfe by the violence of his owne misdeeds, his Sonne should find ripened for him, who should be heire of what his Father had well merited by his former seruices, as he hoped he would be of his vertue; praying God, that his Fathers vices onely might dye with himselfe. Which when he had said, he gaue Oliuer di-Can the Generalship of his Army, and appointed him to doe execution vpon Ferrat, who being resolved of that iudgement which his double offence had brought vpon him, attended ready in his Tent without feare to dye, or desire to liue, and there receiued that punishment, which was vnworthy of his excellent parts, if he had made that true vse of them which he should.

Zulpher Can his Brother fled to the Port of the Kings Tent, and there prostrated himselfe on the ground, and obtained pardon. Next day, the King marched farther into the Countrey, and so daily aduanced on without obstacle, the Keyes of all their Townes meeting him by the way; and at the last, an Embassage from the whole State, with a generall submission: which when he had receiued, hauing spent some time in the setting of such a Government as was securest for himselfe, and hauing receiued the young Prince, Sonne to the first King, and diuers others of the principall of the Countrey hauing left order with Xa-Endibeague, whom hee left there with the best part of his Army, which he increased afterwards to thirtie thousand men, to extirpate all those which were likeliest, either through their Obligation to the Vsurper, or through their owne particular interest, to make inuouation, hee returned with that young Prince, and those Prisoners into Persia.

§. III.

The Kings triumphant entry into Casbin, entertainment of the Authour and his Company. Other remarkable obseruations of the Kings Iustice, Bountie, treatie of Warre, and Mustaphas Embassage.

THE most part of this time I was at Casbin, courteously vsed by Marganobeague, the Master of the Kings house, any not amisse by any. When the King was come within sixe miles of Casbin, hee stayed there some three daies, to the intent to make his entry with such an estimation of his victorie, as was fit for so great and happy a successe of Fortune: and in truth, I thinke that hee did it most to declare the greatnesse of it to vs that were Strangers, by such a strange demonstration. The night before hee entred, there were thirtie thousand men sent out of the Towne on foote with Horse-mens staves, vpon which were fastned Vizards of so many heads: All those in the morning, when we were commanded to meete him, (the Governour hauing provided vs Horses) wee found marching in battell array towards the Towne; and before the two heads of the King and his Sonne, foure Officers of Armes, such as they vse, bearing in their hands great Axes of shining Steele, with long helues; after those Battalions, followed the Xa-Hammadagaes Horse-men; after those, a number of Gentlemen of the Kings Court; after those, one hundred Spare-horses, with as many of the Kings Pages; after those the Prisoners, accompanied with Bastan-Aga, then a great ranke of his chiefe Princes; amongst whom were all the Embassadors, which vled to be resident in his Court; then followed the young Prince of Corazan, accompanied with Xa-Tamm-Coolibeague, the Kings principall Fauorite, and then the King himselfe alone; and after him, some five hundred Courtiers of his Guard. Marganobeague was with vs, and making vs large passage through all those Troops.

Sir Anthonie Sherleis first salutation, and speech to the King.

When we came to the King wee alighted, and kissed his Stirrop: my speech was short vnto him, the time being fit for no other: That the fame of his Royall vertues had brought me from a far Countrey, to be a present spectator of them, as I had bene a wonderer at the report of them a farre off: if there were any thing of worth in me, I presented it with my selfe to his Maiesties service. Of what I was, I submitted the consideration to his Maiesties iudgement, which he should make vpon the length, the danger, and the expence of my Voyage onely to see him, of whom I had receiued such magnificent and glorious Relations.

The Kings an-swere.

The Kings answer vnto me was infinite affable: That his Countrey whilst I should stay there, should be freely commanded by me, as a Gentleman, that I had done him infinite honour, to make such a iourney for his sake, onely bid me beware that I were not deceived by rumours, which had peradventure, made him other then I should finde him: It was true, that God had giuen him both power and mind to answer to the largest reports which might be made good of him; which if he erred in the use of, hee would aske counsell of me, who must needs haue much vertue in my selfe that could moue me to vndergoe so much, and so many perils to know that of another. And that he spake smiling, willing me to get on horse-backe: which when I had done, he called Haldenbeague, his Viseire, and Oliuer di-Can his Generall, and commanded them to take my Brother and me betwixt them, and my company was disposed by Marganobeague, amongst the rest of the Kings Gentlemen of his Court: and in that order, the King entred Cashin, and passing to the great place, he alighted with the chieftest of his Princes and Officers, whom he caused to bring vs with them, and went into a kind of banquetting house, in which there were staires to ascend by into a Tarras, where the King sate downe, and the greatest of those Princes, and wee among them. This Tarras looked vpon the place, where after we had bene a little, and beheld some of the Court exercising themselves at Ginoco-di-canna, that great troope was suddenly vanished, so without all sort of rumour, that it bred infinite wonder in me, considering how much tumult we made in these parts, in the disposing of a farre lesse company. Whilst wee sate there, the King called me againe vnto him, and when I had confirmed in more words, the very same I had before said vnto him: Then said hee, You must haue the prooffe of time to shew you, either the errors or the truth of these rumours, since you can make no iudgement of what you haue yet seene, which is but the person of a man, and this enmity which God hath giuen me, for any thing you know, may be more through my fortune then my vertue. But since your paines and trauell hath had no other aspect but to know me, we must haue a more intrinsicke acquaintance to perfect that knowledge; and how you will indure the fashions of my Countrey, you can iudge best you selfe which are Master of your owne humor: This I will assure you of you shall want no respect from my people, nor honour from my selfe; and therewith bid mee fare-well for that present, committing me and my company to Bastan-Aga, to be conducted to my lodging.

Sir Anthonie Sherleis present to the King of Persia.

Next morning I sent the King a Present, of sixe paire of Pendants of exceeding faire Emeralds, and maruellous artificially cut; and two other Jewels of Topasses, excellent well cut also; one Cup of three pieces set together with gold inameled; the other a Salt, and a very faire Ewer of Crytall, couered with a kind of cut-worke of silver and gilt, the shape of a Dragon; (all which, I had of that Noble Florentine) which his Maiestie accepted very graciously, and that night I was with my brother inuited by him to a Banquet, where there was onely Byraicke Myrza, and Sultan Aley, with Xa-Tamas-Coolibeague, his chiefe Minion; there hee had diuers discourses with mee, not of our apparell, building, beautie of our women, or such vanities; but of our proceeding in our Warres, of our vsuall Armes, of the commoditie and discommoditie of Fortresses, of the vse of Artillerie, and of the orders of our gouernment: in which, though my vnskilfulnesse were such, that I knew my errors were greater then my iudgement, yet I had that felicitie of a good time, that I gaue him good satisfaction, as it seemed. For in my discourse, hauing mentioned the hauing of certaine Models of Fortification in some Bookes at my Lodging, which were onely left mee in the spoyle which was made of mee at Babylon: Next day after dinner he came thither with all the principallest of the Court, where he spent, at least, three houres in perusing them, and not vnproperly speaking of the reasons of those things himselfe. Next night he sent for me againe, into a place which they call Bazar, like our Burse; the shops and the rooffe of which were so full of lights, that it seemed all of a fire. There was a little Scaffold made where hee sate, and as euery man presented him with diuers sorts of fruits, so hee parted them some to one, some to another, and there hee continued some foure houres; in which time he tooke mee aside, with my Interpreter, and asked me very sadly, Whether I would content my selfe to stay with him; not for euer, for that were too a great wrong to my friends, who should lose me from their comfort, being diuided so farre from them; for my owne fortune he would not speake of, but onely thus much; since I had told him I was a Subiect to a Prince, he knew, that then my fortune also must depend vpon the will and fauour of that Prince; and he assured himselfe, that he was as able, and more desirous to doe mee good then any: therefore if I would resolute to giue him that little satisfaction; he should perswade himselfe the more confidently, that the cause of my comming was such such as I told him, the loue of his person and nothing else. I answered him, I could say no more to his Maiestie then I had already done; that a report onely of his excellent vertues had brought me thither, that a better experience had bound me so fast to him and them, that as he was Master of my mind, so he should be of my person and time, which were both subject to his command. For those things of fortune, they were the least things that I regarded, as His Maiestie well saw by my great expence thither, onely to satisfie my sight: but as I knew my selfe infinitely honoured by His Maiestie, vouchsafing to serue himselfe of me; so that was to mee above all other fortunes and satisfactions. His Maiestie seemed wonderfully well content with my answer, and that night began to shew mee extraordinary publicke fauour, and so continued all the time of his being in Casbin, daily encreasing by 10 some or other great demonstration.

Sixe weekes he stayed there, giuing his accustomed audience to the people: In which time I saw the notablest example of true vnpartiall royall Iustice, that I thinke any Prince in the world could produce. The Gouvernour of Casbin was appointed to that administration, in the maine seruice of the Kings State when the Rebels were first suppressed; a man exceedingly and particularly fauoured of the King: he taking the aduantage of the time, which being troubled, gaue him liuely colour, to make great profit vpon the people, and confident in the Kings fauour, abused both the one and the other by extreme extortions; his iudgement was, That all his goods, and lands, should be sold, for the satisfaction of those men whom he had spoiled: and if any thing wanted, since the King, by giuing him that authoritie, was partly the cause of those excesses, hee condemned 20 himselfe to pay the residue out of his Treasurie. That if any thing advanced, it should be giuen to his Children, with a grieuous Edict, that no succour should be ministred unto himselfe. For that, since death was a concluder of his offence, shame, and the memorie of it, hee should not die; but goe, during his life, with a great yoke, like a Hogs-yoke, about his necke, haue his nose and eares cut off, and haue no charitable reliefe from any, but what he gayned with his hands: that he might feelee in himselfe the miserie which poore men haue to get, and what a sinne it is to rent from them by violent extortion, the birth of their sweat and labour.

This Iudgement strooke a mightie amazement into all the Great men present, and gaue an infinite ioy and comfort to the people. The Turkes Embassador, which was there, after he had stood silent a great while, as a man halfe distracted, sware publicly, that he saw before his eyes, his Masters ruine: being impossible that such fortune and vertue, as the King was accompanied with, could receiue any obstacle. That night he made Marganobeague Gouvernour of Casbin, being well admonished by that great example of his dutie. Constantino, a braue young Gentleman, being a Christian of Georgia, he called Mirza, and gaue him the gouernement of Hispahan; and me also he called Mirza, telling me, that he would prouide condignely for mee. And because he had an vrgent occasion to goe post to Cassan, I should receiue his pleasure by Marganobeague; who brought me, the next morning, a thousand Tomanas, which is sixteene thousand Duckets of our money: fortie Horses all furnished; two with exceeding rich Saddles, plated with Gold, and set with Rubies and Turkeffes, the rest either plated with Silver, or Velvet embroidered, and gilt; sixteene Mules; twelue Camels laden with Tents, and all furniture, both for my House and Voyage; telling me withall, that this was but a small demonstration of the Kings fauour, by which I might (notwithstanding) conceiue what better hopes I might gather: and that it was his Maiesties pleasure I should follow him to Cassan: in the house where I was, I should leaue a keeper, being his Maiesties pleasure to bestow it on mee: and that there were ten Courtchies which should attend mee the next morning, to serue mee in my Iourney.

Sir Antonie made a Mirza. The rich Present sent him by the King.

All this while I moued nothing to the King of that which was the mayne purpose of my comming: I tooke time to deeme by the proceeding of other deliberations, of the way which I should take; and to make my selfe learned in the purpose of his actions, by his nature, and inclination; besides, not onely to get, first a kind of possession in his owne affection, but of all his 30 Great men; especially of those whom I did imagine would be best and strongest assisters of my purpose: the King knowing how potent a vniter of mens minds the selfe-same Religion is for tranquillitie of an Estate: and the like dis-vniter seuerall Religions are for the disturbance of the peace of an Estate, hee is exceeding curious and vigilant to suppress, through all his Dominions, that Religion of Mahomet, which followeth the interpretation of Ussen and Omar, and to make his people cleaue to that of Aly: not (as I Iudge) through any conscience which carrieth him more to the one then the other; but first to extirpate intrinsicke factions, then to secure himselfe the more firmly against the Turke, who being head of that part which followeth Omar and Ussen, should haue too powerfull away into his Countrey, if his peoples hearts were inclined vnto him by the force of Religion. Therefore he doth not onely strue to roote it out, but to defile it, and make it odious; hauing in vse, once a yeere, with great solemnitie, to burne publicly, as maine Heretiques, the Images of Ussen and Omar: then doth hee cause his Great men publicly (in scorne of their institution) to goe with a Flagon of Wine, carried by a Footman, and at euery Village, or where they see any assemblie of people, to drinke; which himselfe also vseth, not for the loue of the Wine, but to scandalize so much more the contrarie Religion:

ligion: that by such a kind of profaning of it, they may weare the respect of it out of the peoples hearts: which when it fayleth with reuerence in Religion, the Pillars thereof are vtterly broken. Yet there are of the very greatest, exceeding precise Turkes, if they durst doe other for their owne fortunes sake, then couer, with all artifice, that infection.

Ten dayes I was betweene Casbin and Cassan, where arriued, I receiued more gracious demonstrations from the King, then I could hope for, or wish: being farre beyond my present merit, and my Iudgement how to deserue it at all. Foure dayes his Maiestie staid there, after my coming; in which time there passed many Triumphs at Ginoca-di-canna in the day, and good Fire-workes in the night: at which I was euer present with him selfe, with no lesse respect, then if I had beene his brother, as he also called me, and continued that name afterward all the time of my being in Persia. The second day of his Iourney, from thence, towards Hispahan, hee called me vnto him, my brother and my Interpreter; and (after some few discourses) hee began to tell vs the whole historie of those his fortunes which I haue discoursed: and ioyned that hee vnderstood, the Turke had sent him a faire sword (hee did beleene) to cut off his head withall, if Ferrat Cans treason had well succeeded: for after the Messenger arriued at Tauris, understanding how God his great providence, had not onely mightily preserued, but giuen him that famous victorie ouer his enemies, hee had sent for new order to Constantinople, which came to no other end, but to call him backe againe. But the best was, the more the Prince hated him, the more his Subiects loued him, hauing receiued newes at Cassan, of ten thousand soules of Courdines which had abandoned their possessions vnder the Turke, and required some waste land of him to inhabit in; which he had giuen them.

The particulars of his generall answer, yee may see in his owne booke: as also the Kings answer. The King of Persia his hawking and hunting.

And though this discourse opened somewhat largely the Kings heart vnto mee, I durst bee no bolder, at that time, then to say, It was euer, almost impossible to preserue a quiet amitie betweene two so great Potentates, as him selfe, and the Turke, &c. at Hispahan, said the King, we shall haue leasure enough both to deliberate and resolute of some good things; and with that called some other, who entertayned him with discourses of Hunting, and Hawking, in which he is much delighted, and vseth them with great magnificence: neuer going to any of those sports, but that he carrieth forth aboute fise hundred Dogs, and as many Hawkes, nothing rising before him but it is game. For Flies, he hath Sparrowes; for Birds, Hobbies and Marlins; for the greatest sort, some Hawke or other; and for Roe-deare Eagles; he hath particular Agas for his Hawkes and Dogs, and other Officers to them a great number.

The next day, I singled out Oliuer Di-Can, with whom, (after a few complements) I communicated the Kings discourse with me, of his first troubles, and latter fortunes; extolling His Maiestie as it was fit; and besides, giuing the greatest honour to him selfe, without flatterie, that I could deuise; then I told him of my answer to the King, and on purpose I said, I feared, that it might turne to my harme, being newly planted in the Kings fauour, subiect to the enuie of the Court, and wanting tongue to speake for my selfe: and that to intermeddle in so great and perillous matters, it could not chuse but awake some couered malice, to take occasion to worke me some damage. But my confidence was such, first in the Heroicke mind of the King him selfe, then in the generous disposition of his Excellencie, that I should be protected from perill for this fault, as I would preserue my selfe with more cautell hereafter. Hee answered mee, that the Kings affection vnto me was such, that no man durst lift up a thought against mee: which the Court knew well. For him selfe, as he knew not the cenditions of our Courts, so I might mistake those of theirs: if enuie bare so great a sway with vs, we had lighter Princes, and men of more presumption. In this Court there was not a Gentleman but the King: the rest were shadowes which moued with his bodie. But in this which I had said to the King, if I had intended it, to moue him to warre in so fit a time against the Turke, I had doone well: and assured me, that both hee, and Xa-Tamas-Coolibeague, would with all their powers concurre with me to bring it to an essentiall deliberation; though, said hee, there bee three Dogs, Haldenbeague, Bastan-Aga, and Courtchy Bassa, that will mainly oppose themselves against it: yet in the conscience of my dutie, which I owe to his Maiestie, I assure my selfe, that there is no secure way, either for the preseruation of his person, or estate, but that. Therefore, since you haue begunne in so happie an houre to breake the Ice of so great and so good an enterprise, follow it without feare, since God will prosper your good intention in it, and wee will second you, with all the strength and industrie which wee haue. This was all which I desired, to bee assured of some friend; especially such a one, as might haue both opinion and credit of wisedome and fauour with the King.

Kings entrance into Hispahan.

Sir Anthony Sherleys perswasius to the Persian, to make warre against the Turke.

The Kings entrance into Hispahan was there of the same fashon that it was at Cassan; differing onely in this, that for some two English miles, the wayes were couered all with Veluet, Sattin, and cloth of Gold, where his Horse should passe. After he had beene settled there foure teene dayes, remembring what Oliuer Di-Can had said vnto mee, I determined to lose no more time. Therefore taking the opportunitie of the Kings being alone with mee, and my brother in a Garden, with my Interpreter onely and Xa-Tamas-Coolibeague, I spake vnto him to this effect: That my affection, growne onely vpon the fame of his Maiestie, had guided me from a farre Countrey into his presence; by which I found his Royall vertues, so farre exceeding the relation which I had heard, that as I did admire them, so I had a kind of forceable mouing in my nature to desire con-digne fortunes to accompanie them: Besides, my particular obligation to his Maiestie was so great, that that I was bound, not onely to say what I thought fit for his service, but to doe as much as my life might accomplish for the same. There could no deliberation be grounded vpon a greater foundation of equitie, then that which had his end onely directed to the recovery of that, which was by force and violence vsurped from his State: nor nothing more honourable for a Prince then to bee able without hazard, not onely to reuenge priuate and publike wrongs, but to recover their members againe to his seate, by his wisdom and vertue, which haue beene separate either by the defect or fortune of his Predecessors; All this, both publike and priuate profit, followed so great an increase of State, (increasing in all points the force of his State) and his poore Subjects, which were throwne out of their possessions, either through their true deuotion to his Ma-10 iestie, which could giue them no peace vnder another gouernment, or through the extreame tyranny of the Turke, should be recovered againe to their owne, with his infinite glorie and utility. The facilitie shewed it selfe diuers waies, principally in his owne fortune, wisdom, and vertue; against which, there was no likely resistance, especially when there was no equall obstacle, then the reputation of his late victo-20 ries ioyned with the other, would finde or make a way through all difficulties; then his Militia which was fresh and uncorrupted, then the incapacitie of the Turke, his corruptions of gouernment, want of obedience, sundry rebellions, and distractions from any possibilitie, of being able to make any potent resistance against his Maiesties proceedings, by his warres in Hungarie, which his Maiestie might assure the continuance of, if it pleased him to innite the Princes Christian to his amitie, which he should offer vpon that condition: by which also, he should receiue one other worthy benefite fit for such excellent parts, as hee 30 most richly aboundant in, not to conclude the true knowledge of them in that one corner of the world: but with making these great Princes knowne vnto himselfe, he should make his owne worthinesse likewise knowne vnto them. Neither (as I said at the first to his Maiestie) though these were great points to moue so great a spirit, intending to glory and great things, as his was, that they were so important as other were. For these might either be deferred, or not at all acted, being bound vnto them by no greater neces-sitie then his owne will, counselled by good reason. But his case was such, that hee must resolue, both for the securitie of his estate and person, to make or endure a warre.

As I was proceeding, Haldenbeague the Vizeire, Bastan-Aga, and Oliuer di-Can came in: the King presently called them, and told them what I was propounding vnto him; vpon which the Vizeire swelling against me, answered instantly. Your Maiestie may now perceiue that true, 30 which some of your Seruants haue beene bold to tell you, at the first comming of these Christians, and many times since, that they were sent to disquiet your Maiesties tranquillitie of your State, and to embarke you in dangerous enterprizes for other interrestes, &c.

The Vizeirs

position, is omitted.

Oliuer di-Can answered, that there was difference betweene a proposition, which was onely 40 mooued to be counsailed of, and a perswasion. That hee thought I counsailed nothing, (much lesse perswaded) but onely propounded that to the King, which if it were not then fit to be executed, for reasons that I knew not in the present condition of the Kings affaires; yet I deser-ued not so bitter a censure, since Princes ought to heare all, and elect the best, &c. The King then commanded Bastan-Aga to speake freely also what he thought, who after a reuerence vnto him, hauing repeated the Arguments past, commended them all (as it is his fashion apparantly 50 to offend no body: but what he doth in that qualitie is secretly) and then as though hee meant no such matter, diuiding what he would speake into two points, the warre, and my person, he proceeded, &c. When he had ended, I beseeched his Maiestie to vouchsafe to heare me once more, which he said was needlesse, and the day farre spent; therefore since euery man had already spoken their opinion, he would also say somewhat of his owne, and referre the farther deliberation of things vntill another time. The proposition which Mirza Antonio (saith he) made vnto me, is 60 questionlesse in it selfe such an one, as I must not onely thanke him for propounding it, by which it hath receiued life, but I must also provide for the execution of it, that the life which it hath may bee used to good purpose. (His long answers to their reasons are omitted) For the Tartars which I haue as subie-70 cted, if I were Oliuer di-Chan, Haldenbeague, or Bastan-Aga, I could thinke of few better meanes to assure my selfe of their rebellions, then those which they haue propounded: except one addition of suffering them to enioy their ancient Order, Lawes, and their particular course of Iustice. But as I am borne with a mind of another constitution, I can secure them better by giuing them to their owne naturall Prince, and him to them. For to whose Father I was so much bound, that through the royaltie of his disposition, I hold my life, and had the beginning of what I am, I can doe little for the Sonne, and no gratefull act at all for the memory of the Father, if I cannot giue him a Kingdome which is the least part of what I am. To conclude as good deliberations in their many points, must be grounded vpon the example of the 80 past, the experience of the present, and the iudgement of the future: and the Turke hath beene euer heauy to my State in long passed, and late passed times, and is now by some accidents partly proceeding from himselfe, partly from others (in all likelihood) easie to be perpetually assured: which point of time that 90 giueth so good an occasion if it be let passe, may giue him power (for a mind he can nor will neuer want) to be vntollerable againe hereafter; or if not vntollerable, at the least dangerous. We haue two great powers of our minds, the one a wise power of vnderstanding, by which we penetrate into the knowledge of things; the other a strong power of resoluing, by which we execute things well vnderstood: and now that we haue iudged of all, we must resolue of somewhat; and of that which is probablist best. Therefore our necessitie, our honour, and our iustice calling vs against the Turke, and since with all these concurrerth so good an opportunitie: he must be the maine end of which wee will determine: and because to prepare vs to that end amongst many other circumstances, the sending to the Princes Christian hath bene intimated as one of the most necessarie: wee shall doe well in the generall good vse which wee must make of this interposition of time, to doe also that. For though it bee true, that their interestes will ever make such a proposition acceptable: yet where there is a proffer of such a condition, as beareth with it a kind of Obligation, as it is of more honourable fashion for vs, so it addeth grace and reputation and more strength to it, or any such like purpose. For neither will I relie so much upon my owne power, or fortune, or the present benefit which I meane to bestow upon these of Corasan, that I will forget I haue offended them, and to arme my selfe with all the best aduice I can, against the sinister working of any fortune. Neither will I so much preiudicate the opinion, which I desire the world (without vaine ostentation) should hold me, and my Ministers, as that my enterprises should not haue a way giuen them by the wisest and best weighed counsell, and perfect concurrence made betweene my fortune well iudging of my counsell, and all proper occasions. As for Mirza Antonio (for so hee cuer called mee) what hee is to me you all must know, and my estimation of him: which I assure my selfe to be grounded upon a good and true iudgement, since he hath bene the first and onely propounder of the manifest point of all other, which doth or may concerne me most. So for that matter of sending, in which there is more diuersitie of opinions about the forme of circumstance, then essentiall matter of substance, I will remit it to his fidelitie and true affection to me, to dispose as he shall in those two great workes in a noble minde, find meetest for my honour, and conuenient, and certaintie for the effecting. Yet this must I tell you and him, which hath not yet been thought of, that a great Prince, as I am, must receiue a deniall for an iniurie: and I had rather not know them at all, then with knowing them to be also offended by them, though (this I say also) that he cannot be iudged to haue authoritie to command their wills, therefore must be blamelesse in all, except in the lightnesse of his imagination, upon which slender occasion hee ought not, for the credite of his owne iudgement, to haue formed a Counsell. Before I could frame one word of replie, he rose, and hauing talked a little while alone with Xa-Thamas Colibeague, he called my Interpreter, and held him some quarter of an houre in a very earnest speech: which was, to command him (as he afterwards told mee) not to let mee know what his Vizier had said against mee, but charged him to animate mee to loue his People, and also to confirme (in all hee could) my affection and well-hearted intention to his owne seruice. And wee parted with a mutuall shew of great satisfaction. Many dayes after, when I would begin to enter into a new discourse of those deliberations, he would presently turne himselfe to speake of other matters. In this fashion more then one moneth passed, in which I had no comfort of my desire, but onely that which Xa-Thamas Colibeague and Oliuer Di-Chan gaue me, and the Kings exceeding fauour which rather encreased then decreased towards me.

In this time (as though all the strength of that ill spirit, who euer rayseth the vttermost of his skill and power to preuent all good purposes had conspired to ouerthrow the well proceeding of this good businesse.) There came newes to the Court, that Mahomet-Aga Generall of the Ianizaries of Bagdat was entred into the Kings Coftines, as Ambassadour from the Turke, with a rich Present, and marvellous honourable traine: And that those of Ormuz had stayed by force sixteene slaues which were sent by the Great Mogore to the King; with nine other which Oliuer Di-Chan had bought in those parts, and the Merchants for their more securitie had sent them with those of the kings. This railed the courages of those which opposed themselves to the mayne businesse, alienated mightily the hearts of Oliuer-Chan, & Xa-Thamas Colibeague from all, and exasperated the King himselfe so much against them, that his ordinarie speech was no other, but that he would shortly learne to haue a respect vnto him, which did so exceedingly fill my very soule with perplexitie and anxietie, that I fell into a very dangerous sicknesse, in which the King neuer fayled daily to visite mee himselfe; and finding that the recordation of those things did aggrauate both the grieve of my mind, and vnquiet of my bodie, he forbad that any in my presence should speake more of it, but onely comfort me with all sort of discourse of recreation, with so royall and so gracious a regard, that hee shewed apparantly enough, that few accidents could dispose his mind from any reasonable contentment which hee might giue mee. In the meane time Mahomet-Aga arriued at the Court, whom the King sent his Vizier and Courtchibassa to meet, accompanied with a thousand Horie of the principall of the Court, and of the Citie. These (no question) gaue him large instructions, and as large hopes; which if he had guided also rightly, he might haue done his Master great seruice, and himselfe infinit honour: but through his owne too hastie greedinesse, assurance, and desire, he preuented himselfe whilest he strued first beyond that which was indifferently good, then beyond that which was better, and at the last beyond all reasonable (and I thinke his owne) hopes. For first being proudly confident vpon the greatnesse of his Master; then vpon the difficultie of the King of Persians present estate, to be moued to offend so potent a Neighbour; then vpon so great and strong a faction in the Court; besides, hauing heard by them that the Kings minde was altered from those of Ormuz, and that Oliuer-Chan also was then likewise alienated from his first censure through the particular wrong done vnto himselfe. Hee left the right way of mouing by degrees so great a businesse business to carrie it euen without agitation or danger: And as though with knowing the circumstances he had attayned the end, he ouerthrew his Masters intention, his owne honour, and almost lost his life, if the Kings infinite clemencie had not either despised or pittied his error.

The day of his audience was honoured with all the Princes of the Kings Court, and my selfe being too weake through my long sicknesse, the King commanded that my brother should bee present also; where after a magnificent oration of his Masters potencie in all conditions of force, he told the King, That he was sent to admonish him to remayne constant in the truce with his Master; to require restitution of those Courdines which without licence had abandoned their possessions in his Masters Prouinces, and contrarie to the termes of amitie were entertayned by him. That his Master

10 also demanded the restitution of Corassan to the former government, in the alteration of which, though he knew his Greatnesse and Maiestie violated, yet he could yeeld so much from what hee ought to doe to the King of Persias yeeres and beat of valour; that he would content himselfe with that satisfaction. Then he aduised him to force his nature, and coner this vaine glimmering of fortune with iudgement and good counsell; which euer would aduise him to maintayne and preserue his estate, rather with warie then violent counsels. This his Master demanded of him to obliterate (by the facile granting of it) all greater iniuries; wished his Maiestie to consider well of the Demand, the condition of the Demander and his owne: Denials euer to such Potentates being receiued for mayne offences; that it was euer a wise determination to yeeld to the authoritie of Time, and necessitie, and to auide by that good iudgement, vrgent perils, and sinister conditions: nothing being a more secure repaire, then to

20 strike sayle against insupportable tempests, it many times hapning, that the too great valour of men vsed with too great confidence is bitterly persecuted, and sometimes oppressed with an unhappie course of fortune: against the current of which, when once through error it breaketh forth, no humane force or wit can make any resistance. And because all men for the most part are blind in discerning the iudgement of good or ill counsels, from their end, celebrating them when they prosper with a false argument from the successe: His Maiestie should giue a great example of true wisdom, not to be so much overborne with the present delight, or future hopes, extracted from those first prosperous successes, as not to bee able to lift up his eyes to see the clouds which hee had raised by some of them: which if they were not prevented, would breake forth into extreame Tempests. To conclude, he said that his Maiestie must bee so farre from thinking to weaken his Master by 30 cunning and by artifice, and so to keepe his Armes farre from him; that hee must resolute such courses to be seruile: and to execute apparantly and presently onely, Princely, and like himselfe; so that eyther hee must prooue himselfe a Friend, or declare himselfe an Enemy. The first would merit any priuate grace, which should be no sooner deserved then attayned; the other would giue glorie and honour to the Victor, euer deare and honest to the winner, precipitious and shamefull to the loser. And not speaking of the inuinciblenesse of his Master, God himselfe would iudge the first must Infringer of an Amitie sworne to his great Name.

The proud message deli-uered by the Turkes Ambasadour to the King of Persia.

quodam. 12
Shewes confess the King in his purpose of leading to the Persians the Ambassadour.

The King without any thing mouing from his accustomed grauitie; tempering the Iustice of his indignation with the true magnanimitie of his minde, answered him to this effect. That as

40 the greatnesse of riches and Treasure were often pernicious to Princes; so were abundance of men, and largenesse of Dominions, to such as were too weake to gouerne them: therefore that extolling the Magnificencie of his Master (which might breed wonder and terror in those who were not capable of greatnesse, was no moouer of him to decline from any part of that which belonged to his owne greatnesse. He had receiued the Courdines (oppressed by the tyrannie of cruell Ministers) into his protection; and as their comming to him proceeded of their owne will, so their retorne from him should bee voluntarie, and not through his constraint. Corassan he had iustly taken from an Usurper, and would restore the lawfull Prince, who should receiue the benefit from his munificence: and not from any point of the Turkes instance. But wherefore should hee bee bound to giue a stricter account of his actions to the Turke, then became equall Princes to aske the one of the other, as though the Lawes of ruling had but one Moderator, before whose Tribunall they should be all presented? Tauris belonged to his Predecessors; so did Sieruan, so did Dierbech; and what Iustice had his King to detayne them? If none other but by

50 the potencie of his Armes; the same point of Iustice he had also to preserue what hee had already gotten: and to vindicate also those vniustly detayned from him. If hee will breake the Truce made betweene my Father and him, and continued by my Brother and mee, upon so manifest vniust Causes; as the Warre was neuer prosperously prouoked against our State by his Predecessors nor himselfe, but through some strange accident, error, or our disunion: so beleue that it will now breake forth to his owne destruction. Yet I doe not denie but that I had rather, both to preserue what I haue, and to reconer what my Ancestors haue lost, by equitie then blood; and by force of Reason, rather then of Armes: which if I cannot, I will certainly amend by vertue what I haue erred in by cunctation. My power and glory is yet soundly whole, and more increased through the merit of Modestie, which was neuer yet despised by the greatest which haue beene among men: and is esteemed by God himselfe. Wrestling of Acts could not deceiue Oaths; which as they were made to God; so the iudgement of their breaking or abusing would euer be in God, and his memory, care and power. For Mahomet-Aga himselfe; though hee had forfeited the Priuiledges of an Ambassadour, by executing vnder that Title a contrarie Office; if I should (said hee) presently and condignely punish you, both the memory of your present Fortune (into which pride and folly hath throwne you) and my glorie would be darkned; and the punishment would be followed with a sudden forgetfulnesse; but if I free you (as I will) from your punishment, though I cannot from the fault, I shall be an eternall memory to the World of Clemencie, and leave you a great precept either of more iudgement, or lesse employment: untill you can make your selfe fitter for such a one as this, to which you haue beene unworthily elected.

¶ IIII.

The Kings condescending to Sir ANTHONIES Motion, employing and furnishing him in Ambassage to Christian Princes. Two Friers.

HHe next morning the King came vnto me, and after some other Discourses, hee told me he had well considered of my Proposition, which though otherwise hee had no great inclination vnto, both, because of the great separation by distance, and difficult meanes of correspondencie, which could be made betweene the Princes Christian and himselfe, besides the small necessitie he had of them (God hauing giuen him so ample, so rich, and so warlike a Dominion) and if he had, their owne diuision amongst themselves gaue him small hope of any great good effect in what he should propound vnto them: Besides the derogation from his owne greatnesse to a demander of their Amitie, whose Predecessors had sought it of his by diuers meanes, and vpon great conditions. Yet to shew me how deare an estimation hee held of me, hee was contented not to see what belonged to himselfe, but onely to regard my satisfaction: which he willed me to determine of, and assured me of the effecting of it whatsoever it was.

Sir Anthony
Sherley confirmeth the King in his purpose of sending to the Princes of Christendome.

And after I had giuen his Maiestie thanks which were conuenient for so high a fauour, I told him that I had propounded nothing but that which the future experience, and present reason of things would proue not onely infinitely auailable, but also necessary for his honour, profit and securitie: to which counsell I was readie and desirous to adde my owne perill, which could by no other meanes bring an answerable benefit to the greatnesse of it selfe, but onely in the true estimation which I made of the merit of his Maiesties vertue, and my infinite affection to his seruice. The necessitie of his State, I knew either counsellled him to prouide for a Warre; or to make a Warre: Private cogitations hauing their progresse of such a condition, that they may take (as themselves will) either more or lesse of fortune; but those which had raised their thoughts to the sublimitie of Dominion are no more in their owne power: hauing no meane to step vpon betweene the highest of all, and precipitation. For his Maiestie to sleepe longer, called vpon by so mayne Reasons which did euidently demonstrate vnto him the ineuitable danger (if not ruine) of his State, and contrariwise, the certaine addition which his Maiestie might make to his Glorie and State, would seeme to those that did not rightly vnderstand the excellencie of his Maiesties heart, such a weaknesse in him, as is incident to those which haue not power to temper felicitie, from glutting themselves with the abundant fruits of present prosperitie; though they haue a patient forced vigour to withstand aduersitie. That the Turke was to be vanquished, his owne Rebels had shewed, which haue ouercome with small forces his great power in sundry Encounters. If his Militia hath had heretofore more vigour and valour, it is now changed through pleasure, ease, and surfeitings by (their Princes Example) with great corruptions; which a more vertuous Prince may reduce to their soundnesse: his Maiesties wisdom should worke immediately vpon the present generall defect and error. Neither should hee make a proportionable concurrence betweene his facts and wisdom, if hee did lose time in doubtfull deliberations, in such a case which did euidently shew him that if he might securely continue in peace, yet that peace was more pernicious vnto him then Warre: leeing so many faire occasions of propagating his Empire, and making his Estate eternally inuincible, & too dangerous to be attempted againe by the Turke: when there should be so equall a ballance of potencie, as would be betweene them, but by the recouerie of his owne, if his desire and fortune, and vertue disposed no more vnto him then that which was iustly his owne, and was vniustly detayned from him. For those Rebellions of the Turkes they were likely rather to increase then diminish: such manner of people euer more easily consenting in vnitie in Warre, then in peace to be commanded, or yeeld obedience: And the greatest powers which are, haue beene, or may be, which vnitied beare all before them, the violence of their strength, once diuided either by time, by patience, or by diuersitie of Fortune (which cannot be at all times, and in all places alike) may be and are subuerred. The Warre it selfe will open and disclose many hidden and swelling wounds, which are now onely couered by ignorance, and others detracting of their determination. And though it be true that the Princes Christian be farre diuided; and some of them incumbered with particular Designes amongst themselves, through the passions of their priuate interests; yet the Emperour (who is the greatest in Title, and and by his Alliance of the most power) is already ingaged against the Turke: which Warre hee wil more or lesse prosecute according as he shal haue more or lesse hopes. And what greater (almost assurance of prosperous successe) can he haue then the coniunction with your Maiestie, whose power and vertues he shall know? And the mouing of both your ends being the same, can lose no propertie in their working, by the large separation or distinction of places. The Pope also (who carryeth a Supreme Authoritie among Princes, to mooue them to those things which shall best preserue, or augment the limits of his Church) animated by your Maiesties great name and offer; will assuredly vse the vttermost of the strength, of his authoritie and industrie, to reconcile all particular enmities, and to combine all hearts to that Generall Warre, in which euery particular is truly much interested; if they consider their conscience to their profession, and the danger wherewith they all haue beene threatned, by that great Enemies potencie: diuers Princes hauing already by it suffered the vttermost of ruine.

Neither shall your Maiesty despaire, but that all may bee perswaded to so honourable and pious an action, being a propertie in mans nature to follow, that which hath beene contrarie to their disposition to begin: And if they all should not; yet the Emperour, Pope, and King of Spaine, absolutely will imbrace the Amitie, honour the name of your Maiestie, and vnite themselves in any termes of Princely Alliance: and your Maiestie shall haue an eternall glory amongst all; for inuiting them all to so Noble, Generous, and Royall an Action: and at the least, draw great Intercourse of Merchants of all those parts; which will giue an entrance to a kind of sociablenesse, and that will proceed to a common respect, And so to a mutuall friendship, which will giue the communication and knowledge of many things hidden (both in the knowledge, vse and profit of them) for want of such an Intercourse. Your Maiestie also witley desireth to take away all reputation from the Turkish Religion, through your Dominions, both by scandalizing it publikly, and punishing it in particular persons: Sithence, Heresie in all Religion causeth Division, and the corrupted part becommeth a pernicious Enemy to the Prince who supporteth the contrarie; From it arise as from a mayne turbulent Spring, Treasons, Conspiracies, secret Conuenticles, and Seditions.

Besides, the greatest and largest way, which the Turke hath into your Dominions, is the faction of his Sect; as Ismael your Predecessor had, of that which your Maiestie professeth, to deuide your State from him: Hee is an absolute and Tyrannous Enemy to the Christians; Your Maiesties Religion, hath a charitable opinion of them: and if drinking of Wine, burning of their Prophets Images, and such lesse apparances be in your Maiesties opinion effectuell things to estrange the people hearts from that Religion, by a contrary vse, with those Opprobries, to the other; a greater meanes your Maiestie may worke by: in giuing libertie of Christian Religion, so much abhorred of their part and securitie of Trade, goods and person to Christians, by which you shall bind their Princes, expresse the charitie of your Law, serue your selfe in diuers things of them which haue beene hidden vnto you, both for your vtilitie, strength and pleasure: and more inure your people to despise the other Religion, by so contrary, so apparant and so great effect. Neither can they euer be dangerous to your Maiesty, their increase being alwayes to be limited by your will. This also will giue your Maiestie great fame, since by their meanes you shall recouer auailable Instruments both to preserue and augment your Estate by: as Founders of Ordnance, Makers of all sorts of Armes, and Munition. So that though it may seeme a strange Act in your Maiestie to bee contented to inlarge Christians, so new and so great a fauour, yet since all great Examples euer haue in them some thing of an extraordinarie qualitie, those are to bee made vse of that repaire by publike profit, those particular disgusts which priuate men may receiue of them: I know that it is for the most part a fallacious ambition which imbraceth greedily new and dangerous things, but to determine and execute fit and conuenient things, is the proper effect of wisdom and courage. Your Maiestie knoweth your present Estate, remembreth the courtes of times past; and the excellencie of your iudgement weigheth, that which may succeed hereafter. No man receiueth harme but from himselfe; nor your Maiestie can suffer none but from that which your selfe will determine of your ielfe: you are inuited to no act depending vpon fortune, but such a one as shall haue his foundation vpon Counsell, Reason, and Iudgement. My satisfaction shall be aboue all other greatest if your Maiestie resolue of that which wil be most secure, honourable and commodious for your Person, State, and particular Subiects.

Well said the King, you would then haue mee to write to as many of the Christian Princes as are greatest amongst them, who if they will apply themselves to our purpose may draw all other lesser vnto it, by the example of their authoritie; or at the least (if they will not consent in that point) will command their Merchants to repaire to our Dominions: so that wee and they may haue some good friendly vse the one of the other. The Letters you shall appoint to be written to as many, and to whom you will, with priuiledge for Merchants, and the secure profession of their Religion and peaceable possession of their goods, and persons, in as ample sort as your selfe will deuise; and not onely for them but for all Christians whatsoeuer, which for curiositie to see, or loue to mee, will take paines to come hither; or for any purpose soeuer: beeing impossible their purpose can at any time be ill towards vs, which wish them in all things so wel. And because you haue bin the Mouer and Perswader of this businesse, you also shall be the Actor of it, assuring my selfe that my Honour cannot be more securely reposed in any mans hands, then your owne: both in that I iudge of your owne disposition; and more, in that which I know of your Obligation to me; besides, There is none so proper an Executor of any Enterprize, as hee which is the first deviser of it: I humbly thanked his Maiestie for his confidence; and excused my inability to performe so great a charge; Many men being more fitter to propound then to execute: That requiring a particular valour and experience, which I had not. Notwithstanding, since I would not giue his Maiestie cause to suspect, that I had intimated such a thing vnto him; as eyther was so dangerous to carrie, or impossible to effect, that I durst not for those causes vndertake it: I would onely beseech of his Maiestie one of his Princes, eyther to be my Superiour or Equall in the Ambassage, or such a one as might be absolutely my Inferiour, for a Testimonie, onely of my assured comming from his Maiestie. All which hee promised: commended my Reason and Prouidence in that point; and offering also Presents of great value, and worth to accompany his Letters, which should bee goodly Carpets, Swords and Daggers couered with Gold, and Jewels, Plumes according to their Countrey fashion, and other things worthy to bee esteemed, both for the price and rarenesse. Then he told me I must recouer my selfe, strengthen my minde and come abroad, that he might feast me before my departure.

For thirtie dayes continually, the King made that Feast in a great Garden of more then two miles compasse vnder Tents, pitched by certaine small courses of running water, like diuers Ri- uers, where euery man that would come, was placed according to his degree, eyther vnder one or other Tent, prouided for abundantly with Meate, Fruit, and Wine, drinking as they would, some largely, some moderately without compulsion. A Royaltie and Splendor which I haue not seene, nor shall see againe but by the same King: euer to bee praysed for the constant Antiquite, if not for the reason of the expence. The ioy of the Feast was much augmented by two great Fortunes, which gaue themselves at that time to the King; which were these: The Tartars of Buckehawrd (which haue euer beene of greatest reputation amongst all those of the Orient, both for their valour in Armes and Wealth) moued vnto it through their owne diuisions; the Cap- taines of which being of validitie and proper industry, to enflame the Ciuill dissensions, and vn- fit to temper their alternate good successes, by the fame of the King of Persias Iustice in Go- uernment, and the felicitie which followed all his Enterprizes, were brought to consent vnite- ly in one to send, and deliuer themselves and their Countrey vnder his subiection. And the Great Mogor King of Lahor moued by the like fame, sent a great Ambassador to desire a Mar- riage betweene his eldest Sonnes Daughter, and Cephir Micza eldest Sonne to the King of Per- sia, with a mightie Present, and as mightie offers both of readie money, and to pay thirtie thousand men in any Warre, which the King of Persia should vndertake for seuen yeares.

In this time came vnto me a Portugall Frier, named Alphonso Cordero, of the Order of the Franciscans Secular, and an other Armenian Frier of Ierusalem, with a Message from an other Frier of better estimation, called Nichola Di-Meto: the effect of which was this, that hee had beene Inquisitor generall of the Indies, and his time being finished, as also, hauing receiued commandement from the Pope and King of Spaine to returne, and for some other important causes to the Christianitie of these parts, not beeing willing to attend the tedious Voyage of the Portugall Fleet by Sea, chose rather the hazard to goe ouer Land.

But when hee came, though this insinuation of his were like a good meane; and shewed to proceed from the best condition of spirits; Yet he did much degenerate from the name of a Chri- stian, much more of a Religious man, of a true Subiect to his Prince, and of a Pious wisher to those things which tended to the generall good of the whole Common-wealth of Chri- stendome.

For I vsed him with all those duties and reuerences which I could possibly deuise, or any am- bitious heart could desire: which gaue (as it fell out) but a freer passage to the iniquitie of his soule; to my great grieve, preiudice of the estimation in those parts of Religious men, and to the most infinite affliction of the other Franciscan, that can bee expressed; hee beeing certainly a good man, and as farre as his vnderstanding guided him, zealous to perswade others to bee so, helping to expresse by a sincere and holy Example of life what he wanted in Discourse. But ubi Dei numen pretenditur sceleribus, subit animum timor, ne fraudibus humanis vindicandis, diuini iuris aliquid immixtum violemus. For which reason I will say only this: that to free my selfe from the vnexpected crosses which daily rose against my businesse, I pressed the King as hotly (as ciuilly I could) for my dispatch: which hee granted mee at the thirtie dayes end: hauing ap- pointed Assan Chan a gallant young Prince to goe with mee: when it was concluded that Assan Chan should goe, and his prouisions were all ready, my Commission and Patent (for the prin- cipall points of my businesse) sealed; the King married him to an Aunt of his, much against his Princes will and more to my grieve; none other of the great Ones hauing a spirit to ap- prehend only such a Voyage, much lesse a heart to performe it.

So that beeing instantly sued to by Cuchin-Allibi a Courtchie of fixe Thomans Stipend by the Yeare, and in disgrace also, for some ill part that hee had played, I (pressed there- vnto by the Vizier and Bastan Aga) spake vnto the King that hee might goe with mee,

in the forme onely of a Testimonie, though honoured with some good words in the Letters, for the better reputation of the Businesse: which the King was exceeding backward in consenting vnto, desiring mee eyther to goe alone, or better accompanied.

At the last, I was vrged to take that fellow, and the King content to let him goe: But would bestow on him no more then fiftie Tomans for the whole expence: which hee called also cast away. Him I left to bring the appointed Present after mee; and the Letters to the particular Princes; which were then readie at my departure not sealed, and the Present not thoroughly provided: my selfe desiring to free my selfe from the Court, where euery occasion was receiued by those, which were contrary to the Enterprize, to hinder it.

10 After I had taken my leaue of the King, the morning before my departure he came to find me againe at my House: and after a little other speech he said vnto mee, That my absence from him would exceedingly griene him, his affection to me being true, and his hopes of me many. If hee had bin furnished of any fit to haue undergone the management of this Affaire, hee would neuer haue enioyned me to so much trauaile, and so many perils, but that I knew his Court to bee ignorant of the Language and properties of our parts, and since he was prouoked by mee to send thither, hee knew that I would bee contented with my labour to keepe him and his, from all sorts of scorne. That my Brother was young, and therefore the more to be tendered, and not euery day to be exposed to new labours; his loue to vs both made him carefull in that point, but more particularly his infinite desire of my returne; which he thought would be more assured by so deare a pawne: And by daily Relation which I should receiue of his Royall vsage, I should also be daily inuited to returne how soeuer. If I met with such Fortunes as would bee worthy to make me stay from him; or such accidents as had power to hinder me by their necessitie; the company of my Brother should giue him great satisfaction in my absence. And if the worst should happen vnto me, he did desire euer to haue a Subiect so neere vnto me, vpon whom he might make a declaration vnto the World, both of what qualitie his owne minde was; and of what condition his true and Royall affection towards me was.

Before I could answer this infinite fauourable and gracious speech of his: my Brother, whose minde, apprehending that his staying with the King, might bee of wonderfull effect, to keepe his minde constant in the resolution which he had taken: and ghesling at many occasions which might happen in my absence, answered the King presently thus. That our two soules 30 were so vnitely conioyned, that our wils were diuided in nothing, our affections to his Maiesty, and our desires to serue him were the same, and such as they could not bee separated from his Commandements. These words of his were graciously and tenderly received of the King, and after some teares on all parts, the King and him selfe hauing brought mee some fixe miles, wee all parted, they for the Court, my selfe for my Iourney, hauing first left with my Brother, my heart certainly, not onely for the coniunction which Nature had made betweene vs, but also for those worthy sparkes, which I found in him likely to bee brought to great perfection by his Vertue, which cannot leaue working in any, which will giue them way, much more in him, who will make way for them.

are little better then Prisoners, as long as they are within the limits of the Empire. From Haster-canne wee past by Boate along the mightie Riuer of Volga, vntill wee came to a Towne named Negson, which was seuen weekes passage. In which time, we saw nothing worthy the noting, but three or foure wooden Castles or Block-houses to guard that Riuer, which Riuer doth bring maruellous great Commodities to the Emperour, and to the whole Countrey. Diuers Tartars passing from place to place about that Riuer, liuing in little Houses made vpon Wheelles, and are carryed too and fro, hauing abundance of Cattell, liue so in subiection to the Emperour, paying him Tribute, &c. One onely faire Citie wee saw all that while called Cas-fane, wherein we were: from whence we passed to Negson aforesaid, where by the way fell out a Larre betweene Sir Anthonie and the other Ambassadour, because Sir Anthonie presumed to reprehend him for diuers misdemeanors which he committed, to the dishonour of his King and Countrey: Infomuch, that had we not had guard in our Company, one of vs had killed another. Learning here a while, I will turne againe to the Frier, * who was by this time growne into mortall hatred with his fellow Frier, of whom before I spake, whose name was Alfonso, a Frier of the Order of Saint Francis. Which Frier had acquainted Sir Anthonie, that Frier Nicolao had spent his life most lewdly in the Indies, the particularities whereof he at large related. Moreouer, hee told him, that by reason of his licentious life, the King of Spaine had sent for him, because hee did much more hurt then good in those parts, but neuer would come vntill now that he was going thither-ward. He also told Sir Anthonie, that that Present which he deliuered the King of Persia in his owne name, was sent by a Friend of the Kings from Ormuz, by another, who had withall, a Letter to the King. Which Bearer, (being of his Acquaintance) hee inueigled and inticed by the gift of fiftie Crownes, and faire words, to deliuer him the Present, together with the Letter to carry to the King, who finally preuailed with him. And when he came to Persia, hee suppressed the Letter, but deliuered the Present in his owne name, as before is declared.

Vpon discouery of which villanies, Sir Anthony tooke him Prisoner, and carried him along with him, as one deprived of former libertie. And being come to Negson, we stayed there neere hand a moneth. Towards the end whereof the Emperour sent a great man of his Court thither, for to accompany and conduct vs to Musco, who gaue the preheminence to the Persian Ambassador, in that he was Ambassadour to the Emperour from the Persian, and Sir Anthony but a Passenger through his Countrey, as he esteemed him, and so did vse him at his pleasure, to Sir *Anthony*s small contentment, vntil we came to Musco, where we were entertayned in the best sort they could, with a crue of Aquauita-bellyed Fellowes, clad in Coates of Cloth of Gold: which shew being ended, for the first encounter, those Coates were put vp againe into the Treasurie or Wardrobe, and we shut vp in Prison for ten dayes, yea all accessse of others to vs, or we to them was thereby vtterly barred. In which time wee sent to entreate, that either our English Merchants might bee permitted to come to vs, or that wee might goe or send to them for necessaries, because we were not fitted with Clothes (as we thought) conuenient for the Emperors presence. Whereupon the Lord Chancellor sent for the Merchants, enquiring of them what Sir Anthony was, and whether they durst giue him any credit. To whom they replied, that hee was nobly descended, and allyed euen to the best men of England: yea, and that they would giue him credit for as much as they were worth. Hereupon they had libertie to send vs such necessaries as we sent for, but no libertie to come to vs, much lesse we to them. The tenth day we were sent for to come before the Emperour after their order, which was, to lay downe in a note, how euery man should be marshalled in comming (being all on Horsebacke) wherein the Persian Ambassadour was appointed by the Emperour to haue the first and chiefe place, the next, that Persian that was sent but to accompany Sir Anthony, and the last of the three should be Sir Anthony himselfe. Which when Sir Anthony perceiued, he vtterly refused to goe in that Order, because that he, to whose trust and charge the whole businesse had beene committed, and by whom the same was solely procured: by which Persia likewise should be infinitely benefited (specially hee being a Christian, and they Pagans) should bee put hindermost in the march, that was the foremost in the matter.

Sir. Anthony's
refusall to goe.

By the meanes of which refusall, he purchased the Emperors displeasure: and to manifest the same, first, he took the Frier from Sir Antonie, and gaue him his libertie to go whither he thought good. Next, he daily sent his great Dukes to examine Sir Antonie vpon diuers friuolous particularities, to proue, if they thereby might grope out some matter of aduantage against him. Thus daily he was extremely vexed and molested by the Emperour, the Persian Embassadour, withall setting on the Frier vnder-hand, to deuise all the villanie hee could against him, as to say, he knew Sir Antonie to be but a man of meane parentage, and also, that he was come but as a Spie through the Countrey for purposes tending to his owne good, and not of Persia and Christendome, as he pretended. Whereupon they tooke all the Kings Letters from him, and opened them, to know the purport thereof.

Frier a Lye.

Soone after, Sir Anthony and the Frier were brought before the Commissioners to be further examined: where Sir Anthony (being inflamed with Choler, by reason of his exceeding ill vsage, notwithstanding the goodnesse of the cause of his comming) demanded whether the Emperour did euer purpose to send any Embassadours to any other Countries; Protesting, that if euer he met with them in any parts of the world, besides their owne, he would indeuour to let them know he was not halfe so well intreated in Russia, as the cause of his comming of right deserued, and the Emperour, by the lawes Diuine and Ciuill ought to haue performed, and the rather, because he was a Christian, such as he pretends himselfe to bee, and came (as became a Christian) for the generall good of all Christendome, the Persian being stirred vp thereunto by 10 his onely meanes. Whereupon the Frier in termes thwarted Sir Anthony, whose bloud already boyled, with the excesse of his cholers heat, which as then abounded. And being by that gracelesse and yngratefull Frier further prouoked, he (not able, though instantly hee should haue died for it) to suppress his heat, gaue the fat Frier such a sound box on the face (his double cause of choler redoubling his might, desire of reuenge withall augmenting the same) that downe falls the Frier, as if he had beene stricke with a Thunder-bolt. Which being done, (with that courage and high resolution which well appeared in his lookes, words, and deeds) they forthwith gaue ouer examination, because they had too farre examined Sir Anthonies patience, which well they with feare (as I thinke) saw, and the Frier (almost past feare) did farre better feele.
 Whereupon they went instantly to the Emperour, and informed him of all that had hapned, 20 and how Sir Anthony was resolu'd. For which (as by the euent it appeared) he was vsed the better. For from thence forward we had libertie to goe to the Englishmen, of whom wee were very honourably entertayned, and royally feasted. Howbeit wee were constrain'd to remayne there fixe moneths, expecting euery day (for all this) some mischiefe to be done vnto vs, or to be sent into some part of his Countrey to bee kept, where wee should not haue heard from our friends in haste, which we feared worse then death. Yet, in the end, wee were eftsoones sent for before the Priuie Councell, where Sir Anthony had his charge to bee gone, which was no small ioy to vs all.

S. A. striketh
the Frier.

But the day before we left Musconia, it was my fortune to see the King, and his Queene, in ceremonious and triumphant manner passing out of the Citie, with a great Image, and a huge 30 Bell, to offer to a certaine Friery some thirtie miles off, which was performed in this sort. First, all the morning diuers troops of Horse passed out of the Citie, to stand readie to receiue him at his comming out of the gate. About midday the King setting forwards, his Guard formost, all on horse-backe, to the number of fise hundred, all clad in stammell Coats, riding in ranke, three and three, with Bowes and Arrowes, and Swords girt to them, as also Hatchets vnder the one thigh. After the Guard, were led by twentie men, twentie goodly Horses, with very rich and curious Saddles, and ten more for his Sonne and Heire apparant, being a child of twelue yeeres of age. After which was led in like sort, twentie beautifull white Horses, for the Queenes Chariots, hauing onely vpon them a fine sheet, and on their heads a crimson veluet Bridle. After them came a great number of Friers in their rich Coapes, singing, carrying many Pictures, and 40 Lights. After them followed the greatest part of the Merchants of the Citie. Next them was led the Kings Horse, for that day, together with his sonnes: the Kings Saddle and furniture most richly beset with Stones of great price and beautie. Then followed the Patriarch, with all the Arch-bishops, Bishops, and great Prelates singing in their Coapes, very rich and glorious, hauing huge Images borne before them, being very richly inlayed with precious Gemmes of diuers colours, and Lights about them. Then followed the King himselfe, who had in his left hand his Sonne aboue mentioned, and in his right hand his Cap. Next him came the Queene, supported on either side by two old Ladies, her face euen thickly plaistered with painting, as were the other Ladies (according to the custome of the Countrey) her bodie very grosse, her eyes hollow and farre into her head, attended with some threescore very faire women (if pain-50 ting (which they hold a matter religious) deceiued not the iudgement of mine eye.) All whose apparell was very rich, beset with Pearle curiously wrought, hauing white Hats on their heads, with great round Bands laden with Pearle. Wee neuer saw Hats worne by any woman in the Countrey, but by them onely. Next vnto them were drawne three huge Chariots; the first, with ten faire white Horses, two and two; the second, with eight; and the third, with sixe in like order: which Chariots were all very rich and gorgeous within and without. After which all the Noblemen passed in Coaches. Then was carried, in a great Chift, the forenamed Image, guarded by a Great man and State of the Countrey, with some fise hundred vnder his command, for the guard and conuoy of that Image. And last of all came that huge Bell, being of 60 twentie tunne weight, drawne by three thousand and fise hundred men (not being possible to be drawne by Oxen or Horses) in manner following. They fastned sixe exceeding long hawfers, or mightie great Cable-ropes in fixe lengths to the frame whereon the Bell was placed. In this ranke of ropes were placed those three thousand fise hundred men, with little cords ouer their shoulders, fastned to the great hawfers, drawing after the manner of our Westerne Barge-men here in England.

Huge Bell drawne by 3500. men.

The poise of the Bell was so great, that passing along the streets of Musco (being paved with great square pieces of Timber set close one by another) the wood of the frame or carriage whereon the Bell was drawne, set the timber of the streets on fire, through both the woods chafing together, so that some were faine to follow hard after, to throw on water, as the timber began to smoke. And thus was this Bell and the Image conueyed to the Friery, as hath afore beene said.

The next day following wee tooke our iourney (that is to say, in mid May) towards Saint Nicolas, to take shipping, which was some sixe weekes passage by land and riuer. During all which time, we saw nothing in a manner, but Woods and water. But being come to the Sea side, being the place where we were to take ship, we stayed there one moneth for prouision for our iourney. In which time we were diuers times inuited aboard English ships, where wee were royally banquetted at the Agents charges and the Merchants. To the solemnization of which Banquets wee had three hundred great shot. And as wee stayed there, one Master Megricke a Merchant came from Musco, and brought the Friers two Letters with him, reporting that the Lord Chancellour, in satisfaction of the wrong and ill vsage hee extended to Sir Anthonie, sent after the Frier to the borders, who tooke both his Letters and all his substance that he had deceitfully and lewdly gotten in many yeeres before in the Indiæes from him, leauing him not so much as his Friers Weede: and whether hee caused his throat to be cut, it was vncertaine, but not vnlike.

Stode.

From hence wee tooke ship for Stode, being sixe weekes vpon the Sea ere wee could recouer it. In which time wee were continually tossed and tumbled with contrarie Winds: and once had beene like to haue beene vtterly cast away, so that wee all were ouerwhelmed in despaire, as we were at point to be in the Sea, but that (by Gods protection and direction) we (past all expectation) fell vpon the Flie. Where, (hauing diuers Letters of Sir Anthonie to his friends in England) I parted from him (he holding his course toward the Emperour of Germanie;) from thence I came to the Tessell, then to the Firme: so to the Hage: from the Hage to Vlissing: and finally, from thence to Doner, where I landed in the midst of the moneth of September, in the three and fortieth yeere of the Queenes Maiesties Raigne, and in the yeere of our LORD GOD 1601.

CHAP. III.

Two Voyages of Master IOHN NEWBERIE, One, into the Holy Land; The other to Balsara, Ormus, Persia, and backe thorow Turkie.

Iohn Newberie Citizen and Merchant of London, desirous to see the World, the eighth of March, 1578. according to the computation of the Church of England, began a Voyage from the Citie of London to Tripolie in Syria, and thence to Ioppe and Hierusalem, and the Countrey round about adioyning, which I performed in passing through France to Marceils, where I imbarqued my selfe, and passing through the Leuant or Mediterrane Sea, arriued in Tripolie the thirteenth day of May; and within few dayes after at Ioppe, and thence at Hierusalem, and the chiefe places thereabout: And spending a moneth in visiting the Monuments of those Countreies, I returned to Ioppe the tenth of Iune, 1579. And the fifteenth of the said moneth arriued againe in Tripolie; from whence shortly after I visited Mount Libanus, and returning speedily to the said Port of Tripolie, I imbarqued my selfe in a ship of Marceils, the first of Iulie, and the three and twentieth of the said moneth, I put in at Candia; and the seuenth day of September, arriued safely in Marceils, and passing through France by Lions, Paris, Roan, and Diepe. The tenth of Nouember of the aforesaid yeere 1579. by Gods helpe arriued safely in London.

* This Voyage (as the former) for Time, is before that of Sir Anthonie Sherley; but that in honour of the Person and employment hath and deserueth precedence.

I the said Iohn Newberie being encouraged by the prosperous successe of my former Voyage to Tripoly, Hierusalem, and Mount Lybanus, vndertooke a farre more long and dangerous voyage, by the Straights of Gibraltar, the Mediterranean Sea, the aforesaid Tripoly, and downe the Riuer of Euphrates, as farre as the Citie of Ormus in the Gulfe of Persia, and from thence through the Countrey of Lar, and the most Easterne parts of Persia, to Media, Armenia, Georgia, Carmania, Natolia, and so to Constantinople, and from thence by the Blacke Sea, called in old time Pontus Euxinus, into the Mouth of the Riuer Danubius by shipping, and so a great way vp the said Riuer, passing by the parts of Bugdania and Valachia, at length landing, I came to Caminetz, the first Frontier Towne of Poland; and passing through that Kingdome, arriued in Prussia, and came to Elbing, and Dantzke, and Quinsborow, where imbarquing my selfe, I passed through the Sound of Denmark, and arriued at Hull in England, and so ouer land trauelled to London, whither I came the last day of August, 1582. making my voyage in the space of two yeeres, lacking nineteene dayes. This voyage at large I performed in this manner.

The

The nineteenth day of September, 1580. accompanied with Master William Barret an English Merchant. I departed from London in a good ship, called the White Hinde, and the fifteenth of Nouember came to Sonthe in Candie. The one and twentieth we arrived at the Citie of Candia. The Citie of
The sixt day of December wee set sayle with our ship from Fraschia on our voyage: and the eight at night, we had like to haue runne vpon the Ile of the Rhodes, setting our courie East from the Ile of Scarpanto. The eighteenth day we had light of Cyprus. The Ile of

The first day of Ianuarie we arrived in Tripoli. And the third and fourth dayes, our ship called the White Hinde, discharged all her goods. The French-men brought fortie Barrels of Tinnie on Shoare in their Boat. The fifth day of Ianuarie at night, there was such a storme, that in the 10 Roads of Tripoli there were two ships cast away, and the French-mans Boat. They arrive at Tripoli in Syria, the first of Ianuarie.

The fourteenth of Ianuarie, 1580. after the account of the Church of England, Master William Barret and I departed from Tripoli, and lodged the same day at an house called a Cane; and the next day after, we passed by a Castle to the Sea-ward, called Draa. The sixteenth day, we passed by a strong Castle, called Ewsen. The seuenteenth, wee lay at Mowaa. The eighteenth day in the morning about nine of the clocke, wee came to Metteni: and within halfe an houre after, Master William Barret rode with our Ianizarie to Aman, which is within three leagues of Met- teni. The nineteenth day in the morning, wee came to Sibi a Casal: and the same day about noone I came to Aman; and stayed there some sixe dayes. The sixe and twentieth, wee came from Aman, and the same night slept at a Village, called Det. The six and twentieth, at Marra.
20 The seuen and twentieth from thence, and the same day we came to Ledeghe, where great store of Soape is made: that night we lay at a Village, called Sarraket, neere to Syrmin: and the eight and twentieth day came to the Citie of Aleppo. The Castle standeth to the Southward off the Towne. The one and thirtieth of Ianuarie, wee had a great banquet made vs in the house of the French Consul. The one and twentieth of Februarie about nine of the clocke in the morning, was seene in Aleppo an extraordinarie Starre or Comet, which ascended from the North, and descended toward to North-west.

The nineteenth of March in the morning, I departed from Aleppo with an hyred seruant of mine, called Iacomo de Francisco, to proceed on mine intended voyage to Ormuz, lying in the Mouth of the Persian Gulfe. And about two of the clocke in the afternoone I passed by Boab, where is an high Tower vpon an Hill: and the same night I came to a Village, called Halse. And 30 the twentieth day we departed from thence, and the same day came to Bir. The Towne of Bir standeth vpon the East side of the Riuer Frat or Euphrates: and the water commeth directly from the North, and descendeth to the South. Here is great store of Linnen cloth made, and great store of Waxe: here is also great store of Corne and Fish, and Cordouan skins, and Hony. At Bir the Merchants doe pay for euery summe or packe of all commodities, one Sehid or Madin, for Toll. After we had hyred vs a Barke and furniture for our voyage, wee set forward; and the six and twentieth day, wee passed by a Village to the East of the Riuer, called Raick; and the same day in the euening by a Mountaine to the West of the Water, where is one house with one Tower on the top of it. And there the Arabians offered to shoote at vs. The next day in the 40 morning, we passed by a Castle, called Balleffe, which is ruinated, and standeth on the West side of the Riuer. And about noone the same day by a Towne, called Gabbar, which standeth vpon a Mountaine to the East of the Riuer. The eight and twentieth day, we passed by an old Towne where is a Castle all ruinated, and lyeth close vpon the Water to the Eastward, which is called Racca: and it standeth North North-east of the Water. The thirtieth day in the morning, we passed by a Towne and a Castle all ruinate, which lyeth to the West of the Water, and is called Balladac; which in times past was the Christians. The same night wee came to a Towne, called Dier, which lyeth also to the West of the Riuer, and is inuironed with the Water round about. Here the Patron of our Barke sold his Hony, for nine Aspers the Rotila: and one Rotila of Bir maketh two Rotilas there.

The first day of April, 1581. from Dier, and the same night we lay neere vnto a Castle, called Rab, which lyeth to the West of the Water. The second day in the morning, wee passed by Asbar, a small Towne, which lyeth to the West of the Water. The third day in the morning, we passed by Subercan, which lyeth to the East of the Water, and is all ruinate, and in times past was the Christians. The fourth day we passed by a Village, called Manalle, to the West of the Riuer. And the same night to Anna, which lyeth vpon both sides of the Water, but to the West is the greatest part: But the East side reacheth farther then the other, as may bee perceiued by the Date Trees and Houles. This Towne of Anna is very long, and there is about the middle of it a Castle, which is inuironed with Water, as also diuers Ilands to the number of fourteene or fifteene, which lye all to the Northward of the Castle, except two or three. Here are great store of Dates, Oranges, Pomgranats, Figs, Limons, Corne, and Muttons. The eight day we departed from thence, and went but very little way, by reason of very great winde and stormie weather: which began the fifth, and continued vntill the eleuenth day: and the winde was most commonly at North-east. The tenth day, wee came to Addetta, and the same night to Gebbar, which lyeth to the East of the Water; and there we were at a wedding. The eleuenth day we departed.

Heit. departed from Gebbar, and the same day came to Heit, where is a Castle to the West of the Ri-Pitch boyling uer: and a little from the Castle to the South-west, is a place, where Pitch boyleth out of the out of the Ground continually; so that all the sandie ground toward the Riuer side is ouer-flowed there-ground con- with. Diuers Camels haue fallen into these Springs, but none of them could be saued. All the tinually. way betweene Anna and Heit are continually on both sides the Riuer Houses, and Date Trees, Ambar. with Corne and diuers Fruits. The twelfth day wee departed from Heit. The thirteenth day Feluge. we came to Ambar, which is a village, and lyeth on the East side of the Riuer. The fourteenth we Searching for went from thence, and the same morning arriued at Feluge; where the goods are landed that come money. from Bar. There I was searched for money, and the Searcher found all that I had: but in confi-Bagdet. deration that he should keepe it secret, I gaue him two Sehids, and to him that writeth vp the " Babylon. goods two Sehids more; which they receiued, and yet wrote vnto Bagdet, that I had foure bags of money. So that about three or foure miles from Bagdet met with vs an Officer to accompanie vs to the Towne, because they would be sure of the money. Notwithstanding, by the meanes of one Mustafa a Turke, I gaue this Officer three and thirtie Madins, wherewithall he was content, and kept it secret. So, shortly after we came to the Market place, where I was searched, but no money could bee found. There wee remayned about two houres, and then went into a
Can. The next day in the morning wee went ouer the Water, and were no sooner out of the Boat, but we were searched, but nothing found. From thence we went into the Hammam, and so returned to our lodging. The fourteenth day about eight of the clocke at night, we went from Feluge by land, in the companie of an hundred Asses. The fifteenth day about one of the clocke in the afternoone, wee came to Bagdet. The sixteenth day of April, I did see Barley that was ripe and cut downe, neere to Bagdet. Old Bagdet standeth to the North of Bagdet, about twentie or fve and twentie miles. The seuenteenth day, we passed through Bagdet. One Castle standeth to the South-east of the Towne, vpon the South side of the Water, and another to the North-west of the Water vpon the North side, where the Bassa doth keepe his Court, whose name is Hassan Bassa. The twentieth day, there was a Christian which came into the Can to call vs forth: but because wee did not vnderstand him, wee remayned still in the Magasin. So, presently came foure for to search vs, and they found our money. The two and twentieth day, I wrote Letters to Master William Hareborne, and Master William Barret, by a Merchant of Alep- po, and directed my Letters to Master John Blanch, Consul of the French Merchants in Aleppo. The foure and twentieth day in the euening, I went from Bagdet. The six and twentieth day at night, we passed by a Towne, called Bourac, which lyeth to the West of the Water, and is all ruinated.
And a little below that standeth a Tower in the middle of the Riuer. The seuen and twentieth, we passed by a Towne, called Menil, which lyeth to the East of the Water: and there is but one Tower standing. The same day, by a place called Amor, which lyeth close vpon the Water to the Eastward, and is a small Casal. The thirtieth day in the morning, wee passed by a Towne, called Sekia, which lyeth to the East of the Water: and the same day by a very long Village, named Kendege, to the East of the Water, and it is all ruinated. Also the same day in the euening, we came to Gurna, which is a Castle, and standeth vpon the Point where the Riuer of Furro and the Riuer of Bagdet doe meet. And vpon the South side of Furro, right ouer against this Castle is another Castle, about the greatnesse of this. And about three miles farther in the Riuer, toward Balsara, to the South of the Water, is another.
The first day of May, 1581. I arriued in Balsara. At the Waters side at Balsara, the merchandise that enter within the Can, pay vpon euery Summe or Camels burden three Madins and three quarters; sixteene Vessennes of Balsara make one Kintall of Aleppo. The carriage of eue-ry summe of goods from Bagdet to Balsara, costeth by water sixe Shehides. And for the carriage from Balsara to Bagdet, vpon euery Vessene two Madins. And the carriage of one hundred Ves- senes from Balsara to Ormuz, costeth twentie Larins, and from Ormuz to Balsara twentie La- rins. The Custome in Balsara is vpon euery fourteene Shehides one. And for Glasse, and such like commodities, accordingly. Clothes, Kersies, and all kinde of Silkes, pay vpon euery twen-tie one. And vpon euery ten Vessenes or ten Rotilas, there are three to bee allowed for Tarr or Waste: and vpon all Spicerie accordingly. The Towne of Balsara standeth to the East Southeast of the Riuer: and without the Towne are diuers Basars or Market places, and their Houses are made of Canes or great Reedes. And their Corne lyeth all on heapes without the Towne vpon the ground couered with Mats, and is sold by the weight. There are about Balsara foure Gates; and a little from the North Gate lye ten peeces of Ordnance great and small, besides two Basiliscoes, that lye vnder the wall at the entring of the Gate. Their building is of Brick, which is made of a certaine kind of stufte, that may be cut with a knife. There is without the Towne a very high Pole set vp, which is of three peeces; and vpon the top of it a Cup of Tinne or Lead; and there they runne with their Horses, and shoote at the Cup; and he that hitteth the Cup gayneth a Shaffe. At Balsara the Water doth ebbe and flow, as it doth in England, and in no other places adioyning vpon the Ocean Sea. The Turke won Balsara about the yeere 1550. The Ves- sene of Maces is worth in Balsara thirteene Duckats, and Nut-megs fve or sixe Duckats: Soape is worth fifteene Shehids the Vessene, and Almonds foure and twentie Shehids the Vessene: Galles are worth ten Larins the Vessene.
The

- The thirteenth day of May, 1581. I embarked my selfe at Bassara: and the sixteenth wee valed downe about three flight shot. Halfe a dayes iourney from the Towne, to the East of the Riuer Iye eight or ten Bulwarks, and beyond them all is a Castle vpon the Point of a Land. The two and twentieth day in the afternoone, wee came to an Anchor, because it was too much winde. The three and twentieth in the morning, we sayled vntill ten of the clocke, and then came to an Anchor, because they were afraid to put to Sea toward night. The Mariners are all beasts. The foure and twentieth day in the morning, we put to Sea with a faire winde: and the same day by noone, we were at the Sea. And all that morning, wee kept our course South, and when wee were at the Sea, South or South South-east. The five and twentieth day in the morning, we had sight of a Mountaine of Aggemy, a day short of Abosha: and then we kept our course East South-east. And the same day, we arriued at an Island, called Carreghe, which belongeth to the Countrey of Haggemy, and left it to the South of vs. The sixe and twentieth day, we landed in the Island of Carege: and there is great store of Onions, and Wells of fresh water; and in the middle of the Island is a Casal. The Island is about two miles broad and two miles long. And to the North-west of it lyeth a small Island very low in the water. The seuen and twentieth day in the morning, wee set sayle from Carege; and the same day passed by the low Land of Persia, which lyeth vnder the high Mountaines. And in diuers places are certaine Gulfs like Riuers. The same day in the euening, wee were at Abousher, which is a Castle. And from thence wee kept our course South South-east to goe cleere of the Land: it is very high Land.
- 20 The nine and twentieth day in the morning, the Boat went on shoare for water; and I went also on shoare with the Boat: and the water which we tooke did stinke, and was full of mud and vermine. And in this order is all their water in the Countrey of Cassel-Bash. The last day of May, we passed by a very high Cliffe, and vpon it is a Rocke like vnto a Barne, which lyeth East and West, and to the West end of it lyeth a round Rocke, which is like an Hay-cocke, about two yards high. And this Cliffe is within three dayes sayling of Ormuz. And there the ships put off from the Land that goe for the Ile of Baharem: and there we kept our course North-east. The West end of this Cliffe is white like Chalke or Snow. This day, one of our Mariners being sick, another of his fellowes came with an hot Iron and burnt him in the sole of the foote. Another they would haue left in an Island because he was sicke, who answered, That hee trusted they did not take him for a Hen.
- 30 The second day of Iune came a Boat aboard of vs, which came from Ormuz, and was bound for the Ile of Baharem. The same day, wee passed by a Mountaine which is like a Castle, and vpon the top of it is a Rocke like vnto a little watch house. The fourth day of Iune we tooke in fresh water. The seuenth day, we departed from the place where wee tooke in water; and the same day we arriued at an Island, called Shie, which is vnder the Portugals: and vpon the West end of it are two companies of Date Trees, and two round Knobs like two Hay-cocks, and it is a plaine Island. The aforesaid seuenth day at night, wee came to an Anchor at Shie: and to the South of it lyeth a small Island, where they fish for Pearles. The eight day wee went on shoare there. The ninth day, we departed from Shiche, and the same day we landed at Necchel, which is about foure leagues distant. I paid for carrying of my things on shoare at Necchel two Larins, and for landing of them five Larins. The women here weare long Mantles, which they draw after them like a traine: and farther in the Countrey they weare their Garments with three slits, one before, and one on either side; and their sleeues are like the sleeues of Morris-dancers. And they haue round about their eares pack-threed sewed. Also they weare great Rings in their Noses; and about their Legs, Armes, and Necks, Iron hoopes.
- 40 The eleuenth day, we departed from Necchel. The twelfth day in the morning, we came to a great Casal, called Melgor, where lyeth a Captaine called Shiagh: and here we remayned three dayes, and were in great danger of being taken slaues, but God kept vs. This Casal lyeth betweene the Mountaines. The fourteenth day in the euening, wee left this wicked place, where I paid ten Larins for my part. The women here may throw their Dugs over their shoulders. The eighteenth day, we came to a Casal, called Gesser, and the same day from thence. The nineteenth day, wee lodged at Bender. The twentieth, wee departed from Bender, and the same euening came at an Island, called Left. And right ouer against Bender, lyeth an Island, called Bassedor; and these two Islands are vnder the Portugals. And Gesser and Bender, which are on the mayne Land, are vnder Abreham Can, and sometimes were vnder the King of Ormuz. The one and twentieth day, I went on Land on the Ile of Left: And here the women weare Iron hoopes, and a number of other things about their Necks, Legs, and Armes. The two and twentieth day of Iune, 1581. I arriued at Ormuz, and presently was carried before the Captaine, whose name was Don Gonfalu. The same day I hyred an house for sixe Larins. The Castle of Ormuz standeth to the North of the Towne, and some thing to the Eastward. Diuers both men and women here vse to slit the lower part of their eares more then two inches, which hangeth downe to their chin. There were in my companie from Necchel to Ormuz one Turke, and one Moore of Labor, and one Moore of Fez in Barbarie, and five Persians, and twelue Moores of Aleppo, Aman, and other places, and one Nostrane, a Christian, and my man, who was a Greeke: and all these

It is a great miracle to see the Mountaines of Ormuz, all of Salt, and as hard as a Flint stone : and this Salt is very good for diuers diseases. All the Iland is salt, and the very ground where the Towne doth stand is salt : which is the cause of the excessive heat that is there. From eight of the clocke in the morning vntill the Sunne goe downe, it is not possible for any bodie, that is not vsed to the Countrey, to passe either with shooes or bare-foot, where the Sunne doth lie, it is so extreme hot. The Swine in Ormuz haue clawes of a quarter of an ell long, and some longer. The Portugals doe hold a Castle ouer against Ormuz, in the Countrey of the King of Lar, where they keepe ten or twelue Souldiers : the name of which Castle is called, The great Maftango. The seuenth day of Iulie, my man Iacomo, which was a Greeke, went from mee to one Michael Stropene a Venetian, being, as I suspect, entised thereunto by him, to vnderstand my secret purposes : and in very deed, in my last Voyage into these parts, in the yeere 1583.
this Michael Stropene betrayed me and my companie to the Gouvernour of Ormuz.

After I had spent fixe weekes in this Citie, and informed my selfe the best I could, of the Trade and Customes of the place, I departed from Ormuz the first day of August at night, and left Signior Victorio, a friend of mine, with his goods behind. The second of August about midnight, I arriued at Bender gomrow, where the Portugals keepe a Castle with seuen or eight Soul-diers, within it: And this Bender gomrow, which is on the mayne land, was sometimes the Kings of Lar, and after that Abraham Cans, and so it came to the King of Ormuz. The fift day at night we departed from Bender gomrow : and the eighth day we lodged at a Casal, called Cowr-stan. The tenth day at Ourmangel : there is a Spring of fresh water, which runneth through the middle of it. The fourteenth day in the morning we came to the Citie of Lar. Two Mauns of Ormuz, make three Mauns of Lar : two hundred seuentie and two Mauns of Ormuz merchandise, which are eight hundred and sixteene Lerra of Bountaki, cost the carriage from Bender gom-row to Lar, twentie Larins and an halfe. And one Asnillo will carrie one hundred Maun of Lar, which are two hundred Lerra of Bountaki. The fifteenth day, I hired one Moufa a Jew, for fixe moneths to be my seruant, for thirtie Larins the moneth. At Bender gomrow all goods that goe for Persia pay vnto the Portugals vpon euery summe or load one Sadan.

The foure and twentieth day of August, 1581. about noone I departed from Lar. And at Lar euery summe of merchandise payeth at the passing out of the gate one Tanger, which is twelue Pull. And the five and twentieth day wee passed downe a very high Mountaine ; and the same day passed by a Casal, called Debaccow. And this five and twentieth day at night lodged at a Casal, called Berre. And to the South of the Towne is an old Castle vpon an high Mountaine. The fixe and twentieth day we came to a place, where I bought three Hendomes for one Tanger, and they are as sweet as Sugar. The seuen and twentieth day we lodged at Olous.
The nine and twentieth, we departed from Olous : and neere vnto it is a very great Casal, called Gouen, which hath Angour and Corma plentie. And this night we payed at our Baite vpon euery summe five Pull : And at Gouen endeth the Countrey of Lar. The last day of August, I passed ouer the greatest Mountaine that euer I saw, and left it to the Southward of vs.

The first of September in the morning, wee came to a Citie, called Gaarrom : and the same day, to a Casal, called Demonder, where standeth an high Columne alone. About Gaarrom is great store of Rice and Cotton wooll growing. And here the Sheepe haue Lambs twice euery yeere. The second day of September, we came to Mecocal, where we had stinking water : and the same day payed a dutie of two Tanger vpon euery Bar. The third day we came to Canger, and the same day at night we payed a Best vpon euery Bar. The fourth day we came to a faire Can, called Chefimon moddassar : and the same day wee had raine. The fifth day wee came to Cowel, which is a Casal neere to Shiras : this night we payed a dutie vpon our goods. The sixth day in the morning, we came to the Citie of Shiras. Betweene Lar and Shiras is great store of Wolues, Partridges, and Pheasants. There are in Shiras five high Towers, and the highest is in the middle of the Towne. To the North of the Towne is a Gate of very faire coloured stone, which is a little beyond the Horse-mart : and without this Gate are all the Sheepe and Goats fold, that serue for the Towne. The highest and furthest Tower in Shiras is neere to the Can that I lay in, and is builded with yellow, Greene, white, and purple stone. The women ride here vpon Horses like men. It is a Towne that hath great store of victuals and fruits. Iron, Lead, Casder, Cochonillio, Brasill, Linnen cloth, Foutas, and all wares that come out of India, are very well sold here. Brasill is worth fixe Mamodies the Maun, and Cochonillio one hundred and fiftie Mamodies. Certaine small Laton that commeth from Sindi are sold in Shiras for twelue Shehides the piece. In this Towne is made great store of Mauward and Gebib, which are carried for India. The Maun of Cloues is worth in Shiras fiftie Shehides, Nutmegs thirtie, Pepper seuen and twentie. From Lar to Shiras we went the most part North-west and to the North, we stayed in this Towne from the sixth day till the two and twentieth. The two and twentieth of September, we departed from Shiras, and the same day came to Sargon, a Towne vnder a Mountaine in a pleasant Valley. The three and twentieth in the morning, wee passed vnder

vnder a great Mountaine, and neere vnto the East of it is a small Riuer : and the same day in the forenoone, we came to a Village, called Auglamor : and neere vnto that is another, called Augalm. The foure and twentieth in the morning, wee passed ouer a narrow Bridge, and the water runneth to the South : and the same day we lodged at a Village called Moyffe ; where we payed vpon euery summe of goods, one Gasbi. And while wee lay here there passed through the Towne a number of Sheepe, Goats, and Camels, with poore people, and their household-stuffe. The five and twentieth day from Moyffe, and the same day came to a Village, called Sesmon Dermal. The sixe and twentieth in the morning, wee passed ouer a very high Mountaine, vpon the top whereof are two Springs of very good water, and the same day we came to Augow : and to the North-east of the Village is a stony Bridge, and very good water passeth vnder it : And here we found a man hurt with Theeues. The seuen and twentieth we went from Augow, and the same day we rested at Hausapans, which standeth vnder a Mountaine, and hath to the West of it vpon a little Hill, a small round white Castle : And here is Bread, Cheese, Hens, Raisins, and Milke. The eight and twentieth day we went from Hausapans, and the same day we rested at Cuskesar, where is nothing but a round house vpon a Hill : but there is a new Cana building. The nine and twentieth day we went from Cuskesar, and the same day rested at Gerdoun. And this day we saw many Theeues vpon the Mountaines. The thirtieth day we departed from Gerdoun, and the same day came to Yestacas, which standeth vpon a Rocke in a deepe Valley : and here wee found Bread, Ennap, and Battegh. Here I payed twice as much Toll as in any other paid.

20 The first day of October we departed from Yestacas : and the second day in the morning wee came to Boial, which is a Village of great store of fruit. And here wee met with the Bassa of Shiras, which had in his companie about a thousand Camels, besides Horses, and Asnillios. And here are many Villages and Houses together. The second of October at night wee left Boial, and the third day lodged at Moydar. The fourth day we departed from Moydar, and the same day I came to the Citie of Hispahan, where the King of Persia sometimes keepeth his Court. At the entring in of the gate of Hispahan, groweth on either side of the gate a Chest-nut tree, one to the East, and another to the West, then we passed ouer many waters : and at the entring into the principall Towne is a Castle to the South-west of the gate. And here they haue in their Hamam a certaine Ointment to anoint their bodies withall, which is called Doma, which taketh away all the haire of a mans bodie. To the East of Hispahan is a very long and great Valley, where are many Villages and Houses. The carriage of one hundred Mauns of Merchandise from Shiras to Hispahan, costeth seuentie Shehides, and from Hispahan to Cassan sixtie Shehides. Hispahan is a Citie that vseth great store of Anil, maketh the greatest store of Muskaille, and hath the best Cotton that euer I saw. The Maun of Cotton wooll is worth here twelue Shehides ; and the Maun of Rice, seuen Beste ; the Maun of Dracken, two Beste ; and the Maun of Ennap, two Beste ; the Maun of Non, three Beste ; and Laghem, foure Beste. The Cattal of Sugar is worth here foure hundred Tomaun, and Anil fortie Mamodies the Maun. The Maun of Hispahan is one and an halfe of Shiras. Also at the entring in and going out of the gates of Hispahan, euery Hemmel payeth one Gasbi. The seuenth day of October, I came out of the Can at Hispahan.

30 The ninth day of the said moneth I departed from Hispahan, and the same day lodged at Sen. The tenth day from Sen, and the same day at Shesers Can : and also this day at night, at a great Village called Calenda, which hath great plentie of all sorts of fruits. The eleuenth day from thence, and the same day at Shen, also a Towne of great store of fruit. And this day in the morning, we descended downe a very high Mountaine. At Calenda euery summe of goods payeth one Gasbi. The twelfth day we went from Shen, and the same day we came to Garratcoy, and the same day departed from thence, and in the afternoone reached vnto the Citie of Cassan. And presently vpon the comming of any Caffell to Cassan, there is one that doth take a note of all the goods, what it is, and how much of euery sort : which note he deliuereth to the Vizier, which is the name of the Gouvernour of Cassan, which is greater then a Basha. To the South-west or West of this Towne, is all Mountaynous, and to the North of it are diuers Villages and Valleys, and to the South-east is a low Mountaine, and white, as if it were by the Sea side. The foureteenth day at the comming of the Caffell to Cassan, they brought newes that seuen ships of the Portugals were arriued in Ormuz from Goa. The Carauan Basha had for guarding of the Caffell from Lar to Cassan, twentie Tomaun, which were in number five hundred Camels. The summe of an Asse, which is two Mauns of Lar, costeth the carriage from Lar to Cassan, sixtie Mamodies. The seuenteenth day of October, went a Caffell from Cassan to Casbin. From Yesla, which is ten daies iourney to the South from Cassan, commeth great store of Cotton-wooll, and cloath made of Cotton ; and the Maun of Cotton-wooll is worth in Cassan, eight Mamodies, Creams is worth sixe Tomaun the Maun. The vse is in this Citie, when they burie their dead, that three carrie the Corps to the graue, two before and one behind. Wood is sold in Cassan for one Beste the Maun. He that writeth vp the goods that come to Cassan, taketh vpon euery Tomaun that is sold in the Towne, one Mamodie : and the like order is in Tauris. There was a Caffell of one hundred hundred and fiftie Camels comming from Ormus to Cassan, all carried away by two hundred Theeues; therefore men must goe strong in those theeuiſh parts. The Batman of Cassan maketh two and an halfe of Aleppo. Pepper is worth the Maun in this Citie, fortie Shehides, Meckhikan and Bepella ſeuentie Mamodies, Drachen one hundred Shehides, and Angarra fixe Mamodies the piece. And eightie make fiftie Mauns of Tauris, which is foure hundred and fiftie Lerras of Venice. Gingebeſ fortie Shehides: Silke eightie Shehides. And fixe Mauns of Silke make one Maun of all other things.

The fourth day of Nouember we departed from Cassan, and the ſame day lodged at a Caſal, called Senſen: the Can is old, and ſtandeth to the Eaſtward of the Village. And this Caſal ſtandeth vpon a round rotten hill like a Caſtle: and to the Weſt of it, is a rew of ſmall Trees, and two great Trees in the rew. And neere to Senſen is a Village, called Bedra, which hath a ſmall Caſtle. The fifth day from Senſen, and the ſame day we reſted at Casmona; which is a ſmall Village in a great Plaine, and hath an old Caſtle ſtanding to the South of the Towne. And here we paid vpon Barr one Gasbeke. The ſixt day from Casmona, and the ſame day at Comm, which is a very great Citie. The eight day we departed from Gaffarawan, and the ſame day we came to a Citie, called Sowwa: and we lay all night in a great field, incloſed with a wall round about. The ninth day, we went from Sowwa, and the ſame day wee came to Daung, which ſtandeth to the Weſt of the high-way. And here we paid vpon euery Barr one Gasbeke. The tenth day we departed from Daung, and the ſame morning paſſed by another Mangel, called Sang: and the ſame day we came to Arraſſan, which is a Village that hath diuers houſes built like Hay-cocks. And heere a Theefe would know of me of what place I was. And at Arraſſan we paid vpon euery ſumme of goods one Gasbeke. It is alwaies very good for a man that will trauaile, to apparell himſelfe according to the order of euery Country, wherein he ſhall trauaile. The eleuenth day we departed from Arraſſan, and the ſame day we came to Kirra, which ſtandeth vpon a little round hill. The twelfth day from Kirra, and the ſame day at Paffen, where is great ſtore of Wall-nut-trees and Wine: and heere two draughts coſt me one Mamodie. The thirteenth from Paffen, and the ſame morning paſſed by a Village, called Auffar; and to the South of way are two old Towers. Alſo the ſame day we came to Dessa, which is nothing but a Can: And heere comming ſomewhat late in the euening, wee could get neither Bread nor Water. The foureteenth we departed from Dessa, and the ſame morning paſſed by a towne, called Sultanas; which we left to the South-weſt of the way. Alſo the ſame day we came to Caneſſeras of the Shangh, which is a Can, and new built, and the Water is farre from the Can. The eleuenth day of Nouember it began with froſt, and very cold and great winds; and the foureteenth day in the euening, being at the Kings houſe, it began to ſnow. The ſixteenth day, we departed from Caneſſeras of the Shangh, and the ſame day we came to a Towne, called Sangas. The ſeuenteenth day we went from Sangas, and the ſame day we came at a Can, called Necpaw. The eighteenth day we departed from Necpaw, and the ſame day we came to Sarcham, where we found a Sultan, and therefore lay without the Can. The nineteenth wee departed from Sarcham, and the ſame day we came to a Towne, called Meyannan, where is great plentie of victuals. And here the Batman of Bread is ſold for fixe Gasbekes, and ſeuene Gasbekes is one Beſte. And this morning we met at the entring into the Mountaines twentie Theeues, and preſently after paſſed ouer a bridge, and then ouer a very high Mountaine, where the high-way is paved with ſtone. And neere vnto this Meyannan is a very long bridge of Bricke: and heere their Bricke is much like vnto ours; and heere are Muſicians like vnto ours. The twentieth wee departed from Meyannan, and the ſame day we came to a Village, called Turkeman: and at Meyannan wee met with the reſt of our Caſſel. The one and twentieth wee went from Turkeman, and the ſame morning paſſed by two Cans, the one called David Derhauer, and the other Abas. Alſo the ſame day, we came to a Village called Haggegaw, whither we came late in the night. The two and twentieth day we departed from Haggegaw, and the ſame day we came to a Village, called Anaſpeng, where are many ſmall trees. The three and twentieth wee departed from Anaſpeng, and the ſame day we came to the great Citie of Tauris or Tauris. Neere vnto Tauris is much Medow ground. This weeke all the Armenians keepe faſt. They follow the orders of the Greekes: for euery Wednesday and Friday they faſt, and euery Saturday eate fleſh, except it be Eaſter Eue. The fixe and twentieth day of Nouember, I was at their Church in Tauris: where firſt they ſung Psalmes, and then went to Maſſe: And the Prieſt went round about the Altar three times. The firſt time he cenſored, the ſecond time hee carried the Booke about, and the third time the Chalice. At the beginning of Maſſe, euery man doth kiſſe one another; and after Maſſe kiſſe the Booke, and take holy Bread: and the poore haue pottage and bread giuen them. An hundred Mauns of Merchandize of Tauris coſt the carriage from Cassan to Tauris by Menel, one hundred and twentie Shehides. I paid for my ſelfe and eightie two Mauns

Mauns of Merchandize, eightie seven Mamodies, and I was accounted for five and thirtie Batmans. The Batman of Teuris maketh nine Lerra of Venice, Darchen is worth the Maun in Teuris, fiftie Shehides, full full eight and twentie, gold and siluer of Bountaki thirtie Ducats the Lerra, euery dram one Best, Silke one hundred Shehides. The seven and twentieth of Nouember, I paide in Teuris for my tribute twelue Shehides and two Bestes. Also I paide for safe conduct betweene Cassan and Teuris, ten Shehides. In Teuris I vnderstood, that a yeere before my coming thither, there was one Thomas here with diuers English-men, who sold Cremes for one Tomaun and an halfe, and Kerfies for one hundred Shehides the piece. In Teuris is a kind of tilke Sattin, called Atlas, of nine or ten Gasse long euery piece, and it is sold for three Merchel and an halfe the piece, and the best for foure Croysh, which are good wares for Arsingam, and Arserom in Armenia. In Teuris I sold one and twentie Mauns of Mechic, at three Mamodies the Maun, which amount to fixe hundred ninetie three Mamodies. The Batman of Wan or Van is two and an halfe of Teuris. Neere vnto Teuris to the Northward, is a very high Mountaine, where Snow doth lie continually. The first day of December, 1581. in the Euening, wee departed from the Citie of Teuris, and the same night lodged at a Village called Souffion, and here is Wine that is very strong, but not pleasant. The third day from Souffion, and the same day at a Towne called Merent, where are two high old Towers, and two blunt, standing neere together. And here vpon newes of the passing by the Towne of a Bassa, there went out five hundred Horse-men. And Aras is the name of the Riuer which runneth before the Towne, and the Towne standeth vnder a Mountayne. There are in this Towne three thousand Houses, and they haue seven Churches, and the richest pay euery house twentie Merchel a yeere, and the rest according to their abilitie. The fifth day from Iolfa, and the same day we lodged at a good Towne called Naxnan, which hath great plentie of victuals, and especially Angour, and also hath Silke. And in the middle way betweene Iolfa and this Citie, is a very high round Rocke, much like vnto a Castle. The seventh day from Naxnan, and the same day at a Village called Potta. And about ten miles to the North-west of this Village, is Noahs Arke vpon a Mountayne, which is somewhat high, and hath alwayes Snow lying vpon it, and no man may goe vp it: But they say that Saint Iokemo went vp to the top, and in the Armenian tongue it is called Affe Masis. And at the foot of this Mountayne, is a Church of the Armenians. The eighth day from Potta, and the same day we came to a Village called Cambellelea. This eighth day I was vnder the Arke, and there are two high Mountaynes together, which I left to the West, and they are about three miles asunder, but the highest and that to the Northward of the West, is that whereupon the Arke did rest. The ninth day from Cambellelea, and the same day at Erreman; here euery Hemel of Silke payeth five Chekins. At the time of the last warres in Persia, there were many Christians taken slaues in Erreman, and other places. And those of Arsingam ransomed seven thousand. Fourteene Batman of Teuris are twelue of Erreman. In Erreman are very many Christians, and yet there is a Church standing of the Christians. To the Northward of this Towne, about a mile, is a stone Bridge, and vnder it, passeth a Riuer called Sanguina, which commeth out of the Riuer Aras, or Araxis: and about foure dayes from Erreman or Reinan, it meeteth with the Riuer of Aras or Arasb againe. The twelfth day wee departed from Erreman, and lodged the same day at a Casal of Christians, called Echimassen, and here are five old Churches, and one of them is ouerthrowne, because a brother and a sister married themselues together in the said Church. The thirteenth day from Echimassen, and the same morning we passed by certaine old Towers, where in times past, was a Citie called Sowmarin. And in Echimassen wee paide two and twentie Shehides for a bribe. And here are many Lyons, for within fixe moneths they haue carried away out of this Casal seven and thirtie persons; and the day before we came thither, was a child carried away out of his mothers armes. Betweene Naxnan and Erreman is a place where they dig Salt out of the ground. The said thirteene day at night we lay by the Riuer side, where hath beene in times past a Casal. The fourteenth day at a Castle called Dagswan, and without the Towne is an old Church of the Christians. At this place euery summe of goods that commeth out of Persia, payeth two Aspers, and if it goeth not to Arserom, then it payeth five pro cento. A Hen is worth here eight Auctshas. The fifteenth day from Dagswan, and the same day at a Casal called Seraffa, and here wee lay in a great house, and neere to the Casal passed ouer a Bridge. The nineteenth day from Shew banc cupres, and the same morning passed by a Towne called Hassen gallawth, where is a very strong castle, with three wals. And here the houses are built of Fir trees like vnto the houses in the Alpes. Also the same day at a Casal called Bollomash. The twentieth one day from Bollomash, & the same day at Arserom. And he that setteth prices vpon all commodities hath

After eight daies abode in this place, the nine and twentieth of December I departed from Arzerum, and the same day lodged at a great Casall, named Pretton. The thirtieth day from Pretton, and the same day at a Casall, named Shennar. Also the same day I went vnto Arſingam, which is within foure daies iourney of Trebesonda.  is a very faire Crauanferas new built: and for the building thereof, a Merchant of Agam gaue a Hemmel of Silke. The twentieth day from Couscherderrom, and the same day we passed through a Towne called Boufene: also the same day at a Towne, called Basarich. And this day we were Basarich.

 The two and twentieth day from Korshonnon, and the same day at a Casal, called Aitfan. The Aitfan.
 three and twentieth day from Aitfan, and the same day we came to Borsa. The foure and twen- Borsa.
 tieth day, three Theeues were executed in Borsa, which had robbed seuen or eight yeres between Borsa and Stambol. In Borsa all Strangers pay for custome of their Merchandize three per cento.
 40 The Kintall of Borsa is fortie Hockies: and the Kintall of Cremes, is here worth eight thousand Anethas. The sixe and twentieth day, I went to the Hammam, that is a mile without Borsa to the West-ward; and the same day passed through foure wooden gates. And the Spout of this water commeth in from the South. There are in all foure of these Hammams.
 The first day of March at night, vntill twelue of the clocke, was to the West of the Towne, a great light like fire. The fifth day of March in the euening, wee departed from Borsa: and this day passed ouer a small Riuer, where is a stone bridge. Also this day wee lodged at a Casal of Christians, called Peage. The sixth day from Peage, and the same day passed by a Gulfe of the Peage.
 Sea, where is a Towne, called Gamlech, and also passed by a Lake of fresh water, which is called Gamlech.
Bouchi. Also this day we passed by two Crauanferas: and by the way is great store of Bay-trees 50 growing: Also this day we came to Samallech, which is the Skell. The eight day from Samallech, and the same day we landed at the Tower, where they make light for the Ships that passe in and out of the Blacke Sea: and the same night wee came to Skell. The ninth day of March in the morning, we departed from Skell, and the same day came to Galata and Constantinople, by the Turkes corruptly called Stambol. The tenth day, we arriued in Stambol, the Carauan of Nest:
 And the eleuenth day it was all burned, with one hundred and twentie Cargas more, and eightie thousand crownes in Pepper; besides great store of other Merchandize. And the order is to hang him, that was the first cause of the fire. The fourteenth day, was a passage Boate with sixtie or seuentie persons lost going ouer to Samallech; some Christians, some Jewes, and some Turkes. The Musli in Constantinople, is counted like the Pope of Rome: and he was the cause, that all Christi- 60 ans and Jewes were forced to leaue off their turbants. Torra is a great Citie in Natolia, three daies from the Sea: from whence come Grograms, Gaules, Silkes, and Cotton Wooll.
 The fourth day of April, 1582. we tooke our Voyage from Galata neere Constantinople, and the same day lay at a Casal, called Tarrapea: and from Galata hither came one Anthonie a Merchant of Sio, in company with me. And the same day I came from Constantinople, the Grand

Signiors Sonne went out of the Towne with three or foure thousand Horses. Also the Grand Signior had another young Sonne borne of two monethes old. The sixth day of Aprill, 1582. wee departed from the Gulfe neere vnto Tarrapca, being imbarcked in a Barke laden with Wines of Candie, which was to goe vp the Riuer of Danubius. The seuenth day in the morning, the wind came vp to the East North-east with very stormie weather: and the same day wee returned to a Towne called Sissopoli, which is a good Harbour. And heere are many Wind-mills, and great store of Wine. And to the East of the Harbour are three Islands: and heere they are all Greekes. Also the Turke doth make here many Gallies. And in this foule weather some of our company wept, and others cryed out: & our foresaile split with the great wind; and we were in greater danger; because they could not of a long time get down their main saile. This great tempest that we had in the Blacke Sea, began vpon Saturday morning about one of the clocke, being the seuenth day of Aprill, as I said before, and continued vntill Tuesday in the morning being the tenth day, with very great Snow and Cold, as if it had bin at Christmas. The twelfth day we set saile from Sissopoli, and the same night came to an anchor vnder a Cape of Land, where is a Casal called Emonna. The thirteenth day from Emonna, and this night we passed by a great Citie called Varna, which lyeth within a very great Gulfe, which is a very good Harbor. The fourteenth day in the morning we passed by a Castle called Caliacca, which standeth vpon the Cape of a Land, and hath to the Eastward two small Pillars, and neere vnto them a great stone much like a man. The fifteenth day in the morning, wee returned to the Castle of Caliacca: and the seuenteenth day toward night, set saile from this Castle. The nineteenth day in the morning, we entred into a mouth of the Riuer Danubius, called Licostoma. And at the entring in of the Riuer to the Southward is a Beacon: and the depth is on the North-side, but there is neuer aboue eight foot water. And the Countrey on the South-side of the Riuer is called Dobis: and the North-side is called Bugdania. The two and twentieth day about noone, we entred into the Riuer, where commeth the mouth of Saint George; and that mouth runneth to the East South-east. And Licostoma, which we came forth off runneth to the West, and then presently againe to the North. Also this day we arriued at a Casal, called Dolcha, which lyeth on the South-side of the Riuer. And here lye out from the Towne certaine small Rocks into the water: And here our ship and the Merchant paid a ceraine small dutie of two or three Crownes. And here Fish, Hens, and Egges are plenty. The three and twentieth day we departed from Dolcha the same day about noone, we passed by the Riuer of Kelle, which is very broad, and runneth to the North-east. Also this day wee passed by a small land, which lyeth very neere Saxe. The foure and twentieth day about noone, wee came to a Towne called Saxe, which lyeth vpon the South-side of the Riuer. And ouer against this Towne is an land: and here the Riuer is very broad. And here we were to haue paid a Customs, but paid nothing vntill our comming to Tomourra. The foure and twentieth day in the afternoone from Saxe: and the five and twentieth day we arriued at Tomourra. And this Tomourra lyeth vpon the North-side of the Riuer, and is in Bugdania. In Tomourra the children go much after the order of India, with small Rings of Wiar through their eares. And the women goe with great knobs of siluer hanging vpon the vpper part of their eares; and with a great Roll of Linnen Cloth about their heads, much like a Turkes Turbant, and vpon that a small cloth: and the vpper bodies of their garments are set round about with great knobs of siluer like buttons. And the yong Maids weare their haire pleyted, and thereupon diuers pieces of siluer hanging: and vpon the Crowne of the head a round broad Brooch of siluer set with stones; and their sleeues great and short; and about their armes two great hoopes of siluer, and at their Girdles five or six paire of Knives: and about their neckes they weare nothing. The common sort goe for the most part bare-footed. The five and twentieth day, we came to Tomourra, a Bark from Constantinople, which came from thence in eight dayes. The ship that I came in from Constantinople, was twentie seven foot broad of my feet: and the poope more then thirtie foot high from the water, and could stow in hold but two Buts of heighth one vpon another, except it were in the middle. In this Town of Tomourra are sold twentie Egges for an Asper, and a good Hen for two Aspers, and Beefe, Bacon Bread, Wine, Beere, and Mede plenty, and very good fresh fish more then of any thing else. Here are sold for one Asper two Pikes, either of them better then three spans long, & three Carpes either of them a span & an halfe long. Also here is great store of Sturgeons & Herings in this Riuer. The order of their making of Caiare of their Sturgeons, is this. The Caiare or Roe must be taken whole out of the Fish; and then slash it a little with a Knife, and so salt it wel, for three dayes and three nights, and put it in a Barrell or Fat, and make an hole vnderneath, that the water or Salt that commeth from the Caiare may void forth: and after these three dayes are past, take it and wash it very well with fresh water, vntill the Salt bee cleane gone from it: and after this put it in Barrells for the space of other three dayes, & one must tread it downe with his clean feet: also you must make an hole vnder the Barrell for the water to void away; and then lay some great stones vpon it to presse it, and to make it hard: and after these three dayes bee past, take out the bottome and set in a new; and so it may be carried through out the World. And the names of the three fishes, of the Roes whereof they make it, are these: Sturgeon, and Mourrouna, and Mersienne. And the best times of the yeare to make it in, are Iune and Iuly. In this Towne

Towne of Tomourra are certaine Merchants of Sio, that are Lords of the same; and in times past it hath beene a faire Towne: But the Tartars haue two or three times spoyled it, and once they carried away fiftie persons out of it, and the Countries neere adioyning. And about the yeare of our Lord 1530. the Turke subdued this Countrey and a great part of Hungarie, and all, as they say, by the Treason of the Prince of Transilvania.

The first day of May, 1582. wee landed our goods: And Signior Iocamo Alberri paid for May. fraught of euery Butte of his Wine sixtie Aspers from Constantinople to this place. This day in They land their goods. They take their iourney again by land. the Euening, we departed by Land from Tomourra, which is called Ren, in the Language of Wallachia. Tomourra is called Ren by the Wallachians. The fourth day of May, wee passed by a Casall, where the Master of the Casall would The Riuer of Prut. haue taken away our fore-mans Horse: and the same day in the afternoone we passed ouer a long Bridge, and presently after a small Riuer called Prut. Hus. Padwellia: and here one of our Muckers Horses were againe taken. The tenth day we came to a Casall called Sutfourre, where we passed againe ouer the Prut. The eleuenth day in the morning, wee came to Tas, and here the Toll-master is a Greeke, and is called Nicola Neuerredde. To the South of Tas is the Castle with a paire of Gallows before it, and round about it is a wall of great trees of wood: and to the South-west of the Towne is a great Lake: and vpon the farther side of the Lake is a great Monasterie. The women here goe in Turkish Gownes, and great Turbants, with two or three great bosses set with stones on either side of their Turbants, and their Gownes downe before with the like, and in their eares great bosses with a Chaîne of small Pearle made fast to both their eares. And the Maides goe with an Attire vpon their heads like vnto a Mitre, and vpon that their haire bound a crosse: and some of the Children goe sewed through their Eares with pack-thred like the Indian fashion. The custome of a Cloth in Tas is one Ducke of Gold, and of a Kerlie a Doller, and of euery Carpet that costeth one hundred Aspers, twelue Aspers; and of euery Oxe and Cow foure and twentie Aspers, except they belong to the Merchants of Poland, and then they pay but twentie Aspers. And euery Butte of Wine payeth five Dollers and tenne Aspers: And euery Butte of Muskadell payeth in Constantinople fixe Chechins, and in Eluona foure. The sixteenth day in the afternoone, wee departed from Tas: And the seuenteenth day we lodged at Steffennes. The eighteenth day wee passed ouer the Riuer of Prut, which is three leagues from Chotym, and the same day at a Casall called Leues, which standeth in a Vale and hath a Lake of water standing in the middle of it. The nineteentth day in the morning at Chotym, and to the North of the Towne is the Castle which lyeth neere to the Riuer of Nyester, and this Riuer parteth Bugdania and Polonia. The twentieth day about noone, we departed from Chotym, and the same day beeing Sunday, wee came to the strong Frontier Towne of Poland, called Camienitz, which standeth in a Valley: and the Castle standeth to the West of the Towne. Camienitz the frontientowne of Poland vpon the Turke Apparell.

In this Towne all Merchants Strangers pay custome for their goods two and an halfe per cent. The women in Camienitz goe with their Coates close bodied, and the neather bodies gathered like a Frocke: and vpon their heads a fine Cloth like a Call; and vpon that a long piece of white Lawne, that hangeth downe to the ground, and vpon that a blacke Veluet Hat. Their Girdles are set with great studs of Siluer and Gold: and they are very faire women, but not very commendable for their Chastitie, for most of them will be drunke. They vse in the morning to drinke much burnt Wine, and afterward Mede. And there are very few houses in the Towne, but they sell Beere and Mede; and the Borrow-masters sell Wine. And if a Gentlewoman goe abroad, all her men goe before her, and the Gentlemen ride before, and their men behind. The womens Garments are very long: and in the Villages by the way, the Maides goe with their haire hanging downe behind them, and a Garland vpon their heads: and they vse to dance much like the Moores. The young Maides of Camienitz weare their haire pleyted, and bound vpon about their heads, and with a blacke band of Veluet. The three and twentieth day we tooke our Iourney from Camienitz, &c.

His Iourney thorow Poland to Dantrik, and comming to Hull by Sea, is omitted.

from Aleppo to Hispaan, and backe againe: published by

§. I.

Of Euphrates, Orpha, Caracemit, the Curdi, Armenians, Bithlis, Van, and Arraret.

Being rested in Aleppo two monethes and better, Master Iohn Mildenall and my selfe tooke our leaue of the Consull and Merchants, with a full intent and purpose to trauell vnto the great Citie Labor, in the Great Mogors Countrey in the East Indies: lodging all that night on a thinne Turkish Carpet in Woods-caine, where the * Carauan was assembled, to the end that wee might bee with the foremost: for delay in such trauell doth produce great and ineuitable danger. From Euphrates.

Time and manner of going downe the Riuer.

Aleppo wee spent three dayes Iourney vnto the bankes of Euphrates, passing by many Villages not worth the naming, and fertile Plaines, abounding with all sort of prouision necessary for mans life. One of those Villages is a Village of note vnto this day, called by the Countrey people Tedish, where the Iewes keepe a Monument in remembrance of the great Synagogue, holden there in the yeare from the Creation 3498. Neere vnto this Towne is the Valley of Salt memorable for that great ouerthrow which David gaue the Aramites, when hee slue of them in one battell eightene thousand men. Here also Campson Gaurus the Great Sultan of Egypt fought that deadly and mortall Battell with Selymus the first, the Great Turke; where hee lost his life being trodden, without regard, to death, both by his owne Souldiers and pursuing Enemies. Being arriued on the bankes of Euphrates, we found it as broad as the Thames at Lambith; but in some places it is narrower, in some broader, running with a very swift streame and current, almost as fast as the Riuer of Trent. At this place doth this Riuer beginne to take his name, being heere all gathered into one Channell, whereas before it commeth downe from the Lake Chieldor-Giol in Armenia, in manifold armes and branches, and therefore is called by the Countrey people, by a name which signifieth a thousand heads. Here it is that Merchants vse to passe downe by Barke vnto Babylon, thereby to auoid and shunne the great charge and wearisomnesse of trauell through the Desart of Arabia. Which passage they make sometimes in fiftene dayes, sometimes in twentie dayes, and sometimes in thirtie dayes, answerable to the rising and falling of the Riuer: and the best time to passe thither is either in Aprill or October, when the Riuer doth swell with abundance of Raine. The Boates are flat-bottomed, because the Riuer is shal- low in many places; so that when they trauell in the Moneths of Iuly, August, and September, they find the Riuer at so low an ebbe, that they are faine to carry with them a spare Boat or two, to lighten their owne, if they should chance to fall on the shoales. Euery night after Sun-set, they fasten these Boates to a stake, the Merchants lying aboard, and the Mariners vpon the shoare, as neere as they can vnto the same. In this passage downe the Riuer, you shall meet with diuers troupes of Arabians, who will barter their prouision of Dyet (for they care not for money) as Hennes, Kids, Lambe, Butter, and sowre Milke, for Glasses, Combes, Corall, Amber, Kniues, Bread and Pomegranates, Pils, wherewith they vse to tanne their Goats skinnes, in which they Churne with all. All of them, as well Women, Children, and Men are very good Swimmers, who oftentimes will swimme to the Barke side with Vessels full of Milke vpon their heads. These people are very theeuish, and therefore in your passage downe good watch must bee kept. But to returne where we left, wee were constrained by the deepnesse of the Riuer to ferrie ouer our whole Carauan, which consisted of a thousand persons, besides Camels, Horses, Mules, and Asses, by reason of which multitude we spent a whole day in transporting ouer the said Carauan. The gaines of which transportation yeelded the Ferriman a Shaughee, which is fise pence English vpon a Beast.

Bir. Mesopotamia.

Orpha.

* See sup. c. 2.

Being ouer the foresaid Riuer, wee arriued at Bir and entred into the famous Prouince of Mesopotamia; The Turkes doe call it Diarbech. This Prouince of it selfe is most fruitfull, but by the Turkish Wares much ruined and wasted: neuerthelesse, there are some Cities of great importance. About two dayes Iourney from Bir, wee came to Orpha, a Citie of great account and estimation, which many suppose to haue beene the famous Citie Edessa. As yet there remaine certaine Monuments of Baldwin * in Latine letters. The aire of this Citie is very healthfull, the Countrey fruitfull, onely wood excepted, and therefore in stead thereof, they burne the dung of Camels and other beasts, dried in the Sunne. This Citie is built foure-square; the West

West part standing on the side of a rockie Mountaine, and the East part trendeth into a spacious Valley, replenished with Vineyards, Orchards, and Gardens: the walls are very strong, furnished with great store of Artillerie, and contayne in circuit three English miles: and for the gallantnesse of the site, it was once reckoned the Metropolitall seat of Mesopotamia, howsoever it is now translated to Caramida or Caraemit. There is in this Citie a Fountaine full of fishes, so vsed to hand, that they will receiue any substance that shall bee offered vnto them: both Iewes, Armenians, and Turkes reported vnto vs, that this Fountaine was Jacobs Well, and that here hee serued his Vncle Laban twice seuen yeeres, for faire and beautifull Rachel.

The gates of this Citie were much battered, a little before our comming by Eliazgee the Scriuano, and the Rebels his followers; hee drew the Citizens to a composition of fittie thousand Chekins, and so departed. Memorable also is this Citie, then called Carras, for the great battell which was fought before it betweene the Romans and the Parthians, when Marcus Crassus was Generall on the one side, and Surena on the other side.

Caraemita

At this Citie hauing paid our Custome, which is a Doller on a summe of goods, our Carauan was licenced to depart: and at our ordinary houre, which was three of the clocke in the afternoone, we set forward towards the ancient Citie Amida, now called Caramida or Caraemit, five dayes journey from Orpha, traueilling sometimes ouer rough and craggie Mountaines, and sometimes through most delightfull Playnes and Valleys: amongst which there is one of note, enuironed about with a Pale of Mountaines, in such wise that there is but one entrie and passage: where * Aladeules is said to haue had his Paradise.

* See hereof in M Polo long time of Senex

which this Aladeules imitated, if the report be true.

At the end of five dayes trauell, wee arrived at Caraemit, which is to say, The blacke Citie, either for the stone wherewith it is built, being like vnto let in colour, or for the fertilitie of the soyle round about it, which is of a dusky colour. This Citie is seated vpon a marvellous high Rocke, and containeth in circuit very neere sixe miles; and though it be sufficiently fortified by nature, yet is it enuironed with a double wall: the outmost is somewhat decayed, but the inmost is well repaired, being fenced with great store of Artillerie. It is gouerned by a Bassa, who commandeth ouer twelue Sanzacks, and thirtie thousand Tymariots: and is now become the Metropolitall Citie of Mesopotamia. There were mustred from this Citie, when Amurat the third inuaded Persia, in the yeere 1578. twelue thousand Souldiers, the Captaine being well checked by Generall Mustapha for bringing so few. The Souldiers of this Citie for the most part are Archers, not of any courage, but very effeminate, and accustomed to the vse of the Scimitarre. During our abode at this place (which was fourteene dayes) we lodged in a very faire Caine built of free-stone; for which lodging we payed to the Master of the Caine five Shaughes a piece: all which time nothing fell out worthie obseruation, but the cruell execution of a petie malefactor, who hauing but pilfered away certaine small wares, was mounted on a Camell, with his armes spread abroad, hauing two sockets-holes bored in his shoulders blades, into which were set two flaring torches, dropping continually on his skin to his greater torment, and in the end, hauing carried him in this pitifull manner through the principall streets of the Citie, they brought him to the place of execution, and there ganced him on a great Iron hooke, suffering him so to hang till he died. Passing through the South-gate of this Citie, wee payed to the Porter of the gate a Shaughee vpon a beast, descending from the Citie into a most fertile and fruitfull Plaine, where are many Gardens and Orchards, and places of great refreshment.

A most cruell execution.

Through this Plaine runneth the great Riuer Euphrates, with a very swift current; and is as broad here sometimes of the yeere as the Thames at London Bridge, but now was much dried vp, by reason of the heate in Summer, making thereby many Ilands and demi-Ilands, where the Citizens of Caraemit during the Summer season doe vse to pitch their Tents, to enioy the freshment of the Aire and Riuer: but in the Winter it swelleth so abundantly ouer the said Ilands and bankes, that neither man nor beast is able to passe ouer: to auoide which inconuenience, there is, a mile distant from the Citie, a stone-bridge of twentie arches, made ouer the said Riuer. This euening we pitched two miles from the Citie, and stayed all that night of purpose for some Merchants that were behind: Here wee exchanged our Camels, and in stead of them tooke Mules, a creature farre more fit to trauell ouer craggie Rockes and Mountaines then Camels: for now we were within a few dayes journey, to passe ouer the high Mountaines of Armenia, called in Scripture the Mountaines of Ararat: which trauell with Camels is not onely laborious, but very dangerous, if the ground should proue moist or slabby; for then being laden with great burdens, they cannot goe onwards, neither are they able to passe with their huge burdens, through the streight passages which are in those Mountaines.

Euphrates.

Two dayes journey from Caraemit, we rested at the foot of a great rockie Mountaine, being one of the Heads out of which Tygris floweth, and runneth downe with a swift current to Balsara, and so dischargeth it selfe in the Persian Gulfe. Strangely doth it issue out of three Rockes admirably hanging, that a man as he passeth vnder them, would imagine them to bee readie to fall on his head. And for the strangenesse of the site, the Turkes haue builded three Bridges in the midst of those Rockes, to passe from one vnto another, thereby to behold Natures wisdom in framing them so wonderfull. Wee went to view the same, but through the huge ouer-falls, which came farre off within those Mountaines, and the steepnesse of the same, together with the hideous noise, and whistling murmuring, wee found not so great contentment aboue, as wee did beneath.

Gall trees.

The next day we spent ouer many high Mountaines, on the top whereof grew great quantitie of Gall-trees, which are somewhat like our Oakes, but lesser and more crooked: on the best tree in this place a man shall not gather a pound of Galls: at euening we pitched againe on the bankes of Euphrates; and in the morning passed the said River, but not by Barge as before, which was likely to haue bred no small annoyance to our whole Carauan; for through the swiftnesse of the streame, and deepnesse of the Channell, many Beasts with their ladings had beene carried away and drowned, if there had not beene in time a shallow Foord discovered, which had in such sort raised the depth of the Channell, making as it were a shelve for our Commodious passage: by helpe whereof there was not so much as one man or beast that perished.

Euphrates.

The description of the Curdies, a most theeuish people. The Curdies worshippers of the Deuill.

We were no sooner ouer, but forth-with we were encountred with a certaine troope of people, called the Curdies, which some thinke to be a remnant of the ancient Parthians. This rude people are of a goodly stature, and well proportioned, and doe neuer goe abroad without their Armes, as Bowes and Arrowes, Scimitarre and Buckler, yea and at such time, when a man for age is ready to goe downe to his graue. They doe adore and worship the Deuill, to the end hee may not hurt them or their Cattell, and very cruell are they to all sorts of Christians; in which regard, the Countrey which they inhabite, is at this day termed Terra Diaboli, the Land of the Diuell. They participate much of the nature of the Arabians, and are as infamous in their Latrocinies and robberies, as the Arabians themselves. They liue vnder the commandement of the great Turke, but with much freedome and libertie. This theeuish company did sundry times arrest our Carauan, affirming that their Prince had sent for a Dollar on a summe of goods, without the payment whereof (being five seuerall times demanded) wee should not passe through their Countrey. One Village of note is there in this Countrey, wholly inhabited by the Curdies, being five daies iourney from Caraemit, and three daies iourney from Bitchish, called by the Countrey people Manuscute. This Towne is seated in a most fertile and fruitfull Valley, betweene two Mountaines, abounding with Pasture and Cattell: and about a mile from it, is an Hospitall dedicated to Saint Iohn the Baptist, which is much visited as well by Turkes as Christians, who superstitiously affirme, that whosoever will bestow either a Sheepe, Kid, or some piece of Money to releue the poore of that place, shall not onely prosper in his iourney, but obtaine forgiveness of all his sinnes. To the Governour of this Village, wee paid for our custome a Shaughee on a summe of goods, and so were dismissed. The next day following, we passed ouer many craggy and steepe Mountaines, and at the last rested our selues and wearied beasts on the banke of Euphrates, being the out-most bounds on this side of Mesopotamia, and so entred the day following on the Borders of Armenia the great, which is by some distinctly diuided into three parts; the North part whereof being but little, is called Georgia: the middle part Turcomania: and the third part by the proper name of Armenia.

Euphrates.

It is now called Turcomania, and was the first seate of the Turkes, after their first comming out of Seythia, who left their naturall seates, and by the Caspian Ports passing through the Georgian Countrey, then called Iberia, neere vnto the Caspian Sea; first ceased vpon this part of Armenia, and that with so strong an hand, that it is by their posteritie yet holden at this day, and of them called Turcomania.

Armenian manners. Women Archers.

At our first entrance into this Countrey, we trauelled through a goodly, large, and spacious Plaine, compassed about with a rewe of high Mountaines, where were many Villages, wholly inhabited by Armenians; a people very industrious in all kind of labour: their Women very skilful and actiue in shooting, & managing any sort of weapon, like the fierce Amazones in antick time; and the women at this day, which inhabit the Mountaine Xatach in Persia. Their families are very great; for, both Sons, Nephewes, and Nieces, doe dwell vnder one roofe, hauing all their substance in common: and when the Father dyeth, the eldest Sonne doth gouerne the rest, all submitting themselves vnder his Regiment. But when the eldest Sonne dyeth, the gouernment doth not passe to his Sonnes, but to the eldest Brother. And if it chance to fall out, that all the Brethren doe dye, then the gouernment doth belong to the eldest Sonne of the eldest Brother, and so from one to another. In their dyet and cloathing, they are all fed and clad alike, liuing in all peace and tranquillitie, grounded on true loue and honest simplicitie.

The Armenians are a populous Nation.

The Armenians gouerned by two Patriarchs

To discourse how populous this Nation is at this day, is needlesse, since they inhabit both in Armenia the greater, and Armenia the lesse, as also in Cilicia, Bithynia, Syria, Mesopotamia and Persia. Besides the principall Cities of the Turkish Empire, be much appopulated with them, as Brusia, Angori, Trabisonda, Alexandria, Grand-Caire, Constantinople, Cassa, Aleppo, Orpha, Cara-emit, Van, and Iulpha: for that they are very laborious in transporting Merchandize from one Citie to another, by which meanes, through the customes which are paid in euery Citie, the Coffers of the Grand Signior are wonderfully enriched. This people haue two Patriarchs, to whom they giue the name of Vniuersall: the one keepeth his seate in the Citie of Sis in Caramania, mania, not farre from Tharsus: the other in the Monastery of Ecmeczin, neere vnto the Citie Ernan in this Countrey. Vnder these two Patriarchs are eightene Monasteries, full freight with Friers of their Religion; and foure and twentie Bishopricks. The maintenance allowed in times past vnto each of these two Patriarchs, was a Maidin on an house; each Patriarch hauing vnder him twentie thousand households: but now that large beneuolence the great Turke hath seized into his owne hands; and therefore now they are constrained to liue on the Almes of the people, going continually in Visitation from one Citie to another, carrying their Wiues and whole family with them.

The people of this Nation haue amongst them the Christian * Faith, but at this day it is spotted with many absurdities. They hold with the Church of Rome in the vse of the Crosse, affirming it to be meritorious, if they make the same with two fingers, as the Papists vse; but idle and vaine if with one finger, as the Iacobites. They adorne their Churches in euery place with the signe of the Crosse, but for other Images they haue none, being professed enemies against the vse of them. In keeping ancient Reliques they are very superstitious, and much deuoted to the blessed Virgin Mary, to whom they direct their prayers. They imitate the Dioscorians in eating Whit-meats on Saturday, which to doe on Wednesday and Friday were a deadly sin: neuertheless, they will not refraine from the eating of flesh on euery Friday, betweene the Feast of the Passouer & the Ascention. They abstain fise Sabboths in the yeare from eating flesh, in a remembrance of that time which the Gentiles did sacrifice their Children vnto Idols. They celebrate the Annunciation of the Virgin Marie on the sixt of Aprill, the Natiuitie of our blessed Sauior on the sixt of Ianuary, the Purification the fourth of February, and the Transfiguration the 14. of August. The ministrations of their Liturgie or Seruice, is performed in their natie language, that all may vnderstand: but in their Seruice of the Masse for the dead, they are most idolatrous, vsing at the solemnizing thereof, to sacrifice a Lambe, which they first lead round about the Church, and after they had killed it and roasted it, they spread it on a faire white Linnen cloath, the Priest giuing to each of the Congregation a part and portion thereof. They are (vnlesse some few families) so farre from yeelding obedience vnto the Sea of Rome, that they assume all Antiquitie vnto themselves, as hauing retained the Christian Faith from the time of the Apostles. Many Iesuites and Priests haue beene sent from Rome, to bring this oppressed Nation vnder her gouernment, but they haue little preuailed; for neither will they yeeld obedience, nor be brought by any perswasion to forsake their ancient and inueterate errours, to become more erroneous with her.

* The Religion of the Armenians is spotted with many absurdities.

Lamb-sacrifice

Hauing well refreshed our selues amongst these Villages, wee proceeded in our ordinary trauell, but ere we had passed two miles, certaine troopes of Curdies incountred our Carauan, with a purpose and intent to haue robbed the same, but finding themselves too weak to contend with so great company, they departed vntill the next day following, when againe they met with vs in a very narrow passage betweene two Mountaines, where they made a stay of our whole Carauan, exacting a Shaughee on euery person, which to purchase our peace we willingly paid; and so arriued that euening at Biblis an ancient Citie, but a Citie of much crueltie and oppression, where little Iustice and right is to be found to releue distressed passengers.

This Citie standeth in a pleasant Valley, by which runneth a little Riuer, falling out of the Mountaines Anti-Tauris, it was once a Towne in the Confines of the Persian Kingdome, bordering vpon Mesopotamia, and had a Castle kept with a Garrison of Persian Souldiers, before such time as Solyman the Magnificent did conquer these Countries, which was in the yeare 1535. In which yeare there was a memorable battell fought betweene the two great Bassaes of Caire and Syria, conducted by Vlemas the Persian Traitor; and Delymenthes a right Nobleman of Persia. The two Bassaes and Vlemas were commanded by Solyman (in his returne from the spoile of Tauris) to follow him with eightene thousand good Souldiers in the rereward of his Army, to receiue and repress the sudden assaults of the Persians, if need should require. But Delymenthes with fise thousand Persian Souldiers pursued the Turkes, and ouertooke them in the aforesaid Valley; and being furthered in this venterous designement, both by the darknesse of the night, and the abundance of raine which fell at the same instant, as if it had beene wished for, on a sudden got within the Turkes Campe: where the Persian Souldiers, as Wolues amongst Sheepe, did such speedy execution amongst the sleepy Turkes, that the two great Bassaes and Vlemas had much adoe to get to horse, and saue themselves by flight. Few of all that great Army escaped the sword of the Persians. There was three great Sanzacks slaine, one taken, and the other fled, eight hundred Ianizaries seeing themselves forsaken of their Captaines, laid downe their Harquebusses, and other Weapons, and yeelded themselves vpon Delymenthes his word. In memoriall thereof they still keepe that day (which was the thirteenth of October) as one of their solemne Holy-daies. In Biblis we stayed two daies; and at our departure paid vnto the Gouernor of the said Citie, a Dollar on a summe of goods, and so set forwards towards the great Citie Van, three daies iourney farther. In which trauell we had a very wearisome and painefull iourney, ouer high Mountaines and craggy Rockes, the way being exceeding narrow, that a beast could hardly passe with his burthen, without much heauing and tumultuous shouldering. - Hand-made passage. which narrow passages the Turkes told vs, was by the commandement of Amurat the third, the Great Turke, cut through by the maine industrie of labourers, for his Armie to passe, like that incredible worke, which Haniball with Vinegar wrought vpon the Alpes. In this place our trauell was very dangerous, by reason of a brackish Lake or little Sea, called, The Lake
- Arctamar* lake. Arctamar, which was vnder the Rocke, ouer which wee passed, and wee enforced to ride shoaling on the side of the said Rocke, that had not our Mules beene sure of footing, both they and we had perished, with an insupportable downe-fall in that Sea. Two miles from this shoare in the aforesaid Lake are two Ilands, called, The Ecmenicke Ilands, inhabited onely by Armenians, and some Georgians, which two Ilands doe bring forth and yeeld such store of Cattel, and plentie of Rice, Wheat, and Barley, the Garners and Store-houses for all the Countrey round about. 10
- The Ecmenick Ilands. Being arriued at Van, our Caraman rested in the Suburbs of the said Citie, not daring to presume to enter the Citie, by reason that the Bassa was gone to fetch in a rebel, that was risen vp in those parts; in whose absence the Citie, vnder the sub-Bassa, was no better gouerned then it should bee. On the West side of this Citie lieth a pleasant and delightfull Plaine, wherein the Ianizaries twice a weeke doe exercise themselves after their manner in the feats of Warre. On the North side runneth the Lake Arctamar, called in antique time the Moore or Marish, Martiana, or Margiana, or Mantiana. Out of this Lake is caught yeerely an innumerable quantitie of Fish like our Herring, which being dried in the Sunne, they disperse and sell them ouer all the Countrey thereabout.
- The Lake Arctamar called in ancient time Martiana. This Citie is double walled with hard quarrie stone, and is the strongest Towne in all these parts, being fortified with great store of brasse Ordnance, and a strong Castle mounted on an high Rocke, to command and defend the Citie. It was once vnder the gouernement of the Persian, but Solyman the Magnificent in the yeere 1549. with a puissant Armie did besiege the same, which after ten dayes siege was yeelded vnto him by the Persian Gouernour, vpon condition, that the Persian Souldiers there in Garrison, might with life and libertie depart with their weapons, as Souldiers: which was by Solyman granted, and so the Citie was surrendred vp into his hands from the Persian King, who neuer since could get the same into his possessions. It is gouerned now by a Bassa, who hath vnder him twelue thousand Timariots. 20
- The description of Van. At this Citie we stayed five dayes, paying a Doller on a Summe of goods, and passed from thence to a Turkish Village, called Gnusher, the houses standing in two seuerall places, the one rewf fit for the Winter, and the other for the Summer season. Here wee began the ascent of the high Mountaines of Ararat, and about noone-tide we beheld Bruz; the very crest of the Periardo Mountaines, now called Cheilder Monte, the hills of Periardo. These Mountaines so called, are very famous by the rising of many notable great Riuer, which doe so fructiferate the Countrey thereabouts, that the barbarous people call it Leprus (which is to say, Fruitfull) viz. First, the Riuer Araxis, which running out of a certaine Marish, with many armes doth wonderfully enrich that Champaine and drie Countrey. This Riuer springeth out of the hill Taurus in this part, where Periardo is situate, on the side of the Hill Abo, and so runneth by East euen to the confines of Seruan, and windeth it selfe towards the West, and by North, where it is ioyned with the Riuer Cirus, and then passeth to Artaxata, now called Nassuan, a Citie of the Armenians, right against Reinan another Citie, and so watereth Armenia, and coursing along the Plaine of Araxis, dischargeth it selfe into the Caspian Sea, on the one side by South leaving Armenia, and on the other side by North leaving the Countrey Seruania; whose chiefe Citie is Eris. The Riuer Cirus likewise springeth out of Taurus, and so descending into the Champaines and Plaines of Georgia, charging it selfe, and being greatly encreased with other Riuer, it is ioyned with Araxis, and so maketh his issue also into the Caspian Sea. This Riuer the Inhabitants of the Countrey at this day call by the name of Ser, in their owne Language, but the Turkes call it Chiur. Out of these Mountaines also springeth the Riuer Canac, which maketh (as it were almost) an Iland, a little on this side the Citie Eris, and afterwards vnite it selfe in the Channell with Araxis, and so runneth into the Caspian Sea. 30
- Gnusher*. The Riuer Araxis springeth out of the Hill Taurus. Nassuan. Reinan. The Riuer Cirus. The Riuer Canac. Two other Mountaines are of great note in this place; the one is Anti-Taurus, now called Mons Niger, The blacke Mountaine, which runneth vp into Media; and the other Gordans, the tops of which Mountaines are couered continually with white and hoary Snowes. The Mountaine Gordans is enuironed with many other petie Mountaines, called the Gordans Mountaines; on the tops whereof (as wee passed) wee found many ruines and huge foundations, of which no reason can be rendred. 40
- The Mountaine Anti-Taurus. The Mountaine Gordans. The Turkes call the Mountaine Gordans Angri-daugh, the Armenians Messis-Saur: it is so high, that it ouer-tops all the Mountaines thereabout. There issueth out of the foot of this Hill a thousand little Springs, whereof some doe feed the Riuer Tygris, and some other Riuer, and it hath about it three hundred Villages inhabited by Armenians and Georgians; as also an ancient Monastery dedicated to Saint Gregorie, very large and spacious, able to receiue Shangh Tamas the great King of Persia, and most of his Armie, who for the austere and strict life that he saw in those Religious men, made him to spare it, and to change his determination, hauing a full purpose 50 purpose before to haue destroyed it. About this Monasterie groweth great plentie of Graine, the Graine being twice as big as ours, as also Roses and Rheubarb, which because they haue not the skill to drie it, that Simple is of no esteeme or value. On the top of this Mountaine did the Arke of Noah rest, as both Iewes, Turkes and Armenians affirmed. Some Friers of Saint Gregories Monasterie told vs, that euen at this day some part of the Arke is yet to be seene on the top of this Mountaine, if any could ascend thither; but the way (as they say) is kept by Angels, so that whosoever shall presume to goe vp (as once a Brother of that Monasterie did) shall be brought downe in the night season, from the place which hee had gayned by his trauaile in the day time before.

of Araxis, Chiulfal, Sumachia, Derbent, Sechieres, Aras, Tauris, Soltania, Casbin, Argouil, and Gilan.

From the foot of this Mountaine, we spent a dayes iourney further towards Chiulfal, which day wee trauelled through very many narrow Lanes in those Mountaines, and very deepe Valleys, wherein the Riuer Araxis with most outrageous turnings and windings, and his many rushing down-falls amongst the Rockes, doth euen be-20 deafe a mans eares, and with his most violent roaming in and out, doth drowne and ouerwhelm, whosoever by miserable chance falleth downe head-long from the top of those narrow passages, which are vpon the Mountaines. And vpon the crests of the said Mountaines, on the side of the said narrow passages, there grow most hideous Woods and antique Forrests, full of Beeches: Trees like Poplers carrying Mast fit for Hogs, and Pine-trees; where the horroure of darknesse, and silence which is oftentimes interrupted, onely by the whistling winds, or by the crie of some wild beasts, doe make the poore passengers most terribly afraid.

The Riuer Araxis.

At length our Carauan ferried ouer the foresaid Riuer, and so we arriued at Chiulfal, a Towne situated on the frontiers betweene the Armenians and the Atropatians, and yet within Armenia, 30 inhabited by Christians, partly Armenians, partly Georgians: a People rather giuen to the trafficke of Silkes, and other sorts of wares, whereby it waxeth rich and full of money, then instructed in weapons and matters of warre. This Towne consisteth of two thousand houses, and ten thousand soules, being built at the foot of a great rockie Mountayne in so barren a soyle, that they are constrained to fetch most of their prouision, onely Wine excepted, from the Citie Nassuan, halfe a dayes iourney off, which some thinke to be Artaxata, in the confines of Media, and Armenia. The building of Chiulfal are very faire, all of hard quarrie stone: and the Inhabitants very courteous and affable, great drinkers of Wine, but no brawlers in that drunken humour, and when they are most in drinke they powre out their prayers, especially to the Virgin Mary, as the absolute commander of her Sonne Iesus Christ, and to other Saints as Intercessors.
40 It is subiect and tributarie to the Scepter of Persia, and contrariwise, both by nature and affection great enemies to the Turke. This Towne was much indangered in the warres betwixt Amurat the great Turke, and Mahomet Codibanda the Persian King, ready to bee swallowed vp of both. One while the Bassa of Reiman, on the great Turkes behaife, made an inrode vpon them with a thousand and five hundred Harquebusiers, whom they were faine to pacifie with a very bountifull present, excusing themselves, that if they had beene backward in bringing vnto him their voluntarie tributes, it was done for feare, lest they should haue fallen into the displeasure of Mahomet Codibanda their King: who no doubt, if he should haue vnderstood any such matter, would haue beene ready to destroy their Countrey, and deprive them of their libertie and liues. The Bassa was no sooner departed with this answer and their present, but forthwith Aliculi-Cham was sent by the Persian King with threethousand Souldiers, and with this direction, that 50 if the Countrey were subdued by the Turkes, he should fight against it: and if it had voluntarily yeelded it selfe vnto them, he should not onely recouer it, but also burne it, and bring away all the chiefe men of the Countrey for prisoners and slaues. To auoide which danger, these poore Chiulfalini were glad to present the Persian Prince with great and more liberall gifts, then they did their enemy Bassa. Thus these miserable people, in the midst of Armes and Squadrons of the enemy, were constrained, what with presents, and what with lies, notably to preferue their liberties, and their liues in safetie.

Within a dayes iourney and a halfe of this Towne, is the Chalderan Plaines; memorable for the battell fought there, on the seuenth day of August, in the yeere 1514. betweene the two 60 great Emperours Ismael King of Persia, and Selymus the first, Emperour of the Turkes. In which battell, Selymus lost about thirtie thousand men. At Chiulfal we stayed eight dayes, and passed againe the Riuer Araxis, leauing the noble Kingdome of Armenia, called now Turcomania, because of the Turcomanes a people that came out of Scythia (as before wee noted) who liue as Sheepheards in their Tents, but the native people giue themselves to husbandry, and other man-nuall sciences, as working of Carpets and fine Chamlets, we were no sooner ouer, but wee entered into Media; which by some is diuided into Media Atropatia, and Media the Great.

The whole Countrey is very fruitfull, and watred with the Riuer Araxis, and Cyrus, and other Riuers that are famous, euen in antique Writers. Diuers Cities are there in this Kingdome, but my purpose is to speake onely of those which we saw in these parts. viz. Sumachia, Derbent, Sechi, Eres, and Aras. Sumachia is the Metropolitick City of Siruan; and lyeth betwene Derbent and Eres; where the Kings of Siruan vsed to keepe their great and sumptuous Courts, chiefly inhabited by Armenians and Georgians. In this City our English Merchants did trafficke much, and had an house giuen them by Obdowlocan, in the yeere 1566. (as reuerend Master Hackluit doth relate) who then raigned there vnder the Persian King. In this Citie wee saw the ruines of a most cruell and barbarous Spectacle, that is to say, a Turret erected with free stone and Flints, in the midst of which Flints, were placed the heads of all the Nobilitie and Gentry of that Countrey: which fell out on this occasion. This Countrey of Siruan, in time past was of great renoune, hauing many Cities, Townes, and Castles in it; the Kings thereof being of great power, able to wage warre with the Kings of Persia, but through their diuersitie in Religion, the Persian made a conquest of them, razing downe to the ground their Cities, Townes, and Castles, that they should not rebell, and also putting to death their Nobilitie and Gentry, and for the greater terrour of the people, placed their heads in the foresaid Turret.

About a mile distant from this Towne, is the ruines of an old Castle, once esteemed to be one of the strongest Castles in the world, and was besieged by Alexander the Great, a long time before hee could winne it. And a little further off, was a Nunnery most sumptuously builded, wherein was buried (as they told vs) the body of Ameleke Canna, the Kings Daughter, who slew her selfe with a Knife, for that her Father would haue forced her (shee professing chastitie) to haue married with a Prince of Tartary: vpon which occasion the Virgins of this Countrey doe resort thither once a yeere to lament her death. This Citie is distant from the Caspian Sea, with Camels seuen dayes iourney, and from Derbent sixe dayes iourney; it was in the yeere 1578. yeelded vp vnto Mustaffa, the Generall of the Turkish Armie, without resistance, who presently did surprize the Citie, intreating all the Inhabitants in friendly manner, without doing or suffering any outrage to bee done vpon them; but for this their Infidelitie in voluntarie yeelding themselues to follow the Religion of the Turkes, when as they were not induced thereto by any necessitie; Emirhamze eldest Sonne to Mahomet Codibanda King of Persia, coming with his Armie into Seruan, did with great crueltie punish the miserable and infortunate Commons of this Citie, making their houses euen with the ground, destroying both the old and new walls thereof, and bringing the whole land to nought, that sometimes was so desired, a receipt of the Turkes.

Sixe dayes iourney from this Citie, lyeth Derbent; This Citie hath sundrie names giuen vnto it by Writers: Sometimes it is called Derbent, because it is in figure narrow and long: and sometimes Demir-Capi, because there were the Iron Gates, that were sometimes the entrance into Scythia: and sometimes Alessandria; because it was first erected by Alexander the Great, when he warred against the Medes and Persians; at which time also he made a Wall of a wonderfull height and thicke, which extended it selfe from this Citie, to a Citie in Armenia, called Teflis, belonging to the Georgians. And though it bee now razed and decayed, yet the foundation remaineth: and it was made to this purpose, that the Inhabitants of that Countrey, newly conquered by Alexander, should not lightly flie, nor their enemies easily inuade them. This Citie is seated vpon an high Hill, and builded all of Free-stone much after our buildings, being very high and thicke: neuerthelesse, it neuer grew great nor famous, and euen in these dayes, there is no reckoning made of it: and the reason is, because of the situation, seruing for passage onely out of Tartaria into Persia, and out of Persia into Tartaria, receiuing those that trauell too and fro, not as Merchants and men of Commerce, but as passengers and travellers; and to speake in a word, it is seated in a very necessary place, as the case standeth, by reason that it is Ports of the Caspian Sea, but not profitable vnto it selfe: much like as it is in the passages of the Alpes, where though the French-men, Switzers, Dutch-men, and Italians, continually doe passe by them; yet was there neuer found a meane Citie, much lesse any Citie of state and importance.

About foure dayes iourney from Sumachia, is Sechi, which also at the same time as Sumachia offered themselues to Mustapha, as vassals and subiects to the Turkes, who all were gladly entertained of him, and some of the chiefe of them apparelled in silke and gold, and honored with great magnificence, and in the end had all protection promised vnto them. Here also standeth the Citie Eres, most fruitfully watered with the Riuer Araxis and Cyrus, and hath yeelded in times past great store of thole fine white Silkes, commonly termed by the Merchants Mamodan Silkes, whereof at this day, there is not to be found, no, nor a very small quantitie, by reason of the monstrous ruines and ouerthrowes, that hath happened in these Countreies, partly by the Armies of the great Turke, and partly by the Armie of the Persians, which still had succeeded one another in their cruell incursions, and bloudie inuasions. For after the people of Sechi and and Eres had yeelded themselves voluntarily without any resistance vnto Mustapha great Amirats Generall; Emirhamze the Persian Prince, came vpon them with his Armie, as vpon rebels, to inflict deserued punishment. In effecting of which his purpose, hee spared neither sexe, nor age, nor any condition, but though the persons were vnequall, yet was the punishment equall to all, carrying away with him the two hundred peeces of Artillerie, that were left in the Fort by Mustapha, and presently sent them to Casbin to his father.

There is also in this Kingdome another Citie, that bordereth vpon the Georgians, called Arassé, being the most chiefe and opulent Citie in the trade of Merchandise, partly by the aboundant growth of Silke there nourished, partly by other good and necessary commodities, there 10 growing and there brought, as rough and smooth Galles, Cotten wooll, Allome; besides all kinds of Spices, and Drugs, and Diamonds, and Rubies, and oher Stones brought out of the East Indies. But the principall commoditie is raw Silke of all sorts; so that from hence hath beene and is carried yeerely five hundred, and sometimes a thousand mules laden of Silke to Aleppo in Syria. From this towne we spent six daies trauell to Tauris, passing ouer the Riuer Araxis, leaving Media Atropatia, and entring into Media the great. The chiefe of this Country is Tauris, memorable for the resistance once of the Prophet Daniel, whoneere vnto the same, builded a most magnificent Castle, which many yeeres remained a maruellous Monument; the beautie whereof was so liuely and perfect, that continuance of time did little deface it, being very fresh and flourishing in the time of Iosephus. In this Castle were all the Kings of Media, Persia, and Parthia for many 20 yeeres together intombed. But now time hath worne it out, it faring with buildings as with mens bodies, they wax old, and are infeebled by yeeres, and loose their beautie: neuerthelesse, Ecbatana now called Tauris remaines in great glory vnto this day. It is seated at the foot of the Hill Orontes, eight dayes iourney or there abouts from the Caspian Sea, and is subiect to Windes, and full of Snow; yet of a very wholesome ayre, abounding with all things necessary for the sustentation of man: wonderfull rich, as well by the perpetuall concourse of Merchandises; that are brought thither from the Countries of the East, to bee conueyed into Syria, and into the Countries of Europe; as also of those that come thither out of the Westerne parts, to be distributed ouer all the East. It is very populous, so that it feedeth almost two hundred thousand persons: but now open to the fury of euery Armie without strength of wals, and without Bul-30 warkes, sauing a Castle built of late by the Turkes. The buildings are of burnt Clay, and rather low then high. On the South side of this Citie, is a most beautifull and flourishing Garden, large and spacious, replenished with sundry kinds of Trees, and sweete smelling Plants, and a thousand Fountaines and Brookes, deriued from a pretie Riuer, which with his pleasant streame diuides the Garden from the Citie: and is of so great beautie, that for the delicacy thereof, it is by the Countrey Inhabitants, called Sechis-Genet, that is to say, The eight Paradises: and was in times past, the standing house of the Persian Kings, whilest they kept their residence in this Ci-tie, and after they with-drew their seate from thence, by reason of the Turkish warres to Casbin, became the habitation and place of aboad for the Persian Gouvernors. Sundry mutations euen of late yeeres hath this Citie indured both by the great Turke and the Persian. For in the yeare 40 1514. it was yeelded to Selymus the Turkish Tyrant, who contrary to his promise, exacted a great masse of Money from the Citizens, and carried away with him three thousand families, the best Artificers in that Citie, especially such as were skilfull in making of Armour and weapons, onely to enrich and appopulate the great Citie Constantinople. Afterwards, in the yeare 1535. it was againe spoyled by Solyman the Turkish Emperour, who gaue the whole Citie for a prey vnto his Souldiers, who left neither house nor corner thereof vnrafsacked, abusing the miserable Citizens with all manner of insolency: euery common Souldier without controlement, fitting himselfe with whatsoever best pleased his greedy desire or filthy lust: beside the most stately and royall Palace of King Tamas, together with the most sumptuous and rich houses of the Nobilitie, were by the great Turkes commandement all rased downe to the ground, and the greatest part of 50 the best Citizens, and beautifull personages of all sort and condition were carried away captiues.
And in the yeare 1585. it was miserably spoyled by Osman Vizier, vnto Amurat the third, who commanded his Souldiers to doe the worst that possibly they could or might doe to it. Abas now King of Persia, reposing no lesse confidence in his owne good fortune, then the valour of his Souldiers marched in the yeare 1603. with his Army directly to the Citie of Tauris, and that with such expedition, that he was come before it, before any such thing was feared, much lesse prouided for. In which siege he for battery vsed the helpe of the Canon, an engine of long time by the Persian scorned, as not befeeming valiant men, vntill that by their owne harmes taught; they are content to vse it, being with the same, as also with skilfull Canoniers, furnished by the Portugals from Ormuz. So that after sixe weekes siege, this Citie was surrendred into the Persi- 60 ans hands, to the great reioycing of all Persia, together with the whole Country of Seruan, except a Fort or two which still stands out.

At this Citie we paid a Doller on a summe of goods, and five Shaughes to the keeper of the Caine wherein we lodged, and set forward to the wealthy Citie of Casbin, distant from Tauris
ten daies iourney; passing the three first daies ouer many rough and craggy Mountaines, full of a thousand difficulties, which were the more increased by wonderfull great snowes that were fallen, by meanes whereof many Passengers, Horses and Mules (if our guide had not beene good) had perished in one common destruction. Every night we had great flashes of lightning, and huge Thunder-claps, with great store of raine and snowes, which did much annoy our whole Caravan. We had no sooner left those hard passages, but we were forthwith encountred by a gallant troop of Persian horse-men, who lay vp and downe the Borders by the Kings Commandement, to murder all Turkish Merchants that should passe that way: vpon reuenge of the death of a Persian Merchant, who being richly arriued at Van, (a little before our comming) was iniuriously depriued both of his goods and life. Hereupon the Gouvernour of this troope, demanded of our Caravan-Bassa (who was a Chinlphalin) to deliuer vp into his hands, all the Turkie Merchants that were in our company; to which request he durst not condescend affirming, that there was none but Jewes and Christians vnder his conduct; and withall bestowed on him a bountifull present, of two hundred and fiftie Dollers, which was leuied amongst vs.

Darnah.
Great quiet in Persia.

By this time we came to the full Borders, and out-most bounds then of the great Turkes Dominion, so farre as the Othoman Empire on this side doth extend; and so entred into the Territories of the Persian King: both which are diuided by the high Mountaine Duzim, and by a pretie Riuer that runneth at the foote thereof. This night we rested at a Persian Village, called Darnah, much ruined, but seated in a very delightfull place, both for Springs of Water, and plenty of all things. For heere we bought foure Hens for five pence, a Kid for ten pence, and thirtie Egges for two pence. From Darnah we spent three daies further to Soltania, a very ancient Citie, traueilling by many Persian Villages, and finding euery man at his labour, and neighbour with neighbour going from one Towne to another, which bred much contentment, and made vs wonder at the great peace and tranquillitie, which the Commons of Persia liue in about the Commons of Turkie. The ruines of many faire Christian Churches we beheld, but not without pitie, built all with great Arches and high Towers, elaborate with Gold, and other rich paintings to to the beautifying of the same.

The description of Soltania.

A most horrible and terrible tempest,

At Soltania wee safely arriued. This desolate Towne is on euery side enuironed with huge Mountaines, whose tops are to be seene a farre off, alwaies couered with deepe Snowes, called in ancient time Nyphates, Caspins, Coathras and Zagras, taking their beginning no doubt of Caucasus, the Father of Mountaines; which ioyning one to another, some one way, some another, doe diuide most large and wide Countries. Before this Towne lyeth a very great and spacious plaine, memorable for that dreadfull and horrible Tempest, which fell on Solyman the Turkish Emperour, and his whole Armie, in the yeare 1534. For whilest hee lay incamped in these plaine fields with his Army, there fell downe such an horrible and cruell Tempest from the Mountaines, as the like whereof the Persians had neuer seene before at that time of the yeare, being in the beginning of September; and that with abundance of Raine, which froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of Winter, had euen then of a sodaine beene come in: for such was the rage of the blustering Winds, striuing with themselves, as if it had beene for victorie, that they swept the Snow from the top of those high Mountaines, and cast it downe into the plaines in such abundance, that the Turkes lay as men buried aliue in the deepe Snow, most part of their Tents being ouerthrowne, and beaten downe to the ground, with the violence of the Tempest and weight of the Snow, wherein a wonderfull number of sicke Soldiers and others of the baser sort which followed the Campe perished, and many other were so benumbed, some their hands, some their feete, that they lost the vse of them for euer: most part of their beasts which they vsed for carriage, but specially their Camels were frozen to death. Neither was there any remedy to be found for so great mischiefes, by reason of the helish darknesse of that tempestuous night, most of their fires being put out, by the extremitie of the storme: which did not a little terrifie the superstitious Turkes, as a thing accounted of them ominous.

The description of Casbin.

From Soltania we spent foure daies trauell to Casbin, passing by many Villages, where we paid a Shaughee a piece to the Beg or Gouvernour of the Village, not as a custome, but as a free gratuitie, and so entred into the Territories of Casbin, a Citie very wealthy, by reason of the Kings Palace, and the great concourse of Merchants which resort thither. It was in ancient time, called Arsacia, as in Strabo; but now tearmed Casbin, which in the Persian language, signifieth chastisement, or a place of punishment, because the Kings were wont to banish or confine such persons, as for their offences and misdemeanours, had deserued such chastisement. This Citie is seated in a goodly fertile plaine of three or foure daies iourney in length, furnished with two thousand Villages, to serue the necessary vses thereof: but euill builded, and for the most part all of Bricks, not hardned with fire, but onely dried in the Sunne; as are most parts of the buildings of all Persia. It is now one of the seats of the Persian Kings Empire, which was translated by King Tamas, (this Kings Grand-father) from Tauris, who built one goodly Seraglio for himselfe, and another for his Women, and hath beene euer since continued by his Successors, though the King that now reigneth, make most of his abode in Hisspaan, fourteen daies iourney farther towards the East. There are three places in the Citie most of note: viz. the Kings Palace, the

Bassars,

Bassars, and the At-Maidan. The gate of the Kings Palace, is built with stone of diuers colours, and very curiously enamuled with Gold: on the ceiling within, is carued the warres of the Persian Kings, and the sundry battels fought by them against the Turks and Tartars; the pauements of the roomes beneath, and Chambers aboue are spread with most fine Carpets, wouen and telfued with Silke and Gold, all Ensignes and Monuments of the Persian greatnesse. There is likewise in this Citie sundry Bassars, where in some you may buy Shaffes and Tulipants, and Indian cloath, of wonderfull finenelle: in others Silkes of all sorts, as Veluets, Damaskes, Cloath of Gold and Siluer: in others infinite Furres, as Sables and Martine out of Muscovia, and Agiam Furres brought from Corassan. In a word, euery street hath a seuerall Science or Trade, wherein Bassars are certaine streets of Traffike.

10 is sold whatsoever is fit and necessary for the vse of man.

The At-Maidan, is the high speech or chiefe Market place in this Citie; and is foure-square, containing in circuit very neere a mile; and serues as a Bursie for all sorts of Merchants to meete on, and also for all others to sell whatsoever Commodities they possesse, so that in one place is selling of Horses, Mules and Camels; in another place Carpets, Garments, and Felts of all sorts; and in another, all kind of Fruits, as Muske-mellons, Anguries, Pomegranats, Pistaches, Adams Apples, Dates, Grapes, and Raisins dryed in the Sunne. In this place do sit daily twelue Sheriffes, that is, men to buy and sell Pearle, Diamonds, and other pretious stones, and to exchange Gold and Siluer, to turne Spanish Dollers to great aduantage into Persian Coyne; and to change the great pieces of the Persian Coyne, as Abbasses, Larines, and such like into certaine

20 Brasse Monies for the poore. They will also lend vpon any pawne, and that with as great interest as our diuellish Brokers and Scriueners take in London. Finally, the strength of this Citie consisteth not in walls and bulwarkes, but in the Souldiers that are continually maintained in and about this Citie; for out of Casbin, and in the Villages belonging vnto the same, are maintained twenty thousand Souldiers on horsebacke, howsoeuer in this Kings Fathers time were liued but twelue thousand.

Two places neere to this Citie, are very remarkable; the one is the Citie Arduuil; the other Giland. Arduuil is a Citie foure daies iourney from Casbin, and two from Soltania. A Citie of great importance, where Alexander the great did keepe his Court, when he inuaded Persia. It is a towne much esteemed and regarded, by reason of the Sepulchers of the Kings of Persia, which Arduuil the first place that received the Persian superstition.

30 for the most part lye there intombed: and so is growne a place of their superstitious deuotion; as also because it was the first place which received the Persian Sect, wherein Giuni the first Author thereof did reside and raigne.

The other place neere to Casbin, remarkable in the Country of Gilan, in the Prouince of Hirania. The North part of this Kingdome is full of thicke Woods and shadowy Groues, wherein grow diuers sorts of Trees, but specially Cedars, Beeches and Oakes, a fit harbour and shelter for Tygres, Panthers, and Pardies, which wilde beasts make the passage in those places very dangerous: but neere to the Sea side it is full of pasture, and very delightfull, by reason of the manifold sweete Springs which issue out of the Mountaine neere adioyning. Many principall Cities are there in this Countrey, as Bestan, Massandran, Pangiazer, Bachu and Gheilan, Cities of such 40 state and condition, as deserue to haue a Gouvernour of the same dignitie, that the Bassa is with the Turkes: Concerning Bachu, it is a very ancient Hauen-towne, very commodious for Ships to harbour in, as also profitable to vent Commodities, by reason that Arduuil, Tauris, Eres, Sumachia, and Derbent, lye not many daies from thence. Neere vnto this Towne, is a very strange and wonderfull Fountaine vnder ground, out of which there springeth and issueth a maruellous quantitie of blacke Oyle, which serueth all the parts of Persia to burne in their houses; and they vsually carrie it all ouer the Countrey, vpon Kine and Asses, whereof you shall oftentimes meete three or foure hundred in company. Gheilan and the rest stand likewise altogether in Traffike: Gheilan being but foure easie daies trauell from Casbin, and very neere vnto the Caspian Sea.

Bachu. Oyle springeth out of the ground.

50 From Casbin we set forwards to the great and populous Citie of Hispaan, lodging euery night either in a Persian Village, or in a faire Caine built of stone, where we found all kind of prouision necessary for our selues and beasts, traouelling sixe or seuen in a company: company sufficient, by reason of the great peace and tranquillitie, which the Persians liue in aboue the Turkes; and so hauing spent sixe daies, we arriued at Com, a very ancient Citie. This Citie is called by Ptolomie, Guriana, and was so great in times past, that the Inhabitants affirmed vnto vs, that when it was in his flourishing estate, it was twice as big as Constantinople; but it was much ruinated by Tamerlane, and euer since hath lien in the dust without repaire, Cassan carrying away the Trade of Merchandize from her, which was once the Mistresse and Lady thereof. It is well seated for water, and all other necessities, hauing a spacious Riuer running by it, with a stone bridge ouer the same: the which we no sooner passed, but we entred into the bounds of Parthia; a Kingdome

The Citie Com, once twice as big as Constantinople.

60 once famous, but now so mingled with Persia, that the very name of Parthia, is quite extinguished among them.

Of Cassan and Hispaan. Of the Persian King and Government. Of Sir ANTHONY SHERLEY.The description of Cassan.

After two daies trauell from Com, wee arriued at Cassan, a principall Citie in Parthia, very famous and rich, howsoever Ortelius and others make no mention of it. This Citie is seated in a goodly Plaine, and because it hath no Mountaines neere it, but within a daies iourney, the heate is very fastidious, as great almost as it is in Ormuz: 10 the Spring and Haruest is sooner in this Climate, then in any other parts of the Persian Dominions. It wanteth neither Fountaines, Springs, nor Gardens, but aboundeth with all necessities whatsoever: consisting altogether in Merchandize, and the best Trade of all the Land is there, being greatly frequented with all sorts of Merchants, especially out of India. The people are very industrious and curious in all sciences, but especially in weauing Girdles and Shashes, in making Veluets, Sattins, Damaskes, very good Ormuzenes, and Persian Carpets of a wonderfull finenesse; in a word; it is the very Magazeen and Ware-house of all the Persian Cities for these stuffes. Here may you buy all manner of Drugs and Spices, and Turkasses, with store of Pearle, Diamonds, and Rubies; as also all sorts of Silkes, as well wrought as raw. I am perswaded, that in one year there is more Silke brought into Cassan, then is of Broad-cloth brought into the 20 Citie of London. This Citie is much to be commended for the ciuill and good gouernment, which is there vsed. An idle person is not permitted to liue among them: the childe that is but sixe yeare old is set to labour: no ill rule, disorder, or riot, is there suffered. For they haue a Law among them, (resembling the Egyptian Law which Diodorus mentioneth) whereby euery person is compelled to giue his name to the Magistrates, therewith declaring what kind of life hee liketh, how he liueth, and what art hee exerciseth. And if any doe tell vntruly, is either well beaten on the feete, or imployed in publike slavery. The greatest annoyance that this Citie is infested withall, is the abundance and multitude of blacke Scorpions, of an exceeding great- 30 nesse, which many times doe much harm, if a speciall care be not had of them. At this citie Master John Mildnall and my selfe parted company; he traueiling to Labor in the East Indies; and my selfe setting forwards to the great Citie of Hispaan, three daies trauell distant from Cassan.

Hispaan.The Kings
Seraglio.The Kings Garden.The Guard of the Kings Pa-lacc.

This Citie in times past, was called Ecatompolis, the Citie of a hundred gates: and well it may keepe that name still, since the huge wals of the same containe in circuit an easie daies iourney on horsebacke, and is become the greatest Citie in all the Persian Dominions: which is so much the more magnified and made populous, by reason of the Kings residence therein. Very strong is this Citie by situation, compassed about with a very great wall, and watered with deep Channels of running Springs, conueighed into it, from a part of the Coronian Mountaines, which are as a wall inaccessible about it. On the North side is erected a strong Fort or Castle, being compassed about with a wall of a thousand and seuen hundred yards, and in the midst thereof is built a Tower, or rather a strong keepe, sundry Chambers and lodgings therein, but stored with 40 little Ordnance. On the West side of this Citie standeth two Seraglias, the one for the King, the other for his Women; Palaces of great state and magnificence, far exceeding all other proud buildings of this Citie: the wals glister with red Marble, and pargeting of diuers colours, yea all the Palace is paved with Checker and Tesselled worke, and on the same is spread Carpets wrought with Silke and Gold: the windowes of Alabaster, white Marble, and much other spotted Marble; the Poasts and Wickets of massie Iuory, chekered with glistering blacke Ebony, so curiously wrought in winding knots, as may ealier stay, then satisfie the eyes of the wondring beholder. Neere vnto this Palace, is a Garden very spacious and large, all flourishing and beautifull, replenished with a thousand sundry kinds of grafts, trees, and sweet smelling Plants, among which the Lilly, the Hyacinth, the Gilly-flower, the Rose, the Violet, the Flower-gentle, and 50 a thousand other odoriferous flowers, doe yeeld a most pleasant and delightfull sight to all beholders. There are a thousand Fountaines, and a thousand Brookes; among them all, as the father of them all, a pretie Riuer, which with his milde course and delightfome noyse, doth diuide the Garden from the Kings Palace; neither is this Garden so straitly lookt vnto, but that both the Kings Souldiers and Citizens, may and doe at their pleasures oftentimes on horse-backe, repaire thither to recreate themselves in the shadowes and walkes of those greenes.

And as a Guard for the gate of this sumptuous Palace, the King keepeth certine orders of Souldiers: whereof the most Noble and the greatest in number, are called Churchi, which are as it were, the Kings Pensioners, being eight thousand in number, all of them diuided vnder seuerall Captaines: which Captaines do yeeld obedience to the generall Captaine, called Churchi-Bassa, 60 a man alwaies of great authoritie. Next vnto this order is another, called Eshul, to the number of a thousand, distinguished also vnder particular Captaines, and the chiefe Captaine is called Eshul-Bassa. All these are maintained by certaine Townes and Villages, which are Feudataries to the Crowne of Persia; and they receiue at certaine times of the King, armor, horses, apparell, and and Tents, euery one as hee is in place and degree : with this strong Garrison is the King daily attended vpon, and maintayneth the Maiestie of his Court, especially when hee rideth in progresse.

And for the gouernment of this Citie, there is besides the King and the Prince twelue Sultanes, but three especially are appointed by the King, for the generall gouernment of the whole Empire, hauing their seuerall distinct charges. One hath the care of all Martiall Affaires throughout the Kingdome : and the other two receiue all the Reuenues, keeping a iust account thereof, which two we may call Treasurers. Next vnto these are the Mordari, two great Chancellours, whose Office is to write all Orders, Commandements, and Letters concerning the gouernment of the Kingdome : one of them keepeth the Seale, and the other the Pen. Besides, these there are two Caddi, that is, two Iudges ; who make Answer and giue Sentence onely in matters of Controuersie and ciuill Quarrels ; but as touching criminall Causes, they haue no further authoritie, then to frame Examinations of Witnesses, and to make declaration thereof, which they call the Sygill, and this Sygill they deliuer vp into the hands of the Sultan, that is eyther Gouernour of the Citie, or else of the Empire, and he causeth execution to bee done according to custome. And looke as Hispaan is gouerned, so other Cities haue the selfe-same Magistrates, all being at the Kings disposition and appointment.

Concerning the Church gouernment, there is in this Citie, first the chiefe of the Law whom they call the Mustaedini, a wicked and prophane Priest : and in the other subiect Cities are certaine peculiar heads, obedient to this chiefe Priest, who are not cholen and displaced at his pleasure, as the Popish Bishops are by the Pope, but by the King himselfe, who is not onely a King, but a Priest, as Mahomet and Aly were. But to auoid trouble, the King granteth that fauour and putteth ouer that burden from himselfe vnto others, to whose iudgement, he also referreth himselfe, whensoever any consultation is touching their Law or prophane Superstition. Vnder this great Priest are Califes, and these doe daily execute seruice in the Moschees or Temples. The chiefe of these Califes is hee that putteth the Horne vpon the Kings head, when hee is first intronized. A Ceremonie once performed in Caseneere Babylon, but since Solyman the Turkish Emperour wonne Assyria from the Persian, it hath bene sometimes performed in Casbin, and sometimes in Hispaan.

Finally, the Inhabitants of this Citie doe much resemble the ancient Parthians in diuers things, but specially in their continuall riding. They ride on horse-backe for the most part, on horse-backe they fight with the Enemie, they execute all Affaires as well publike as priuate on horse-backe, they goe from place to place on horse-backe, they buy and sell, and on horse-backe they conferre and talke with one another ; and the difference betweene the Gentleman and the slaue is, that the slaue neuer rieth, nor the Gentleman neuer goeth on foote. Besides, the nature of people is arrogant seditious, deceitfull, and very vnquiet, but that the fiercenesse of their nature is much restrayned by the Kings seuerer gouernment. To sensualitye they are much inclined, hauing three sorts of women, as they terme them, viz. honest women, halfe honest women and Courtezans ; and yet they chastise no offence with like extremitie as Adulterie, and that as well in the halfe honest woman, as in the honest. Last of all they are full of craftie stratagems, and are breakers of their promise (a vice that is very inbred in all Barbarians.) Not content with any mans gouernment long : and louers of Nouelties.

Abas, howsoever by the shedding of much blood * he was saluted King, vpon the death of his Father, yet hath he so carryed the matter, that now he is exceedingly beloued and honoured of his Subiects, in so much that when they will confirme any thing by solemne Oathes, they will swear by the head of Abas the King, and when they wish well to any man, they vsually say, King Abas grant thee thy desire.

This Prince is very absolute both in perfection of his bodie, and his minde (but that he is in Religion a professed Mohumetan) excellently composed in the one, and honourably disposed in the other. Of an indifferent stature, neither to high nor to low. His countenance very sterne, his eyes fierce and piercing, his colour swarrie, his Mustachees on his vpper-lip long, with his beard cut close to his chinne, expressing his martiall disposition, and inexorable nature, that at the first a man would thinke to haue nothing in him, but mischief and crueltie. And yet he is of nature courteous, and affable, easie to bee seene and spoken withall : his manner is to dine openly in the company of his greatest Courtiers, delighting much in hawking and hunting accompanied with his Nobilitie, and the Ambassadors of forraigne Princes. Hee will oftentimes runne, leape, and proue masteries with his chiefe Courtiers, beeing himselfe a most excellent Horseman and cunning Archer.

Vsually euery morning he visiteth his Stables of great Horses, and according to an old custome of the Persian Kings, the Souldiers of his Court (before mentioned) doe receiue Horses at his hands, as he is in place and degree. And these their Horses are of singular vertue, equall with those of the old time, which (as Strabo writeth) were accustomed to bee fed and brought vp in Armenia for the Kings vse. They are wonderfull swift in course, fierce in battell, long breathed and very docible : when they are vnladled, they are gentle and milde, but when they are armed, they are warlike, hardie, and manageable euen at the pleasure of the Rider. And I haue seene of them sold for a thousand, and sometimes a thousand and sixe hundred Duckets a peece.

After hee hath viewed his Horses, hee passeth into his Armoury, certaine buildings neere vnto his Palace, where are made very strong Curiaffes, or Corselets, Head-pees, and Targets, most of them able to keepe out the shotte of an Harquebusier, and much more to daunt the force of a Dart. Heere also the King furnisheth his Souldiers, not only with Curiaffes, Head-pees, and Targets; but with Bowes and Arrowes, Pouldrones, and Gauntlets, and with Launces made of good Ash, armed at both ends; with Simatars and shirts of Maile, most finely and soundly tempered, wherewith both themselves and their Horses are defended in time of Warre.

The Kings exercises in the
At-Maidan.

By this time hauing spent most of the fore-noone, he returneth againe into his Palace, and there remaynes till three of the clocke in the after-noone, at which time he makes his entry into the At-Maidan, which is the great Market place or high street of Hispaan: round about this place are erected certaine high Scaffolds, where the multitude doe sit to behold the warlike exercises performed by the King and his Courtiers, as their running and leaping, their shooting with Bowes and Arrowes, at a marke both aboue and beneath, their playing at Tennis, all which they performe on Horse-backe with diuers moe too long to write of. In this place also is to be seene seuerall times in the yeare, the pleasant sight of Fire-workes, of Banquets, of Musickes, of Wraflings, and of whatsoever Triumphs else is there to be shewed, for the declaration of the ioy of this people.

His Iustice.

Besides, the King very often in this place, in the presence of the Princes and Peeres of the Realme, will giue iudgement in diuers causes: in the execution of Iustice hee is very seuer, as well to the greatest as to the meanest, not sparing (as might be shewed) to hang vp his chiefe Caddi or Iudges, when he shall perceiue how that vpon bribes and fauour they delay the Suits of his Subiects, against the cleere and manifest truth: And I haue seene him many times alight from his Horse, onely to doe Iustice to a poore bodie. Besides, hee punisheth Theft and Manslaughter so seuerely, that in an Age a man shall not heare either of the one or of the other. So that since King Abas came vnto the Crowne, full twentie yeares and vpwards, the Persian Empire hath flourished in sacred and redoubted Lawes, the people demeaning themselves after the best manner they can, abundance of Collections comming plentifully in, the Rents of his Cham-ber were increased more then euer they were in his Grandfather Tamas his time, Armes, Artes, and Sciences doe wonderfully prosper, and are very highly esteemed.

Sir Anthony
Sherleys arriual in Persia.

To this great Monarch, came Sir Anthony Sherley Knight, with sixe and twentie Followers, all gallantly mounted and richly furnished; whose entertaynement was so great, that the Persians did admire, that the King should vouchsafe such high fauour to a meere stranger without desert or tryall of his worth. Of whose bountie the World may iudge, since within three dayes after his first arriuall, the King sent him fortie Horses furnished with Saddles, and very rich trappings; foure of them fit for the proper vse of any Prince, twelue Camels for cariage, together with sixe Mules, foure and twentie Carpets, most of them rich and faire, three Tents or Pavilions, with all other necessities of house; and lastly, sixe men laden with siluer. (But of this yee haue heard himselfe.)

¶. IIII.

The returne of the Author by the way of Persia, Sufiana, Chaldæa, Assyria, and Arabia.

Auing tooke my leaue of Master Robert Sherley, and the rest of my Countrey men, I left them to the mercy of the King (whose bountie and goodnesse by their returne hath plentifully shewed it selfe) and betooke my selfe to the protection of the Almighty, to bring me in safetie againe into my owne Countrey: being in my returne, accompanied with one Signior Belchior Dios d' Croce, an Armenian Portugall, or Portugall Armenian, and one Christophero a Greeke, who were sent with Letters from the Gouernour of Goa, to the King of Spaine, but lost afterwards their liues and Letters by shipwracke in the Venetian Gulfe. From Hispaan we spent ten dayes trauell to Siras, by perswasion of some Persian Merchants that were bound for Aleppo with vs, traueiling through the very heart of Persia it selfe, paying now and then a Shaughee a peece to certaine Villages in the way, no matter of importance worth the relating till we come to the Citie it selfe.

The description of Siras, the ancient Perse-polis.
The Riuer Bindamir.

Siras is situated on the Bankes of Bindamir, a great and famous Riuer, which courseth through Persia, and the Kingdome of Lar, and so emptieth it selfe into the Persian Gulfe, and was once the Metropolitall seat of all the Kingdome, vntill of late yeares, Hispaan hath gained that priuiledge from her. Notwithstanding it is large and spacious contayning very neere ten miles in circuit, and lyeth iust in the Road way which leades from Hispaan to Ormuz.

In and about this Towne are to be seene the ruines of many ancient Monuments: as two great gates, that are distant one from the other the space of twelue miles, which shewes the circuit of this Citie, as it was in the time of the Monarchie, to be both large and spacious. On the South-side we viewed the ruines of a goodly Palace, builded, as they say, by King Cyrus; a Palace much magnified by Aelianus in his first Booke de animalibus, cap. 59. And on the North-side the ruines of an old Castle, which seemes was girt about with a three-fold wall: the first wall being foure and twentie foot high, adorned and beautified with many Turrets and Spires: the second was like vnto the first, but twice as high; and the third was foure square, being foure score and ten foot high. All fabricated of free stone. On each side were twelue Gates of Brasse, with 10 Brazen Pales set before them very curiously wrought, all which did shew the magnificence of the Founder. On the East-side of this ruinous Castle, some foure Acres of ground distant, is a Mountayne, on which was erected a goodly Chappell, in which most of the Persian Kings in anticke times were intombed. And though this Citie hath endured sundry mutations and changes, yet is it not to bee esteemed one of the least Cities in Persia: for out of it in short time is leued twenty thousand Horsemen well armed. Besides, it is one of the greatest and most famous Cities of the East, both for traffique of Merchandize; as also for most excellent Armour and Furniture, which the Armourers with wonderfull cunning doe make of Iron and Steele, and the Iuice of certayne Herbs, of much more notable temper and beautie, then are those which are made with 20 vs in Europe; not onely Head-pieces, Curiaßes, and compleate Armours, but whole Caparisons for Horses, curiously made of thinne plates of Iron and Steele.

Old Monuments.

Excellent Armour made in Syras.

From Siras, hauing spent eight dayes trauell and better, we entred into the Prouince of Susiana, now called Cusistan, but in old time Affyria. The bounds of this Countrey, North-wards is on the South part of Armenia, East-ward on a part of Persia: West-ward on Mesopotamia: and South-ward on a part of the Persian Gulfe, which part is full of Fennes and marish Bogges, without either Port or Hauen. The Climate in that part is exceeding hot, and very much infested with bituminous matter, which both spoiles the growth of Trees, and corrupt the waters, whereby it comes to passe, that the people are not long liued.

Trauelling two dayes further from the entrance into this Kingdome, we rested at Valdac, once the great Citie Susa, but now very ruinous. Close by this ruinous Towne swimmeth the famous Riuer Choaspes, which after many turnings and windings through the Countrey of Susiana, dischargeth it selfe in the Persian Gulfe. The water of this Riuer is very delicate to the taste.

The description of Susa. The Riuer Choaspes.

Hauing passed ouer this Riuer, we set forward towards Mosul, a very ancient Towne in this Countrey, fixe dayes journey from Valdac; and so pitched on the bankes of the Riuer Tygris. Here in these Plaines of Affyria, and on the bankes of Tygris, and in the Region of Eden, was Ninive built by Nimrod, but finished by Ninus. It is agreed by all profane Writers, and confirmed by the Scriptures, that this Citie exceeded all other Cities in circuit, and answerable magnificence. For it seemes by the ruinous foundation (which I thoroughly viewed) that it was built with foure sides, but not equall or square; for the two longer sides had each of them (as we ghesse) an hundred and fiftie furlongs; the two shorter sides, ninetie furlongs, which amounteth 40 to foure hundred and eightie furlongs of ground, which makes threescore miles, accounting eight furlongs to an Italian mile. The walls whereof were an hundred foot vpright, and had such a breadth, as three Chariots might passe on the rampire in Front: these walls were garnished with a thousand and five hundred Towers, which gaue exceeding beautie to the rest, and a Strength no lesse admirable for the nature of those times. Now it is destroyed (as God foretold it should bee by the Chaldeans) being nothing else, then a sepulture of her selfe, a little Towne of small trade, where the Patriarch of the Nestorians keepes his seat, at the deuotion of the Turkes. Sundry times had wee conference with this Patriarch; and among many other speeches which past from him, he wished vs, before we departed, to see the Iland of Eden, but twelue miles vp the Riuer, which hee affirmed, was vndoubtedly a part of Paradise.

The description of Ninive. The magnificent building of Ninive, by Ninus.

This Iland lies in the heart of the Riuer Tygris, and is (as we could ghesse) in circuit ten English miles, and was sometimes walled round about with a wall of strong defence, as appeares by the ruinous foundation of Bricke which there remayneth. And howsoeuer the beautifull Land of Eden is now forgotten in these parts, with those flourishing Countries of Mesopotamia, Affyria, Babylonia, and Chaldea, being all swallowed vp into meere Barbarisme, yet this Iland still retaines the name of the Ile of Eden.

The description of the Iland of Eden. Of Paradise, see my Pile. l. i. c. 3. This Author also had here inserted a discourse thereof, here omitted. In stead whereof, I haue presented you with the Map. The description of New Babylon, now called Bagdat.

From the Iland of Eden wee returned to Mosul, and stayed there eight dayes, and so went downe the Riuer Tygris to Bagdat, or New Babylon, being carried not on Boat, as downe the Riuer Euphrates, but vpon certaine Zatarres or Rafts, borne vpon Goats skins blowne full of wind like Bladders. Which Rafts they sell at Bagdat for fire, and carrie their skins againe home 60 vpon Asses by Land, to make other Voyages downe the said Riuer.

By this Riuer the Citie Bagdat is very abundantly furnished with all kind of provision, both of Corne, Flesh, Fowle, Fish, and Venison of all sorts; besides great store of Fruit, but especially of Dates, and that very cheape. This Citie by some is called, New Babylon, and may well be, because it did rise out of the ruines of old Babylon, not farre distant, being nothing so great, great, nor so faire: for it contaynes in circuit but three English miles; and is built but of Bricke 40 dried in the Sunne: their houses also being flat roofed and low. They haue no raine for eight moneths together, nor almost any cloud in the Skie night nor day. Their Winter is in No-uember, December, Ianuarie, and Februarie, which moneth are neuerthelesse as warme as our Summer in England. In a word, this Towne was once a place of great trade and profit, by reason of the huge Carauans, which were wont to come from Persia, and Balsara: but since the Portugals, Englismen, and Hollanders, haue by their traffique into the East Indies, cut off almost all the trade of Marchandize into the Gulfs of Arabia, and Persia, both Grand Cairo in Egypt, and Bagdat in Assyria, are not now of that benefit, as they haue beene, either to the Merchant, or Great Turke, his Tributes both in Egypt, and his Customes in this place being much hindred thereby. After it continued vnder the Tartar and Persian gouernement, vntill it was taken by 50 Solyman the Turkish Emperour, for Tamas the Persian King, who (after it was yeelded vnto him) according to an old superstitious manner, receiued at the hands of a poore Caliph, the En-signes and Ornaments of the Kings of Assyria: so this Citie, with the great Countreies of Assyria, and Mesopotamia, sometimes famous Kingdomes of themselves, and lately part of the Persian Kingdome, fell into the hands of the Great Turke, in the yeere 1534. and so haue continued euer since, Prouinces of the Turkish Empire.

Having staid twentie dayes at Bagdat, wee put our selues into the companie of a Chian, who was bound from the Bassa of Bagdat for Constantinople, being in number sixteene persons and no more, to trauell through a great part of Chaldea, and the Desart of Arabia. So soone as we were out of this Citie, we passed ouer the swift Riuer Tygris, on a great Bridge made with 60 Boats, chayned together with two mightie Chaynes of Iron: and so entred into a part of Bag-dat, on this side of the Riuer, like London and Southwarke, where we staid foure dayes.

Two places of great antiquitie did wee thoroughly view in the Countrey: the one was, the ruines of the old Tower of Babel, (as the Inhabitants hold vnto this day) built by Nimrod, the Nephew

Nephew of Cham, Noahs sonne. And now at this day, that which remayneth is called, the remnant of the Tower of Babel: there standing as much, as is a quarter of a mile in compasse, and as high as the stone-worke of Pauls Steeple in London. It was built of burnt Bricke cimented and ioyned with bituminous Mortar, to the end, that it should not receiue any cleft in the same. The Bricks are three quarters of a yard in length, and a quarter in thicknesse, and betweene euery course of Bricks, there lieth a course of Mats made of Canes and Palme-tree leaues, so fresh, as if they had beene layd within one yeere.

The other place remarkable is, the ruines of old Babylon, because it was the first Citie, which was built after the Flood. Some doe thinke, that the ruines of Nimrods Tower, is but the foundation of this Temple of Bel, and that therefore many Trauellers haue beene deceiued, who suppose that they haue seene a part of that Tower which Nimrod builded. But who can tell whether it be the one or the other? It may be, that confused Chaos which wee saw, was the ruines of both, the Temple of Bel being founded on that of Nimrod.

The description of old Babylon.

From the ruines of old Babylon wee set forwards to Aleppo; traueilling, for the most part, through the Desart Arabia. Hauing spent three dayes and better, from the ruines of old Babylon, we came to a Towne, called Ait, inhabited onely with Arabians, but very ruinous. Neere vnto which Towne is a Valley of Pitch very maruellous to behold, and a thing almost incredible, wherein are many Springs, throwing out abundantly a kind of blacke substance like vnto Tarre and Pitch, which serueth all the Countries thereabouts to make staunch their Barkes and Boats; euery one of which Springs maketh a noise like a Smiths Forge, in puffing and blowing out the matter, which neuer ceaseth night nor day, and the noyse is heard a mile off, swallowing vp all weighty things that come vpon it. The Moeres call it, The mouth of Hell.

The mouth of Hell.

Three daies spent we on this Desart, and so arriued at Anna, a towne of three miles in length, but very narrow, inhabited altogether with Curdies, a most theeuish people. Here we stayed two daies, and could not be suffered to passe without a present to the Gouvernor of this towne, which came to a Ducket a piece. Close by this Towne runneth the Riuer Euphrates, with a very swift current, which doth maruellously fructiferate the Countrey round about, whereby wee prouided our selues of all necessaries fit for trauell through the rest of the Desart.

Anna a Towne in Arabia.

From this Towne we proceeded, and euery second night, through the good discretion of our Guide, we pitched on the banke of the Riuer Euphrates, which much refreshed our selues and wearied beasts, beholding euery day, great Droues of wild beasts, as wild Asses all white, Gasels, Wolves, Leopards, Foxes, and Hares. And now to winde vp all, in passing from Babylon to Aleppo, they ordinarily with Camels spend fortie dayes, traueilling through this sorry and barren Desart, lying vnmanured, because of the scarcitie of moysture. Howbeit, we vsed not their seruice, by reason of the speed which the Chians made for Constantinople, so that the trauell which the Carauan is fortie dayes about, we passed in eightene dayes in much securitie, and so in great safety, by the mercy of God, I arriued againe in Aleppo.

AN Epitome of the Relations of Benjamin the sonne of Ionas of Tudela, of the Province of Nauarra, or Cantabria, who earnestly undertaking a Iourney, and traueilling very many and the most remote Countries, hath described all those things, which either he himselfe saw, or receiued * from men of approued credit, and reported the same in Spaine: nor hath hee onely mentioned such things, but the greatest part also of the renowned and principall men (Israelites) who abode in euery particular place by him diligently viewed. At length returning into the Countrey of Castella, hee declared all these things to his people, in the yeere 933. (after the Iewish account, from the Creation.)

* That is, of Iewes whose Faith is displeasing to God, and contrary to all men; the faithfulness also of their relations is not without suspicion in some Relations receiued from them, in some but Iewish Fables. A good Author in the things hee hath seene, and few euer haue seene more. His Vniuersities here often mentioned, vnderstand Synagogues or Schooles of Iewes: and the Gouvernours of Iewes to be but in those Schooles, or some petie rule ouer their owne, bought by money, &c. Let the Reader also obserue that some things may be true which seeme strange, and that the Turkes in Europe, they and the Tartars in Asia haue much altered the face of the World since Beniamins Trauels, which happened about A.D. 1160.

Beniamin the sonne of Ionas, of approued memorie hath said: First, departing from the Citie Cesar Augusta, according to the direction of the Riuer Iberus, I came to Tortosa, and from thence I went to Tarracona, and ancient Citie built by the sonnes of Enac, and the Grecians, the like excellencie of which building is found in no other Coun-tries of Spaine; and the Citie it selfe bordereth vpon the Sea. But two dayes journey from thence I entred into Barchinonia, in the which there is a sacred Synagogue frequented by a wise and prudent men, and also adorned with noble men, among whom are, Master Seseth, and Sealthiel, and Selomoth the sonne of Abraham, the sonne of Hbazzidai of happie memorie. And it is little, but a fine Citie, seated vpon the very Sea shoare, diuers Merchants from all Countries resorting thither, being a famous Mart-towne for the Grecians, Pisanes, Genueses, Sicilians, Egyptians, Alexandrians, and out of the Land of Israel, and all the borders thereof. But departing from thence one dayes journey and an halfe, I came to Gerunda, where there is a little Synagogue of the Iewes. Three dayes journey from thence, I went to Narbona, which Citie giueth Lawes to the rest: for out of it, the Law goeth forth into all Countries; where, there are wise men, both great, and honourable, especially Kalonymos the sonne of the great and honou-20 rable Theodorus of good memorie, of the seed of Dauid b by true descent and genealogie, who hath Inheritances and Lands from the Princes of the Countries, fearing the force or violence of no man. Abraham also, principally, is Head of the assemblie, and Machir, and Iehuda, and others like vnto these, the Disciples of Wise-men: and, there are almost three hundred Iewes therein at this day. Foure leagues from thence, I came vnto the Citie Bidrasch, in the which there is an Vniuersitie c adorned with the Disciples of Wise-men; whose Heads are, Selomoh Hhalpetha, and Ioseph the sonne of Nathanael of good memorie. But, travelling two dayes journey from thence, I went to Mons Tremulus, in times past, Pessulanus, now called by the Inhabitants, Mompelier; a Citie conuenient for trafficke and merchandizing, two leagues distant from the Sea, frequented by diuers Nations for the entercourse of merchandise, Idume- 30 ans, and Ismaelites of Algarba, Longobardes, and from the Kingdome of great Rome, and out of all the Land of Egypt and Israel, from all the Countrey of France, Spaine, and England, and of all the languages of the Nations are there found, by meanes of the Genueses and Pisani. The Schol-lers also of the Wise-men are there very famous in this Age, especially Reuben the sonne of Theo- dorus, and Nathan the sonne of Zacharias, and the chiefe of all, Semuel, and Selamias, and Mar- docheus, who is now dead. Some among them are very rich, and liberall vnto the poore; who helpe all that come vnto them.
